When it becomes a question of proper food for brain work, as in school teaching, many teachers have found Grape-Nuts ideal.

"I have been for many years a teacher, and several months ago found myself in such a condition that I feared I should have to give up work," writes a N. Y. teacher.

"So nervous was I, that dizziness and spells of faintness were frequent and my head and stomach gave me much trouble."

"Several physicians who treated me gave me only temporary relief and the old ails returned."

"About three months ago I dropped all medicine and began eating Grape-Nuts morning and night. Now, my head is clear, pain in stomach entirely gone, and I have gained in flesh. I am not only continuing in school but have engaged to teach another year."

"I owe my restored health, a brighter outlook on life, and relief from doctor bills, to Grape-Nuts." "There's a reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

JAP-A-LAC

Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

A HIGH GRADE

VARNISH AND STAIN COMBINED

JAP-A-LAC

is a colored varnish of the highest quality. In its manufacture only the purest mineral pigments are used, together with the highest quality of Kauri Gum. We test and purify every pound we buy, thus insuring perfect results. Pigment varnishes never fade. Imitations of Jap-a-Lac may be made from aniline colors which will fade. Never accept a substitute for Jap-a-Lac. Be sure of results.

You can produce any color of wood you desire with Jap-a-Lac, and the finish will be as hard as flint and as smooth as a mirror. It is the most durable and lustrous varnish ever made.

Genuine Jap-a-Lac comes in green-labeled cans and bears our trade-mark. No other manufacturer knows how Jap-a-Lac is made.

It is absolutely impossible to reach the perfection attained except by going through the scientific research and experimental work which has made Jap-a-Lac the one colored varnish which can be used with perfect safety. Why be imposed upon with an imitation when you can obtain the genuine at the same price and at the same time be insured against unsatisfactory results?

We own and operate the largest and complete varnish factory in the world, with experience in making high grade varnish back forty years. Every dollar we spend in advertising Jap-a-Lac would jeopardize our reputation and mean certain failure to our statements were not true in every particular.

A small amount of Jap-a-Lac will cover a disfigured spot on some piece of furniture, or refinish entirely a small table or other surface of equal size. Any housewife who has once used Jap-a-Lac will never allow her home to look as it did before her acquaintance with this wonderful varnish. When she gets the habit of having everything "Jap-a-Lac new" all the time, it will be impossible to go back to the old way.

Jap-a-Lac is manufactured in 18 beautiful colors and is intended for refinishing everything in the home from cellar to garret—scrubbed and worn furniture, interior woodwork, weather beaten doors, chandeliers, tables, etc.

Thousands of dollars are saved every year by the use of this wonderful varnish. Housewives are becoming acquainted with what it is to Jap-a-Lac their household effects, realizing the immense saving.

We have so many suggestions to keepers of how to beautify their homes that we have issued a little booklet that will be invaluable. We shall be glad to send you upon request, together with beautiful color showing all the different colors of Jap-a-Lac. A postal will bring it.

For Sale by Paint, Hardware and Drug Stores. All Sizes—from 15c. to $2.50.

If YOUR dealer does not keep JAP-A-LAC, send us his name and address (except for Gold, which is 25c.) to cover cost of mailing, and send FREE Sample (quarter-pint can) to any point in the United States.

The name "GLIDDEN" on a can of varnish is a guarantee of highest quality. If you use varnishes for any purpose use Glidden's Green Label line and you will secure the best.

The Glidden Varnish Co.

1006 Rockefeller Building, Cleveland, Ohio

Don't Buy a Stove or Range Until You First See

How Much You Save By Getting

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

YOU want to make every cent you spend this year, count for quality and economy.

If you need a stove or range, don't buy until you get our factory prices. I promise you that I will save you $5, $6 or $10 on our smallest stoves, and as high as $18, $20 and even $30 on our largest. And I promise you that you cannot get anywhere at any price, a better stove or range than the Kalamazoo.

Just let me quote you prices. Take our catalog and compare the Kalamazoo quality and prices, with the best line of stoves and ranges you can find sold at retail. That will tell the story. You can see for yourself. You want to save money and you want to get high quality. Why not investigate our plan, then? Why not let me show you the difference between manufacturers' prices and retail prices on stoves or ranges?

We sell to you, direct from the factory, at actual factory prices.

On 360 Days Approval Test—We Pay the Freight

I promise, in black and white, to refund your money—every cent of it—if you do not find your purchase in every way exactly as represented.

Remember, every Kalamazoo is of the highest possible grade, made of the best materials and in the best manner. You deal directly with the manufacturers—a company that has a larger number of individual customers than any other stove company in existence. We have sold thousands of stoves and ranges to readers of this journal, and no doubt can refer you to near neighbors who have saved money by buying a Kalamazoo. Many customers write that they have saved enough on a single Kalamazoo to pay for a whole season's fuel. You can save enough to buy a new suit, a new dress, an article of furniture, or perhaps to pay your taxes. Is it not to your interest to get our prices?

Send Postal for Catalogue No. 103

describing more than 300 sizes and styles of Coal and Wood Ranges, Coal and Wood Heaters, Hotel Ranges, Base Burners, Laundry Stoves, Etc.

I know that if you get our prices—and see our quality you will not even think of buying any other make. Let me show you how much you can save.

William Thompson, Vice-Pres. & Gen. Mgr. KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., MICH. Kalamazoo, Mich.

15 CENTS A ROD

For a 22-inch Hog Fence; 27c for 47-inch Farm Fence; 37c for 60-inch Poultry Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. 68 styles and heights. Catalog free. Write for it today. KITSelman Bros. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

PATENTS that PROTECT

Our 3 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 6 cts. stamps. R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Rooms 20-30 Pacific Bldg., Wash., D. C.

FENCE STRONGEST MADE

en-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue free. COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47 Winchester, Indiana.

AN AID FOR THE DEAF

SENT ON TRIAL, absolutely FREE, of expense or risk. Address, D. G. TIEMANN & CO., 107 Park Row, New York

The Transformation of Margaret

Continued from preceding page

reasonably. Margaret, why have you tried to keep it up all these weeks, when it was just killing you?" "I wanted to make—you—happy," came miserably from behind the hands. "And did you think I could be made happy that way—by your wretchedness?"

There was no answer. "I've seen it coming for a long time," he went on gently, "and I did not blame you. I could never have made you happy, and I knew it almost from the first. I wasn't happy either—because I couldn't make you so. Perhaps now I—I shall be happier; who knows?" he asked with a wan little smile.

Margaret sobbed. It was so like Bobby—to belittle his own grief, just to make it easier for her!

"You see, it was only for the work that you cared for me," resumed the man after a minute. "You loved that, and you thought you loved me. But it was only the work all the time, dear. I understand that now. You see, I watched you—and I watched him."

"Him!" Margaret's hands were down, and she was looking at Bobby with startled eyes.

"Yes. I used to think he loved you then, but after the fire, and I heard your cry of 'Frank'—"

Margaret sprang to her feet. "Bobby, Bobby, you don't know what you are saying," she cried agitatedly.

"Mr. Spencer does not love me, and he never loved me. Why, Bobby, he couldn't—I can prove to you that he couldn't! He even pleaded with me to marry another man."

"He pleaded with you—" Bobby's eyes were puzzled.

"Yes. Now, Bobby, surely you understand that he doesn't love me. Surely you must see!"

Bobby threw a quick look into the fished, quivering face; then hastily turned his eyes away.

"Yes, I see," he said almost savagely. And he did see—more than he wanted to. But he did not understand; how a man could have the love of Margaret and not want it, was beyond the wildest flights of his fancy.

CHAPTER XL

FRANK SPENCER had already left the Mill House and gone to Belcourt when McGinnis was well enough to go back to his place in the mills. The mills, in spite of the loss of the two buildings (which were being rapidly rebuilt) were running full time, and needed him greatly, particularly as the senior member of the firm had not entirely regained his health and strength.

For some time after McGinnis went away, Margaret remained at the Mill House; but she was restless and unhappy in the position in which she found herself. McGinnis taught an evening class at the Mill House, and she knew that it could not be easy for him to see her so frequently now that the engagement was broken. Margaret blamed herself bitterly, not for the broken engagement, but for the fact that there had ever been any engagement at all. She told herself that she ought to have known that the feeling she had for Bobby was not love—and she asked herself scornfully what she thought of a young woman who could give that love all unsought to a man who was so very indifferent as to beg her favor for another!

Those long hours of misery when the mills burned had opened Margaret's eyes; and now that her eyes were opened, she was frightened and shamed.

It seemed to Margaret, as she thought of it, that there was no way for her to turn but to leave both the Mill House and Belcourt for a time. Bobby would be happier with her away, and the Mill House did not need her. Clarabella had come from New York, and had materially strengthened the teaching force. As for Belcourt—she certainly would not stay at Belcourt anyway—now. Later, when she had come to her senses, perhaps—but not now.

It did not take much persuasion on the part of Margaret to convince Mrs. Merideth that a winter abroad would be delightful—just they two together. The news of Margaret's broken engagement had been received at Belcourt with a joyous relief that was nevertheless carefully subdued in the presence of Margaret herself; but Mrs. Merideth could not conceal her joy that she was to take Margaret away from the "whole unfortunate affair," as she expressed it to her brothers. Frank Spencer, however, was not so pleased at the proposed absence. He could see no reason for Margaret's going; and one evening when they were alone together in the library he spoke of it.

"But, Margaret, I don't see why you must go," he protested.

For a moment the girl was silent; then she turned swiftly and faced him.

"Frank, Bobby McGinnis was my good friend. From the time when I was a tiny little girl, he has been that. He is good and true and noble, but I have brought him nothing but sorrow. He will be happier now if I am quite out of his sight at present. I am going away."

Frank Spencer stirred uneasily. "But you will be away—from him—if you are here," he suggested.

"Oh, but if I'm here I shall be there," contested Margaret with a haste that refused to consider logic; then, as she saw the whimsical smile come into the man's eyes, she added brokenly: "Besides, I want to get away—quite away from my work."

To be continued

Learning

I'D SCARCELY threaded my needle Ere a pair of sparkling eyes Had caught me at the sewing, And were full of glad surprise.

"Dear Sister, can't I help you?" The tiny maiden said; "I'm sure that I could do it If you'd only fix the thread."

We sat and sewed together; She chatted on awhile; I glanced at her queer stitches; Perhaps she caught my smile.

"Dear Sister, am I helping? Am I really helping you?" I answered, "'Course you're helping; You'll be a seamstress, too."

She looked down at her stitches, And her face was full of doubt. "Are you sure I'm really helping? Or do you pick them out?"

I caught the tiny maiden And kissed those fingers wee; "Yes, every stitch you're making Is really helping me."

"And if 'twere all unraveled 'Twould matter not a mite, As long as you are learning To take the stitches right."

We all are little children, And life's short seam we sew. Just how to take the stitches We do not always know.

We try to help, but often Our work must be undone. The pitying Lord says gently, "You're learning, little one."

ELLA M. ROBINSON.

—If you are a reader of this paper and reside in Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, or Maryland, you should not fail to read the last column on page 828 of this issue.

Are Your Hose Insured?

This is the guarantee that comes in each box of six pairs of "Holeproof" Hose:

"If any or all of these hose come to holes in six months from the day you buy them, we will replace them free."

The great success of our men's and women's hose has forced us to increase our line.

We Now Make Children's Stockings

These have 6-ply reinforced knees as well as 6-ply heels and toes. So their cost is 50c a pair or $3 a box of 6 pairs. But once you try them you would pay $1 if we asked it.

They save all the darning—they outwear many pairs of the best unguaranteed stockings, so the saving in dollars and cents at the end of the year makes them the cheapest by far. No other hosiery equals "Holeproof" in quality.

We Pay an Average of 73c Per Pound for Our Yarn

We buy the best Egyptian and Sea Island cotton—the softest and finest we know—regardless of what we must pay.

Our yarn is 3-ply. We could pay 35c and get weak and coarse 2-ply yarn, as others do. But you wouldn't buy such hosiery, because it is uncomfortable. We are not trying to sell you wear only. Buy "Holeproof" for all of the qualities of the best unguaranteed hosiery—buy it for six months' longer wear. Your whole family will wear it once they know what it means.

$30,000 a Year Spent for Inspection Alone

80 people in our factory do nothing but examine "Holeproof" Hosiery to see that it is perfect before it is sent out. We do this to protect our reputation. But you get the benefit.

We were the first to guarantee hose in this way. Our hose are so good that the demand is now

15,000 Pairs a Day

Think how much darning—how much trouble and how much money you can save in a year with hosiery that is guaranteed as ours is. Think what a pleasure to wear such hose, since they are soft, comfortable, stylish and well fitting. Try a box. Let what they prove and save decide what hosiery you'll buy in the future.

If your dealer does not have genuine "Holeproof" Hose, bearing the "Holeproof" Trade-mark, order direct from us. Use the coupon. Remit in any convenient way and we will ship you the hose and prepay transportation charges.

FAMOUS Holeproof Hosiery FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

Holeproof Hose for Men—6 pairs, $2. Medium, light and extra light weight. Black, light and dark tan, navy blue, pearl gray, and black with white feet. Sizes, 9½ to 12. Six pairs of a size and weight in a box. All one color or assorted as desired.

Holeproof Lustre-Hose for Men—Finished like silk. 6 pairs, $3. Extra light weight. Black, navy blue, light and dark tan, and pearl gray. Sizes 9½ to 12.

Holeproof Stockings—6 pairs, $2. Medium weight. Black, tan, and black with white feet. Sizes, 8 to 11.

Holeproof Lustre-Stockings—Finished like silk. 6 pairs, $3. Extra light weight. Tan and black. Sizes, 8 to 11.

Children's Stockings—Boys' sizes, 5 to 10, and Misses' sizes, 5 to 9½. Colors, black and tan. Six-ply reinforced knee, heel and toe. 6 pairs, $3.

Ask for our free book, "How to Make Your Feet Happy."

This is a Fact to Note:

Please learn that the only difference between the best unguaranteed hose and "Holeproof" is that "Holeproof" wears longer. Examine them.

See how soft and light they are. Compare any brand of hose with "Holeproof." Then let "Holeproof" show how they wear. Cut out coupon as a memo.

Men's ☐ Women's ☐ Boys' ☐
Misses' ☐

Put check mark in square opposite kind you want.
Holeproof Hosiery Co.,
212 Fourth St.,
Milwaukee, Wis.

Enclosed $ _____ Please send me _____

boxes of Holeproof _____

Size _____ Weight _____

Colors _____

Name _____

Address _____

Reg. U. S. Pat. Office, 1906.
This trade-mark is put on our hose and each box.

NOT A MIRACLE Just Plain Cause and Effect.

There are some quite remarkable things happening every day which seem almost miraculous.

Some persons would not believe that a man could suffer from coffee drinking so severely as to cause spells of unconsciousness. And to find complete relief in changing from coffee to Postum is well worth recording.

"I used to be a great coffee drinker, so much so that it was killing me by inches. My heart became so weak I would fall and lie unconscious for an hour at a time. The spells caught me sometimes two or three times a day."

"My friends, and even the doctor, told me it was drinking coffee that caused the trouble. I would not believe it, and still drank coffee until I could not leave my room."

"Then my doctor, who drinks Postum himself, persuaded me to stop coffee and try Postum. After much hesitation I concluded to try it. That was eight months ago. Since then I have had but few of those spells, none for more than four months."

"I feel better, sleep better and am better every way. I now drink nothing but Postum and touch no coffee, and as I am seventy years of age all my friends think the improvement quite remarkable."

"There's a reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

MERIT and INTEGRITY have Sustained the High Reputation of BORDEN'S EAGLE BRAND CONDENSED MILK for 50 years

Trade Mark Free Sample. Write Dept. B-11 Lamont, Corlies & Co. Agents, 78 Hudson St., N.Y. SHINES BRICTEST

Kalamazoo

Man-Tailored Walking Skirt

Let Me Send You FREE Samples and QUOTE YOU PRICES

Made to Your INDIVIDUAL MEASURE

I Believe that we are showing to-day the best and most complete line of skirt material in America.

I Know that we have the greatest establishment in the world devoted exclusively to making skirts to individual order.

I Promise you that we will make to your individual measure, a better skirt for less money than you get anywhere else.

I will make you a skirt from any material you may select from our samples, and send it to you, express prepaid. If you do not find it perfectly satisfactory in style, fit and finish, I will send back your money by return mail. The saving to you of $2 or $4 on $25 as well worth while—but the extra satisfaction is worth much more to you. Now, I can't send you our new Fall and Winter Styles Catalogue and samples unless you send me your name. Are you not interested enough to get our prices and see for yourself how much we save you? Of course you are. Write today and get our style book by return mail. Address:

This Skirt Only - $5.72
Made to Your Measure
Express Prepaid

KALAMAZOO SUIT CO.
311 Main St., Kalamazoo, Mich.
Makers of Man-Tailored Walking Skirts,
Pettsuits and Children's Dresses.

FREE

Write at once for this handsomely illustrated New York catalogue. It illustrates and describes the latest Fifth Avenue styles of New York City, including among hundreds of others the Sensational "DIRECTOIRE COSTUMES" the talk of Europe and America. It contains 144 pages of wearing apparel exclusively. It tells you how you can dress in the latest advanced styles without having to pay retail prices. It is the largest exclusive wearing apparel catalogue issued in New York City. Sent absolutely FREE to any address upon application. Write for it to-day.

BELLASHESS & CO
BROADWAY PRINCE & CROSBY STS
NEW YORK CITY N.Y.

"I MADE $12 PER DAY
Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set"
From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM.

AGENTS

are coming money. Claude H. Rogers sells 500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $12 to $15 a day. OUT-FIT FREE to workers. THOMAS MFG. CO. 423 Home Bldg Dayton, Ohio

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.50

Sent to your home by Express, Prepaid.

Sizes and Prices
9x6 ft.	$3.50
9x7 1/2 ft.	4.00
9x9 ft.	4.50
9x10 1/2 ft.	5.00
9x12 ft.	5.50
9x15 ft.	6.50

Beautiful and attractive patterns. Made in all colors. Easily cleaned and I warrant to wear. Women in home dress. Best sales can be made. Sold direct at one profit. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

New Catalogue showing goods in actual colors, sent free. ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO. 918-Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia

THE GIANT HEATER

Will Heat Any Ordinary Room in Zero Weather at Almost No Cost
Applied to central draught lamp or gas jet (smoked flame or mantle burner).

Heat and Light AT ONE COST
Col. Y. A. Woodward, New Orleans, La., writes: "The Heater received. Am very much pleased with it."

Price Complete Charges Prepaid
Brass, $1.50; Nickel Plated, $2.00
Giant Heater Co., 163 Monmouth St., Springfield, Mass.

Agent's Outfit Free.—Delight, Blount, Cake and Doughnut and other small cakes and pastries. RICHARDSON MFG. CO. Dayton, N. Y.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Famous Indian Chiefs I Have Known*

THE awful joy with which all boys welcome any anecdotes of Indians will be fully awakened by this attractive book, which appeals to every one who is interested in the Indian question, as well as to boy-lovers of mere stories. Beginning with Osceola, though he was not one whom General Howard had known, we are introduced in turn to the Seminole chief, Billy Bowlegs; to Pasqual the Yuma; Santos the "Aravipa Apache"; One-Eyed Miguel the "Sierra Apache"; Minnemucca, the Piute, Lot, the Spokane, and a dozen others, whose names suggest wild woods, open plains, battle and massacre.

*By Maj.-Gen. O. O. Howard, U. S. A. With illustrations by George Varian, and by photographs. The Century Company, New York. ($1.50.)

Books Received

Home Gymnastics According to the Ling System, by Anders Wide, M.D. 69 pp. Price 50 cents. Funk & Wagnalls, New York, publishers.

Hymns We Love, edited by Adam Geibel and Frederic W. Eickhoff. This extensive collection contains 258 hymns, over 150 of them being absolutely new, written especially for this book. It includes besides many of the best known standard hymns, the most popular and effective hymns and Gospel songs used at the Torrey and Alexander meetings, and selected hymns for the various church feasts, festivals and observances. It is a representative hymn-book, suited to the needs of all Protestant denominations for devotional meetings and Sunday Schools. Cloth covers. Price 20 cents. Adam Geibel Music Co., Philadelphia, publishers.

A Junior Congregation, by Rev. James M. Farrar, D.D. This is a volume of sermons for children. The writer in his preface gives these suggestions: "He (the minister) should not preach 'at' the children, but portray a great principle before them. The sermon should unfold one glad, noble, Christ-centred truth, and be itself unfolded, as an aid to memory, in a pertinent story or anecdote. The attempt should be made to clarify rather than to 'simplify' the sermon. When a man's best thinking is put into such form that children will understand it, and be interested, he has the whole world at his feet. And when he forgets the children and preaches for the grown-up world only, he often misses both." The book, which represents the author's current work among the children for a year, is full of bright things that contain valuable suggestions for those working in the same spiritual field. Pp. 220. Cloth covers. Price $1.20. Funk & Wagnalls, New York, publishers.

He Saves to the Uttermost

TO A WIDE circle of railroad men throughout the United States and Mexico the death of W. D. Murdock gives a sense of personal loss. He was a well-known railroad man and gave thirty-seven years of his life to railroad service. He entered as a clerk in 1871, with the Chicago & Alton, and by unswerving honesty, business ability, and capacity for work quickly attracted the attention of other roads, and in various positions of trust he rose steadily until his last appointment as Passenger Traffic Manager of the Mexican Central System, with which road he was connected for thirteen years.

Mr. Murdock's many kind deeds, little acts of Christian service, and ever-open purse, identified him as a man of noble and humanitarian instincts. He was a member of the Baptist Church, and during his life gave many evidences of his abiding faith in Jesus Christ. He was born at Zanesville, O., September 26, 1852, and was educated at the State University, Normal, Ill. He was married in 1875, and is survived by his wife and five children. He died at Montemorelos, Nuevo Leon, Mexico, where he spent the last year of his life. Shortly before his death, when the shadows were gathering about him, he dictated the following words: "To my friends: I have a bright and abiding hope in Christ, and believe he is the hope and joy of all who will come to him. I send this with the full assurance of a future in his presence, and hope to meet you there. He will save to the uttermost if you trust him and believe his word."

While the Fire is Low

A hot breakfast in a cozy warm room starts one right for the day. A cold dining room spoils the enjoyment of the meal. The dining room or any room in the house can be heated in a few minutes with a

PERFECTION Oil Heater

(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

For instance, you could light it in your bed-room to dress by, then carry it to the dining room, and by the time the coffee is ready, the room is warm. Impossible to turn it too high or too low—never smokes or smells—gives intense heat for 9 hours with one filling. If not at your dealer's write to nearest agency.

The Rayo Lamp is the best lamp for all-round household purposes. Gives a clear, steady light. Made of brass throughout and nickel plated. Equipped with the latest improved central draft burner. Handsome—simple—satisfactory. Every lamp guaranteed.

If you cannot get heater and lamp at your dealer's, write to our nearest agency.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

Deafness

"The Morley 'Phone'"

A miniature Telephone for the Ear, invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E, Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia

$2.45 for THIS WASHER

Guaranteed equal to $5.00 and $6.00 machines sold by dealers and agents. Made full size. Will last for years. We sell Washers and Wringers to users at manufacturers prices. Save you $2.00 to $3.00 on washer and $1.00 to $2.00 on wringer. Write today for Catalogue. It will save you money.

FAVORITE WASHER CO. BOX 42, MUNCIE, INDIANA.

LADIES ARE MAKING $3 TO $10 A DAY

selling made-to-order C.Y.C. Corsets for stout women. You need only to show it to sell it. Our line also includes Bust Forms and other corsets. More ladies wanted to sell these goods. Write to-day.

WRIGHT FORMETTE CO. 134-J West 14th St., New York City

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure, sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for 50c. size, postpaid. DR. LYONS, 180 Day St., Pekin, Ill.

PULPITS Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Desks, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Benches, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only C112 (Church Furniture) School Desks S112 L112 Lodge Furniture Opera Chairs O112 B112 Bank Furniture Office Desks D112 E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

AGENTS "NINE IN ONE"

25 monthly. Combination Rolling Pin. Nine articles combined. Lightning Seller. Sample free. FORSHEE MFG. CO., Box 206 Dayton, O.

When Hamlet Exclaimed "Aye, there's the rub!" could he have referred to

SAWS

ANY WOOD IN ANY POSITION ON ANY GROUND can be cut into 16 ft. Through 6 to 9 cords daily is the usual average for one man.

1 Man with a Folding Machine Beats 2 Men with a Cross-cut Saw Runs Easy No Backache weighs only 41 lbs. EASILY CARRIED
SAWS DOWN TREES

Our 1906 Model Machine saws faster, runs easier and will last longer than ever. Adjusted in a minute to suit a 12-year-old boy or the strongest man. Send for catalogue showing latest improvements. First order gets agency. Folding Sawing Mach. Co., 158 E. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required. Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

SPRAY

It will pay you to spray your Fruit Trees and Vines for protection from scale and all insect pests and fungus diseases. FREE Instruction Book shows the famous Garfield, Empire King, Orchard, Monarch, Leader and other sprayers; also gives a lot of formulas and other valuable information. Field Force Pump Co., No. 75-11th St., Elmira, N.Y.

CORNS

A-CORN SALVE will fix them in a jiffy. Works painlessly, removing roots without risk from cutting or the use of burning poisons. 15c. at druggist's or by mail. Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia.

LAWN FENCE
Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries. Coiled Spring Fence Co. Box D Winchester Ind.

PATENTS SECURED OR FREE RETURNED.

Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free. EVANS, WILKES & CO., WASHINGTON, D.C.

SAPOLIO

NEW YORK FASHION BOOK

Beautifully FREE Illustrated

MEN—WOMEN—CHILDREN

Macy's wonderful new 450 page New York Fashion Book which we will send you free, illustrates in beautiful half-tone and describes accurately, exactly the same styles which New Yorkers admire as they daily crowd the immense doors of the main carriage entrance of our store on Broadway, 34th to 35th Sts. In the 85 different departments we are now exhibiting over 1,000,000 worth of new Autumn and winter merchandise, the products from our factories in America and Europe, and a choicest goods brought by our expert buyers in all parts of the world. This 450 page Book which we are now going to send you free shows the most carefully chosen selections from the immense stock.

ASK YOUR FRIEND

If you don't know Macy's and the great 11 story Macy Building and the magnificent displays, ask one of your friends or experienced friends to tell you about our famous store, or send us a postal card and we will send you a copy of the new Book free. We are sure you will want one, because all over the United States men and women of position in cultured homes are delighted with the convenience and the economy which the Macy system is affording. You will enjoy the handsome half-tone illustrations and interesting descriptions of the Made-to-Measure Suits, Millinery, Shirt Waists, Furs and fashions for Men's Apparel for all occasions and the most stylish garments for boys and girls, and suggestions for furnishing and decorating your home. You will be sure of having real New York styles and genuine New York prices.

MACY'S GUARANTEE

Remember that for over 50 years R. H. Macy & Co. has been established right in the heart of New York City and at the policy of selling the best goods at the lowest prices has made Macy's famous, the world over. We sell everything under satisfaction guarantee, which means that we return your money immediately and without question if any purchase you make fails to meet your expectation or satisfy your good taste. Write us a postal to-day,—better write now.

ASK FOR FASHION BOOK K

R. H. Macy & Co.'s Attractions Are Their Low Prices

Macy's

R. H. MACY & CO. Broadway, 34th and 35th Sts., New York

5,000 Grand Offers!

Doors, Windows, Millwork

50% Below Dealers' Prices

Here are a few samples of our 5,000 Building Material Bargains: Doors 7c. Windows 6c. Screen Doors 9c. 108 square feet Flint-Coated Roofing, guaranteed 6 years, $1.41. 100 square feet Tar Felt 30c. 45-light Hot Bed Sash $1.69. 100 lineal feet Quarter Round 25c. Base Blocks 4c. Corner Blocks 2c. Glass, 8x10 inches, 3/4c. 100 feet Hardwood Flooring 80c. Porch Brackets 5/4c. Porch Spindles 1/4c. Hardwood Thresholds 15c. Adjustable Ornamentals 75c.

We save you at least 50 per cent on everything we sell for building houses, barns, out-buildings, school houses, churches, stores, etc. It pays to buy from The Largest Plant in America Selling Direct to Consumer Quality & Safe Delivery Guaranteed Not in any Trust. Absolutely independent. Our stock is immense and we ship promptly. Everything is bright and new—no "wreckage."

All millwork strictly up to official grade adopted by the Sash, Door & Blind Manufacturers' Association. Get the Great Catalog FREE for a Postal

It will save you big money. Packed and jammed with bargains. Our responsibility vouches for by three Big Banks. Money Refunded and Freight Paid Both Ways if Goods are not Exactly as Represented. Write for FREE CATALOG.

Gordon-Van Tine Co., 1137 Case St., Davenport, Ia.

Best Roofing
108 sq. ft. $1.41
Free Nails & Cement

Occupations for Women

By FRANCES E. WILLARD

500 pages; illustrated. Regular Price, $3.75. SPECIAL PRICE, $1.00, all Charges Prepaid.

P. B. Bromfield & Co., Bible House, New York

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure THIS DOES IT ALL

The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles nation-wide agents, V.C. Gleason, Colo., sold 22 pairs of Positive CUT TO THE END Tension Shears in 3 hours, made $13.50. We guarantee TO SHOW ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $3 TO $10 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents, that are not found in stores, than any other house in the U.S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address Thomas Mfg. Co., 188 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio

BLMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOG TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

ARE YOU DEAF? We have 25 INSTRUMENTS TO ASSIST HEARING. On approval. Send for Catalogue. WM. C. WILLIS & CO., 134 So. 11th St., Phila.

Life in the "Children's Village"

Continued from page 823

placed by the Board in this class. In the course of the years, dependent children, who once formed a large percentage of those committed to the Asylum, are now practically unknown there. It has become almost purely a reformatory institution, and as such its needs are recognized as still more pressing than before. The prosecution and punishment of our criminals is enormously expensive to the State. If we can nip in the bud the sinful tendency, as this institution essays to do, and actually does, as its statistics amply show, every good citizen should aid it by every means in his power.

More than 38,000 unfortunate children have been cared for here, and of this number, as in the somewhat similar Girard College in Philadelphia, ninety per cent. are estimated to turn out good and law-abiding citizens.

Among the "old boys" who love to come back to the Asylum are the Secretary of State of a great Western commonwealth; a district judge in another; several members of legislatures; and other locally prominent men, who might readily have sunk into the worthless and even pernicious class, but for the elevating and refining influences of the Asylum.

Mr. Charles D. Hilles is the model superintendent, and has surrounded himself with a wonderfully efficient corps of helpers. Mornay Williams, Esq., is the President of the Board of Directors, which includes the names of many others of the men who have most distinguished themselves among us for good works. Henry N. Tift is the Secretary, and Willard Parker Butler, the Treasurer.

Many of the children are sent West every year. The city maintains in Chicago an agency through which homes and situations are found for them. This class of children almost invariably turn out well.

Church Federation Congress

THE first meeting of "The Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America" will be held in Philadelphia, December 2-8. The Plan of Federation recommended by the Inter-Church Conference of 1905, having received the official approval of thirty national assemblies, representing an aggregate church membership of over fifteen millions, is now the working constitution of the "Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America." Under a compact that recognizes "the essential oneness of the Christian Churches in Jesus Christ as their Divine Lord and Saviour," the Council will come together to promote the spirit of fellowship, service and co-operation, and to consider methods and suggest plans, through which the churches may "prosecute work that can be better done in union than in separation."

The Conference of 1905 appointed an organizing committee. Each of the thirty constituent bodies in the fellowship of the Conference is represented on this committee, which will report to the coming Conference. The Committee on Organization and Development has Rev. Bishop E. R. Hendrix, of Kansas City, as chairman. "Methods of Co-operation in Home Missions" will be brought to the front in a report of the committee of which Rev. Edgar P. Hill, D.D., of Chicago, is chairman. "Co-operation in Foreign Missions" is in the hands of a committee of which Dr. James L. Barton, secretary of the American Board, is chairman. Other subjects to be discussed in papers by able speakers are: "Family Life," by Rt. Rev. W. C. Doane (P. E. Church); "Temperance," by Rev. Bishop Luther B. Wilson, D.D., (M. E. Church); "State Federations," "Methods of Religious Instruction in Sunday Schools," "Week-day Religious Instruction in the Public Schools," "The Church and Labor," "The Church and the Immigrant Problem," etc. Governor Charles E. Hughes of New York will speak on "Civic Righteousness."

Imitation is not always Flattery

PEARLINE is the Original Washing Powder. Don't think it would have been so widely Imitated if it had not Justified Our Claims? Every housewife who has tried it has found it better than any other. More Bulk, Less Price, Brummagem Jewelry, Knocking at Doors and Ringing of Door-bells, no end of Begging and Thieving by Peddlers and Quacks—

QUEER INDUCEMENTS THESE!

PEARLINE needs no such Helps. PEARLINE does More Work and No Harm, it Costs Less Money a Wash-day, any Day, a Week, a Month—a Great Deal Less a Year; it keeps Clothes like New, even Better than New in Color; Keeps you Young; Saves Wrinkles—all but the Cheerful ones—Makes them!

Which sort of Wrinkles do you Prefer: The Tired or Jolly ones?

This is for you to Answer—Tell your Grocer.

PEARLINE SAVES YOUR MONEY SAVES YOUR HEALTH

The Born Steel Range

not only bakes better than other ranges and makes cooking easier, but we know by actual tests, will save you fuel. Born Ranges are far better than ordinary stoves in material and workmanship and a good deal better in design—better by 12 exclusive patented features. Yet Born Ranges cost you no more than the ordinary kind.

Write us to-day and we will send you catalog with all information giving you name of our nearest dealer or telling you how you can buy our stoves.

THE BORN STEEL RANGE CO. 2176 E. 9TH STREET, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Makers of the First Steel Range in the World.

BUY YOUR GLASSES OF US

READ SPECIAL FREE OFFER BELOW

SATISFACTION GUARANTEED OR MONEY BACK

You Get Dealers and Oculists Profits — Saves 1/2

WHY keep on paying high prices for your glasses when we can furnish you the best quality of lenses, perfectly fitted, for about one-half to two-thirds of what you are now paying? We save you the dealer's and oculist's profits.

Our business is the oldest and largest of its kind in the world. We have pleased customers in every country on the face of the globe. No matter where you live, we supply your needs just as accurately as if you were right here in our fitting parlors.

Many readers of this publication buy their glasses of us. The editor knows that we are reliable and experienced.

We guarantee satisfaction or refund your money, so don't hesitate to give us a trial.

We use the only truly scientific eye testing device for home use—the Ocularscope—invented by our Mr. Shellman. We own the patents, so no one else can use this wonderful device.

FREE Large Illustrated Catalog of Eye Glasses and Spectacles and Ocularscope, both FREE, prepaid. Write for them to-day.

Our Mr. A. J. Shellman, inventor of the Ocularscope and originator of the System of Fitting Glasses by mail, 27 years in the retail optical business in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Special FREE Offer

IF you can use a book of chemically prepared tissue paper for cleaning glasses and will mail us a two-cent stamp, we will send you a book at once. Use Coupon—not necessary to write letter. If you want advice as to the care or treatment of the eyes, write us to-day.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS

1102 Ledyard Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

"Oldest and Largest Mail Order Optical House"

FREE COUPON

Grand Rapids Wholesale Opticians: Without any obligation on my part, please send me FREE, prepaid, a Large Illustrated Catalog of Eye Glasses and Spectacles and Ocularscope.

CUT COUPON HERE

Name.....

Town and State.....

I enclose two-cent stamp, for which include FREE a book of tissue paper for cleaning glasses

MARK ANTONY DELIVERING THE FUNERAL ORATION OVER THE BODY OF JULIUS CÆSAR

CAESAR'S name has stood through all the ages as the embodiment of imperial power. His untimely end, after reaching the pinnacle of earthy glory, is one of the great tragedies of history. The picture shown herewith, from Ridpath's History, is but ONE of TWO THOUSAND in the complete work, and serves to illustrate but ONE event out of all the THOUSANDS which make up the history of every empire, kingdom, principality, and Nation, all accurately and entertainingly told in the world-famed publication

RIDPATH'S HISTORY OF THE WORLD

THE PUBLISHER'S FAILURE placed in our hands the entire unsold edition of this monumental work. BRAND NEW, down to date, beautifully bound in Half-Morocco, which we must sell immediately. We are offering the remaining sets

At LESS than even damaged sets were ever sold

We will name our price only in direct letters to those sending the coupon below. Tear off the Coupon, write name and address plainly and mail now before you forget it. Dr. Ridpath is dead, his work is done; but his family derive their income from his History, and to print our price broadcast for the sake of selling these sets would cause great injury to future sales. Send Coupon To-day. The sample pages are free.

The Christian Herald, in reviewing this great publication, says: "Ridpath's History of the World may be regarded as a complete library in itself. No other work of its kind has ever supplied a History so well suited to the needs of all classes and conditions of men. We mark the marvelous influence of Christianity upon the world's progress. He would be a blind reader of history indeed who did not discern, throughout all, the influence of a great Omnipotent hand, guiding and developing all things. We cheerfully commend this most popular and complete of all world histories to our readers. These nine handsomely bound volumes will make the very best nucleus for a family library, and will be a potent educator of the young and a mine of valuable information for readers of all ages."

Weight 50 lbs

PRESIDENT WILLIAM MCKINLEY said:

"I am familiar with the merits of Ridpath's History of the World, and cordially commend it to the scholar as well as to the plain people generally."

PROF. WARREN, Pres't Boston University, said:

"I should be glad to see it placed in the library of every young person in the United States, and even in the English-speaking world. In families where there are bright children it will render excellent service to the cause of popular intelligence."

PROF. LONG, Supt. Public Schools, St. Louis, said:

"I unhesitatingly commend Dr. Ridpath's History of the World as the ablest work on that subject which I have ever examined. The engravings, maps and charts are alone worth the entire cost of the set."

BISHOP VINCENT, Chancellor of Chautauqua, said:

"Ridpath's History is in clear and agreeable style, comprehensive in treatment, readable type and admirable illustrations. This set of books is a permanent college chair of general history in one's own house."

THE BOSTON POST said:

"John Clark Ridpath is above all things an historian. His historical works are accepted as standards in schools and colleges, as well as in business houses and homes. His style is simple, his manner charming."

9
Royal Volumes
4000 Pages
2000 Illustrations

CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS have shown wonderful appreciation of our remarkable offer.

We have shipped this splendid History of the World to delighted readers living in every State of the Union, to nearly all foreign countries and to the far-away islands of the sea. To read this history is to know peoples and races, kingdoms and empires, principalities and powers; to behold senates in session, armies marching, battles fought and victorious legions coming home; to follow the march of civilization westward from the Indus to the Euphrates, from the Euphrates to the Tiber, from the Tiber to the Thames, from the Thames to the Hudson, from the Hudson to the Mississippi and from the Mississippi to the Shores of the Philippines. And the greatest fact which the history of all the ages has proven for men and nations is that Righteousness is the only Principle that exalteth a nation, and that the only real power is Intelligence united with Purity of Character. The strength of men and nations is not in splendid cities and temples, not in mighty armies or navies, but in the intelligent home life and heart life of the people. Ridpath's History will prove a household treasure. It has been purchased and strongly endorsed by President William McKinley, President Benjamin Harrison, General Stephen D. Lee, General Lew Wallace, Senator Teller, Senator Curtis, James Whitcomb Riley, Rabbi Hirsh, Bishop Vincent, John L. Stoddard, Bishop Newman, and the Presidents of Brown, Bates, Amherst, Smith and practically all other American colleges and universities. Send Coupon To-day.

EVERY AMERICAN CITIZEN should know the history of our own country and of the world to intelligently perform his full duty as a citizen in the Government of this Nation. How else are we to judge of the great national questions that crowd upon us for decision except by some knowledge of the past? Our Colonial Policy, the Question of the Trusts agitating the great business and commercial world, the respective rights of labor and capital, the conflict between Socialism on the one hand and organized business and industry on the other—these and hundreds of other important questions press upon us as a nation for intelligent discussion and decision. How have such questions been met in the past? For the answer read the history of ancient civilizations which flourished, decayed and died and have been so thoroughly obliterated from the face of the earth that even the location of their splendid cities is unknown. Read the history of mighty Babylon, or of imperial Rome as a kingdom, then as a republic, and finally as an empire, and familiarize yourself with her growth, development and decay. Read the history of the French Revolution, the establishment of the republic, out of which came the empire dominated by Napoleon. Then when you know history, when you know the cause of the rise and downfall of empires and nations, and not until then, will you be able to intelligently discuss and decide the great questions that are pressing now everywhere for attention. The growth, development and decay of the nations of the world constitute the most inspiring theme that can claim the attention of man. It is an inspiring story, and Dr. Ridpath has told it better than it has ever been told before. 200,000 Americans Own and Love Ridpath.

$1
Brings
Complete Set.
Balance
Small Sums
Monthly

FREE COUPON

WESTERN NEWSPAPER
ASSOCIATION

Christian Herald Bureau
204 Dearborn St., Chicago

Ridpath's History of the World, containing the history of the world, from the beginning of time to the present day, is a complete library in itself. It is a work of great value and interest, and is highly recommended by the Christian Herald.

NAME

ADDRESS

No letter necessary. Just sign Coupon and mail.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

FOLD HERE, TEAR OUT, SIGN AND MAIL

CHRISTIAN HERALD

SEE PAGE 849

THE AMERICAN BATTLESHIP FLEET ENTERING MANILA BAY

Leave Your Wife a Regular Income

Through the

New Monthly Income Policy

of

The Prudential

The one kind of Life Insurance Policy of most practical value to the woman. It is the policy your wife would like, because it gives her a sure monthly income such as she is accustomed to.

This is the Safest Way to leave your life insurance. The monthly income cannot be encumbered or depreciated. The principal cannot be lost. All worry about safe investment is eliminated.

THE COST IS LOW

Write for Rates at Your Age and Learn How You can Provide an Absolute Guaranteed Income for Your Family. Address Dept. 70.

Cost of insuring an Income of $10 per month for 20 years.

AT AGE OF INSURED	COST PER YEAR
25 . . .	$29.41
30 . . .	33.47
35 . . .	38.76
40 . . .	45.76
45 . . .	55.20
50 . . .	68.11

Other monthly sums up to $500 in proportion.

The income is paid for not less than 20 years.

The income can be made payable for life of beneficiary at slightly higher cost.

The Prudential Insurance Company of America

Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President

Home Office, Newark, N. J.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Prince Nicholas and His Wife

The Palace of Prince Nicholas

The Crown Princess and Crown Prince

PEACE OR WAR IN THE BALKANS?

TURBULENT Serbia is still regarded as likely to bring more trouble to Europe, with the spirit of her people as ready to take fire and as ready to rush to war as at any time in their history. Fortunately king and parliament are keeping comparatively cool, and the vote of the representatives against war did much to reassure Europe. When the Servian parliament, the Skupshtina, assembled in an extraordinary session on the morning of October 10, the people of Belgrade were marching through the streets and clamoring for war. Professor Jovanovic, one of the most ardent of the war party, was elected to preside over the sessions, and shortly after a great mass meeting was held in one of the squares, and after fiery speeches were made, the parliament building and called for war. The deputies were greatly influenced by the demonstration, but the warning of high officials had its effect. At last the call for a vote was insistent and it was taken, the deputies leaning forward almost breathlessly to hear the count on which the fate of the country should depend. Sixty-six, the president of the chamber announced, had voted for war with Austria-Hungary, while ninety-three had cast their votes against it. The waiting crowds heard the result sullenly. However, only the reservist troops of the first class were ordered to rejoin their regiments, showing that the authorities were still in doubt as to what they should do.

The Crown Prince threw himself heart and soul into the war movement and further complicated matters from a diplomatic point of view. He made a speech to a large assembly of students, in which he offered to raise a party of volunteers, and lead them into Bosnia, where it was reported that those of Servian blood (and they compose a large part of the population of that province) were ripe for revolt. The students cheered the Prince enthusiastically, ending with the shout, "Long live the King of Bosnia! Long live the King of Bosnia!" The popular mind was further inflamed by the rumor that Austria would send three ironclads along the Danube by Servian territory. The war party soon found out one reason why the government did not want to open the struggle. The Prime Minister told the populace the melancholy fact that Servia was short of powder, not having enough for a skirmish, to say nothing of keeping the steel field-pieces barking in battle, a siege, or a long campaign. The government had ordered powder in time from the factories at Creusot, but Germany and Switzerland prevented its being brought across their territory. Austria had consented to let it pass through her territory, but the promise was all Serbia had received; the powder was still out of reach and the countries who did not care to see the Servians marching out of their own borders, evidently intended that it should be long before it reached the purchaser.

The Assembly has voted a sum equal to $3,200,000 have been reinforced by the Servian police. The people of Shabats, Servia, on the river bank, celebrated the event with great rejoicings. Then the hot-heads of Belgrade boarded an Austrian steamer, tore down the flag of Austria-Hungary, paraded it in derision through the streets of Belgrade, and burned it in the public square. Austria may wait to see what a conference of the Powers may do in regard to the seizure of the two provinces and then turn her attention to Servia.

Little, picturesque Montenegro has also thrown her defiance in the teeth of Austria, and will be very sorry if some one will not go to war with her. Recently things have been too peaceful to suit the Montenegrin. He loves war before all else. The crack of rifles, the cheer of charging men beneath a bristle of steel, as the cannon growl along the horizon, are the sweetest music in his ears. He regards peace as a calamity—a period when the muscles of men grow weak and their spirits degenerate. When the bugles are sounding again along the old grave-marked paths to the southward or the northward of Montenegro, the shepherds and the tradesmen will leave their tasks and surge to the front with joyful hearts.

One does not have to say, "Prepare for war," for they are all ready every hour in the day. The belt the Montenegrin wears is a cartridge belt well filled. Over his shoulder is slung his well-tried rifle, and the hilts of no less than two pistols peep coyly out from his embroidered sash. Then there is a dirk or two; and, if business is really afoot, a curved sabre bangs against his left legging with every step. The Montenegrin has this great advantage over any foe: the country is one of the most impregnable on the earth's surface. No one wants to go into it, and a few men in its widest pass can make it good against an army.

In all languages the name given to Montenegro means the "Black Mountain." The name is said by most writers to be derived from the fact that the land which skirts the eastern shore of the Adriatic was once covered with an immense black forest of pines. This forest, however, has long since disappeared and the traveler sees only gray mountains.

Continued on page 845

A Panoramic View of Belgrade Looking Toward the Danube

in American money to support the government. The only trouble is that Servia has few factories to produce her own supplies, and other countries will not sell her any until she cools down. If there is to be any war the great Powers wish to have the sole privilege of starting it.

Servia on October 12 committed an act that might lead to war. The Servian customs officials on the frontier went out to the middle of the river and captured the Hungarian custom house, which is situated on the small island of Bajukleiz. The Servians, with their guns, drove off the thirty or more Hungarians and are still holding the island. They

THE American Pulpit

A Temperance Sermon by Rev. Silas C. Swallow, D.D.

The Sting of the Adder

TEXT—Gen. 18: 23—"Wilt thou also destroy the righteous with the wicked?"

THIS was an exceedingly interesting dialogue between God and Abraham, "the Father of the Faithful," nearly four thousand years ago. God threatening the "cities of the plain," Sodom and Gomorrah, with dire destruction for their great wickedness, and Abraham pleading for them, if there could be found fifty, forty-five, thirty, twenty, ten righteous—pleading with him to have mercy on the cities for their sake and spare them. Abraham doubtless, after every proposition, searched the city to find the mercy-purchasing number, but they could not be found: and the rain of fire and brimstone came, and, like Tyre and Sidon and Babylon and Pompeii, only wave-washed or ash-covered ruins remain as monuments of the destructiveness of sin.

In the choosing by Abraham and his nephew, Lot, of future homes, in order to separate their quarrelling herdsmen, Lot had the first choice, and doubtless thought he had the advantage in selecting the rich valley of the Jordan, with its flourishing villages, towns, and cities, in which to introduce his family into polite society, get city-bred men for husbands for his daughters, and easy positions for his luxury-loving sons. But it was as true then as now, that "he laughs best who laughs last." Abraham, from the pure air of his mountain pastures, where he had studied the book of nature as the book of God, and the stars as the never-sleeping eyes of the Jehovah who had sent him a pilgrim into a country "he knew not of," must needs come to the rescue of his proud city nephew and his threatened family.

The Country Must Save the Cities

Strange, was it not, that in the escape, the children did not look back? But then children never do. It is the aged wife who regrets the quitting of home and its hard-earned furnishings and bric-a-brac. She had so wrought her soul into these accumulations that even salt could not save her. Children are looking to the future. Change and new homes and new associates and new surroundings have such charms for them that they are not tempted to the backward look. It is reserved for the aged ones to do that, and to remember the occurrences of childhood, and forget those of yesterday.

Abraham, the great heart, remembering only in pity Lot's foolish and self-inflicted bargain, hurries to the gates of the wicked city to save his relatives from the results of their own folly. In his pleadings, he argues against the injustice of "destroying the righteous with the wicked." However, only an escape to the mountains can prevent this. To tarry in the plain of self-indulgence means death. Association with evil means contamination, and that means destruction. If the city is saved, the country must save it. The city left without the new supplies of food, of men, of energy, of pluck, of temperance, of integrity, of conscience and of piety—all country-grown and mountain-seasoned—soon so degenerates as to be "not worth saving."

How the Innocent Suffer

But if the city suffers, the country must suffer with it. The hand cannot say to the foot, "I have no need of thee," nor can the body say to the mind or the mind to the body, "I have no need of thee." Interdependence is a law of being. How often do we hear it said, "If you only let liquor alone it won't hurt you," but the lie is contradicted in gory colors in every issue of the daily press the world over. It would be a waste of time to combat the silly falsehood, which is twin to that other untruthful saw, viz.: "He injures by his sins only himself." The husband, father, son drink intoxicants, and the wife, the children, and the mother, all innocent of complicity in the crime, suffer with the suffering tippler. The city drinks and the country helps pay the expense of judges, juries, attorneys, jailers, hangmen and grave-diggers who try, condemn, and imprison or, perchance, hang and bury the drink-crazed criminal.

Richmond, Va.; Springfield, Mo.; Springfield, O.; and last of all, Springfield, Ill.; all voted whisky in, and voted decency out, and the "dry" counties helped pay the mob-made bills and the whole country was disgraced. Think of the city of Abraham Lincoln at the mercy of a rum-crazed mob, so intent on theft, arson, and assassination that only the State militia could subdue it. Twenty-seven houses in ashes. Over fifty people, mostly innocent, wounded; and seven persons dead, not one of them guilty of the unspeakable crime for which the rioting began. The innocent suffering with the guilty.

Will the American people ever awake to the unalterable fact that the liquor question is a national question—the greatest national question yet to be solved? One State cannot suffer without all the others suffering with it. The superlative selfishness of the rich, who by virtue of "a pull" with the courts or with the politicians, force the saloons out of their own uptown residence neighborhoods in our cities and drive them to the downtown residence sections of the uninfluential poor, is ever punishing itself through the drunken, incapable labor given in exchange for the rich man's gold, and in the increased taxes levied, the product of the increased poverty and crime of the city, to say nothing of the constant menace to the morals of the families of the thrifty through the existence of the saloon anywhere this side of its native perdition.

Government and the Liquor Traffic

Moral questions are not settled by majorities, else Noah and his family had not been saved while the multitudes who laughed him to scorn for one hundred and twenty years went down to destruction in the flood. God is the first and final umpire in morals, and his commands are clear-cut, positive, emphatic and unalterably prohibitive. "Thou shalt not swear, nor lie, nor break the Sabbath, nor steal, nor covet, nor commit adultery, nor murder. Thou shalt not!" All the law worthy the name of law the world over, whether it be domestic, municipal, statutory, national, or international, finds its germ in the prohibitions of Sinai. None of them are submitted to a vote of the people to decide. God, the arbiter of human necessities, has already decided, and the best statesmanship of the ages has followed the Sinaitic formula of "Thou shalt not." But when it comes to the liquor question, here statesmanship exhibits its degeneracy by halting and saying, "Thou mayest make and sell the poverty, crime, and death-producing poison if thou wilt divide the revenue therefrom with the government." And when the government, which in a republic means the people, is driven to a modification of its methods by witnessing the moral and material ruin produced by its own folly and crime, it turns compromiser, and is willing to leave it to a vote of the majority to decide whether God is to be defied or obeyed.

The Scriptures are not less explicit as to the individual's relation to the drink habit and traffic. "Who hath woe? Who hath sorrow? Who hath contentions? Who hath babbling? Who hath wounds without cause? Who hath redness of eyes?" Why, any child outside of Kansas or Maine could guess that conundrum, viz.: "They that tarry long at the wine; that go to seek mixed wine." Therefore, "Look not thou upon the wine when it is red, when it giveth its color in the cup, when it moveth itself aright"—all marks of fermentation as distinguished from the harmless, unfermented juice of the grape; and the reason assigned for the inhibition even of a "look," is "For at the last it biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder." Yes, at the last, when the soul needs the emollient applied by a good conscience, a clear brain, and an abundance of the grace of God to meet "the king of terrors." Ah, at the last, the drinker finds only the companionship and horrible comfort afforded by hissing, rattling, biting serpents and stinging adders.

Deaf to Old Truths

But listen again. A thousand years later in the world's history, when Jesus "had come and gone," and Paul was writing from Rome to the Christians at Ephesus, he pens that terse command, worthy, as we see it, to combat the sensuality of twentieth century Epicureanism in and out of the church, and to be embossed in gold and nailed, like Luther's theses at Wittenberg, to the door of every church in Christendom. Let all hear who have ears; for alas, in the babble of commercialism, the masses have gone nearly deaf to old truths. "Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess; but be ye filled with the Spirit." It was as though he had written: "I concede the necessity for your being lifted out of the ennui that is the product of life's drudgery, or satiety, or listless languor, or disgust with the treadmill duties of the kitchen, the shop, the store, the school-room." And well might Paul say that for did not Caleb Colton say that "ennui perhaps has made more gamblers than avarice, more drunks than thirst, and perhaps as many suicides as despair?" "Admit it all," says the Apostle to the Gentiles; "but steady now! Be careful that you mistake not effect for cause and end for means. I concede the necessity for something that will exalt and recreate the moral, the intellectual, the physical forces; but 'be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess,' for it only sensualizes the spirit, whereas the need of all is a spiritualizing of the senses."

On the day of Pentecost, all being of one accord in one place, after a ten days' waiting, watching, longing, pleading for the endowment of power, the Spirit came; and the waiting ones had not only tongues of fire on their heads but in their hearts and though unlearned they spake the languages of earth doubtless, and walked and leaped and praised God, till the guzzlers of intoxicants sarcastically hurled the taunt at them, "These men are full of their new wine." Peter effectually combated the slander. Then followed the marvelous sermon, under which three thousand were converted and added to the church in a single day.

Woe to the Drunkard

Paul admits the necessity for getting out of the rut, and for finding expression for our Spirit-generated hilarity. And what is his prescription? "Speaking to yourselves in psalms, and hymns, a spiritual songs; singing and making melody in your heart unto the Lord. Giving thanks always for all things unto God and the Father, in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Try it, sin-bedeviled soul, as long as you indulge in copious draughts from the cup of salvation, you will have no use for the sensualizing potions that poison the springs of life, and sink the soul into perdition.

The temperance and prohibition question is hoary with age. It is as old as sin. "In the day that thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die." The necessity for temperance societies has been apparent from Noah till now. David, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, Daniel, Amos and Malachi all had the vexatious problem staring them in the face. Amos hit hard at the tipplers of his age, saying, substantial "Woe unto them that drink wine in bowls and anoint themselves with the chief ointments, and lie upon beds of ivory, and stretch themselves upon the couches. Therefore now shall they go captive with the first that go captive, and the banquet of the that stretched themselves shall be removed." Wine, beer, whisky, gin, rum are only different ways of spelling captivity for men, communities and nations. Joel cried out, "Howl, all ye drinkers of wine." "They sold a girl for wine that they might drink." Many an American parent is selling his children into drunkenness by his silent complicity with the liquor traffic in his own business interest. For what is a drunkard or two in the family, if only the father can keep peace with drinkers and seller and can gather in the shekels?

How the Prophets Fought the Evil

Isaiah had much to say about this curse of curse. He lived when Israel from bare-backed serfdom had come to a national prosperity that has its only parallel in the luxurious living of the profligate rich and the beggary of the helpless poor of our own day. Isaiah belonged to the aristocracy of his day but was of the Johannian type of character by second birth. He was a seer who could see. A fourth of the book he wrote, with its sixty-six chapters, is given up to the fiercest denunciations of the liquor habit and traffic, and the correlated sins and crimes of that remote period, twenty-six hundred years ago. Isaiah was no doubt abused as a "crank built to turn things; even to 'turn the world upside down,' where he found it wrong side up. He may have been denounced as "a kicker," "a knocker," "a pessimist or their equivalent. A 'prophet of evil'? Yes; but a prophet, too, of good. The evangelical prophet of the Old Testament Scriptures. Hear him, ye degenerate, vote-neglecting, luxury-loving

Continued on page 845

Servian Peasant

A Woman of Belgrade

Palace of Belgrade

Servian Woman

A Servian Soldier

Prince Nicholas, the present ruler, is one of the most foresighted princes of the day. His heart has no other ambition than the good of his country. He has been a builder of roads. At first, his people could not see the use of having a good system of roads; so why should they work hard to have them? But the roads were built, and communication opened up between the coast and the interior. He has sent officials to the more civilized countries of Europe to study their methods of administration. France he has always admired, and many French customs have been adopted. He has established a museum and a library, and is a friend of modern education, though the latter has not yet made much progress. Two of his daughters have married into the Russian Imperial family, and another daughter is the queen of Italy. He has seen more fighting, probably, than any other ruler in Europe, and has the respect of the military men of other nations as a competent general.

Prince Nicholas led in person the Montenegrins on their last campaign in the open field in 1875, when the Montenegrin volunteers swarmed out to help Herzegovina, which had risen against the Turks. The warlike Prince Nicholas formed an alliance with King Milan of Serbia, and in 1876 declared war. The Prince led eleven thousand men into Herzegovina, and the people rushed to his support. The Prince besieged Nicksic for four months, and took it, an achievement which the doughty old ruler recalls with great pleasure to the present day as one of his greatest exploits. Then came the final stroke. Montenegro had always been cut off from the sea. With rapid marches he reached the towns of Dulcigno and Antivari, took them, and their fine harbors have since been Montenegrin possessions. The Prince composed a hymn of triumph to the sea which is still gleefully chanted around the peasant firesides. His love of literature in some respects is almost equal to his love of battle. When the armistice was made between Russia and Turkey, and the war was over, it was found that for every Montenegrin who had been killed at least twenty Turks had bit the dust. By treaty the principality was more than doubled. Her population was increased equally, and Turkey recognized Prince Nicholas's independence. Nicholas is very friendly with Serbia, and has beheld with intense dislike the encroachments of Austria in Bosnia and Herzegovina. In fact, his troubles with Turkey are not such as to cause him much worry. He looks now with a more distrustful eye toward the gray coats of the Austrian garrisons which hem in his frontiers. Austria, however, considers him a prickly burr which she will not try to pick off from his rocks unless he interferes too much with her plans.

Russia is Prince Nicholas's friend. On October 12 the National Assembly met in the little capital of Cetinje, in extraordinary session. The delegates were filled with the war fever, much as Serbia had been. They registered their protest against the annexation by Austria of the provinces of Herzegovina and Bosnia, "the cradle of their race." The Prince stirred them up with a warlike message in which he declared that the annexation of these two provinces had inflicted a crying wrong upon the people of Montenegro and that the people were prepared to sacrifice the last drop of their blood unless peaceful endeavors now on foot resulted in righting this grievance. When this was read the deputies broke into wild cheers of approval, and voted full confidence in the action of the government.

At the present writing two Austrian warships are reported to be hovering off the thirty miles of Montenegrin coast. Austria has probably got Herzegovina and Bosnia for some time to come, but she has also acquired some very uncomfortable neighbors.

A Prince of Montenegro and His Officers

THE STING OF THE ADDER ~ A Temperance Sermon by Silas C. Swallow, D.D. — Continued

sensualistic, poverty-stricken, purse-proud millionaires of the twentieth century: "Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them! And the harp, and the viol, the tabret, and pipe, and wine are in their feasts; but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands." "Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink, which justify the wicked for reward and take away the righteousness of the righteous"—in other words, accept bribes for shielding the guilty, and shutting up the innocent.

Hear him again, as he fiercely denounces the "neutral," "mind-my-own-business," "satisfied-with-things-as-they-are," business-immersed financier, or salary-satisfied preacher, or dodging politician, or "at-ease-in-Zion" heathen. In view of the sins of those who are guilty not only of the sins they have actually committed, but of those they had the power to prevent others from committing, he declares: "All tables are full of vomit and filthiness, so that there is no place clean." "Woe unto the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim, whose glorious beauty is as fading flowers on the head of the fat valleys of them that are overcome with wine!" Many a man who never touched wine has nevertheless been overcome by it, and this is shown by his political silence toward the wine, beer and whisky traffic and its conductors and patrons. Our government has been "overcome" by becoming a profit-sharing partner in the destructive business. But Isaiah says, "And your covenant with death shall be disannulled, and your agreement with hell shall not stand; when the overflowing scourge shall pass through, then ye shall be trodden down by it. . . . The hail shall sweep away your refuge of lies, and the waters shall overflow your hiding-place."

Negative righteousness does not count at Jehovah's court—only the positive kind. The sin of consent is a grievous one. By failing to prevent the wrongs we might prevent, we become a party to them. The young Saul who did not cast a single stone at the protomartyr Stephen, but only stood by the clothes of those who did, was a party to the crime. The "sin of consent" is committed by multitudes of otherwise good men, who think themselves righteous and would spurn an intimation that they are wicked, or deserving of punishment with the wicked. And this comes in many cases from a misapprehension of the fiendish character of the legalized liquor traffic, and this, in turn, is sometimes the result of the efforts of the fiends to connect with their business the most honorable names of the martyred and sainted dead, many of whom never failed when living to strike intemperance and its chief promoters, the liquor dealers, the most sturdy blows in the interest of public morals and of individual well-being. How like sacrilege, and blasphemy, and libel, and slander to name Gladstone, and Wesley, and Lincoln, and even the God-man of Calvary, as indorsers of their destructive work! "At the last it biteth like a serpent."

But a new era dawns. The hill tops all around are touched with the hallowed rays of the rising sun of temperance and prohibition. From the North, South, East, and West we hear the tramp of coming hosts, white-robed, white-souled, and bent on making ballot-clean this dirty old earth, in fulfilment of the divine promise of a new earth as well as a new heaven. Well may we sing with one of our later temperance poets:

We are bound to win the kingdom, we are bound to gain the day;
We will cross and take possession by and by;
Oh, lift up your streaming banners, for the mists have rolled away,
And the blessed day of victory is nigh!

Oh, the day is coming, coming! we can read it in the dawn,
We can see the sunlight streaming in the sky;
And a thousand happy voices tell us that the night is gone,
And the day of our redemption draweth nigh.

~

If every one of our subscribers should send in one new subscriber, before the close of the year, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would go into half a million homes during 1909. Are you doing your share?

Noah Webster's Birthday Celebrated

Webster's Bookcase

NINETEEN hundred and eight will be remembered as a year of historic anniversaries, so many have there been of the founding of cities and the birth of eminent men. Recently another has been added to this list in the celebration of the one hundred and fiftieth anniversary of the birth of Noah Webster, the great lexicographer, whose dictionary and spelling books and other works have left an indelible impress on the writing and pronunciation in America of our English tongue. Several educational institutions held commemorative services on Friday, October 16, and in Connecticut, Webster's native State, the observance of the day was general.

The public schools in the afternoon had special exercises, and essays were read by the pupils on the life of the great dictionary maker, and there were talks on the author and his times by teachers and public men.

Although the dictionary still holds its place in our libraries, comparatively little seems to be known by the general reader who consults its pages, of the man whose tireless energy and painstaking scholarship were employed for so many years in its production. Webster first saw the light of day on October 16, 1758, in East Hartford, Conn., a pretty little colonial town about three miles from Hartford. On his father's side he was of Puritan and on his mother's of Pilgrim ancestry. His great-great-grandfather, John Webster, was a settler of Hartford and Governor of Connecticut. His mother was a direct descendant of William Bradford, Plymouth Colony's most famous governor. Both parents were people of piety and the father enjoyed the highest offices in his church and town, as well as wearing a sword as commander of the military company. Young Webster had most of the experiences that fall to the lot of farmers' sons in his own day and ours. He worked on the farm whose acres stretched across the upland near the green ridges of Talcott Mountain, and in winter he attended the short terms of the district school and absorbed what knowledge it could give of the fundamentals of learning. His keen desire for study so soon showed itself that at fourteen he was given additional instruction by the village pastor, Dr. Perkins; then some time was passed in Hartford at Hopkins' grammar school, and in the fall of 1774 he signed his name as a freshman at Yale College. The next spring he records that he saw Washington pass through New Haven on his way to Cambridge to take command of the army at the outbreak of the Revolution. The students had a military company. They received Washington in military style. Webster himself wrote a quaint account of the incident, in which he says: "This company then escorted the generals (Washington and Lee) as far as Neck Bridge, and this was the first instance of that honor conferred on General Washington in New England. It fell to my humble lot to lead this company with music."

The different classes dispersed during the war, Webster going with his class to Glastonbury, and during Burgoyne's campaign he marched as a private in his father's own company to repel the invader.

After college days were over, he thought he would study law, but the family finances were such in the depressing days following the war that he had at once to cast about for some way to make a living, so he taught for several years, studying law whenever opportunity offered, and was admitted to the bar. The law, however, was a disappointment. The cases were few and far between, and he was soon back again to his old profession of teaching. This time he started an academy, and what was rather remarkable, it was co-educational and especial provision was made for the instruction of young ladies. The old announcement still in existence begins: "On the first of May will be opened at Sharon, Conn., a school in which children may be instructed, not only in the common arts of reading, writing, and arithmetic, but in any branch of academical literature." He then outlines the instruction to be offered to young ladies and gentlemen, laying especial stress on the necessity of acquiring a good knowledge of one's own language. He early took an interest in the preparation of text-books. His English Grammar, Spelling Book and Reader were the first of their kind printed in America. They soon became popular and made the name of the author a household word. It is said that the general excellence of pronunciation which existed among all classes of our people for the first half of the nineteenth century was due to the fact that almost without exception the schools had used his books. The royalty he received on his spelling book was but one cent a copy, but so large was the sale that it supported Webster and his family during the years he was engaged upon his dictionary. By the year 1847, there had been 24,000,000 copies sold, a figure which should make many of our present day book publishers stare in astonishment, who think two hundred thousand copies a most extraordinary sale. In fact, for a number of years sales made an average of one million copies a year.

The first copyright laws giving an author so control over the products of his brain were due the campaign made by Webster. Placing the manuscript of his speller in his saddle-bags, he rode from State capital to State capital, to secure copyright. These old saddle-bags are now treasured in the collection of the New Haven Historic Society. Part of the original manuscript was found in the saddle-bags when they were given into the society's keeping. They also have a copy of the first edition of his dictionary. It is about the size of our present-day story books. Beside the little first edition stands the great bulk of a late dictionary to show to what proportions the work of the lexicographer has grown. Near by stand his slender book case and the table at which he wrote.

Newspaper writing took some of his time, and in 1793 he came from Hartford to New York to start a daily newspaper to support President Washington. He founded two, the Minerva and the Herald. The first in time became the Commercial Advertiser, the second the New York Spectator. The latter paper was one of the first examples of the weekly in its modern form, using the most interesting material of the daily. The making of books, however, appealed to him more than influencing political opinion in the public press. The idea of a comprehensive dictionary had been long in his mind, and he started on the work at his home in New Haven in 1807. Five years later he moved with his family to Amherst, Mass. He took an active interest in public education in his new home, and helped to found Amherst College, of which he was made the first president.

In 1822, he was back in New Haven, where he passed the remainder of his life. He went to Europe to make researches in original sources for his dictionary, and during its compilation he studied twenty languages in order to give the derivation of our English words and their relation to those in other tongues. Webster introduced such changes in his dictionary as dropping the "u" in "humour" and "honour" and similar words.

In his book were found over thirty thousand English words which had never before been published in any dictionary. He died in 1843 at the age of eighty-five. The house in which he lived in New Haven is still an object of interest to visitors to the "City of Elms." Two wings have been added, but the central block is unchanged. His grave is in Grove Street cemetery. R. S. B.

Noah Webster

FOR A REVIVAL ON THE ISTHMUS

ARRANGEMENTS are under way for an evangelistic campaign on the Isthmus of Panama next January. Dr. Munhall will come, and soon afterward another evangelist will follow him. Ministers and laymen are united in this mission; indeed, the laymen are taking the lead. We are planning, praying and working for the spread of truth and righteousness. Will the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD have fellowship with us?

It may be interesting to your readers to know something of the bright side of things here on the Isthmus. I fear all of us look too much on the dark side. Visitors passing through the Zone cannot grasp actual conditions, as those who have resided here for a long time. The cities of Panama and Colon are under the Panama government. The religion of the country is Catholic. In most places, churches and priests are numerous. Thousands of foreigners from all parts of the world are to be found here. The largest number are from the West Indies. In the city of Panama are one Wesleyan church, one Episcopalian, one Methodist Episcopal and one Baptist. The Methodist Episcopal conduct services in Spanish and have a good day school. All the other churches minister to the colored population.

In the city of Colon there are one Wesleyan, one Episcopalian, one Seventh-Day Adventist, and the Salvation Army. The Baptists will soon build, as there are a large number of that persuasion. The Presbyterians have built and will soon open a mission on the Canal Zone. At Cristobal, Gorgona, Empire, Culebra, and Paraiso, the Isthmian Canal Commission have erected commodious churches wherein the Gospel is regularly preached by ministers of various denominations. Sunday Schools and Young People's Societies are established and prospering. Two other similar buildings will soon be erected. There are four Young Men's Christian Association buildings, with nine secretaries doing a really good work. There are about fourteen other churches or halls where the Gospel is preached regularly by ministers and laymen of various denominations.

The New Church at Empire, in the Canal Zone

We deplore the amount of evil existing, and are sad at the growing interest in pleasure-seeking and amusement, especially on the Lord's Day. But what pains our hearts most of all is the fact that many who were Christian workers in the home land, when they come here, drift, drop out, and are soon lost in the multitude. It is possible that cases of shameful wickedness may exist, but at this time of day, if known, they are soon frowned down. The existence of a Christian sentiment makes it impossible for it to continue long. If the drink were entirely cut out from the Zone, its disappearance would be an untold blessing. Then, somehow, ways and means would turn up to diminish or cut out the numerous drinking dives in the cities of Panama and Colon. We are thankful for evident outward improvements, and for many changed lives, and we are hopeful for still greater things. On the Isthmus there are now thirteen ministers and six lay workers, and there are three colporteurs of the American Bible Society whose entire time is devoted to the moral and spiritual welfare of the people.

Empire, Canal Zone. J. H. SOBEY, Missionary.

A REAL HOTEL FOR POOR BOYS

THE boy who finds himself without a home in New York City, with little or no money, or earning so small wages as to make the question of food and lodging a serious problem, may find clean, comfortable, commodious accommodations at the Boys' Hotel recently opened in Harlem.

There was no formal opening. As soon as the building was completed and equipped boys simply walked in and took possession. After a few days they passed the word along that it was "a good thing"; until now, at the end of its first month, one hundred guests are registered.

It has a truly cosmopolitan patronage, and nearly all nationalities are represented—Hungarians, Russians, Germans, Porto Ricans, and boys who have come from various parts of the United States to earn a living in the big city. There are newsboys, secured. Fourth floor guests pay $1.40 or $2.10, according to size of dormitory. On the fifth floor, besides the $1.40 dormitory accommodations, are single rooms occupied by patrons whose incomes warrant hotel bills to the extent of $2.80 a week. Each guest is given a pair of bed-room slippers, a nightgown (clean once a week), a cake of soap, a clean towel every day, and an invitation and opportunity to bathe. In needful cases, new suits of clothing and underwear replace those in which the new arrival has appeared.

No printed rules adorn the walls of the hotel, although there are a few necessarily enforced. Smoking is prohibited. Slang is not encouraged. Boisterous behavior is not allowed. "You whistle very well, Joe," said the superintendent to one noisy boy, "but I fear your music is not appreciated by the rest of the household." The lads are taught to regard the happiness of others as well as to be comfortable themselves. It rarely happens that any rebuke has to be given publicly.

"Training is what all boys need," says Mr. Abel C. Kenyon, the superintendent, who speaks from long experience. As "General Kenyon" of the Boys' Brigade Camps for eighteen years, he has had charge of some 14,000 boys. Those who know boys well, realizing that they seldom "gush" over things as their more demonstrative sisters are apt to, do not expect much in the way of expressed approval or satisfaction. Their happy faces, however, are the best testimony to their appreciation of the wholesome fare, the clean beds, the "comfy" rocking chairs and the big mirror nine feet long stretching across one end of the sitting room.

"A boy came in here one day," Mr. Kenyon said, "and wanted to put up with us. He was very dirty. I asked him a few questions and found he had no other clothes than the ragged, grimy ones he was wearing. I let him register and then turned him over to one of the men to take him upstairs to his quarters. I told the man to fit him out with some clean clothes after he had had a good scrub and a shower bath. We don't make a practice of giving clothes, but we do it in cases of emergency. The boy came down stairs a little later, and you would hardly have known him. I told him to go over and take a look at himself in the glass. I never saw a boy change more all over. His face flushed with pleasure, his eyes filled with tears as he looked and turned around and around, admiring his clothes. He has kept himself immaculate ever since—one of the cleanest boys in the place."

The dormitories are opened at 8:30 o'clock and everybody is supposed to be in bed by 10:30, unless an occasional entertainment detains one or another now and then. Late hours are not encouraged, as the guests are all working-boys. Six o'clock is the rising hour. A simple breakfast of cereals, pancakes, and coffee is furnished. Nearly all start off for work at once. Any who are out of employment are detailed for various duties about the house, tending door, washing dishes, cleaning and tidying up the rooms. The superintendent interests himself in boys out of work and obtains positions for them.

Dinner is served from 6 o'clock to 7:30, and in the evenings there are lectures in history, mathematics, music, literature, and experimental courses. Led by a practical instructor, the pupils build automobiles, locomotives, machines of various kinds, all with crayon on the blackboard. There is a bowling alley in the basement for those desiring physical exercise, and there is to be a roof garden and gymnasium on the roof. There is a quiet reading room with the beginnings of a library.

The only religious service is on Sunday evenings. The place is absolutely unsectarian. The manager, however, will help a boy to find the nearest church of his own denomination. The boys like the Sunday services because they are their very own, and they all attend in response to a simple announcement and invitation.

All sorts and conditions of boys are gathered beneath this hospitable roof. One youth is the son of a Baptist minister in a country town, who has come to a safe and inexpensive home while he is getting established in some business.

"If a boy comes here whom we know to be absolutely worthless, one who we are sure will do harm to the other inmates, we feel in justice to the greater bootblacks, elevator boys, office boys, printers, errand boys, in fact twenty-five or thirty different occupations. The institution is primarily for the benefit of homeless boys from ten to eighteen; those who have come from the country, perhaps, looking for work; those who find themselves alone with hands soon exhausted. Its object is to help boys when not in condition to help themselves, to help them over hard places. It is the only hotel in the world conducted exclusively for boys, and it is managed on business principles. When a guest enters, he registers at the clerk's desk and is given a numbered key. If he engages a private room, the number indicates its location, otherwise it gives him the number of a locker in which his belongings are to be stowed away. In either case, the number on the key corresponds to that on his bed, on his napkin ring, and on various articles for individual use.

Copyright, by Underwood & Underwood

Registering at the Boys' Hotel

According to his means, the guest signifies his reference for a room. The minimum rate is $1.05 a week—fifteen cents a day—and that includes, besides board, bath and laundry, one of the twenty-four beds in the dormitory on the third floor. By paying $2.10, a bed in a smaller dormitory may be number we must refuse admission to him," says the superintendent. "As a rule, however, we give an applicant a chance. Then, if he makes himself obnoxious, he is requested to leave."

Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

The Boys' Hotel, New York City

Mr. Kenyon and his wife give their personal attention to the moral as well as the physical needs of the boys. Homeless boys can here find supper, a night's lodging, breakfast, a five-cent luncheon to take with them if they wish for their midday meal—and, best of all, sympathy, helpful counsel, and practical assistance. The hotel is situated on Lexington Avenue at East One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Street. The building is of red brick, five stories high, fire-proof, equipped with steam heat and electricity and the latest up-to-date contrivances for health and comfort. It will accommodate one hundred and fifty boys. Money for the erection and equipment of the building—representing an expenditure of about $150,000—was given by Mrs. William E. Dodge. Several beautiful pictures and interior decorations have been contributed by Miss Grace Dodge. The property has been turned over as a gift to the Children's Aid Society, who will maintain it.

MARY K. HYDE.

WOMAN'S LIFE ON A MONTANA RANCH

THROUGH the kindness of a friend, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was introduced into our Montana ranch home several years ago and we have been constant readers ever since. We considered the accounts of your work at Mont-Lawn one of its most interesting features. Wishing to instill in the mind of my little son the spirit and habit of saving, I chose the Fresh Air Fund as a tangible and attractive object for him to work for. We are fifty miles from any church or regular service, so the child has not the training in giving that he has if he goes to Sunday school and church, and carries his penny or his nickel with him.

Last year, my little boy saved three dollars for the fund and this year he comprehended more that we read to him of Mont-Lawn and was anxious to send twenty dollars, so that (as he put it) "a boy would not have to go 'hiking' back to New York in ten days, but could stay all summer."

His mother has been invited by several of her friends and neighbors to hold a religious service in their homes. On Sunday, July 12, we drove twenty-five miles to a ranch, about sixteen miles from Miles City, for a service. Distances are so great that it is not easy for people to assemble for a stated time and service; but that day about forty people gathered and we had a short, simple service together. After it was over, I got out my little boy's mite box and told my friends a little about your work at Mont-Lawn, and so very generously did they respond when I asked them for a penny, that I am able to send you the twenty dollars at once.

Montana people have so much fresh air and their children so much freedom that it touches us all to hear of little children being deprived of so much that they enjoy. Our schools are all from ten to twenty miles apart in this vicinity, and if a teacher has ten or twelve pupils, she has a large school. Most of the children come to school on horseback, although some come in buggies and others walk the four or five miles. Of course, they go wading in the river and play many things the Mont-Lawn children do; but the most fun for ranch children is going hunting with a stick for a gun, having a "round-up," and roping each other, or the fence posts, as the men do the cattle and horses. Then our children work with tools a great deal, as their fathers have to build their own houses, shoe their own horses and mend machinery. The children build log play-houses, cover their wagons as the sheep-wagons are covered, and play camping out. One little boy of five showed me with pride a set of blocks he had sawed, and I saw a creditable water-wheel made from one of the spools the fence wire comes on.

This will serve, Dr. Klopsch, to give you a little picture of contrast, as you strive to give fresh air to those who have it not. Long live Mont-Lawn.

A RANCH WOMAN.

Garland, Mont.

"Seems Like an Old Friend"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I received the three pictures, and think they are fine, and thank you for them. I shall frame them and hang them in a prominent place. I have taken THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years and do not feel that I could get along without it. It seems like an old friend.

MRS. ALONZO E. BINGHAM.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter. Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa.

NEXT week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will contain the opening chapters of a new and realistic serial story entitled "BALTIMORE, a Tale of Metropolitan Life," by Merritt Crawford, a young author who has made a study of sociological conditions on the famous East Side of New York. He has written a powerful and attractive story, drawing his characters from life. Every reader of this journal will enjoy "Baltimore," and all should see that their friends and acquaintances have the same privilege. It is a capital story of to-day.

Moral Aspects of the Election

NEXT week, the American voter will decide, by the exercise of the highest political privilege known in our republic, who shall occupy the positions of public trust and responsibility in city, State and nation. In many States, the contest involves moral issues which reach far beyond the ordinary horizon of every-day politics. In a few, it has become an acute question whether the machinery of State and civic government shall be kept in safe and honorable hands, or turned over to the avowed enemies of morality and the defenders of the gamblers, the criminals, the lawless and the saloons.

Every reader of this journal knows that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is in no sense a political paper. It has never stooped to partisanship. At this particular juncture, however, it has a duty to perform in reminding its readers of their opportunity to line up with the forces of righteousness and good government in opposition to the enemies of public morals, in many of our States and municipalities. Good citizens should support none but good men and good measures.

It has been frequently remarked that people generally get as good a local, State and national government as they deserve and no better. That this is true in any sense, is largely due to the indifference of those who could turn the tide in a political struggle, if they did their duty. The best element among our people to-day unquestionably desire good, honest, decent government, conducted on Christian principles; but their neglect and indifference give the opportunity to the alert lower-class politicians to grasp the government of a city or a State, and enrich themselves by a debauched and corrupt administration which panders to vice and lawlessness. Indifference on the part of good men is one of the chief causes of misrule, and lies at the root of the troubles of almost every misgoverned city and State.

There should be no middle ground for the Christian citizen, no compromise with evil in public affairs. If he believes that State and civic righteousness ought to be upheld, he will know on which side of the battle to take his stand. If any candidate has stood the test of public service, has demonstrated his capacity and proved that he is governed by God-fearing principles, that man is worthy of all confidence and support; but one who has struck hands with corruptionists, or made truce with the allies of vice, is undeserving of consideration.

Many will vote next week for the first time. Let the young voters choose among the candidates those who stand out more than the rest as representing some distinctive moral issue, or some issue that affects vitally the prosperity of the country, and stand by them for the sake of the issue.

May the forces of righteousness triumph in this election, and may a blessing rest upon the efforts of the friends of good, honest government in all our States and cities.

The Ungentle Grand Lama

THAT it is possible for a royal visitor to become a nuisance is a fact that is beginning to dawn on the Chinese, who are entertaining the Grand Lama of Tibet at Peking. When his sacred capital was desecrated by the presence of British troops, a few years ago, the Lama—who is the temporal and spiritual ruler of the millions who live on "the roof of the world," besides being, as is claimed, the lineal descendant of Buddha—left Lhasa in haste, declaring he would never return while a foreigner remained there. He naturally went to China, where he has fairly worn out his welcome. The court officials at Peking had believed him a gentle, amiable being, mild and gracious, and, above all, courtly after the manner of the Orient. They find him worse than the proverbial "white elephant." Dirty, uncouth, ignorant, ill-bred, greedy, vulgarly avaricious for bribes and gifts, and utterly unmindful of the demands of Chinese etiquette, he has apparently given the finishing touch to an awkward situation by ignoring the emperor's presence at a reception—an unpardonable insult in Celestial eyes. They cannot tolerate him, yet they dare not send him home lest they should offend the entire Tibetan population, who worship their Lama as deity—"the Master of Life and Death." Tibet is a "buffer" State and valuable to China, and to alienate it would be a political blunder. Possibly, if it were not for this single but sufficient consideration, the courageous old Empress-Dowager would send the Lama and his retinue packing, glad to rid the court and the country of such a nuisance. It will be strange if her astute mind does not find some way to get rid of him, without violating the Oriental proprieties.

Welcome News from India

READERS of this journal, who have been keenly alive to the danger of famine, which has threatened India for many months past, will rejoice with us at the cheering news contained in the following cable dispatch, just received:

"Bombay, India, October 14.

"Dr. Louis Klopsch, The Christian Herald, Bible House, New York.

"Famine virtually over. Government relief closing everywhere, but grain dealers keep up high prices. Rain plentiful. Crop prospects good.

(Signed) BENJ. F. AITKEN,

Editor, Bombay Guardian."

A Foolish Assault

AT A LARGE Congress of Orientalists held in Copenhagen during the past summer, there were present several representatives of American universities, including Professor Haupt of Johns Hopkins University, who read a somewhat sensational paper, in which he endeavored to show that Jesus was of Aryan and not of Semitic origin. He was a Jew only by adoption, being of Assyrian lineage. Moreover, he was not born in Bethlehem. This extraordinary production the professor repeated afterward at an International Congress of Religions in Oxford, England. We are not surprised to be informed that it was received with marks of unmistakable disapproval at both places. Probably the assembled delegates had a vivid recollection of the fact that this same professor was the author of the astonishing declaration—which had excited a storm of derision from the ablest Orientalists and Bible scholars—that "the Hebrews were never in Egypt." He was also identified with the production of the "Polychrome Bible," which signally failed to shake popular faith in the integrity of the Bible by attacking its authorship.

It is difficult to understand what particular object is to be gained by this latest declaration that Jesus was not a Jew. Even the Jews themselves, as Dr. D. M. Gaster, one of their ablest authors and thinkers, declares, have never asserted that Jesus had a proselyte ancestry. If it were possible—which it is not—to dissociate Jesus from the Jews, the crowning glory of their race would be gone, and they would sink to a lower level in the world's eyes than ever before. For twenty centuries, it has been their tribute from the Gentile races that the Jewish nation, poor, despised and in subjection, was divinely chosen to give to the world the Saviour of mankind. This is an historical fact so firmly established that one would hardly think it would admit of discussion now; but the Baltimore professor makes light of all such obstacles. Denying all the evidence of sacred and secular history—the Talmud, of course, included—he brushes genealogy and prophecy aside, dismisses Gospel records as trivial and calmly assumes general imposition and collusion among the historians, prophets and evangelists.

It is assaults such as this, illogical, unscientific, unprovable, and wholly preposterous, that reveal the wickedness and folly of the general fabric of destructive criticism, while they show the strength of the grandeur, the indestructibility of the Holy Scriptures as God's message to the world.

The Call to Service

IN RECENT years we often hear the expression that people are growing selfish, have lost the lofty ideals of the forefathers, and are working for their own personal gain and with little or no thought for the public weal.

This is decidedly a pessimistic view, and while it is doubtless true in a large number of instances there are many men and women who are proving that it is not so in all. One of the main causes of the lament has been that there are not so many candidates for the ministry; yet we find many brilliant young men turning from attractive worldly occupations to preach the Gospel. Only the other day a man of business, with an income of many thousands a year, announced his intention of devoting the brilliant talents that had made him a mark of mark in the commercial world to the advancement of religion among his fellow men. The call for service has been heard recently by the Governor of one of our Southern States, who has declared his intention of devoting his time, after his term of office, to the laymen's evangelization movement.

In the old days, there was but one way open to serve humanity, and that was by way of the pulpit. Now a thousand avenues are open to both men and women. They are taking a more active part in carrying on the work of the Church, relieving the overworked pastor. Many churches have their regular pastors' assistants and lay helpers.

In our great cities men and women are giving up the pleasures found in refined and luxurious homes, to spend days and hours in work in the slums, saving the fallen and brightening the lives and awakening the stunted intelligence of children reared in misery. There is hardly any one who cannot count among his friends several who are active in the Y. M. C. A. or the Y. W. C. A. The call for service has been strong and insistent, and the young men and women are responding in a way to fill the hearts of Christian men and women with new hope. There are more recruits in some fields than ever before—a strong answer to those who see but a short distance into the future and believe we are become sordid and utterly materialistic in our aspirations as a people.

Please tell your friends about THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and about our premiums.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, October 28, 1908

	PAGE
American Battleship Fleet at Manila	Cover
Peace or War in the Balkans? (Illustrated)	843, 845
The Sting of the Adder. Temperance Sermon	844, 845
By Rev. Silas C. Swallow, D.D.
Noah Webster's Birthday Celebrated (Illustrated)	846
For a Revival on the Isthmus (Illustrated)	846
A Real Hotel for Poor Boys (Illustrated)	847
A Woman's Life on a Montana Ranch	847
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	848
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER	849
In the Home Circle (Illustrated)	850
By Margaret E. Sangster
After the Children Have Gone (Illustrated)	851
A Chinese Christian Hero Dead (Illustrated)	851
OUR MAIL-BAG	852
First Ocean Penny Post (Illustrated)	852
American Girls in the Philippines (Illustrated)	853
Topics at Home and Abroad	853
A Harvest of Woes	854, 855
Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Halley's Comet	855
The Transformation of Margaret	856, 857
Serial by Mrs. Eleanor H. Porter
Books Received	857
Church Building. Epworth League Topic	858
Missions and Evangelism, Christian Endeavor Topic	858
A King's Strange Headress (Illustrated)	859
David Grieves for Absalom. By Mrs. M. Baxter	859

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

American Fleet in the Philippines

THE United States fleet on its way around the world, after having had such brilliant receptions in Australia as the world has almost never seen, sailed for the Philippines, our own American possessions. A great reception had been planned, but the fearful epidemic of cholera prevented the carrying out of this plan, so that the visit of the fleet to the Philippines, instead of being full of pride and of glory, was filled with infinite pathos. The fleet in the harbor of Manila was illuminated—the hulls and masts were outlined in electric lights and the searchlights were sweeping the sky—but this is the only part of the original programme which was carried out. The authorities had planned a corresponding illumination of the Luneta, the public square, but Sunday's typhoon wrecked the old bandstand and tore down the wires, so when the fleet flashed into fire, the Luneta was dark—a contrast typical of Manila's disappointment at the necessity of prohibiting shore liberty. There was a little reception given by the Army and Navy Club in the historic old Spanish engineers' barracks at Manila, where some of the officers of the fleet gathered for a dinner with their army brethren. The utmost sanitary precautions were taken—the water being boiled and all the food thoroughly cooked and disinfectants used in great abundance everywhere. The typhoon that put out the lights in the public square did little damage to the gigantic battleships, but the Rainbow, the flagship of the Third Squadron of the Pacific Fleet, broke from her moorings at Cavite during the storm. It is to be hoped that the rigid governmental sanitation of Manila and the good providence of God will arrest the epidemic and give health to the people again. The fleet will go from the Philippines to Japan, where it will have a right royal reception.

So is this great and wide sea, wherein are things creeping innumerable, both small and great beasts. There go the ships. (Ps. 104: 25, 26.)

Starved Rather Than Beg

As a pawnshop in New York was opened the other morning, a woman approached the door, but, overcome by weakness, fell to the pavement. In her hand was a little package. An ambulance was summoned from Gouverneur Hospital and the physician who came with it said there was only the faintest spark of life in the emaciated body. She died on the way to the institution. The woman was immaculately neat. Her snowy hair was brushed carefully over her temples and her bonnet strings were ironed out and tied in a neat bow under her chin. In a well-worn purse which she carried were two pawn-tickets, one for a skirt on which twenty-five cents had been borrowed, and the other for a shawl, representing a loan of thirty cents. There being no satisfactory mark of identification, she was sent to the Morgue, to await the arrival of someone who should claim and bury her. This is one of the most pathetic incidents of the many tragedies of a great city. The woman literally starved to death within a few steps of savings banks with tens of millions of deposits, of great stores with an abundance of provisions and clothing, and not many minutes away from the palaces on Fifth Avenue; yet she was too proud to beg, and she starved because she insisted on supporting herself with the scanty supply. The poor creature, from sheer necessity, had accustomed herself to such rigid economy in food that she died of actual starvation. She appears in contrast to the large number of persons who will not work though able to and who compel society to support them in their indolence! There may have been no one else to blame for this poor woman's fate, but we are very much afraid that there were persons of means somewhere who knew what a hard fight she was making against want, and who could have made it easier for her without hurting themselves. Perhaps some neighbor, or friend, or even some relative, may, at the last day, be held to an accountability for this sad incident which they might have prevented.

And I perish with hunger. (Luke 15: 17.)

Centenarian Comes from Jerusalem to Vote

Simon Harris, a Hebrew, was naturalized in California and walked all the way from there to New York, after the gold excitement of 1849. For years he lived at a little farm at Mott and Bayard Streets. After having made his fortune, he concluded to live in Jerusalem, the ancient city of his fathers. He has retained his legal residence in New York City and it has been his custom to return from Jerusalem to New York to vote at every presidential election. Mr. Harris, who is now 105 years old, recently landed from Jerusalem and was the first to register in the Twentieth Election District and the Second Assembly District. He answered the inspector's questions in a steady tone and remarked that his papers were wearing out and he would have to obtain duplicates, because he expects to vote at several more presidential contests. He wrote his name in a good round hand and then chatted with a group of his Cornell examinations so well that the trustees immediately voted to grant him a four years' scholarship. Carmody and Baker received free scholarships at the colleges they entered.

It is quite a difficult task for young men and women with good eyes to master the preparatory curriculum and enter the average college with its high standard of to-day; and for boys handicapped as these are with total blindness, to master the course is not only an evidence of good ability and painstaking labor, but also a splendid tribute to an advanced science and an enlarged philanthropy. Physical eyes are the instrument of human sight; and yet it is the mind that sees, and not the visual organ. These young men illustrate the fact that the soul can see vast fields of truth without material lenses; and, being upright young men, they have an eye which looks out on duty and God.

I am come into this world, that they which see not might see. (John 9: 39.)

A Steeple-Climbing Painter

Andrew A. Roche put the last brush of paint on the spire of the Metropolitan Building, at Madison Square, New York City, the other day. He had finished his perilous work at a distance of 700 feet above the ground. For four hours he was engaged in work on this spire and, finishing it, he made his way down the framework of the monster building to the fortieth floor. "There is no use saying a fellow hasn't an uncomfortable feeling doing such work as that," said Roche, who is a handsome and well-built man of twenty-nine years. "I make no claim to being braver than anyone else, and I must say it is a job I never want to do again. From the fortieth floor to the fiftieth is a succession of ladders, until you get to the base of the spire. We have no rigging specially for such things. I slung my pot of paint over my shoulder, and made my way to the top of the spire, where I hung on with my arms and used my brush. The sensation one has in being so high is almost incredible. A man has to have nerve with him, for there is always a strange impulse to jump when one gets up so high. I restrained myself from looking down as much as possible, for I knew the feeling to jump was coming over me at times, but I could not resist the temptation occasionally to take a view of the surroundings. The people in the park looked like a lot of bugs grouped together, and those who were walking on Broadway looked to me like a lot of flies crawling on the surface of the street. My name is higher than anyone else's, for on top of the small ball I put it in letters that time only can erase, and anyone who wants to have his name higher must go up in a balloon and stay there."

The physical stamina and courage of this man are remarkable. His desire to put his name higher than that of the rest of his fellows and to mark it in the most durable form, indicates a laudable human ambition. Men are cutting their names as high and deeply on the steeples of ambition where they are working as they can. The most commendable ambition is to leave a mark on the steeples of highest thought and noblest act. Christ, with the hand that was pierced with nails, wrote his name higher and marked it more indelibly than that of any other.

Thou hast given him a name which is above every name. (Phil. 2: 9.)

"They Are Works of Art"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The pictures are fine works of art; the subjects are refined and worthy to adorn any home, be it rich or poor. They will be a constant reminder of your excellent paper, which I hope will find its way into every home.

Syracuse, N. Y.

MILDRED E. BAUMGRAS.

The Reception to the American Naval Officers at Melbourne, Australia people about the great changes in New York in fifty years.

This adopted son of America has a love for his country which is intense and commendable. There are many native born men who will spend election day fishing, or hunting, or golfing, or visiting, or even loafing about a country place, or sitting home, and will not take the trouble to walk a few steps or pains to employ a few moments in exercising the citizen's greatest political privilege—that of casting the ballot.

There are many true patriots who recognize the privilege and duty of the elective franchise, but it is often the case that a bad man rules and bad measures are enacted, because citizens of good education and character fail to recognize the privilege and opportunity of voting for good men.

For he loveth our nation. (Luke 7: 5.)

Blind Boys Enter College

William E. Moore of Brooklyn, George M. Carmody of New York and Walter Baker of Oswego, entered the State Institution for the Blind in New York City twelve years ago. They have just passed the Regent's examination and are admitted as full-fledged students in Cornell, Syracuse and Columbia Universities. In taking their examinations for college, they had to attain the results expected of boys blessed with sight; furthermore, they had to write their examinations on the typewriter. Moore passed

Royal Nurseries

THE present Queen of Spain is a granddaughter of the late Queen Victoria, and a niece of England's reigning sovereign, Edward the Seventh. It is said that she has been able by tact and persistence, seconded by the love of her husband, to introduce certain wise innovations in the etiquette of the palace at Madrid. Spain has hedged about her royalties with state and ceremony, and this English Victoria has found occasion to assert herself in the management of her children. Royal nurseries may be furnished with every appliance of luxury or they may be extremely simple. Could we peep into them we should probably find that simplicity was the rule and luxurious display the exception. The palace homes of Europe, and of the world for that matter, are not so gorgeous in interior arrangement as are the homes of rich Americans, who, having accumulated immense sums of money, find themselves happiest when spending their wealth on the adornment of magnificent mansions.

Royal children are brought up almost from their earliest breath with a view to their future. The little heir apparent must be taught courtesy to high and low, must be drilled and trained so that he can take his place as a king should in the councils of the State and at public functions. He has to learn several languages thoroughly, he must be scholarly, he must ride, fence, shoot and understand every manly sport. From infancy on he has tutors and masters, and because one day he is to be a ruler, he is compelled to learn obedience to those who instruct him. As the heir apparent is mortal and may die, equal care is taken in training the other children from motives of prudence as well as of affection. When the little princes and princesses arrive at years of discretion they are fully equipped for playing their parts in life with dignity and grace. We may spare them a little pity, for they are seldom permitted to choose their life partners for themselves, for reasons connected with the State. The King and Queen of Spain made a love match, and the children in their nursery we may hope will reach adolescence in an hour of greater freedom than used to be the good fortune of young people in their station. A child is a child, let him or her be born in a palace or a cottage. The mother-heart is the same in the queen and the peasant. In a way and in the eyes of the Watching Angel every nursery in the land, in republican America, as in ancient Spain, cradles royal babes. There is something kingly in the demeanor of infancy until we manage to teach the children to be shy and self-conscious. The laborer's child would feel perfectly at home in the arms of an emperor.

A great lady in our own country, one who had occupied the position of First Lady of the Land, said to her physician on the day that her eldest son was born, "Can you tell me of any mother in the town whose baby has been born to-day?" "Yes," he answered; "I know one. She is very poor and her little one came this morning just about the time that yours did." On the first day that this beautiful mother was able to drive out, she took her baby with her and went to see the other mother and her little child. "God sent us our babies on the same day," she said, "so we must be friends, and our boys must grow up as comrades." This was an illustration of republican royalty.

Helping the Pastor

When summer is over and the first heats of the fall are past, with the crisp air and longer evenings renewed activity begins in church life. Pastor and people have had their vacation, and are settling down again to work in earnest. Every one can help the pastor by being always in the pew at the morning and evening service, if possible, and by faithfully attending the prayer meeting. Far more than most people think, they build up their church by prompt and punctual attendance whenever the doors are open. To visit other churches is at times a great temptation, but the duty of the church member and his family is, in the first place, to his own pastor and his church home. The pastor is helped, too, by every one who praises him, by every one who comments favorably on his sermons, and by every one who does not make unreasonable demands on his time. When one hears of a signally successful pastor, one may be sure that he ministers to an earnest and faithful congregation.

From a Recent Photograph

THE QUEEN OF SPAIN AND HER CHILDREN

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—CHRISTIAN DUTY. My correspondent asks, "What is my Christian duty toward a person who seeks my friendship and then snubs me?" If this were a question of forgiving an injury the answer would be that one must forgive until seventy times seven. The situation seems a little different. The person who seeks friendship and then treats the friend slightly should be regarded just as an acquaintance and treated with civility. I would not feel hurt in the least by the conduct of such a person.

—TO BEGIN A READING CIRCLE. The first step will be to secure your boys and girls. Next appoint a regular time and place for meeting. Once a week or once a fortnight in a pleasant home would fill your need. Begin with fiction. Every one loves a story, but every one is not interested at the outset in science and history. No better books than those of Winston Churchill, The Crossing, The Crisis, Coniston, and Mr. Crewe's Career, can be suggested for a reading circle of young people whose ages are between sixteen and twenty. These books have a great charm for Americans, younger or older.

Listening and Talking

IN ONE of Anthony Trollope's novels he draws the picture of a popular gentlewoman who is every one's admires and who has a proud position in society, and he takes especial pains to let us see that much of her time she listens rather than speaks. Lady Glencorra never says the wrong thing, although she is so reserved and reticent that she leaves it to others to say the right thing. She smiles, looks pleased and interested, never fails to drop the gentle monosyllable with the rising inflection at the precise happy moment, and men and women leave her company under the impression that they have had a delightful hour of conversation. To be a really good listener is a great social accomplishment. A man who was a brilliant talker, usually taking the lead and entertaining a group without seeming effort, said to his daughters, "Make it your rule never to talk unless you have something worth talking about, and always look fully at the person who is addressing you. Never let your eyes wander and command your thoughts and pay strict attention whenever you are with other people." The rule was an admirable one, and is worth repeating. Many young people of both sexes are troubled because they imagine that their conversational powers are limited. They envy the glib talker whose words pour out in a steady stream. Really, they may equal any talker in the world, even the most eloquent, if only they are good and sympathetic listeners. The person who has the gift of telling a good story, especially a story that provokes a laugh, is in demand at dinner tables and is the idol of his acquaintances because it is a boon to be in the neighborhood of any one who can cheat us of gloom and brighten up our prosaic days. "The merry heart doeth good like a medicine." The gay repartee, the amusing limerick, the timely anecdote, the cheery jest that dissipate the blues are better than any tonic one may buy at a pharmacy. Beware, however, of telling a story unless you are sure of the occasion, the listeners and your own ability to preserve the point. The omission or addition of a word may ruin the effect of a story completely. It is much better to refrain from repeating the clever speech or the witty anecdote that you found extremely diverting, if you are not sure that you can reproduce it exactly, than to tell it and see it fall flat on the audience.

We women are in danger of succumbing to the temptation that makes our conversation the vehicle of complaint. Why do women talk so much about the faults and shortcomings of the maid in the kitchen, the mistakes of the dressmaker, or the temper of the laundress? There are plenty of themes for talk that do not touch at all on these commonplace.

Possibly no one who reads this page needs the caution, and yet few of us have not once in a while regretted that we had mentioned personalities too freely in public. Never when traveling mention names, particularly with critical comment. Never ask a direct question of your neighbor with regard to her affairs. Never show surprise if you can possibly avoid it. A teacher of fifty years ago who sent from her schoolroom many women of elegance and distinction used to tell her pupils to speak in a low voice, with clear enunciation, to interrupt no one, and to betray no astonishment.

AFTER THE CHILDREN HAVE GONE

THE last farewells have been said at Mont-Lawn; the last merry contingent of laughing, flower-laden children has departed, and our Children's Home has shut its gates for the season. But cottage blinds are not yet closed, nor shades lowered, nor keys turned; for there is much to be done even without taking into consideration the repairing of the natural wear and tear incidental to the summer vacation of three thousand children.

The teachers return to their studies at school and college, and the corps of helpers in dormitory work has disbanded, leaving the matron, house-keeper and cleaners to see to it that every nook and cranny on the place is left to its winter's rest in perfect order and neatness.

Huge cart-loads of bed linen and blankets are packed off to the laundry, while every cottage is scrubbed, scoured and polished. Flags which have flown every day from tower and pole from sunrise to sunset are carefully folded and packed away. Endowed cot-cards, each in its frame, are taken down, dusted and piled in order in closets in the dormitory where they have hung, while a card index carefully put away with other records will enable one to find each and every card with no time lost in hunting. Walls, windows, woodwork and floors are made clean and free from dust; the little white beds are dismantled, only the pillows being left on them, and one by one the dormitories, with their accompanying teachers' rooms, are closed for the winter. Loving and lingering hands brush, dust and polish for the last time on the interior of the beautiful "Children's Temple," where so many have worshipped during the summer, and which has been a spiritual magnet to hundreds of outsiders from the different villages.

The main building at Mont-Lawn is the Homestead, which is overhauled with scrupulous care every year after the departure of the children. It is left just as if the wee ones were to sleep there tonight. There are the white-draped cots, the dresser with its tiny furnishings, the dogs, cats, "Teddy bears," blocks, maps, picture-books and dolls. Here is the little white rocker in which the sweet-faced, low-voiced "teacher" used to rock the babies to sleep.

The Well-Stocked Linen Room

sweeter or more touching to the child-loving heart could be added than this room, whispering of poor little, hitherto-neglected babies and the love and comfort for them which radiate from every angle of Mont-Lawn.

Up one flight of stairs we come to the "Blanket Room." Hundreds of blankets, fresh from the laundry, piled ceiling high, are here in packages of ten. Blue, gray and white; there they are, all ready for next year. A thrifty housewife would enjoy the next peep, for it embraces the "Linen Room" with its shelves closely packed from floor to ceiling with snowy sheets, pillow-slips, spreads, towels and valances. Here one finds all that is missing in the dismantled dormitories.

Outside, the early leaves are falling, the walks and playgrounds deserted; "Fort Plenty" stands in stately emptiness; bright scarlet geraniums and tall cannas give to the place a touch of warmth, a tinge of cheerfulness; but the swings are still, the merry-go-rounds and toboggan slides are all unoccupied and motionless. It needs but

How gentle and patient she was all through the warm days and nights when the babies needed special attention! Here is her little white bed in the corner, the flowered screen with its tiny pink rose-buds hiding a table whereon still stands a glass and spoon, mute evidences of care for the helpless. Open the drawers of the dresser and you will see folded carefully away many little garments made by loving hands in some far-away part of the country, and others bought by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fresh Air Fund. Little dresses, tiny undergarments, and snowy "nighties" are all in readiness for the opening of another season. Many improvements for the comfort and up-building of health among the children are in contemplation, but never anything the silence to make us realize that the summer with all the little guests it brought is indeed a thing of the past. We walk around the cottages where now the blinds are closed, the shades drawn and keys turned; we look over toward the silent Temple, where sweet childish voices in sacred song no longer attract the passerby. We miss the sound of the little feet as they march down the wide aisles. Down past the shuttered lodge, we go out upon the highway, and as we turn our faces toward we realize that although this beautiful place was made for the children, and although kind hearts and willing hands make its maintenance possible, it is the presence of the children themselves that makes Mont-Lawn a paradise!

MARY SARGENT HOPKINS.

"Always Deals Generously"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Thank you for the latest pictures. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD always deals generously, as many beautiful books and pictures in my possession will attest. I value your paper highly, and am always glad to aid in its circulation. Thank you again for these gems of art. E. M. PRIEST.

Storing the Blankets at Our Children's Home

A CHINESE CHRISTIAN HERO DEAD

ANOTHER Christian hero has been called home. A few months ago there appeared in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD an article concerning Dr. Lee, the "Chinese Moody," and also about a Chinese "Northfield." Dr. Lee was a chosen "substitute evangelist," converted in Tientsin in 1895. He was the son of a Methodist pastor of the Methodist Episcopal Church South, born in Soochow. After a thorough course in English at St. John's College, Shanghai, he, with other bright young Chinese, was sent to the Imperial Medical College, Tientsin, at a favorable time. We came in contact with these brilliant young men at the close of the Chino-Japanese war, when discipline was much relaxed in the college, and free permission was given to the students to come to our mission evenings.

Dr. Lee's conversion, with several others, was followed by a brave confession, and they were publicly baptized, sixteen altogether, in a little stream near the Naval College, and on one of the historic battlefields of North China. Dr. Lee at once began to pray about "his calling." We talked much about the evangelization of the world and of China in particular. Dr. Lee abandoned his ambitions for a medical career, and, like Moses, "chose rather to suffer affliction with the people of God."

His rapid spiritual growth from that date was phenomenal. He rose to the first rank as a student of God's Word. He became the first elder in the student chapel, and in a short time seventy members were baptized and enrolled. Dr. Lee and Dr. Wang were the chief shepherds of the flock.

Tientsin soon became too small a theatre for their student activities. Evangelists were sought and obtained in most of the provinces of China, Mongolia, Tibet and Annam. Dr. Lee gave his watch and his silk garments to help fill the first missionary basket. Drs. Lee and Wang came with us to Shanghai. Each had a definite call to service. We asked Dr. Lee to preside over the Shanghai chapel, then in its infancy, while Dr. Wang and Mr. Woodberry took a journey along the China coast, to sell Gospels and preach to the crowds in the great cities. Dr. Lee soon afterward accepted a call to teach in the Anglo-Chinese College at Shanghai. This and a subsequent position in the Soochow University fitted him for many wider opportunities of acquaintance with

Dr. Lee (1) and Mr. Yang (2) Translating

Christian work, but his heart was unsatisfied. Three years ago, he came to us and said, "At any cost, I am now ready to preach the Gospel." When we reached Shanghai, after a protracted absence, we were greeted with the announcement that union meetings were in progress, and that the Lee brothers were the evangelists. Keen interest was manifested on all sides. God was pleased to use this Chinese Moody as his chosen instrument for a period of over two years. He was seldom at home in Shanghai.

Like Paul, his missionary journeys were frequent, and his labors exhausting and varied. Last spring, he returned from a long evangelistic trip to find his children had the smallpox. He canceled his engagements, and retired to the sickroom to share the nursing with his dear wife.

The work of printing a little Chinese magazine and sending out the Gospel from month to month had prospered, and now needed his attention more and more. His project for a Chinese Northfield was maturing. He had felt the need of knowledge in the native church concerning the truths of Revelation. His great heart yearned to translate Dr. Seiss' book on the Apocalypse into Chinese. When he began this work and we urged him to accept compensation for translating, he replied with a smile, "I will make it a thank-offering to God and yourselves for leading me to Christ."

This last work of his life was begun and carried on until he was urgently called to a Conference in Wuhu. Upon his return, nervous prostration forced him to take absolute rest. He and Mr. Yang of Changsha had worked together nearly five months on the Seiss volume.

He steadily grew worse and the end came unexpectedly, August 14. The last words spoken by Dr. Lee in our cottage were "Living or dying, I am the Lord's." We were with him a half hour before the end came, and repeated the first four verses of Psalm 103 in his ear. He smiled, but could not speak. A moment later, we whispered "Jesus," and "Good night." He died at 9:30.

Dr. Lee was only thirty-four years of age, yet he had done a work which many a veteran might envy. His mantle will surely fall on others, whom God has ordained to follow in his footsteps. The work of translating Dr. Seiss will be carried on by Dr. Wang, and will be among the priceless monuments of Christian effort in China.

REV. AND MRS. J. WOODBERRY.

Shanghai, China.

Questions and Answers

F. R., Leavenworth, Kan. I have been greatly interested in your remarks in a recent issue of THE MAIL-BAG on evolution. What is the verdict of modern science on the subject?

St. George Mivart, one of the ablest scientists of our day, pronounces evolution "a puerile hypothesis," unsupported by any evidence whatsoever. He adds: "There is no instance of the transmutation of species." Professor Beale of King's College, London, writes: "In support of all naturalistic conjectures concerning man's origin, there is not at this time a shadow of scientific evidence." The late Professor Shaler, of Harvard, wrote: "It begins to be evident to naturalists that the Darwinian hypothesis is still essentially unverified." Professor Haeckel, the great German scientist, once a leading Darwinite, now says: "Most modern investigators of science have come to the conclusion that the doctrine of evolution is an error and cannot be supported."

Mrs. Theo. Castor, Greenboro, N. Y., writes: "During the past summer I have read the Bible through to find how many times love, lovely, loving kindness, well beloved, loving, beloved, lovable, etc., are mentioned in Holy Writ. I find that St. Paul in all of his writings mentions them most frequently, viz.: 129 times. St. John is second on the list; in all of his writings he mentions them 117 times. Solomon, in his three books, comes third: 105 times. St. John the Evangelist mentions them 17 times more than the three other evangelists."

F. N. F., Southington, Conn. 1. Is the narrative entitled The Man Without a Country, by E. E. Hale, true? If so, can you tell if a monument has ever been erected? 2. If a man feels called to be an evangelist, should he start out, all things being favorable, with the exception that he feels he has not a sufficient education?

1. It is the story of a young naval lieutenant, based on fact, and, we believe, verifiable by reference to Navy Department records. We know nothing about a monument. 2. Proper preparation is a very important essential. We would suggest a regular course of training, either at the Moody Institute or the Bible Institute, New York.

West Virginian, Hinton, W. Va. Will you explain the relationship that existed between Syria and ancient Assyria? Which of them was the older nation?

The two were apparently confounded by some of the later Greek writers and also by some Latins. In the Hebrew, a distinction is made. In the Assyrian inscriptions Assyria is called As-sur, while the Tyrians are called Tsur-ra-ya. Tyre was the principal town along the Mediterranean coast and the country round about it received the name Syria, or "the region of Tyre." In a general way it extended from the eastern boundary of Asia Minor and the southwest boundary of Mesopotamia on the north, southward along the coast and both sides of the Jordan to the borders of Egypt and Arabia. Assyria is described by Ptolemy as being bounded north by Armenia, west by the Tigris and Mesopotamia, east by Media and southwest by the Arabian desert. Among classical writers, however, the names are often used interchangeably, and some have even applied the name Assyria to the region of Asia Minor, as far as the Black Sea. You will find copious notices of both countries in the encyclopedias in any good library.

J. C., Oxford, O., referring to a recent paragraph in THE MAIL BAG regarding Lincoln's Christianity, sends us this most interesting letter:

"In Washington, D. C., there is a house in Tenth Street, No. 516, opposite Ford's Theatre. In this house Lincoln died. It is now devoted exclusively to the preservation of Lincoln relics, some three thousand in number. In that house I bought a book entitled The Words of Lincoln, from which I copy the following, that we may know something of the true inwardness of the man and martyr. He never lost confidence in his God, or the cause in which he was engaged. This was his reply to an Illinois clergyman who asked Mr. Lincoln if he was a Christian:

"... When I left Springfield, I asked the people to pray for me; I was not a Christian. When I buried my son, the severest trial of my life, I was not a Christian; but when I went to Gettysburg, and saw the graves of thousands of our soldiers, I then and there consecrated myself to Christ. I do love Jesus."

"In writing to some pessimistic Congressman, he says: 'I have a higher faith than yours. I have faith not only that God is in our cause, but that he will control the hearts of the people so that they will be faithful to it too.'"

"In reply to General Sickles, who asked Mr. Lincoln what he thought of Gettysburg, he wrote:

"I had no fears of Gettysburg, and if you really want to know, I will tell you why. In the stress and pinch of the campaign there I went to my room, and got down on my knees and prayed to Almighty God for victory at Gettysburg. Then and there I made a solemn vow with my Maker that if he would stand by the boys at Gettysburg, I would stand by him. He did, and I will." I should think that these quotations would be satisfactory to all inquiring minds as to the character of Abraham Lincoln's faith."

M. M. G., Beloit, Wis. 1. Are the Ozark Mountains in Missouri or Arkansas? 2. Did the Government decide Niagara Falls must be left in their natural condition? 3. Are all the countries in South America republics?

1. The Ozarks extend through Arkansas, Kansas and Oklahoma. They range from 1,500 to 2,500 feet in height. They are sometimes considered part of the Appalachian system. 2. Efforts have been made by the State of New York to save the beauty of the Falls, but as yet they seem to be in danger of being sacrificed to furnish power. 3. All the countries of South America are republics, Brazil being the last to assume that form. However, it must be remembered that in some of them the greater part of the population have little to do with the Government and their Presidents are really dictators. One party, out of power, will have been considered best not to allow it to pass under the control of any party. In 1820 a new charter was granted and a Mayor was elected by the people. In 1869 the charters of Washington and Georgetown were repealed and a territorial government formed. The President appointed a Governor and Council of eleven members and the people elected a House of Delegates. In 1873 this was abolished and the President appointed three Regents to govern the District. In 1873 a permanent government of three commissioners was constituted by Congress, with no representative body of citizens. The present form has worked satisfactorily. Many people, living in Washington, retain citizenship in some State and go home to vote.

Mrs. H. P. W., Dorchester, Mass. How long was the time from the capture of the ark by the Philistines till it was taken to Jerusalem by David?

After holding it seven months the Philistines sent it back. It remained at Beth-shemesh a very short time and was then sent to Kirjath-jearim, where it was placed in Abinadab's house and remained there, according to some estimates, twenty years. Others, however, say forty years. Then David undertook to convey it to Jerusalem. After the incident of Uzza's death, it rested three months in the house of Obed-Edom. It was then placed in the tent which David had prepared for memorative and communion supper. In the Passover supper, a number of articles were used; flesh, bitter herbs, vinegar, etc., that are not used in the Lord's Supper, and it was custom to 'dip together into the dish,' and also to pass what is translated 'sops' (morsels of flesh and bread dipped in the sauce) from one to another. So the passing of the 'sop,' morsel, must have been during, or at the close of, the Passover supper, and before the institution of the Lord's Supper. Now read John 13:26 and verse 30, 'he then having received the sop went immediately out.'

W. H. P., Washington, D. C. Is it not very probable, from what we know of the rotation of the earth upon its axis, the laws of hydrology and the almost indisputable fact of the open Polar Sea, that it is utterly impossible for a human being to get to either of the poles of the earth and return? Just think! twelve miles from the poles a man can walk as fast as the earth rotates. Can there possibly be a life under such conditions? Has not the Divine Being, in mercy, hedged these vast solitudes in with impenetrable barriers over which no foot of man or beast shall ever tread and return?

The present expectation of polar research is that it may produce valuable geographic and scientific results. There is no expectation of finding human life at or even near the poles. All conditions seem to preclude it. The geographic pole and the magnetic pole are two different things, but the finding of the latter in King William's Land, by Captain Amundsen, was of great value to science. It is thought that the discovery of the geographic pole, the goal of most arctic explorers, will settle many scientific questions.

Miscellaneous

C. B. Rev. Frank Talmage is in Europe.

J. W., Denver, Col. We are unable to give the information.

E. A., Williamsburg, Mass. The genealogy of Jesus has been discussed in THE MAIL-BAG recently.

Several Readers. Yes, the Shorthand Classes will be continued during the winter months at the summer rate.

Reader, Montgomery, O. Baracha or Berachah ("blessing"). See I. Chron. 12:3 and II. Chron. 20:26.

C. L., Paola, Kan. 1. Both interpretations have their supporters; yours as well as the other. 2. All such signs and omens are regarded as mere superstitions.

J. M., Cumberland, Md. 1. The Books of Samuel, Kings and Chronicles are so divided in the Jewish Canon probably for convenience sake, and in order that the volumes of MSS. for temple use should not be too bulky. 2. Your second question cannot be answered.

W. W., Ansonia, O. There is no explanation available. It is one of those passages that must be taken as we find it. There are many places in the Bible that warn us against having any dealings with so-called wizards, necromancers and those that "seek after familiar spirits." No one can lift the veil from the future, save God alone. Those who profess nowadays to be able to do so are charlatans and impostors.

Arrival of the First American "Ocean Penny Post" at Waterloo Station, London

THE inauguration of cheap ocean postage was an event on two continents. Perhaps the greatest interest centred in New York and London, where there was a rush to take advantage of the "Penny Post." Regular mails were practically doubled. The arrival of the first mails, under the new rate, was considered almost an historic incident on both sides, and doubtless many of the letters in the initial consignment will be preserved as mementoes.

start a revolution rather than wait to try the strength of their position at the elections.

A. P., Danbury, Conn. A and B converse about the times. B says he thinks that the world is coming to an end; A says he would think so, only in the churches they sing every Sunday "world without end. Amen." What does it mean?

The phrase, "world without end. Amen," with which Paul closes the third chapter of his epistle to the Ephesians, should be interpreted with reference to the context. He is speaking of the glory given to God through all the generations of eternal ages—literally "the age of the ages," eternity being one grand endless life. It is a figure of speech, oratorically employed to emphasize the idea that those who are in Christ have already begun this eternal existence in the endless spiritual world.

E. S. S., East Avon, N. Y. Why is there no voting allowed in the District of Columbia?

The District of Columbia is not a part of any State, but is set apart as the seat of the National Government. Under Article I, section 8 of the United States Constitution its citizens cannot vote for President or Vice-President of the United States, nor on affairs of the District. The District is for the transaction of public business and it it and a little later was conveyed to its proper place in Jerusalem. The actual time these various transfers occupied cannot be stated definitely.

J. A. H., Rockford, Wash. Are we to believe that the death of Uzza was merely an accident and not punishment for touching the ark?

The Bible narrative seems to imply clearly enough that the ark was roughly, familiarly and irreverently handled. It says: "The anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzza;" and the Hebrew text adds: "for his error, because he put his hand to the ark" (I. Chron. 13:10). Josephus (in his Antiquities, 7:4-2) says it was a sin to touch it, Uzza not being of the high priest's family. There are several obscure points in the Bible narrative, however, that make the real interpretation uncertain.

W. M. C., Wilmington, N. C., writes, regarding our recent paragraph about Judas and the Lord's Supper: "Christ and his disciples met to observe the Feast of the Passover (Matt. 26:17; Mark 14:1, 12, 17, 18, 20). It was at this supper that Judas Iscariot was present. Before its close, Judas left and after, or at the close of the Passover supper, the Lord's Supper was instituted, Christ only using two of the articles on the table, bread and wine, for his new com-

A Christmas Gift

$1.00 to $50.00 IN CASH will be given to every Subscriber sending any New Subscriptions to between now and December 10, 1908. This is an exceptional opportunity and you simply cannot afford to miss it. Write at once for full particulars of our "CASH CHRISTMAS GIFT OFFER." Address

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD,
99 Bible House, New York City.

AMERICAN GIRLS IN THE PHILIPPINES

[N A LETTER from Lingayen, P. I., to friends in the United States, a bright American girl gives this pleasing picture of home life in our new colonial possessions:

"This is the rainy season, and one week we had to stay indoors the whole week. On Sunday it cleared, and the moon was most beautiful that night, but on Monday we had the worst baguio (wind and rain storm) of the season. Lingayen is on an island only a mile wide, and the river is so high that we can get to neither of the launches to get away, but fortunately teachers) each have a room apiece, which is our bedroom, sitting room, library, and office. The native bedding consists of a patati (a grass mat), a cotton blanket in which they wrap themselves, and a pillow, and these are rolled up and put to one side during the day. Their beds are what we call 'Chino cots' out here—cots made by the Chinese of bamboo. The native people seldom have them in their own homes, but in our institution we have them for morality and for health's sake. The girls are up before six o'clock in the morning and have their house work finished before breakfast. Classes begin at eight and continue until twelve and then there are three classes conducted by the graduate Deaconess from the Manila Training School, who is also our interpreter. After dinner at night we have our evening prayers. Saturday evening is our regular school prayer meeting and in this little service the girls give their experiences, and we find out what they have to fight against.

American Girls in Filipino Dress

"Our girls come from their province homes miles and miles from Manila, but when they get on their clean, starched dresses, they look fresh and nice. Candida, our interpreter, has a beautiful face. The girls wanted us to have a picture in their costume, and I send you one to show you that they would not be unbecoming to Americans, though impractical for every-day wear. They seldom wear that collar affair in the house, but a small handkerchief is used in its place around the neck. We have sixteen girls living in our house and three day students. You will see that we are kept busy. After the rainy season is over we divide the girls and hold open-air services in the barrios (villas) of Lingayen, of which there are twenty. Of course we cannot go to all, but we have made selections and they are looking for us. We try to give the children in these meetings a picture card, using the Sunday School picture cards when we have them."

In a letter from Mrs. E. W. Jansen, missionary at Cebu, the writer says: "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's Mission boat has continued to journey from village to village and coast to coast, in our Cebu Island group, with the one purpose of strengthening the converts, and making the Gospel known. From the first of the several villages, where Bible instruction has already been given, three men have since accepted God's call to evangelize their people, and are now working earnestly in different places.

"From the same village, six boys have been sent by their parents and Christian neighbors to the Mission School to prepare for the ministry among their own people. These lads in every way contrast hopefully with the children of other village homes.

"Whatever persecution and trials the many Christians have suffered, all seems to have the effect of strengthening them spiritually. The evangelist who now cares for one of these villages and assists in spreading the Gospel, once had to flee for his life, while the village priest, with three hundred armed parishioners, hunted him and his companions, longing for their blood. Only one of the Christians fell into their hands. He was an old man, and he was cut to pieces.

"The request of the people in many new places for the Gospel has brought much encouragement to all of the workers. 'Night and day they beg us to teach them the Gospel,' said one of the evangelists, 'and the seekers will not let us rest even at night, as they fill the houses and ask us questions about the teaching of God's Word.'

"In two new places which we visited we looked into the faces of hundreds of people. They were as attentive to the preaching of God's Word at the closing address of the open-air services, which were frequently more than two hours long, as they were during the early part of the meetings. On Sunday afternoons the crowds of people who had gathered into one of the villages to attend a cock fight, poured out of the pit into the services which were held.

"The Filipino is said to be an adept in concealing all felt thoughts from his face. But no human beings' faces express spiritual feelings more clearly than do the Filipinos'. Faces, which have concealed their true feelings from stranger eyes, speak plainly of conviction of sin while the Gospel is being preached to them.

"During the three months in which the Mission boat has been at work, fourteen villages and towns have been visited and six different islands. In each of the villages Bible instruction is given and Gospel services held. Native and foreign workers have been taken from place to place, and some of the former have been placed on a new island.

"On our return journey to Cebu, we took an evangelist's wife on to another place, en route to rejoin her husband. This old man and his wife had pleaded hard with us to wait to give their little congregation Bible instruction. They clung to us so that it was difficult to say them nay; but our presence was the road to Dagupan is in quite good condition. The lower part of our lot is toward the river.

A Little Filipino Maid at her Toilet

"Very few people use the lower part of their houses, but because we needed all the room in our house, it was finished and there are two large rooms below and a small kitchen, bath and toilet. In one room we have ten narrow beds for the girls and the larger room we use for a dining-room for ourselves and our girls, sixteen of us in all. Our house is an old Spanish structure of lumber, not nipa, with a galvanized-iron roof. The posts, beams and slats over the cracks are all in evidence, but we have nice hardwood floors. We (two even more urgently needed elsewhere, so, with the promise of a visit later on, we tore ourselves away. Some time later, when on our way to visit an imprisoned and persecuted friend, we were met by a messenger sent by a fellow-American missionary, to tell us that a telegram had just arrived from this old evangelist, saying that their own and their converts' lives were threatened. Five policemen with bolos (native weapons or knives) threatened to attack them while they were conducting services. We hope soon to visit their place of work, and render what help is possible."

TIMELY TOPICS AT HOME AND ABROAD

—ENCOURAGED BY recent victories, the Kentucky Anti-Saloon League is now preparing for a final effort to drive the saloon out of the State. Ninety-four out of 119 counties have already outlawed it. Bourbon County, famous in other days for its whisky output, has gone dry. North Carolina becomes dry on January 1, as a result of the splendid victory last May, led by eloquent Governor Glenn. Mr. W. M. Cumming, Wilmington, N. C., writes us: "I was struck with this advertisement which I recently saw in a saloon window in this city: 'Downfall of booze! Buy now; soon you can't. Liquor cheap to close out.' Another saloon had an advertisement in a window stating that after January 1, the store would be moved to Norfolk, Va."

—LAST WINTER, Dr. Otto Rubensohn, a German explorer, found on the Island of Elephantine, in southern Egypt, some papyri written in Aramaic, a dialect of Hebrew, which throw light on the life of the Hebrew people in the days of Nehemiah. The most interesting thing in the documents is a petition to Darius, king of Persia, then ruling in Egypt, for the restoration of a temple destroyed by the heathen Egyptians. This is interesting as showing that the Jews outside of Palestine had temples elsewhere than in Jerusalem. Another interesting item is a marriage contract between a Jewish girl and an Egyptian named Es-hor (i. e., belonging to the heathen god Horus). The bride evidently converted her husband, as he appears again under the Hebrew name Nathan. One of the names familiar to Bible readers, which appears in the manuscripts, is Sin-ubalit (Sanballat of Neh. 2: 10).

—KIOTO IN JAPAN is a paradise of gardens, and these beautiful templed retreats contain some very singular curios. The temple of Eikando, for instance, still holds the sacred image of Amida, which, so the Japanese gravely assure us, in the Japanese century turned its head to address a very holy votary: and so the head remains today, no one having been found holy enough to put it straight again. The temple of Sanjusangendo was the home of the priest-emperor Shirakawa in the twelfth century, who left as a memorial in one big hall 1,001 images of the Eleven-Faced Kwan-on: a goddess who besides having eleven faces has fifty arms, which give a decidedly "spidery" look to the entire collection. The Buddhist Monastery of Chion-in

(also in a garden) possesses among other paintings a wonderful picture from which one spring morning (somewhere in the sixteenth century, they say) a whole flight of sparrows took wing, so realistically had they been painted! All of which goes to show that the Oriental standard of art is hopelessly unapproachable by Occidentals.

—ILLINOIS HAS been shocked by revelations made by the Rev. Charles Virden, of the State Board of Charities, in a recent official report on the "State Visitation of Children" who had been sent out from the institutions to different homes. He found many instances of startling brutality in the treatment of these waifs. He said:

I have found them tortured with hot irons, stabbed with roasting forks and scissors, limbs broken, hair torn out by the roots, lashed until black and blue from head to foot, faces cut and scarred and eyes blinded. Numerous other cases of crime against children in the form of assault have been prosecuted. There has been a wholesale traffic in children in Illinois. I have a receipt in my possession for a child who had been sold for a stipulated price. One of the most distressing cases occurred in Quincy, Ill., where a child was taken from its mother, a young girl, when less than an hour old, placed in a market basket, absolutely nude except for a covering of an old piece of quilt, carried about the streets and offered to any one who would accept it.

A girl of thirteen years, committed by the Juvenile Court, was made a household drudge, and beaten with a horsewhip. Another girl of seven years was covered with bruises. Her face was burned, her hands were hacked with a red hot knife and the sight of one eye was destroyed. Two girls, aged five and ten, were forced to beg on the streets. A girl thirteen years old did the washing and ironing for a family of seven. She had no school advantages. She wore old clothes and shoes; was overworked and received no salary. Her life was insured for the benefit of the mother-in-law in the home.

All of which shows that since human nature is not to be depended upon, a sharp watch should be kept on all who "adopt" children from such institutions, to see that the helpless waifs are properly treated.

Three Beautiful Pictures

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Permit me to thank you for the three beautiful pictures sent to me last week. They are truly all and more than you have said of them. Immediately upon their receipt I took them to an art store to be framed, and they are indeed beautiful in their frames of gilt.

Thanking you for this and many other favors received from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD during the many years I have been a subscriber, HELEN M. SEAMANS.

New York City.

A HARVEST OF WOES*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IT HAS always seemed to us that no form of war could be more terrible than civil war, when citizens of the same nation, even brothers of the same family, are engaged in mortal combat. But in the war of rebellion waged by Absalom against his father King David, we see something worse than civil war. As to the forces in the field, Absalom had a large force, judging from the fact that twenty thousand were killed in battle (II. Sam. 18: 7). King David had with him his old guard of 600 warriors who had been his protectors all of the years he was pursued by Saul. Very probably others of his own people rallied to his standard as he fled from Jerusalem to avoid capture by his enemy, his son! Dean Stanley has said: "There is no single day in Jewish history of which so elaborate account remains as of this memorable flight. There is none, we may add, that combines so many of David's characteristics—his patience, his calculation; we miss only his daring courage. But his God trust was best of all. When his mistaken friends brought along the Ark of God that God's presence might go with him and give him victory, he required them to carry it back to the holy place from which they had taken it; he knew that was not God's way of delivering him. Along the way he was informed that Jonathan's son, Mephibosheth, who had been his beneficiary and had sat at his table, had turned against him; but this afterward proved to be false. Another man, named Shimei, appeared along the way and cast stones and dirt and curses upon King David. David's guard would have thrust the man through, but the king forbade them, for the curses voiced the king's own conscience. But he had repented, and so he could say: "The Lord will requite me good for his cursing this day."

When night came on the king and his forces camped at the fords of the Jordan—on the opposite side of the river from where Absalom was encamped. His song that night was: "I will both lay me down in peace and sleep, for thou, Lord, only makest me dwell in safety" (Ps. 4). From this prayer of trust has come "the bairns' hymn," "Now I Lay Me Down to Sleep." In the morning another prayer song was upon his lips, "I laid me down and slept. I awaked, for the Lord sustained me. I will not be afraid of ten thousands of people that have set themselves against me round about."

The Battle On

It is being fought in the woods of Ephraim not far distant from Mahanaim, King David's temporary capital. The king sits at the gate waiting for news from the front. A watchman on the roof announces to the porter at the gate that he sees a runner coming, and then a second runner. The battle has been fought, and they are bringing tidings. First one, and then the other, tells of the victory of King David's forces. But there is something dearer than that to King David. He asks each runner, "Is the young man Absalom safe?" They do not say he is dead, but they couch the sad truth in words of loyal devotion to their king: "The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is." If they had told him all, they would have said: "He hangs upon a tree, caught by his hair in the branches, thrust through by the darts of Joab." They spared David this. But victory was turned into mourning for him. Sad laments over Absalom took the place of peans of rejoicing over victory. He went up to the chamber over the gate and wept, and as he went, thus he said: "O my son Absalom! My son; my son Absalom! Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!" And the brave soldiers who had won the victory stole quietly back into the city as if they were the vanquished. The lament of the king was in all their ears, and it pleased them not. General Joab went in to the king and charged him with loving his enemies better than his friends, and said he would be deserted by his warriors that night if he did not leave off his lamenting, and show himself to the people at the gate, and rejoice with them over their hard-earned victory; and the king heeded the words of Joab, and went down to the gate. And then King David returned to Jerusalem in great triumph over the same way he had fled.

"Is the Young Man Absalom Safe?"

Take the name of Absalom out of this question and put in its place the name of your son, your brother, or any young man who is dear to you. When he leaves you in the morning to enter upon his business day, do you feel sure that it is going to be all right with him? Do you think about him through the day, and pray for him that he may be able to resist all temptation to deal falsely, or to be induced to visit the saloon? And when, after supper, he goes out again, not for business but pleasure, have you anxious thoughts again, and do you lie awake that you may hear his step upon the stair, whether or not it is steady, and do you listen for the clock to strike the hour of his return? Life is so full of pitfalls for the young man that it is not to be wondered at that loved ones grow anxious.

A young man felt that he was being dragged down. His loved ones, the loving ones, lived in a far distant place from the city where the young man had found employment. He thought he would go and see the minister. He found the minister just going out. When he said so, despair settled on the young man's face. And the minister heard the young man mutter to himself: "Well, it is no use; I can't do it. I might just as well go back, and go to the devil at once, and be done with it." Instantly the minister turned about and announced to the lad that he had changed his mind, and was going back into the house, and invited him in. Then the young man told the minister his troubles, and how difficult he found it to live a Christian life. The pastor thought of many things, and many ways, but nothing occurred to him that would fit the case. Finally he said to him: "Why do you not make the acquaintance of some nice respectable families, and visit them, and thus form a companionship which will at once be satisfying and elevating?" The young man looked up into the minister's face a moment, and then at his soiled and patched clothes in which he had done his day's work. He held up his hands for inspection, rough, grimed, in spite of the fact that they had been washed before he started to see the minister. He spoke of his lack of education, and his unrefined and rude manners, and then said: "What nice respectable family would want me to visit them?" The minister could but recognize the situation, and said to him: "Then come and see me." "No," said the young man, "I would bore you and I am afraid you would bore me. It might do for one or two evenings. I want some place to go that is suitable to me. Where shall I go and what shall I do?" "Well, now," said the minister, "there

Continued on next page

Like the Ships of Uncle Sam's Navy.

Most soaps dissolve quickly if placed in hot water.

Ivory Soap does not.

Left in bath tub or wash basin, it retains its firmness for hours. Like the ships of Uncle Sam's Navy, it floats forever and a day.

Bath; toilet; fine laundry.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
99 44/100 Per Cent. Pure

For Jellies and Preserves

On the proper sealing of your jellies and preserves depends their "keeping." Metal and glass caps too often leak; tying with paper is next to useless; old lids are often insecure.

Simply pour Pure Refined Paraffine over the tops of your jellies, or dip the closed end of the jar (after cooling) in melted and you will have sealed them perfectly. It's impervious to acids, water, mold and moisture. Has no taste or odor and is perfectly harmless.

PURE REFINED PARAFFINE

Pure Refined Paraffine is used for washing, starching and ironing and numerous other household purposes. Comes in single cakes with full directions inside. Sold everywhere.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

RISEING SUN STOVE POLISH

USED IN MILLIONS OF HOMES.

Dissolves instantly, polishes quickly, goes farther, and lasts longer on the stove than any other stove polish ever made. Makes old stoves look like new. Try a cake and you will be surprised by the results. Nothing like it for stoves.

MORSE BROS., Props. Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

*The International Sunday School Lesson for November 8, 1908. David Grieves for Absalom. II. Sam. 18: 24-33. Golden Text: "A foolish son is a grief to his father." Prov. 17: 25.

Sunday School Lesson—Continued

is the Young Men's Baraca Class in our Sunday School. There are lots of fine young men in that. They have their Bible lessons on Sundays, and on week evenings, at least four evenings in the week, they have studies, debates, lecture courses, sociables, etc." The young man was pleased with the plan and next Sunday was introduced by the minister to the Baraca Class. He liked the businesslike way in which the class was conducted. He was specially pleased when the president in closing the class said: "Now let every Baraca give the Baraca grip to every man in the room," and there followed a friendly handshake, and a five minutes' social. After that the young man did not have anything more to say about "going to the devil." He had found just the right place to fit in. Every Sunday School should have a Baraca class.

Although unconscious of the pleasing charm, The mind still bends where friendship leads the way; Let virtue, then, thy partner's bosom warm, Or vice will lead thy softened soul astray.

The Greek poet Menander, more than two thousand years ago, wrote the sentiment of which the above lines are the translation. Dr. J. M. Buckley commenting upon this saying remarks: "If, therefore, you select as a companion a skeptic in religion, one who is licentious in his practices, one who is profane or irreverent in his expressions, or who secretly drinks ardent spirits, or gambles, or loves escapades which if exposed would disgrace those who participated in them, evil results are pretty sure to follow. You will fall into the same practices, you will find it impossible to form associations of a better class, and your reputation will suffer while you are in school or college, and to a considerable extent for a good many years afterward. It is a task too great for any young man to maintain a genuine intimacy with both the moral and the dissolute. His intimates will be true, noble, manly, or they will be reckless and dissolute. Do nothing which, if published just as you did it, would prevent you from getting a good situation if you applied for it, or destroy your father's honest pride in his son."

Absalom Sowed Wild Oats

It does not say just that in the Bible, but we are not left in doubt as to the fact that he was a reckless sort of a fellow, caring neither for God nor his father, and caring only for men that he might make them his tools. Sowing wild oats is not the trifle it is often taken to be.

John B. Gough said in his last lecture: "I have seven years in the record of my own life when I was held in the iron grasp of intemperance. I would give the world to blot it out; but, alas! I cannot." Then stepping forward with an impressive gesture he added: "Therefore, you men, make your record—" and was silenced by paralysis.

Absalom's end came almost as suddenly, but how unlike the noble Gough in his death! One was cut short in a career of great usefulness and honor—the other in a career of shame and crime. To the grave of Gough visitors bring the tribute of tears and flowers. On the grave of Absalom, even to this day, the visitor and the passer-by cast stones in accordance with the law that a rebellious son should be stoned to death.

HALLEY'S COMET

By Rev. Joseph Hamilton, Author of "Our Own and Other Worlds"

I SEE that the predicted return of Halley's Comet in 1910 is beginning to attract special attention. It is even supposed that astronomers will soon be looking for it, for being a large comet, it will be visible while yet very far away.

I may be wrong, but I have my doubts as to whether the comet will actually return, and at the time foretold. A great deal of stress has been laid on the fact that Halley predicted the return of the comet in 1758. It had appeared before, and Halley made an elaborate calculation as to the time of its return, and he fixed on 1758. He did not live, however, to see if his prediction would be fulfilled; but it was fulfilled; the comet, or what we believed to be the same comet, returned in 1758.

Now, there are several circumstances which render the return of any given comet very uncertain, and especially one so large as Halley's, and that goes so far out into space. It was estimated that the comet of 1844 would go out into space four thousand times farther than the planet Neptune, the outermost planet of our system. Now if that estimate was anywhere near the truth, consider the vastness of the comet's orbit. Yet if the orbit was circular, or nearly circular, like the orbit of the planets, some approximation might be made as to the length of time required to make the revolution. But the comets move in ellipses, and often extreme ellipses, so that the time required for their revolution is very uncertain. To be sure, if we could follow a comet out into space to the point where the ellipse is widest, we might make allowance for the contraction, and so estimate roughly the time required for the whole revolution—that is, supposing that the comet always moved at the same uniform speed. As a matter of fact, however, the speed varies immensely; and Halley recognized that fact in making his calculation. Being a gaseous body, he made allowance for it being retarded here and there on its journey, by the attraction of other bodies. Thus, it might return in quite a different form from that in which it went away, so that we might not recognize it.

Then it does not seem to own allegiance to the sun, as the planets do. For it will approach the sun, and circle round him at close range, and then swoop away into boundless space. What power brings it back? Certainly not the attraction of the sun. He could not hold it when it circled round him at close range. How then could he bring it back from infinite space? There seems to be a suggestion here of some force in the material universe that is all unknown. What stupendous marvels of creation are here! What mysteries profound! Yet, what revelations of Eternal Power and Godhead! Well might Dr. Potts say: "The study of astronomy alone should drive all infidelity from mankind."

A Few Facts About New York

ACCORDING to this year's reports the assessed value of the real estate of New York is $900,000,000 more than the assessed value of all the land west of the Mississippi. The population is increasing at the rate of 65,000 a year by natural accretion, not counting the yearly influx of immigrants. It has six times as many telephones as Paris, four times as many as Berlin, and twice as many as London. When its new water supply is completed it will draw upon a watershed nine hundred square miles in extent. It will be known as the Catskill system. To draw its carts and carriages it has 109,000 horses.

"Where can I invest my money so that it will be safe and where I can have it when needed, and yet so it will bring me the greatest advantage when needed?" This question will be answered to your satisfaction if you will write the Industrial Savings & Loan Co., whose advertisement appears on page 857.

$4.95

Our Art Catalog No. 324 and Samples Free for the Asking

GENUINE COAT ECONOMY

690, BROAD SATIN STRAPPED 50 IN. CHEVIOT COAT fitted, body lined with silk Venetian; broad satin lapels on front, back, collar and cuffs with fancy ed trimming around collar and in back. Double breasted front. Price very special. $4.95

We are the largest outer garment house in the country, and are authority on all matters pertaining to dress. We offer our services as competent advisers for your Fall and Winter purchases—absolutely free to everyone.

Write for our latest Art Fashion Book and your preference of samples. Mail us a postal card TODAY.

PHILIPSBORN

The Outer Garment House

17-199 E. Adams St., CHICAGO, ILL.

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"
Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set
From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM.
AGENTS
are coining money. Claude H. Rogers sells 500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $2 to $10 a day. OUT-FIT FREE to workers.
THOMAS MFG. CO.
423 Home Bldg.
Dayton, Ohio

DIDN'T KNOW

That Coffee Contained a Drug.

There are still some well-informed persons who do not know that coffee contains a drug—caffeine.

This drug is what causes the coffee habit and the many ailments that frequently develop from its habitual use.

"I was drinking coffee twice a day but did not know it was hurting me," writes a Neb. lady. "I don't think I had ever heard or read that coffee was harmful."

"Sometimes I couldn't lie down, had to sleep in a sitting posture as the heart action was so slow. The doctor did not ask me if I drank coffee and the medicine I took did not seem to help me."

"Finally I got so bad I could not drink half a cup, as the dull heavy pain around my heart would be worse. I stopped it for a while and felt some better, but was soon drinking it again, and felt the same distress as before."

"Then I decided coffee caused my trouble, also my husband's, for he complained of severe heartburn every morning after breakfast."

"My daughter had used Postum on a visit and asked why we did not try it. We did, following directions about making it, and for four years we have used it and prefer it to coffee."

"My old trouble has entirely left me and my husband has no more heartburn. I can say from experience now that Postum is the most wholesome of drinks, anyone can drink it three times a day without harm, but with decided benefit."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Handsome $10 Chair Yours Without Cost

Larkin Factory-to-Family dealing makes this possible, because it saves for you the profits and losses of middlemen—doubles the purchasing-power of your money—enables you to clothe yourself, or furnish your home, out of present cost of living. The Larkin Idea is a practical, co-operative plan which saves money for a million families annually. With $10.00 worth of Larkin products such as Laundry and Fine Toilet Soaps, Toilet and Pharmaceutical Preparations, Coffee, Teas, Spices, Extracts, Baking Powders, and other Food Specialties, you get, in addition, a Premium that alone would cost you about $10.00 all by payment of $10.00. There are 1,200 Larkin Premiums to choose from, of excellent design and workmanship. Or if no Premium is desired, you can have $20.00 worth of Products for $10.00. Their regular use will save you $10.00 every few weeks.

SEND NO MONEY

You may have $10.00 worth of Larkin Products and a $10.00 Premium on 30 days' free trial. Pay $10.00 if satisfied; otherwise goods will be removed at our expense and freight-charges refunded.

Free: Our new enlarged Product and Premium List, also Wearing-Apparel Catalogue mailed, postpaid. Send Coupon at once.

Larkin Co., Buffalo, N.Y.

—FILL IN—CUT HERE—MAIL TODAY—

Larkin Co. Mail postpaid, Product and Premium List No. 63, and tell how I can clothe myself, or furnish my home out of present cost of living.

Name.....
Street.....
P. O.
State..... G. P. 86

LABLACHE

FACE POWDER

AFTER THE SUMMER

Beautiful women everywhere use Lablache. Do you? It freshens and soothes the skin, making it clear and velvety. A toilet delight. Many imitators, but no equal.

Refuse substitutes. They may be dangerous. Flakes, White, Pink or Cream, 20c, a box, of druggists or by mail.

Send 10c. for sample box. BEN. LEVY CO., French Perfumers Dept. 22, 125 Kingston St., Boston, Mass.

SEYBOLD REED-PIPE ORGAN

Style No. 122. 5 Octaves. Dark Golden Oak. Seybold Patent Reed-Pipe Action. Pipes in dull harmonious colors and gold bronzes. Height, 90-in.; Width, 55-in.; Depth, 28-in. Blown by hand or feet. Catalog of two-manual and pedal organs and single-manual Chapel and Parlor organs FREE. Send for it now. Seybold Piano and Organ Company, 213 River Street, Elgin, Ill.

GIPSY SMITH

SPECIAL EDITION OF

HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD

By I. ALLAN SANKEY, Son of IRA D. SANKEY

288 Pages Responses JUST PUBLISHED Nearly 125 New Songs

$25 per 100 Returnable samples mailed to "Earnest Inquirers." 35c. each by mail.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

The Song that Made Greatest Human Emotions!

Angel's Lullaby: "Only Asleep"

The best song of its kind. An ideal song for our loved ones sleeping. Arranged for solo or duet.

SENT POSTPAID for 25 CENTS. Silver. The Bright-Hayford Co., 23 North 6th St., Minneapolis, Minn.

MANY BOOKS IN ONE WEBSTER'S INTERNATIONAL DICTIONARY

Do you know that the INTERNATIONAL answers with final authority ALL KINDS of questions in The Trades, Arts and Sciences, Geography, Language, Biography, Etc.? Plan of Contents as follows:

Colored Plates, Flags, State Seals, Etc...
Brief History of the English Language...
Guide to Pronunciation...
Scholarly Vocabulary of English...
Dictionary of Fiction...
Gazetteer of the World...
Biographical Dictionary...
Scripture Proper Names...
Greek and Latin...
English Christian...
Foreign Words...
Abbreviations...

2,380 Pages.
5,000 Illustrations.
25,000 Added Words.

Should You Not Own Such a Book?

WEBSTER'S COLLEGIATE DICTIONARY.
Largest of our abridgments. Regular and Thin Paper Editions. 1116 Pages and 1400 Illustrations.

Write for "Dictionary Wrinkles," and Specimen Pages, Free. Mention in your request this paper and receive a useful set of Colored Maps, pocket size.

G. & C. MERRIAM CO., Springfield, Mass.

SAFETY 6% PROFIT

A Book for Conservative Investors

We want to send our book to men and women who are thrifty and who value security above alluring promises. The book tells about our

SIX PER CENT Certificates of Deposit

amply secured by first mortgages on improved real estate—

Also about our Savings Accounts—withdrawable on demand without notice—on which we pay 5 Per Cent.

May we send you
the Book? It is FREE.

The Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

WANTED INFORMATION REGARDING A GOOD FARM

for sale. Not particular about location. Wish to hear from owner only who will sell direct to buyer. Give price, description and state when possession can be had. Address.

L. DARBYSHIRE, Box 378 A, Rochester, N.Y.

FREE FINE SILK EMBOSSED POST CARDS IN COLORS

A set of most beautiful post cards you ever saw, if you send stamp for postage. Full set of 10 Silk Embossed Birthdays, Festivals, Christmas and Greeting cards, lovely designs in beautiful colors for 10c; 50 cards, all different, 25c. No charge for postage. I will send you this ad immediately will also send you a set of 10 daily magazine 3 mos. on trial with the ad. Order for one year with each 25c order. The Household, 19 Copper Bldg., Topeka, Kan.

WEDDING INVITATIONS

Announcements, etc., engraved & printed. Latest styles, best quality, sent prepaid anywhere. Visiting Cards 100 for 10c with case 75c. Monogram Stationery. Write for samples. The Eatabrook Press, 27 Head Bldg., Tremont St., Boston, Mass. High Grade Post Cards, Historic, Marine, etc. 100 assorted $1.00

15 CENTS A ROD

For a 22-inch Hog Fence; 27c for 47-inch Farm Fence; 34c for 60-inch Poultry Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. 68 styles and designs. Catalog free. Write for it today. KITSelman Bros., Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

BIBLE STUDY BOOK—FREE

A Complete Synopsis of Bible Study of great value to all students of the Word. Send postalcard request to SCOFIELD BIBLE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Room 926, 150 Nassau Street, New York.

PATENTS that PROTECT

Our 12 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 6 cts. stamps. P. S. & A. B. LACOFY, Rooms 20-30 Pacific Bldg., Wash., D.C.

AGENTS Portraits $35. Frames 15c. Short portraits 10c. Stereoscopic 25c. 10c. 20 days' credit. Samples and Catalog FREE. Consolidated Portrait Co., 290-155 West Adams St., Chicago

The Transformation of Margaret

By MRS. ELEANOR H. PORTER

Author of "Into Still Waters," etc.

CHAPTER XL—Continued

FRANK grew grave instantly. The whimsical look in his eyes gave place to one of tender sympathy. "You poor child, of course you do, and no wonder! You are worn out with the strain, Margaret."

She raised a protesting hand. "No, no, you do not understand. I—I have made a failure of it."

"A failure of it?" "Yes. I want to get away—to look at it from a distance, and see if I can't find out what is the trouble with it, just as—as artists do, you know, when they paint a picture." There was a feverishness in Margaret's manner and a tremulousness in her voice that came perilously near tears.

"But, my dear Margaret," argued the man, "there's nothing the matter with it. It's no failure at all. You've done wonders down there at the Mill House."

Margaret shook her head slowly. "It's so little—so very little compared to what ought to be done," she sighed. "The Mill House is good and does good, I acknowledge; but it's so puny, after all. It's like a tiny little oasis in a huge desert of poverty and distress."

"But what—what more could you do?" ventured the man.

Margaret rose, and moved restlessly around the room.

"I don't know," she said at last. "That's what I mean to find out." She stopped suddenly, facing him. "Don't you see? I touch only the surface. The great cause behind things I never reach. Sometimes it seems as if it were like that old picture in—where was it? Pilgrim's Progress?—of the fire. On one side is the man trying to put it out; on the other is the evil one pouring on oil. My two hands are those two men. With one I feed a hungry child or nurse a sick woman; with the other I make more children hungry and more women sick."

"Margaret, are you mad? What can you mean?"

"Merely this. It is very simple, after all. With one hand I relieve the children's suffering; with the other I take dividends from the very mills that make the children suffer. A long time ago I wanted to 'divvy up' with Patty and Bobby and the rest. I have even thought lately that I would still like to 'divvy up'; and—well, you can see the way I am 'divvying up' now, with my people down there at the mills!" And her voice rang with self-scorn.

The man frowned. He too got to his feet and walked nervously up and down the room. When he came back the girl had sat down again. Her elbows were on the table, and her linked fingers were shielding her eyes. Involuntarily the man reached his hand toward the bowed head. But he drew it back before it had touched a thread of the bronze-gold hair.

"I do see, Margaret," he began gently, "and you are right. It is at the mills themselves that the first start must be made—the first beginning of the 'divvying up.' Perhaps, if there were some one to show us—" he paused, then went on unsteadily. "I suppose it's useless to say again—what I said that day months ago; that if you stayed here and showed him—the man who loves you—the better way—"

Margaret started. She gave a nervous little laugh and picked up a bit of paper from the floor.

"Of course it is useless," she retorted in what she hoped was a merry voice. "And he doesn't even love me now, besides."

"He doesn't love you!" Frank Spencer's eyes and voice were amazed. "Of course not! He never did, for that matter. 'Twas only the fancy of a moment. Why, Frank, Ned never cared for me—that way!"

"Ned!" The tone and the one word were enough. For one moment Margaret gazed into the man's face with startled eyes; then she turned and covered her own telltale face with her hands—and because it was a telltale face, Spencer took a long stride toward her.

"Margaret! And did you think it was Ned I was pleading for, when all the while it was I who was hungering for you with a love that sent me across the seas to rid myself of it? Did you, Margaret?"

There was no answer. "Margaret, look at me." There was a note of triumphant joy in his voice now.

Still no answer.

"Margaret, it did not go—that love. It stayed with me day after day and month after month, and it only grew stronger and deeper until there was nothing left me in all this world but you—just you. And now—Margaret, my Margaret," he said softly and very tenderly, "you are my Margaret!" And his arms closed about her.

CHAPTER XLI

IN spite of protests and pleadings Margaret spent the winter abroad.

"As if I'd stay here and flaunt my happiness in poor Bobby's face!" she said indignantly to her lover. Neither would she consent to a formal engagement. Even Mrs. Merideth and Ned were not to know.

"It is to be just as it was before," she had declared decidedly, "only—well, you may write to me," she had conceded. "I refuse to stay here and—and be just happy—yet! I've been unkind and thoughtless, and have brought sorrow to my dear good friend. I'm going away. I deserve it—and Bobby deserves it too!" And in spite of Frank Spencer's efforts to make her see matters in a different light, she still adhered to her purpose.

All through the long winter Frank contented himself with writing voluminous letters, and telling her of the plans he was making to "divvy up" at the mills, as he always called it.

"I shall make mistakes, of course, dear," he wrote. "It is a big problem—altogether more so than perhaps you realize. Of course the mills must still be a business—not a philanthropy; otherwise we shall defeat our own ends. But I shall have your clear head and warm heart to aid me, and little by little we shall win success."

"Already I have introduced two or three small changes to prepare the way for larger ones later on. Even Ned is getting interested, and seems to approve of my work, somewhat to my surprise, I will own. I'm thinking, however, that I'm not the only one in the house, sweetheart, to whom you and your selfishness have shown the 'better way.'"

Month by month the winter passed, and spring came, bringing Mrs. Merideth, but no Margaret.

"She has stopped to visit friends in New York," explained Mrs. Merideth in reply to her brother's anxious questions. "She may go on West with them. She said she would write you."

Margaret did "go on West," and it was while she was still in the West that she received a letter from Patty, a portion of which ran thus:

"Mebbe you would like to know about Bobby McGinnis. Bobby is goin' to get married. She seemed to comfort him lots after you went. And he got so he could not seem to bear her out of his sight. She is that pretty and sympathizin' in her ways, you know. I think he was surprised a

Continued on next page

PRODUCE GAS

Hence Certain Foods Not Nourishing

No matter how agreeable an article of food may be, if it causes bloating and gas in the stomach, it is not likely to be nourishing. The gas thus formed is liable to cause actual, immediate harm by pressing against the heart.

An Oregon girl suffered in this way. She found the right kind of food. She wrote: "Two years ago I had given up all hope of having health and strength. After eating a severe pain around the heart, a choking sensation."

"During these spells I had to sit perfectly still, the slightest movement causing increased pain. Even breathing caused sharp pain my heart seemed to turn over making me take short quick breaths."

"Night after night without sleep, I would sit up and wait until morning, when pains gradually lessened. I began to feel serious heart trouble."

"One day I was so miserable the doctor was called. After a careful examination said it was gas from fermented food, pressing against my heart, that caused the trouble otherwise my heart was all right."

"His medicine gave only temporary relief. I tried going without food, hoping I could find something which would agree with me. After I became quite weak, an aunt suggested Grape-Nuts."

"The first meal of this food caused unpleasant effects but made me feel strong. At every meal I ate Grape-Nuts and grew better daily. I now have no trouble what avoid pasty, starchy foods and stick to Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," 10 pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

The Foster HOSIERY SUPPORTER
Patented Dec. 5, 1899

WORN BY OVER A MILLION WOMEN

A Woman's Invention to Meet Woman's Needs

"THE NAME IS ON THE BUCKLES"

Helps correct the faults of the figure and produces the much desired straight front and graceful hip effect.

For Women who seek Style and Comfort

Price from 50c. up—at all reliable dealers or

ARTHUR FRANKENSTEIN & CO.,
Agents for United States
514-516 Broadway, New York
(4th & 5th Ave. Cor. 1st St., New York City)

10-95 Buys This Large Handsome Nickel Trimmed Steel Range

without warming closet reservoir. With high wall reservoir, just as shown cut, $17.35; large, square oven, wonderful baker, 6 cooking holes, body made of rolled steel. Duplex grate—burns wood or coal. Handsome trimmings, highly polished.

OUR TERMS
most liberal made. You can use it 30 days. If you do not like it exactly as represented, the biggest bargain ever saw equal to stove, return it to us. We will freight both ways.

Write Today for our beautifully illustrated Catalog No. 574—a postal card will 100 styles to select from. Don't buy until you get it.

MARVIN SMITH CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

"Get There"
at a price to suit you direct for a

BLACK MOTOR BUGGY

Built for country roads, hills and mud. Engine—10 H. P., 2 cylinders, air cooled, chain drive rear wheels, double brake. Speed 2 to 25 m. per hr.—30 miles on 1 gal. of gasoline. Highest quality finish, workmanship and materials. Absolutely safe and reliable. Write for Book No. A-74

BLACK MFG. CO., 124 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.

The Transformation of Margaret

Continued from preceding page

little himself, but the first thing he knew he was in love with her. I think he felt kind of bad at first on account of you. But I told him that was all nonsense and he couldn't ever make you happy anyhow. And that I knew you'd want him to do it. I think his feeling for you was more worship than love anyhow. He didn't never seem happy when he was engaged to you. I used to watch him and he always seemed afraid. And he was. He was afraid of you and himself. But he's happy now, and Arabella thinks he's just perfect. Oh—I told you he was Arabella—didn't I. Well 'tisn't it just grand."

It was not many days later that Frank Spencer at Belcourt received a mail card on which had been written:

"MRS. PATTY DURGIN ANNOUNCES THE ENGAGEMENT OF HER SISTER, ARABELLA MURPHY, TO MR. ROBERT MCGINNIS."

Beneath, in very fine letters, was: I'm coming home the eighteenth. Please tell Della; and—you may tell her anything else that you like.

"MARGARET."

For a moment the man stared at the card with puzzled eyes; then he suddenly understood.

"Della," he cried joyously, a minute later, "Della, she's coming the eighteenth!"

"Who's coming the eighteenth?"

Frank hesitated. A light that was half serious, half whimsical, and wholly tender, came into his eyes.

"My wife," he said.

"Your wife! Frank, are you crazy?"

"Almost!—with joy."

"But, Frank—" Mrs. Merideth stopped helplessly.

"Oh, you know her as 'Margaret Kendall,' he retorted with an airiness that was intended to hide the shake in his voice. "But she will be my wife before she leaves here again."

"Frank!" cried Mrs. Merideth, joyfully, "you don't mean—" But Frank was gone. Over his shoulder, however, he had tossed a smile and a reassuring nod.

Mrs. Merideth sank back with a sigh of content.

"It's exactly what I always hoped would happen," she said.

THE END

BOOKS RECEIVED

An Oral Test

How many of the following questions can the average reader answer correctly:

What is Telephone? Is Hongkong a city? What was the Geneva Bible? What is a Swiss Canton? What are Consols? How is Chauffeur pronounced? What is a Treaty of Reciprocity? What is a Skew? What is Salvage? What is a Statute of Limitations?

You may not be sure of all your answers and wish to know if you are right. Consult Webster's International Dictionary, the one great standard that answers with final authority all kinds of questions in language, the grades, arts and sciences, geography, biography, fiction, etc. The publishers, G. & C. Merriam Co., of Springfield, Mass., will send you specimen pages upon application.

Hymns of Worship and Service for the Sunday School is a compilation of three hundred carefully selected hymns and tunes, chants and responses, fifty-four pages of selections for the Sunday School choir and thirty-two pages of services for regular and special occasions. The book is rich in hymns of praise, hymns of the spiritual awakening and the developing life, hymns of service for others, and hymns of the heroic life. Price $30 per hundred. The Century Co., New York, publishers.

A Common-Sense View of the Mind-Cure, by Laura M. Westall. Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York and London. 75 cents. A careful and scientific study of the effect of the mind upon the body. The testimony of great physicians during the last hundred years is freely adduced to show that the recent movements in this direction are but the recrudescence of venerable theories long ago proved and practised.

What Is Truth? By L. B. London: Elliot Stock. 75 cents. A series of perfectly orthodox sermons, on the subjects, besides that upon the title text, of "Thy Kingdom Come," "Faith," "The Church of God," "Christian Socialism" and "Nehushtan."

Story Book Friends, by Clara Murray. 191 pages. Illustrated. 50 cents. Little, Brown & Co., Boston, publishers.

Sermons Which Have Won Souls, by Rev. Louis Albert Banks, D.D., pastor of Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church, Denver, Col., author of "Christ and His Friends," "Paul and His Friends," etc. $1.40. Funk & Wagnalls Co., New York and London. A series of stirring discourses, full of fresh and suggestive imagery, and illustrated by many choice poems.

The History of Early Christianity, by Leighton Pullan, M. A., Fellow and Lecturer of St. John Baptist College; Oxford Lecturer in Theology at Oriel College and Queen's College. $1. Thomas Whittaker, New York. This is the "orthodox" view of the conditions in the time of Ignatius and Polycarp, Tertullian and Clement and their compeers; as set against the "liberal" interpretations of Harnack and his school, with whom the author often comes to metaphorical blows.

Women of the Bible, by Walter F. Adeney, M.A., professor of New Testament Exegesis, New College, London, author of "How to Read the Bible," "The Theology of the New Testament," etc. Thomas Whittaker, 2 & 3 Bible House, New York. Professor Adeney has had to use some ingenuity to fill a fair-sized book with the scanty woman literature of the New Testament, but by blending tradition, usually labeled carefully, and the facts, piecing them together from the various evangelists, he has made out a volume interesting and not without value. He is the master of a pleasant literary style, and in this age of woman, his book will undoubtedly prove useful to many a church club and reading circle, as well as to the private student.

A World Without a Child, by Coulson Kernahan. Pp. 64. Price 50 cents. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, publishers.

This Mystical Life of Ours, by Ralph Waldo Trine. Pp. 190. Price $1; postage 10 cents. Thomas Y. Crowell & Co., New York, publishers.

King Gobbler, by Abbie N. Smith. 178 pages. Educational Publishing Co., Boston, New York and Chicago.

Diana of Dobson, by Cecily Hamilton. The story of a working girl who, being unexpectedly enriched by a legacy, decided to have a "good time," and how it all turned out. Pp. 362. Illustrated. Price $1.50. The Century Co., New York, publishers.

Among the Workers

—AT its recent annual Convention in New York, the Christian and Missionary Alliance received contributions in cash and pledges aggregating $63,000 for the cause of foreign missions.

—REV. THOMAS HOUSTON, the Blind American Evangelist, has lately been conducting very successful services in Great Britain. He returns to this country shortly to conduct services in the Eastern and Middle States.

—EVANGELIST GREEN B. FADELEY and Gospel Singer J. Owen Long have just closed a successful twelve days' series at Mt. Carmel United Brethren Church in Fuls Run, Va. They are now engaged in a union meeting at Coate's Store, Va.

—EVANGELIST C. H. GOOTEE, of Richmond, Va., organizer of the National Prisoners' Missionary Association, writes us that donations of Bibles and good reading matter can be used to advantage by the workers for distribution in jails, penitentiaries, workhouses, etc. The headquarters of the association are at 1434 East Franklin Street, Richmond, Va.

—TWELVE HUNDRED men attended the First International Student Bible Conference in Columbus, O., October 22 to 25, 1908. It is the purpose of this Conference to bring to the attention of the students of North America the message of the Bible to individual and national life, and to indicate methods to make daily study of the Bible a life habit.

—MR. ERNEST FOX of Stockton, Calif., writes: "There are fourteen corporations in California formed for the purpose of establishing substitutes for the saloon. The people of Stockton organized the Stockton Coffee Club less than two years ago and invested not quite $1,300; opened for business February 13, 1907, saved up in cash from the profits of the lunch department during the first thirteen months a little over $1,300 (13 seems to be lucky). They then took a larger room, and already the place is so crowded daily that it will have to be enlarged again."

Very Beautiful Pictures

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Allow me to thank you for the three photogravures sent me recently. I am delighted with them, and expect to frame them, as they certainly are beautiful.
Washington, D. C. MRS. S. L. COOPER.

Victor The Fireside Theatre

Improved Victor I with new flower horn

$25

Other styles

$10 to $300

You owe it to yourself to hear the Victor. The very next time you pass a Victor dealer's, stop in and he will gladly play any Victor music you want to hear.

Write to us for catalogues.

Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N. J., U. S. A.

Berliner Gramophone Co., Montreal, Canadian Distributors

A complete list of new Victor Records for October will be found in the October number of Munsey's, Scribner's, McClure's, Century and Everybody's; and November Cosmopolitan.

YOU need never worry about your boy's company when he is chumming with

The American Boy

It is supported by able contributors, Fascinating articles and fine pictures; departments of Photography—Collecting—Mechanics—Electricity—Sports, make this the cleanest, brightest publication for boys, inspiring higher and nobler ideals.

Send $1.00 to-day and get this valuable periodical for a year—12 big books of highest-class reading. Sample copy, 10c.

SPRAGUE PUBLISHING CO., 52 MAJESTIC BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.

CONFIDENCE WARRANTED

5% ASSURED.

Favorable location, experience and ample resources enable us to loan money on the best real estate security, and pay 5 PER CENT PER YEAR on all small sums invested through us. Our investors send us $25—$50—$100 or more at a time. They may leave it with us for a few months or for a few years. They receive 5 per cent per annum regularly by check, reckoned from the day we receive the capital to the day they withdraw it. We number our patrons by thousands, and they are in every State of the Union.

Write us and we will give you the names of those nearest to you who permit us to refer to them. Fifteen years of successful operation.

Assets of $1,800,000 and regular supervision by the New York Banking Department warrant your confidence.

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, New York

PIANO PERPLEXITY

Don't be defrauded. If you don't know which piano to buy consult

The Piano and Organ Purchaser's Guide

It tells you all about every legitimate piano. It is by John C. Freund, Editor of "The Music Trades." His opinion is absolutely impartial and he knows.

(226 pages—25 cents by mail, prepaid)

The Music Trades Co., Dept. D, 135 Fifth Ave., N. Y. City

BLMYER BELL

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

$100 EACH EARN

$1,000 6%

$10,000 GUARANTEED

Payable Every Six Months

Ask for Booklet 14, to-day

New York Realty Owners Company
489 Fifth Avenue, New York City

ASSETS OVER $2,500,000.00

A Fine Lyon & Healy Organ, $1⁰⁰ a Week

Think of the pleasure and satisfaction you would get from owning one of these beautiful instruments. Possess a far sweeter tone quality than other makes, as countless testimonials received during the past 45 years amply attest. Write for our new illustrated catalog today.

LYON & HEALY,
70 Adams Street, Chicago

ARMY Auction Bargains

Tents - $1.90 up	Old Pistols - $50 up
Shoes - 1.25 "	Officers' Swords, new 1.75 "
ARMY SADDLES 3.00 "	Cavalry Sabres " 1.50 "
" Bridles - 1.00 "	Uniforms " 1.25 "
" Leggings, pr. 15 "	7 Shot Carbine " 3.50 "

1907 MILITARY CATALOGUE, 260 large pages, containing thousands of beautiful illustrations with 1908 supplement, wholesale and retail prices. Mailed for 15 cents (stamp). 15 ACRES GOVT. AUCTION GOODS.

FRANCIS BANNERMAN, 501 Broadway, New York

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Built strong, chicken-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue free.

COILED SPRING FENCE CO.,
Box 47 Winchester, Indiana.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES

Church Building*

TO THE great surprise of the handful of faithful Christians who were trying to revive a church in an old and shabby neighborhood, a rich brewer in the county town twenty miles away sent them a handsome check.

They had made no appeal to him. They knew that he was not a Christian man. One of them decided to acknowledge the check in person, and at the same time ask him what had prompted him to send it.

"I happen to own three houses and considerable land in your village," said the brewer, "and property has been declining in value there for the last ten years. I heard that you were trying to build a church up there. I don't care at all for the church, but I do know that my property will rise in value if you get one to going. Don't thank me. I am perfectly selfish in the matter."

The good brother seized the opportunity and tried to reason with the brewer that if a church was such a benefit to a community, every patriot and man of honor should join it, and throw all his personal influence for it. But the brewer only laughed. The spiritual side of the subject did not appeal to him, and the prayers of the little church are still rising that God may soften the hardened heart of their benefactor.

It seems inconceivable that in the face of such testimony any good citizen should fail to unite with a church, and throw all his influence for it, and try in every way to live up to its requirements. No reasonable man will deny that any place without a church is likely to deteriorate fast. Hundreds of instances can be given to prove it. Almost anyone can mention several which have come under his own observation—and yet some of these very people do not often enter the house of God, and never give a cent for its maintenance.

Think of what our cities would be without our churches! Everyone who passes one must feel, if he can think at all, that here is something which stands for the betterment of mankind. It almost seems as though one should doff his hat as he goes by. No other class of buildings stand for man's spiritual improvement. The churches, faulty as we all know that they are, are the best earthly expression that we have of the aspiration of humanity toward divinity. They should be the dearest things on earth to us.

It is said that a portable church seating three hundred people can be put up for $1,500. This can be used until a permanent edifice can be erected, and should be invaluable in pioneer or other sparsely settled communities. Get a church of some sort in your place as soon as you possibly can.

A church costing $13,000 has just been built in a Western city. There are only fifty members, but every cent was paid before it was dedicated. Some one asked who had given the most. The reply was "Mrs. W." "Why, she is a washerwoman. She cannot make more than five or six dollars a week, and she has a family to support." "Very true, but she gave $27 toward our church—it was every cent that she had—the widow's mite."

That church will live and flourish. In another Western town, a little church, which had grown unsightly, has just been painted and refitted by its women, nearly all of them very poor. They all had gardens, and by raising flowers and vegetables to sell to the large towns a few miles away, they raised unaided the necessary money. Their song is "I love thy church, O God, the house of thine abode"—and they will be blessed.

Missions and Evangelism*

THE custom of talking about religion in general society has greatly declined within the past fifty years. This is taken by some to mean that the power of religion in society is less. The most experienced and candid observers in the church unite in disputing this saying. Statistics show that the average members of the churches have normally increased during the last ten years, and every newspaper tells of good deeds, which, whether done in the name of Christ or not, testify to the influence of his spirit.

In former times, the only schools, hospitals and asylums were maintained by private citizens, or by the churches. Thus the love and pity for humanity which indicate the feeling of brotherhood, was demonstrated only in rare individual cases, or distinctively as an accompaniment of religion. Now, in every civilized country, such institutions are supported by the general government. Church and State are no longer necessarily united, but the spirit of the church—the holy spirit of love and tenderness—dominates civil government as it never has done before.

If Paul had been told that the day would come when every citizen in many great nations would gladly submit to be taxed for the support of public schools, public hospitals, public almshouses, public orphan asylums, and many other charities, he would never have believed it. In fact, he would have found it hard to credit the prophecy that a great nation could be governed by majorities, every man having a vote.

It is only the Gospel of Christ Jesus which has made possible all these gigantic forward steps in civilization.

Within the memory of those now living there was held in a small hill town of Western Massachusetts a trial for heresy. The minister there had been accused of Arminianism, of unsoundness upon the subjects of the atonement, election, a state of future probation, and various other theological tenets. Every clergyman of the denomination in the county was present. The fifty or sixty cottages in the village were crowded to their utmost capacity by visitors. In addition to these, every fence in the vicinity was black with the teams which were hitched along their whole extent—and this kept up for three whole days, with morning, afternoon and evening sessions. The large meeting house was full to its limit. It was in the summertime, and in the open windows were seated rows of excited spectators.

Such general interest in such a heresy trial would now be impossible. Such talk would now never be heard among our farmers, but are we to infer from this that men are less religious?

The men of those days, for the most part, were habitual drinkers of strong liquors. There is far too much intemperance to-day, but it is nothing like as general as in the olden time. Christ is working differently, but more widely and deeply than ever before; and his martyrs and his missionaries are laboring and suffering for him as nobly as in the apostolic days. Read the history of the Boxer rebellion. Read the wonderful Life of Paton and of Livingston, and resolve to help by every means in your power, the fearless and devoted men and women who are following in their footsteps.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, November 8. Missionary and Evangelistic Zeal. Text: Matt. 22: 1-10.

AMUSING and INSTRUCTIVE

Run Toys, Fun for Boys.

Three sizes, prices, $1 and $1.25. Any good Dry Battery will run them for days. Send for FREE Catalogue T 24; 168 pages. 1,000 electrical specialties with net prices.

Manhattan Electrical Supply Co.

100 Fifth Avenue, New York City

PAINTS
ENAMELS
THE ACME QUALITY
STAINS VARNISHES KIND

Paint the Kitchen Floor

You can't "touch up" the worn places in oil-cloth or linoleum—when it's worn, it's worn out and that means an entire new covering.

A painted floor is as bright and cheery as any floor covering—cleans more easily—does not show grease spots. Can be renewed anywhere and any time and costs practically nothing in comparison.

Granite Floor Paint

ACME QUALITY

is all ready to brush on—anyone can apply it evenly and smoothly. It makes a hard, durable, lustrous finish that cleans easily and remains bright and attractive.

The Acme Quality Textbook on Paints and Finishes tells all about Granite Floor Paint and many other finishes for use about the home. It is invaluable as a permanent reference book, for it tells what finish to use for every purpose, how to prepare the surfaces, whether new or old, and how to apply. This book will be sent free upon request.

If you are thinking of painting the outside of your house ask your painter about Acme Quality New Era Paints.

Acme Quality Paints and Finishes for sale by leading dealers.

Complete catalogue, and details of our selling helps for retail dealers, on request.

ACME WHITE LEAD & COLOR WORKS,
Dept. O, Detroit, Mich.
IN DETROIT—Life is Worth Living

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure

The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles outlives agents.

V.C. Gleason, Colo., O., sold 22 pairs of Positive Tension Shears in 3 hours, made $13.50. We guarantee TO SHOW ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $3 to $10 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents than are not found in stores, than any other house in the U. S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address: Thomas Mfg. Co., 165 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio

BANK DEPOSITS Guaranteed

by STATE of OKLAHOMA Guaranty Fund. Your money absolutely safe. We pay 4% on deposits. Draw your money any time. Largest State Bank in Okla. Capital $200,000. Write for booklet K. We sell 6% School, County and City Bonds.

OKLAHOMA TRUST CO., Muskogee, Okla.

WE Pay You 6% interest on $100 deposits and 5% on smaller sums.

$2,000,000 Approved First Mortgages, held in trust for your Security. 18 years in business—not a dollar loss to depositors. Write for "The Sulky Dollar"—it tells our 6% plan; it's interesting.

GEORGIA STATE SAVINGS ASSN.,
 160 York Street, Savannah, Ga.

LAWN FENCE

Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries. Coiled Spring Fence Co. Box D Winchester Ind.

Memory the Basis of All Knowledge

Stop Forgetting

You are no greater intellectual than your memory. Easy, increase income; gives ready memory for faces, names, business, studies, conversation, develops will, public speaking.

Write to-day
DICKSON MEMORY SCHOOL, 701 Auditorium Bldg., Chicago

"Jubilee Year" of Page Fence

Page Fence is woven just the same today as 25 years ago. A real triple knot—not a simple twist! Steel of double the tensile strength and elasticity of common fence wire.

Page Catalog—"Jubilee Edition"—SENT FREE
Page Woven Wire Fence Co., Adrian, Michigan

THE BEST LIGHT

Makes and burns its own gas and produces a pure white, steady safe, 100 candle power light. No wick, smoke, dirt, grease or odor.

Lighted instantly. Over 200 styles Agents wanted. Write for catalog.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.,
 3-79 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

DEATH TO HEAVES

Guaranteed

NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A veterinary Remedy for wind, throat and stomach troubles. Strongly recommended. $1.00 per can, of dealers, or exp. prepaid. The Newton Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

Hunyadi János

FOR CONSTIPATION

YOU CAN AFFORD

The Natural Laxative Mineral Water. Nature's own way of cleansing the body is most simple. She provides a pure and wholesome Mineral water as a laxative and health tonic. Keep yourself in healthy condition by drinking half a glass on arising in the morning.

to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

*Topic of the Fourth League for Sunday, November 8. Text: Luke 7: 1-17; 1 Chron. 22: 1-5.

A King's Strange Headdress

KASAGAMA is king of Toro, one of the native kingdoms of the Uganda Protectorate, Africa. Like many other rulers, he is not content with one coronation. His father used to be crowned once a month; he decided to be crowned once a year. The first of Kasagama's coronations was held at Kabarole. During the ceremony the king, who is clean-shaven, wore a long white beard made from the hair of Colobus monkeys, and intended to represent the mane of a lion and to typify the strength and position of the wearer. The photograph above was taken by Lieut.-Colonel R. G. T. Bright, British Commissioner in connection with the disputed frontier between Great Britain and the Congo Free State. The king's crown of colored beads and parrot-feathers (a native custom) was placed upon his head by a clergyman of the Church Missionary Society, the dusky monarch being a nominal Christian.

A Strange Royal Headdress

David Grieves for Absalom

By MRS. M. BAXTER

DAVID was now placed in a position that he would rather have died than occupy; he was at war with his own son! He divided his forces into three companies, and placed them under the leadership of his two nephews, Joab and Abishai, joined with the devoted Ittai, the Gittite, who had left all for his sake. David's first thought was to go forth in person to the battle, but the united people would not hear of it. Standing by the gate-side in Mahanaim, as the hosts defiled slowly through the gate by hundreds and by thousands, he watched for the generals, and said to each one in succession, as they passed: "Deal gently for my sake, with the young man, even with Absalom." It was an unwonted thing with David to ask anything for his own sake.

The armies joined battle in the wood of Ephraim, and, as was so often the case with his people of old, God gave victory to the weaker side: "The people of Israel were slain before the servants of David, and the wood devoured more people that day than the sword devoured." God's judgment upon Absalom was a singular and marked one. In going forth to meet the servants of David, he rode upon a mule under the thick boughs of a great oak, and his hair caught hold of the oak, and he was taken up between the heaven and the earth, and the mule that was under him went away.

A man saw it happen, and told Joab. "And, behold, thou sawest him," said the general. "And why didst thou not smite him there to the ground? And I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle." And the man replied that a thousand shekels would not have tempted him to slay Absalom, because of the king's charge concerning him. Joab was not so much a man of words as of deeds—firm, energetic, decided. Possessing, as he did, a power over the king which no other had, he took the law into his own hands, and dismissing the man with the characteristic words: "I may not tarry thus with thee. . . . He took three darts in his hand, and thrust them through the heart of Absalom." Then he blew a trumpet, and gave orders that the people should not pursue after Israel. Now the chief rebel was dead, the rebellion could not live. His corpse was cast into a great pit in the wood, and a great heap of stones was laid upon it.

Ahimaz and Cushi bore the news to David. Ahimaz, who arrived first, had not the courage to say all he knew; he said nothing of Absalom's death, but answered that when he left the camp there was a great tumult, but he knew not what it was. When Cushi arrived he was asked the same question: "Is the young man Absalom safe?" And he answered: "The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is." The truth was out; David's last hope for his son was gone: Absalom was dead! In time and in eternity, he would never more see Absalom. Crushing grief overwhelmed the king. "I will raise up evil against thee out of thine own house."

How terribly, how continually, the word of God comes true! And then there came no doubt the bitter reflection that had it not been for his own sin, things would not have come to this pass, and, may be, he saw himself more guilty than his son, and counted himself the murderer of that idol of his heart. We may be selfish in sorrow, as much as in anything else. David was selfish in his sorrow; he forgot all in his bitter grief, and in his thoughts of Absalom. "It was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth for Absalom." If anyone could arouse David, it was he. Meanwhile, victory had been given by God; but the victory, instead of bringing forth praises from king and people, "was turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard say that day how the king was grieved for his son." Some of them had lost sons, too, and better ones than Absalom; but they had given their lives for the king, and now, instead of showing gratitude, he was yielding to his selfish grief. It was discouraging to the people, who had sacrificed a good deal to take up David's cause. Joab broke in upon the king's agony of grief, with a stern, startling reproach.

If you enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, your friends may do the same. Please tell them about it.

What Will You Give To Be Well

I CANNOT tell you how happy I am that I have been able to bring health and strength to 30,000 women in the past six years. Just think! this means a whole city. It is to my thorough study of anatomy, physiology and health principles, and to my 12 years' personal experience before I began my instructions by mail, that I attribute my marvelous success. It would do your heart good to read the reports from my pupils—and I have done all this by simply studying Nature's laws adapted to the correction of each individual difficulty. If vital organs or nerve centers are weak, I strengthen them so that each organ does its work.

To Have Good Figure, Vibrant Health, Rested Nerves?

I want to help every woman to be perfectly, gloriously well, with that sweet, personal loveliness which health and a wholesome, graceful body gives—a cultured, self-reliant woman with a definite purpose, full of the health and vivacity which makes you

I bring each pupil to symmetrical proportions and I teach her to stand and to walk in an attitude which bespeaks culture and refinement. A good figure, gracefully carried, means more than a pretty face. Nature's rosy cheeks are more beautiful than paint or powder. I help you to

A Better Wife A Rested Mother A Sweeter Sweetheart

You can easily remove the fat and it will stay removed. I have reduced 15,000 women.

One pupil writes me: "Miss Cocroft, I have reduced 78 pounds and I look 15 years younger. I feel so well I want to shout! I never get out of breath now."

"When I began I was rheumatic and constipated, my heart was weak and my head dull, and oh dear, I am ashamed when I think how I used to look! I never dreamed it was all so easy, I thought I just had to be fat. I feel like stopping every fat woman I see and telling her of you."

Too Thin? I may need to strengthen your stomach, intestines and nerves first. A pupil who was thin, writes me:

"I just can't tell you how happy I am. I am so proud of my neck and arms! My busts are rounded out and I have gained 28 pounds; it has come just where I wanted it and I carry myself like another woman."

"My old dresses look stylish on me now. I have not been constipated since my second lesson and I had taken something for years. My liver seems to be all right and I haven't a bit of indigestion any more, for I sleep like a baby and my nerves are so rested. I feel so well all the time."

Write me today telling me your faults in health or figure, and I will cheerfully tell you whether I can help you. I never treat a patient I cannot help. If I cannot help you I will refer you to the help you need. Send me 10 cents for instructive booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly. SUSANNA COCROFT, Dept. 18, 57 Washington Street, CHICAGO Author of "Growth in Silence," "Character as Expressed in the Body," Etc.

Miss Cocroft's name stands for progress in the scientific care of the health and figure of woman.

LITTLE BEAUTY NIGHT LAMP

Once filled with kerosene it will burn for 40 hours and is absolutely odorless. Ornamental, too, because handsomely constructed of brass, nickel-plated, and each lamp is provided with enough wick to last several years. The lamp can be used in entries, hallways, closets, and is invaluable for Nursery and Sickroom.

Ask your dealer or by mail (post-paid) 65 cents. Agents wanted.

65c. SILVER & COMPANY Sole Mfrs. 320 Hewes St., Brooklyn, N.Y. Trade-Mark Registered, U.S. Patent Office

LOOKING AHEAD?

If so, take advantage of to-day's opportunities for the merchant, farmer, fruit grower and business man along the Pacific Coast Extension of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway Descriptive Books Free. F. A. Miller, G. P. A., Chicago

FROM OUR FACTORY TO YOUR HOME

$5 to $20 Saved

We are stove makers, make every part of every stove we sell, complete, in our own factory, and then, instead of paying expensive salesmen and dealing with you through agents or retailers, we sell to you direct, saving you $5.00 to $20.00 on every stove.

Gold Coin Stoves and Ranges have been standard highest grade for half a century, and number their friends by thousands. Made for highest service at lowest cost with greatest economy of fuel, and they are great labor savers as well, having every attachment for the saving of time, of steps and of work in keeping up fire and cleaning.

GOLD COIN STOVE CO.

Freight Paid Sold at Wholesale Prices

—the same price your dealer pays for them.

GOLD COIN

Stoves and Ranges

One Year's Trial

We polish your stove ready for use, insure safe delivery, prepay freight to your station, and after one whole year's trial refund all your money and take the stove back at our expense if you are not satisfied with it. We make this offer as a Written Guarantee that goes with every stove. Send for which gives information about stoves, chimneys, drafts, etc., and includes complete price list with written guarantee. Send for it before you buy any stove.

Free Illustrated Stove Book

Successor to Bussey & McLeod Established 1860

11 Oakwood Av., Troy, N.Y.

ONE THOUSAND PAGES OF INSTRUCTIVE AND INSPIRATIONAL READING

Record of Christian Work

A MONTHLY REVIEW OF RELIGIOUS THOUGHT AND ACTIVITY

10 CENTS SINGLE COPY

$1.00 A YEAR

Founded in 1881 by D. L. Moody

EDITED BY
W. R. MOODY
E. Northfield, Mass.

Rev. F. B. Meyer

Mr. Robert E. Speer

Rev. G. A. Johnston Ross

TO welcome to your home circle some deeply taught Bible Scholar would be a privilege hundreds of thousands of Christians would deeply esteem. Of course this would be an impossibility in most cases. But the next best privilege is within the reach of all, to receive the inspiration and Bible instruction of their messages each month in the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK.

This means having visits from the best writers and teachers in the Christian world for less than two cents a week.

EACH MONTH 30,000 COPIES OF THE RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK GO OUT TO THE BEST HOMES IN AMERICA AS WELL AS TO THE UTTERMOST PARTS OF THE WORLD. In return there come testimonials to the inspiration, Bible instruction, and evangelistic and missionary information which it brings.

As a magazine FOR THE CHRISTIAN HOME the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK STANDS ALONE. Each issue is full of interest to all the members of the Family Circle. Sunday School lessons, Christian Endeavor studies, Bible Notes for Daily Devotions, Thoughts for the Quiet Hour, among other departments, indicate the scope of the magazine. Every need represented by the Christian Home is in the thought of the editor.

THE SUBSCRIPTION PRICE IS WITHIN REACH OF ALL. FOR ONE DOLLAR A YEAR ALL THIS WEALTH OF READING IS PROVIDED. This is less than two cents a week, which is a modest sum.

AMONG THE CONTRIBUTORS FOR 1909 ARE:

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN
REV. F. B. MEYER
ROBERT E. SPEER
JOHN R. MOTT
REV. JOHN DOUGLAS ADAM
REV. J. STUART HOLDEN

CHARLES M. ALEXANDER
REV. LEN G. BROUGHTON
REV. G. A. JOHNSTON ROSS
REV. J. H. JOWETT
REV. A. T. PIERSON
And many others of world-wide repute.

Of special interest to those who are engaged in evangelistic work will be Mr. Charles M. Alexander's monthly contribution of a new hymn during 1909.

Next to attending the Northfield Conferences and Summer Schools the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK is the best means of enjoying these gatherings. The leading addresses are reported at length, appearing in the double Conference numbers in September and October, as well as in the succeeding issues of the year.

Rev. G. Campbell Morgan

Mr. John R. Mott

Rev. J. H. Jowett

TESTIMONY OF READERS

Hon. John Wanamaker.—"The RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK I believe to be the best of its kind, at this time, published in America or Europe."

Dr. Wilton Meale Smith.—"The Record is splendid. I have taken it ever since 1887, and I am getting more out of it today than ever before."

Dr. A. T. Pierson.—"For one dollar a year, it is, as our English friends say, 'far and away' ahead of any other dollar magazine."

Mrs. Russell Sage.—"The secretary of Mrs. Russell Sage says that 'Mrs. Sage's acquaintance with the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK first began in 1881, when Mr. Dwight L. Moody, with a copy in his hand, told her about it. Since then, for twenty-five years, it has been her daily reading.'

Mr. C. G. Trumbull, Editor SUNDAY-SCHOOL TIMES.—"No periodical that I know of enables a reader to come into touch with the thought and messages of such leading and representative preachers and religious teachers and workers of Great Britain and America as well as does the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK."

Dr. J. R. Miller.—"The RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK is one of the periodicals that I read from beginning to end. It certainly has a place, and fills its place well."

Mr. John Willis Baer.—"Without the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK my life would be incomplete. In a peculiar way I find it a publication that is constantly at my hand. I have many good magazines, which I read with pleasure and profit, but they are not referred to often after the first reading. I find the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK a necessity in my life, and its departments are strong."

Dr. D. M. Stearns.—"I think it is not saying too much to say that every Christian who wants to become an earnest worker should receive the RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK."

Mr. John R. Mott.—"In my journeys in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America and even in Australasia as well as on this continent, I have been greatly pleased to find the very helpful influence of this periodical. It has stimulated the work of evangelism; it has quickened interest in Bible study; it has prompted a higher grade of expository preaching; it has accomplished not a little in guiding the reading of Christian workers; it has strengthened the hands of every good missionary work."

Rev. Henry Varley.—"It has the right ring of genuine coin about it, nay through and through real bell metal, fresh from the evangelical fires. I am profoundly thankful for the clear steering from the shallows of criticism into the limpid clearness of the deep things of God."

RECORD OF CHRISTIAN WORK, - - EAST NORTHFIELD, MASS.

SAMPLE COPY WILL BE SENT ON REQUEST

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Drawn from Photographs

SEE PAGE 872

The Wright American Aeroplane Making a Test Flight at Fort Myer, Va.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

E. H. W., Bergholz, O. 1. Were the nine lepers who returned not to give God thanks lost, or what became of them? 2. What became of the young man to whom Jesus said, "Go sell that thou hast and give to the poor?" (Matt. 19: 21.)

1. They were cleansed, but were ungrateful and went away, probably to their homes, failing to render that tribute of gratitude to God which the Samaritan leper gave. Jesus notes this with sorrow and lays stress upon the fact that the grateful one was a stranger. 2. The appeal to him was in vain, as we gather from verses 24 to 30. The incident is emphasized to show how riches corrode the heart and obscure the spiritual understanding. Mark says, "he went away grieved."

Mrs. R. W. W., Dunkirk, Ind. 1. There were many other so-called sacred books besides those that are now contained in the Scriptures, but they were excluded by the highest authorities in the Christian church at various times for the reason that they were apocryphal or of doubtful authenticity. 2 and 3. Moses was the law-giver, and the first five books of the Bible contain the history and the laws, spiritual and secular, which he gave to the Hebrew race. The subject is too extensive to be disposed of in a MAIL-BAG paragraph. Procure Smith & Peloubet's Bible Dictionary. See Gal. 2: 16; II. Tim. 1: 9; Isa. 64: 6; Matt. 5: 20, and other passages showing that mere morality cannot save.

Mrs. D. C., Denham Springs, La. 1. Who wrote the Stabat Mater? Was its author Bernard of Cluny? 2. What was the corn mentioned in the Book of Genesis? Was it maize or wheat? 3. Is it true that Christopher Columbus found maize growing on the American continent?

1. The authorship of Stabat Mater is disputed. Pope Innocent II., one of the Gregories, Pope John XXII. and Bernard have each been credited with it. The church historian, Wadding, says the author was Giacomo da Todi (otherwise known as Giacomone de Benedetti of Umbria, Italy). 2. The word "corn" is used in many places in the Bible to signify not maize, but grain of any kind. 3. Yes; he found Indian corn, which certain tribes called Ma-hiz. It is indigenous to this continent.

C. W. W., Richfield, Pa. When were postage stamps invented?

They came into use in England in 1840, and in this country in 1847.

F. M. D., St. Louis, Mo. Was Joshua, son of Nun, a born Israelite, or was he an adopted Israelite? If born, of what tribe? If adopted, of what people?

He was an Israelite of the tribe of Ephraim. His name was originally Hoshea (see Num. 13: 8), and its alteration by Moses (see Num. 13: 16) was significant. According to the Jewish Tsamach David, Joshua was born in Egypt in the Jewish year 2406. He grew up a slave in the brickfields. He was about forty years old at the Exodus.

I. J. P., Dawson, Ga. 1. Does the Bible or other historical record state that the gift of tongues was retained until death by the apostles? Have we any authentic history that mentions this gift as being given after the end of the first century? 2. How much is a talent of gold and a talent of silver worth of our money; also the value of a shekel of gold?

1. The endowment of the "gift of tongues" was apparently continued to the Christians during the apostolic age. Jesus before his ascension breathed upon his disciples and said, "Receive ye the Holy Ghost." Fifty days after the crucifixion, the disciples received special power, when the Holy Ghost came upon them. It was to be a sign—to belong to only a few—the apostles and evangelists—and with this gift they went forth to preach to the nations. Later, Paul wrote that he "spoke with tongues more than all." In I. Cor. 13: 8, however, we see that "tongues" were already ceasing, as belonging to the past. Many times since then the question has arisen whether the gift of tongues was continued to succeeding generations. The attitude of the early church, neither to quench nor forbid them (see I. Thess. 5: 19), yet not to invite or excite them, was a safe one. If they were of God, the fact would make itself apparent; if they were simply hysterical jargon, they would quickly subside. Throughout church history, there were many spurious instances. The "gift" gradually disappeared. Irenaeus wrote of some in his time who spoke with tongues, but Eusebius hardly referred to the subject, and Chrysostom mentions it only to discourage what he considered as an ecstatic indulgence of doubtful spiritual profit. 2. According to Rev. O. C. Whitehouse, professor of Hebrew, London, a talent of gold was equal in value to $28,800; talent of silver, $1,920; shekel of gold, $9.60; shekel of silver, 64 cents. These are Old Testament values.

A. A. C., Ayrshire, Ind. Last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD spoke of the Catholic Congress in England and the attempt to carry the monstrance or host in procession. What is the origin of this image?

The monstrance is not an image, but a vessel used for the preservation of relics, and more especially for the carrying of the "consecrated host" (the name given by the Catholic Church continually finding fault with another unreasonably, is not serving the Lord but simply nursing his own pride and selfrighteousness. Humility is as necessary in the helper as in the person helped. He that would be the greatest must be the servant of all.

F. A. R., Lupton, Mich. What causes the wind to blow?

The following is the scientific explanation usually given: "Winds are due to the tendency of air to pass from a place of higher to one of lower pressure, as along the earth's surface toward a place where the heat of the sun has caused an ascending current." Send your other query to the Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C.

Selling Amulets and Distributing Tea in St. Petersburg, as Cholera Preventives

IN St. Petersburg, in combating the pestilence, the authorities find their difficulties immensely increased by the ignorance and superstition of the lower classes, who trust rather to the virtues of charms and amulets than to preventive measures. Belts made of old copper coins rusted green are considered particularly efficacious and command a large sale. By order of the Governor a free distribution of hot tea is now being made in all the streets where the poor reside, to discourage them from drinking contaminated water.

to the bread or wafers used in the celebration of the eucharist or sacrament). This "host" or wafer is unleavened, flat, thin and usually of circular form, with emblematic devices of the crucifixion, the Lamb, or some words or initials referring to the sacrifice. This is placed in the monstrance, which is then presented for the adoration or worship of the people. The monstrance is made like a tower of crystal, of cylindrical form, and mounted like a chalice. It came into public use about the fourteenth century. It is really a movable shrine for the sacrament, and is not to be touched by unconsecrated hands. When it is lifted up ("elevating the host") the people bow in a fashion which Luther declared to be "insulting and dishonoring to the Holy Sacrament," making it an object of idolatry.

J. F., Corsica, S. D. Your friend does right when he tries to help you and give you counsel, but he does wrong to condemn you. Judgment belongs to God alone. Do your best and pray for strength to do right. He who is con-

G. N. H., Fountain City, Ind. This particular passage (I. Sam. 6: 19) has occasioned much discussion. It is claimed by some very eminent commentators that the numeral has been misplaced or erroneously transcribed. The Syriac and Arabic versions have 5,070 instead of 50,070, but even this number for a small town like Bethshemesh, would be large. The latest conclusion of the commentators is that the number originally designated was 570. [Your other question has already been answered in THE MAIL-BAG.]

K. B., Maysville, W. Va. What does the Salvation Army's work chiefly consist of? If a poor person joins is he employed in working for it, and also provided with clothing and necessities, or does he have to earn his necessities by working in a different way?

The foregoing has been submitted to the editor of the Salvation Army paper, the War Cry, who answers as follows: "The Salvation Army has as its mission the evangelization of the world. Its flag flies in almost every country, including America (North and South), Canada, Alaska, the British Isles, France, Switzerland, Holland, Belgium, Italy, Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Iceland, Finland, Australia and New Zealand, South Africa, Java, the British West Indies, India and Ceylon, Japan, Korea, etc. The work is on the point of being opened up in Russia, Mexico, Egypt and Austria-Hungary. Its work is both spiritual and social; that is to say, it combines with its strictly spiritual ministrations a greater care for the temporal conditions of humanity than the average denomination, its special works of mercy and care including industrial homes; colonies, orphanages, rescue homes, slum posts, settlement houses, workmen's hotels, dispensaries, etc. When a person wishes to "join the Army," he must give satisfactory evidences of change of heart and be willing to sign the "Articles of War," which bind him to a thorough consecration of his spare time and effort to the work of rescuing others. He will work at his usual avocation in the daytime, precisely similar to the ordinary church member, his services after working hours and on Sundays being given as a freewill offering."

J. L., South Sharon, Pa. Will you tell an old resident of Bristol, England, something about Bristol Cathedral; its founder, etc.?

The cathedral is on the site of an old Augustinian monastery which was founded by Robert Fitzharding in 1142. It is not known who was the designer of the edifice. Much of the present cathedral retains a good part of the walls of the old abbey. The present nave and towers were not completed until 1888. The nave cost over 40,000 pounds. The abbot's gateway, with its sculptured mouldings, the vestibule of the chapter room, and the chapter room with its Byzantine carvings are in perfect condition and the latter is called the finest Norman room in Europe. The geometrical east window and the holy chapel are noteworthy. The building contains many tombs of knights and abbots on which lie their effigies. Get The Little Red Book of Bristol, by Buckley, published in 1901, or Hunt's Bristol, 1887.

Miscellaneous

L. D. R., East Thompson, Conn. It is a lottery, and all lotteries are gambling.

H. S. M., St. Clair, Mo. The churches you mention do not accept the divinity of Christ.

Reader, Durham, N. C. None reliable that we know of, although there are many nostrums.

W. G., Pittsfield, Mass. As far as known, Paine did not change his belief before his death.

Mrs. A. B. B., Greenburg, Pa. Yes; he meant that it could be justifiable on no other grounds whatsoever.

Mrs. H. H. C., Muir, Mich. David, when anointed, was a mere lad, probably under twenty. There are no data given whereby his exact age may be ascertained.

Mrs. F. B. S., Malden, Mass., writes concerning Judas and the Lord's Supper: "I have taught for more than thirty years that Judas did not partake of it. See John 13: 30."

H. W. H. J., Somerville, Tenn. We have made a careful search for the information, but have been unable to secure it. Write to the Navy Department. They might have the records.

R. W. F., Faber, Va. They have long since ceased to make comparisons. The North thinks very highly of Lee and Jackson. To-day the feeling is that of one family, one equal brotherhood, one national interest and destiny.

J. G. R., Owingsburg, Pa. The account of automatic brakes upon which our item was based did not indicate the name of the patentee. You could write to any leading railroad man in Chicago, and, we think, find the information you desire.

J. D. B., Des Moines, Ia. The questions you ask concerning the new language you will find fully discussed in the Esperanto Student, published at Rutherford, N. J. Price 50 cents yearly. We cannot answer detailed Esperanto letters in these columns.

A Beautiful Picture

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Allow me to express my sincere thanks for the beautiful picture, "Martha Washington's Reception," which you so kindly sent me a few days ago. This is one of the most beautiful premiums THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has ever sent out. I consider myself fortunate to secure a copy.

MRS. G. E. MURRELL.
Rogersville, Tenn.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Port of Haidar Pasha, Terminus of Bagdad Railway

A Mosque Near Bagdad

Caravans Bringing Freight to the New Mecca Railway

THE SULTAN'S RAILWAY TO MECCA

By CHARLES M. PEPPER

SOME things in the Sultan's dominions are given more importance by those who understand intricate Turkish politics than concessions of parliamentary government which may be withdrawn. Among these things are schools for the Mohammedan women and railway building. There are now many schools in which the Turkish women can secure at least the rudiments of an education. While it is not admitted, it is the demand of the women themselves that has secured these schools, and their demand has been due to the knowledge which has reached them of the superior position occupied by women at the present day in many Christian countries, who are not denied school advantages.

Railway progress is a more material subject, though its motive is religious, even fanatical. Not long ago Consul Harris reported from Smyrna very important steps taken by the Turkish government to further railway progress. The Bagdad Railway was authorized to proceed with building what is known as the Eregli extension. This will be in four sections covering in all 525 miles and when completed it will mean that the chief obstacles in getting a railroad to Bagdad will have vanished.

But there is wider meaning, for as the Bagdad line progresses Turkey in Asia is brought into direct communication with not only Turkey in Europe but with Christian Europe. The Bagdad line really starts at Constantinople, which is on the European mainland. The railway stations and shops are at Haidar-Pasha, opposite Constantinople, and in time trains will be ferried across the arm of the Golden Horn. At present through trains run from Paris and Ostend by way of Vienna to Constantinople, the Orient Express being something like the luxurious trains which run regularly between New York and San Francisco.

The railway may be taken now at either Haidar-Pasha or at Smyrna and the journey made to Koniah. It is to Koniah that the German syndicate, which is furnishing the capital, intends to extend the line on toward Bagdad. The 525 miles which have just been authorized traverse a very historic region. It is also a very difficult region for railway building, since the Taurus Mountains have to be surmounted and penetrated, and in getting through them there will be fifty-six miles of tunnels, viaducts and bridges. When they are surmounted the Ghiaour-

Dagh ranges will have to be conquered, and they will call for twenty-five miles more of tunneling, bridging and viaducting. But when this is done Tel-Habesch will be reached, from which point the prolongation will be made across the Euphrates River toward Bagdad.

When the road gets as far as Tel-Habesch it will be an epoch, for it will mean that people can travel by railway from Paris or Berlin to Mecca, the capital of Islam, the city forbidden to Christians. Tel-Habesch is only thirty-seven miles north of Aleppo in Syria, and it is to be connected with Aleppo by a branch line. There is already a railway from Aleppo to Damascus and from Damascus what is called the Holy Railway, or the Pilgrim Line, has been built nine hundred miles across the plains of Hauran, past the ruined rock city of Petra, and through the Arabian desert to Medina, which is less than 300 miles from Mecca. It is certain that the extension will be made from Medina to Mecca before the Bagdad Railway reaches Tel-Habesch from Koniah.

Mohammedan pilgrims from Turkey in Europe do not need to wait the completion of the line to Tel-Habesch and Aleppo. Instead they sail from Constantinople either to Beirut, where they take the railway across Mt. Lebanon to Damascus, or they disembark at the little port of Haifa under the shadow of Mt. Carmel and take the line along the Sea of Tiberias and across the Jordan to the plains of Hauran, the junction with the Damascus line being formed at De'era. From De'era there is the main trunk straight to Medina. Most of the route is through the desert, but there is some fertile land in the Trans-Jordan country, where the farmers may be seen farming as they have done for 3,000 years.

Little attention has been paid by the Christian

Continued on page 865

Damascus, Which is Now Linked With Mecca and Medina by the New Railway

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY
Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

The Divine Ideal of a Human Life

TEXT — Acts 24 : 25

"And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come, Felix trembled."

WE HAVE seen St. Paul under very many different conditions as we have carefully studied the story of his life. We have found him as the persecutor consenting to the death of St. Stephen, and later we have seen him with flashing eye and determined spirit setting his face toward Damascus that he might persecute the Christians, men, women and children, even unto strange cities. Then suddenly all is changed and he is himself a Christian, and as such we have seen him beaten with stripes; stoned with stones; left by the wayside for dead; tossed upon the sea in a storm; cast upon an island as a result of shipwreck, and at the end of his great career we see him walking to his death like a conqueror. Rome never knew a more heroic soul than St. Paul, the Apostle. We have listened to him preaching on different occasions, and with the exception of his Master there never was such a preacher. We studied him upon Mars Hill, as he was delivering his mighty message, and when he had gathered a great crowd around him we were thrilled as he said, "Ye men of Athens, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious. For as I passed by and beheld your devotions, I found an altar with this inscription, 'To the Unknown God.' Whom, therefore, ye ignorantly worship, him declare I unto you." (Acts 17: 22, 23.)

An Illustrious Trio

But here in this text is an illustration of another sort. This is a picture of a private ministry, with an audience of two. It is a testing service, for it is vastly easier to speak upon Mars Hill when he faces a crowd than to stand in the presence of two important people and rebuke them because of their sins. It is easy to be brave when surrounded by a multitude; not so easy under circumstances like these; but he never flinched. "And as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance, and judgment to come, Felix trembled, and answered, 'Go thy way for this time; when I have a convenient season I will call for thee.'" (Acts 24: 25.)

This is the illustrious trio which faces us in this story. It is light and darkness, righteousness and sin facing each other. The preacher is great. He had well nigh graduated at the school of suffering. He had grown old before his time. His back was bent; his body worn, and he said himself that in his body he bore about the very marks of the Lord Jesus. His had been a life of extreme loneliness. Even Jesus had his Bethany, but Paul, denied his Bethany, seemed even more lonely than his Master.

Yet without cheer of sister or of daughter,
Yet without stay of father or of son;
Lone on the land and homeless on the water
Pass I in patience till the work is done.

Here stands St. Paul a prisoner, well-nigh a slave; "a word and he will be thrown to the lions, a nod and the fire will consume him. He is face to face with evil and he smites it with both hands." Yet, as Joseph Parker said, "He feels the breath upon him of more than twelve legions of angels, and, therefore, is well-nigh perfect in his display of courage."

Felix and Drusilla

The audience is interesting. St. Paul had fought with the beasts at Ephesus, but that struggle was nothing to this. There was Felix, a Roman Procurator, originally a slave, but now free; he had risen to almost unlimited power. A more contemptible person never combined the power of a king and the meanness of a slave. He was a cruel, licentious and unrighteous man. He was steeped in blood, rich by oppression and profligate in conduct. Then there was Drusilla. She was said to be one of the beauties of the day. She was the daughter of one king and the wife of another. According to Josephus, she was the daughter of Herod Agrippa the First, and she was at one time the wife of the king of Emesa. Felix had enticed her away from her rightful husband by the power of a magician. As a result of this unholy marriage there was born a son Agrippa, and it is said that he and his miserable mother perished in one of the eruptions of Mount Vesuvius.

Here is Paul's description of himself. Speaking of others he said:

Are they ministers of Christ? (I speak as a fool) I am more; in labors more abundant, in stripes above measure, in prisons more frequent, in deaths oft. Of the Jews five times received I forty stripes save one. Thrice was I beaten with rods, once was I stoned, thrice I suffered shipwreck, a night and day I have been in the deep. In journeyings often, in perils of water, in perils of robbers, perils by mine own countrymen, in perils by the heathen, in perils in the city, in perils in the wilderness, in perils in the sea, in perils among false brethren. In weariness and painfulness, in watchings often, in hunger and thirst, in fastings often, in cold and nakedness.

And he pathetically adds:

Beside those things that are without, that which cometh upon me daily, the care of all the churches (II. Cor. 11: 23-28).

I see him stand in the presence of his audience of two. There is power in his attitude. His eyes are flashing; his lips are trembling; his body quivering with excitement. Then a solemn and deathlike hush comes over his auditors, "and as he reasoned of righteousness, temperance and judgment to come Felix trembled." His manner of preaching is worthy of notice. He reasoned. It was perfectly natural for him to do so, for he understood the art perfectly. He was a born logician, but his natural powers are set on fire of God; but let it always be remembered that our religion has ever stood the test of reason. The world's greatest men have been Christians. The greatest philosophers have bowed the knee to Jesus—men like Bacon, Locke, Johnson, Edwards, Hopkins and McCosh; and it was Locke who said: "If I had my life to live over I would spend it studying the Epistles of St. Paul and the Psalms." The greatest astronomers have been Christians—men like Kepler and Newton and a host of others; and it was Newton who said: "I am thinking the thoughts of God, and God is passing before me in all the grandeur of his ways." The greatest scientists, historians, discoverers and statesmen have been devout Christians. So Paul was moving in the right line as he reasoned. The field before him was positively boundless.

Reasoning of Righteousness

He reasoned of righteousness. That is the divine ideal of a human life. It is what we ought to be to God and man according to God's teaching. What a rebuke it was to Felix! The woman by his side was an evidence of his sin; as they both leaned forward he could feel her hot breath upon his cheek. He had in his sin against society struck a blow at home life in all ages. No wonder he trembled. His position was not much like that of General Wardwell, the hero of two wars, whose story has recently appeared in the public press. His aged wife was discovered to be a leper, and was about to be deported to the lepers' island, when the old general said: "But I, too, am a leper and I must go with her." And they told him after examination that he was not a leper and could not go. Then, although her body was wasted by disease, her hands were bent and crippled, her face was marred as a result of her suffering, and her reason dethroned, he took her in his arms and stroked her hair as he did when she was a bride, covered her face with his kisses as when she was his sweetheart; and he said: "You may take her away, but I will, if necessary, go upon my hands and knees to find her."

St. Paul may have presented an ideal like this, and if he did, I know why Felix trembled. He was not alone rebuked. Drusilla must have trembled, too. And are we doing our best? Are we not guilty of sins against society, sins against the church, and sins against the minister, and sins against God? Have we not been guilty of sinning against our fellow men, of hurting the poor, neglecting the oppressed, forgetting the sorrowing, and neglecting the sick? Have not some of us sinned against our households?

The Unseen Danger

I heard an evangelist recently tell the story of a father who took his little boy into one of the parks in the South. Interested in his newspaper he dozed and fell asleep after awhile; his little boy wandered too near the river that ran through the park, when suddenly the father was startled by the cry of his boy, shouting: "Hurry, papa!" The father was instantly aroused only to his horror to see that a great crocodile had caught his little fellow as he waded into the river. "Hurry, papa!" he shouted; "hurry!" But the father sprang to the river's edge only in time to see his child sink beneath the waves. Vice is on every hand. Sin faces our children everywhere. Pitfalls are at their feet. Hell yawns before them, and I think I hear them shouting:

Hurry, hurry! If we have failed here we ought to tremble.

St. Paul also reasoned of temperance. That he to do with one's personal responsibility for one's own body and the shaping of human relationship. It is the control of the appetites and passions. There is a distinction between righteousness and temperance, the one is a warning concerning sin against ourselves. Righteousness rebuked Felix for his sin against Drusilla. Temperance rebuked him because of his sin against himself. I can see his face flush and grow pale and his eyes flash with anger. He knew he was wrong, and yet he is alone in that conclusion. Is your life right in the sight of God? You must answer the question to God and not to men; and yet who of us can control himself? Our effort would be an utter failure if we tried.

When Christ Comes Into the Life

I heard Prof. C. M. Coburn say this summer that Julian Hawthorne in his travels abroad journeyed through Wales. He was accompanied by a Harvard student, who had a periodical passion for drink. One day they were standing together watching the women of Wales with their little children gathering the herbs at the foot of the great cliff. They filled the baskets with these herbs, and the fathers, away up at the top of the cliff, by means of a rope would draw the baskets up. Suddenly, as they watched the Harvard student said: "Mr. Hawthorne, the passion for drink is on me again;" when his friend noting a narrow pathway running almost up the face of the cliff, said: "Run up that quickly, and you will forget it." When he had gotten fairly started a little girl, noting him, started after him, when she stumbled and fell, and fortunately fell into one of the baskets. The father, feeling the tug upon the rope, thought the basket filled and started to draw it up. The child became frightened, and as the basket was drawn up rapidly attempted to climb out. It would have been sure death, when Julian Hawthorne, with his hands to his mouth, shouted to his friend: "Spring out and catch the rope. Let your self down. Save the child." The trained athlete balanced himself a moment and sprang out; let himself down hand by hand, and saved the child. And the passion for drink never returned to him. Prof. Coburn said it was because of the great principle of sacrifice getting into his life. I can quite understand it, but I can understand this, too: that if one should admit into his life Jesus Christ as a personal Saviour and an abiding strength and hope and comfort, then passion could be controlled, weakness be overcome and deliverance be sure.

A Vision of Judgment

Paul also reasoned of judgment to come. The judgment is a solemn day. It is a place where men meet their past, where books are opened, where conscience and remorse smite the sinner. Have you ever read Bickersteth's description of the Judgment, in which he says:

Yes, there was Cain, the fratricide,
The brand of murder still upon his brow.

And a little further on in the poem, he says:

Time's river, in that awful retrospect,
Was flowing swiftly by, when lo! I heard
The traitor's name, and from among the dead
He staggered, shuddering, to the judgment bar.

Felix will be there and Judas will be there. Will you be there? I know that Jesus will be there, either for us or against us. Which shall it be?

A distinguished minister in New York dreamed a dream in which he thought he stood at the judgment bar of God, and he heard him say: "Have you always been kind and just and patient and true?" And when he had exhausted all the virtues, the minister, renowned for his goodness upon earth, was obliged to say that he had in his own thought failed in the light of the judgment. Then, just as he felt that all hope was gone, he saw a light above the brightness of the sun and beheld one whose hands had been pierced by the nails and whose side had been scarred, and a voice said: "Father, this man confessed me down in the world. I will confess him here."

Is your trust in Jesus Christ? Then fear not. And as he thus reasoned, Felix trembled; trembled other pilgrims. Regular trains are fitted out which are in the nature of traveling mosques, since all the Mohammedan religious ceremonies are scrupulously performed on these trains and there are large numbers of mullahs or priests along with the pilgrims. These come from every section of the Mohammedan world—from Morocco and the Barbary States, from Egypt and the Soudan, from India and Afghanistan, from the Malay Straits, and even from the Philippines. They are accompanied by Arab and Syrian traders, who supply their wants and charge all that can be obtained.

Continued on page 865

Gate of the Mosque of Mohammed, Medina

The rich Mohammedans travel in comparative comfort, fitting up their own trains. The poorer, who constitute the vast majority, travel huddled together in third-class coaches about like similar travel in all the Oriental countries. The rich help to pay their fare or they are given free passage by order of the Sultan.

The rails actually reach the outskirts of Medina in June, but officially the railway is not considered as having arrived at this famous city until September. This is because Sultan Abdul Hamid ascended the throne in September, and he likes to have celebrations of this sort take place on the anniversary of his accession. A very extensive programme was provided for the Medina ceremonies. Four years ago, when the railway got as far as Ma'an in the desert, there was a similar celebration, but not on so extensive a scale as the Medina one. Of course, the greatest of all celebrations will be when the railway reaches Mecca.

No one can tell what the ultimate effect of this Damascus-Mecca Railway will be. In addition to the religious motive the Sultan had military reasons for wanting it built, since it enables him to transport troops to the heart of Arabia to contend with the rebellious tribes who heretofore have so successfully defied his authority. But there is even a broader possibility. The Mecca Railway is a twentieth century enterprise and the question arises whether it will not be, as some of the Mohammedans have feared, an entering wedge for Christianity in the heart of Islam.

world to the building of this railway to Mecca, but the Sultan has held to it with more consistency than marks most of his policies. Perhaps he would not have done so except that Mohammedans all over the world encouraged him to go forward with the project and they gave large sums of money. It is said that up to the present time out of $16,000,000 which has been spent on the line nearly $6,000,000 has come from Mohammedans outside the Turkish Empire. They are still contributing and their funds are expected to insure the completion of the line to Mecca within the next five years. The Bedouins, though nominally Mohammedans, have not favored the project and have interfered with the railway building by occasional raids on the workers. But since the majority of the laborers were Turkish soldiers who were detailed for this duty, the attacks of the Bedouins have been repelled.

It is estimated that this year there will be 150,000 Mohammedan pilgrims who will travel over the Mecca Railway as far as Medina. In years past, when the camel caravans from Damascus with escorts of troops were the only means of making the pilgrimage, the numbers in the great caravan sometimes reached 50,000. This caravan required at least two months from Damascus to Mecca. Now the railway journey to Medina can be made in less than five days, and there the caravan taken for Mecca with about ten days for the journey.

Mussulman fanatics and devotees for a time held aloof from the great body of pilgrims in using the railway, which they looked upon, perhaps truly, as an entering wedge for Christianity. Yet they now are said to be reconciled to it and they join with the

Courtyard, Mosque of Mohammed's Tomb, Medina

The Mir-hab, Medina, before which Mohammed Prayed

Our three photographs on this page are the first ever taken with the camera within the walls of the "forbidden city" of Medina. They were taken by a correspondent of the Illustrated London News. One shows the courtyard of the famous mosque that contains the tomb of Mohammed; another, the Mirhab or mosque before which Mohammed prayed, and the third the chief gate of the mosque which holds the much venerated tomb of the prophet. Medina is sacred to the Mohammedan, for it was to Medina that Mohammed went after the flight from Mecca, and there he died and was buried. Those not of the faith are forbidden to enter it; but the ban has been broken on several occasions, notably by Burckhardt in 1811, and by Sir Richard Burton in 1852.

The money to build the Hedjaz railway, which was inaugurated at the holy city of Medina on the first of last month, was subscribed by followers of Islam in all parts of the world. It links Damascus to Medina, which is second in sanctity only to Mecca, and it is more than probable that it will be extended to Mecca itself. None but Mohammedans were employed on the task of construction. The scheme originated in the brain of Izzet Pasha, the Sultan's late Second Secretary and Chamberlain, now a refugee. Abdul Hamid saw from the outset that the making of the line would strengthen the position he claims for himself as the spiritual head of Islam. The railway will have a great strategic value. As the London Times points out, it lies very near the flank of Egypt, and affords a rapid means for the transport of troops towards those provinces of Arabia which have never been properly subjugated by Turkey.

THE DIVINE IDEAL OF A HUMAN LIFE Sermon by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.—Continued

as sin faced him; as conscience struck him; as remorse overwhelmed him; as judgment broke in upon him; as the veil was drawn aside and he saw the Judge and saw himself; and yet, in spite of it all, he resisted. How near one may come to salvation and miss it all!

On the 24th of July, 1908, a remarkable event took place. It was the running of the Marathon race from Windsor Castle to the Stadium, twenty-six and one-third miles; with thousands waiting to welcome the runners; among whom stood the Queen and King of England. Not since the ancient Greek fell dead at the feet of hundreds of thousands, after carrying a message of war a distance of twenty-six miles from the battlefield of Marathon to the public square at Sparta, was ever such a thrilling climax to a long-distance run.

"Make way for the Marathon runners!" finally came the announcement as from the throat of a giant, when the approach of the runners was heralded through a megaphone. Everything else was forgotten and the crowd, on its feet, turned its face to the entrance of the Stadium. The silence was breathless. For ten minutes in perfect silence the crowd of 100,000 stood, with all eyes focused on the gate directly opposite the royal stand, where the runners were to enter. Then the great voice rang out again: "The runners are in sight. Italy is in the lead!" Finally, a figure looking almost as small as that of a pigmy, appeared at the gate and staggered down the incline leading to the track. He was clothed in a white shirt and red running trousers. This uniform confirmed the announcement that Italy was the leader in the race. The runner stood for a moment as though dazed, and turned to the left, although a red cord had been drawn about the track in the opposite direction for the runners to follow. It was evident that the runner was practically delirious from his efforts. A squad of officials ran out and expostulated with him, pointing to him the right track, but he waved them away as though they were trying to put him upon the wrong path and cheat him out of a victory dearly won. In a great roar, the crowd shouted directions to the confused runner. At length Dorando, for he had been generally identified, started on the right path along the track.

Then followed an exhibition perhaps never to be forgotten by those who witnessed it, and perhaps never to be witnessed again in this generation. He staggered on toward the turn in the track and dropped to the ground. It was but human that those who had witnessed his struggles should gather around him and lift him to his feet. But to all it was also evident that he had run himself to the limit of his endurance. None of the spectators had expected to see him rise when he fell like a soldier crumpled up by a bullet, his face haggard and drawn. He was quickly lifted to his feet. Clearly he was unconscious. His limbs would not support him. One man took him by the arm, another stood at his back and he was pushed and dragged across the tape, and then allowed to drop to the track and lie there, until a stretcher was brought to carry him away. But he lost the race. He was near; he was actually within sight of the goal, but he lost the race!

So you may have been almost persuaded, but, remember, "almost is but to fail." It was against the rules for the officials to help Dorando; but it is not against the rules of God or heaven for our Saviour to step forth, when we have faith in him and have done our best, to help us over the goal, and he will do this—as we fail he will help.

"Our Favorite Magazine"

Dear Dr. Klopsch:

I have received the pictures. They are beautiful. I cannot tell you how we enjoy THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is our favorite magazine.

Charlottetown, P. E. I.

MRS. ANNIE TODD.

"THE SAINT OF SECOND AVENUE"

THE wonderful life of Mrs. Bella Cooke, who has for fifty-two years lain upon a bed of pain and weakness, and is yet full of love and cheer, is well known to CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. Although she was eighty-seven on the 13th of July last, her beautiful eyes are as bright and clear as ever, and her whole fine face shines with her unselfish and affectionate interest in others.

Yet the past year has been one of the hardest among the many distressing periods through which this devoted servant of Christ has been called to pass. It has been a time of constant pain and illness, and has left her so weak that she tells her friends, "I am not Bella Cooke any more. I am just a plain old woman who can do little but suffer on until the time of my release comes."

By KATE UPSON CLARK

Bella Cooke, Before She Became a "Shut-in"

In despite of these words, she is still visited by hundreds of the poor, and by even more of the well-to-do, who come to lay gifts in her hands to be distributed among the needy, whose wants no one knows like Bella Cooke. They love to come; not only in order that they may thus accomplish some good to the poor, but that they may be strengthened and refreshed in spirit by the tide of faith and joy which seems always at the flood in the heart of this noble and altruistic "shut-in."

Riding in a Second Avenue car to Twenty-seventh Street, you find the number 492 on the door of an ordinary tenement house, with shops underneath it. There is nothing about the exterior to indicate that one of the rarest souls in the metropolis is nearby. You ring the bell, and are told to pass into the house in the rear, if you wish to see Bella Cooke. Through a paved court you enter a clean, old-fashioned, two-story wooden house, which might have stepped out of some quiet village street. There, in her upper chamber, truly a chamber of peace, lies the invalid of so many years, her placid face framed in a frilled white cap, and all of her surroundings dainty even to elegance. The ruffled and embroidered pillow-slips are given her every year as a Christmas remembrance by one of the many who are so deeply indebted to her. Other loving and beloved ones insist on contributing regularly other little comforts and easements for her. Her three daughters are all married, and are loving and faithful.

Left a widow at twenty-seven, and bed-ridden at thirty-five, one would think that Bella Cooke might properly be exempted from charitable work for outsiders. But from the first her great heart has yearned over the unfortunate. Even when, as a widow, she was working for a mere pittance to put bread into the mouths of her children, she would manage to snatch an hour or two to visit those worse off than herself. The storekeepers in her neighborhood soon came to know and to trust her. If she said that anything was needed in a certain quarter, they knew that it was so, and stood ready to help her.

Gradually the regular charitable workers became acquainted with her remarkable gifts. To gaze into her noble face and to stand in her dignified and even stately presence, was to believe in her and to love her. Wealthy and philanthropic women sat at her feet, put thousands of dollars into her hands, prayed with her, heard the story of her poverty, her faith and her abounding reward, and went away with their strength renewed as the eagle's.

When Bella Cooke went to live in her little wooden house, her green yard extended in front to Second Avenue, and behind lay fields of grass and waving grain. Little by little, the prison city has shut in her house, even as disease has shut in her body, until now her only light comes from above. So it has seemed often to her racked and distracted soul—but the light from above has always shown the way, and given her the power to trust and be at peace.

A nurse dropped her when she was only two years old. This was the beginning of her physical disabilities. Later, largely as a result of this first fall, she had others. As a child and a young woman, she was always frail and feeble. The cares of motherhood rested heavily upon her, and before she was thirty, her life had been often despaired of; but her powerful will kept her upon her feet for five years longer.

Nearly every distinguished physician in New York has studied her case, but it has baffled the highest skill. She has been fortunate in having enjoyed, during all the years of her shut-in-life, the services, as her regular physician and devoted friend, of Dr. Lankford Palmer. It is to his wise care that she is largely indebted for her continued life and power of usefulness. Even at his present advanced age of eighty-five, he visits and prescribes for her daily.

Mrs. Cooke has ten grandchildren and eleven great grandchildren. She herself was one of nine brothers and sisters. Born in England and coming to this country during her early married life, she has kept throughout to the good old British tradition of large families, though she lost several of her own children during their babyhood. The story of her sorrows is told in the two volumes of her life, Rifted Clouds, one of the most thrilling chronicles of human suffering. Through its sale, a large proportion of the funds needed for Mrs. Cooke's support are obtained. No one can read the simple and touching story of this afflicted yet triumphant soul without sharing somewhat in the child-like faith which has upheld her through all her thorny way. Daily study of this woman's wonderful life and spiritual experiences should bring results to character and spirituality. One who reads it cannot fail to be strongly reminded of those two great books, The Imitation of Christ and The Saints' Rest.

Like our own Mr. Moody, Dr. Torrey and many other godly souls, who seem to live in the atmosphere of the apostle's "increasing prayer," it seems, as one reads the "short and simple annals" of Bella Cooke's life, as though she had but to lift up her prayer to the throne of grace in order to obtain all that she desired. The miracles recorded in the Scriptures are scarcely more startling than some of the answers to prayer which are set down in Rifted Clouds; and in such clear and convincing detail that even the most skeptical cannot doubt them.

For instance, in the year 1851, when her supply of coal was exhausted and she had no money, a neighbor pressed her for information of her circumstances, and forced her to confess that she was very destitute.

"But," she added bravely, "I told her that there was a little coal on the fire, and before that was burnt I knew that I should have either more coal or the money to buy it."

As the neighbor stood at the door to go, there was a knock. A man stood outside saying, "Does Mrs. Bella Cooke live here? If she does, and if she is a widow, then I have a ton of coal for her."

It was indeed, as the neighbor reminded her, like the appearance of Peter at the gate, when his friends were praying for his release from Herod's prison.

She says that she would like a taste of roast duck—but it costs too much—she must go without it. Almost immediately came kind neighbors bringing with them the very tidbit which she had desired. The book contains many such instances as this.

The names of many of New York's most influential women, who have distinguished themselves in philanthropic work, occur in these pages. Some of them, long since gone to their reward, gave largely and unostentatiously through Bella Cooke, never thinking, probably, of the fame that would come to them through her also.

Even the most hardened infidel must admit that a religion which can uphold its followers, as this saintly woman has been upheld through long and weary years, is a good working faith for the world. If everyone could but possess it, the millennium of perfect love and purest joy would be gloriously upon us.

Mrs. Cooke does not pray to live. She says that she is not tired of the work, "but, oh! the pain, the pain!"

Still, we cannot help hoping that she may be spared to the world a little longer. No one else can ever do the unique work which has so strangely and providentially been given into her feeble, yet powerful hands.

Mrs. Cooke in Her Upper Chamber, Where She Has Lain for Half a Century

ANSWERED PRAYERS

M. M. McE., Pennsylvania. "I was in great trouble and prayed as earnestly as I knew how. He did indeed answer."

A Reader, New York. "I wish to acknowledge in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD an answered prayer in the restoration to health of my husband and daughter."

O. H., Texas. "I was in great trouble. I promised God if he would answer my prayer, I would acknowledge it to the world. I wish to do so through your paper."

H. G. S., North Carolina. "Having been afflicted for two years, and knowing that help could only come from God, I continued to pray, and the Lord has heard and helped me."

Mrs. E. J. E., Iowa. "I want to say that I know God is a prayer-answering God. He has heard and answered many prayers for me, and he gives us wonderful peace if we trust and believe."

Miss B., Texas. "I desire to acknowledge God's goodness to me in answering three special prayers. I know he is a prayer-answering God."

Reader, Tennessee. "Having promised to make known a prayer if answered, I take this means of doing so. I suffered from a severe illness, and through God's kindness was restored to good health."

A. B., Missouri. "I wish to acknowledge publicly God's wonderful answer to prayer. I had delayed doing a plain duty. One night by his grace I did it. Next morning my prayer was answered."

H. H., Montana. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer. I was in great trouble, and I prayed and my prayer has been answered. I shall always put my trust in God."

F. M., New York. "Twice when in trouble have I received direct answer to my prayers."

C. E. B., Idaho. "I promised my heavenly Father if a certain prayer was answered I would let it be known to the world in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It was answered and many others."

Reader, Illinois. "I wish to publicly acknowledge God's goodness to us in guiding and helping us in a sore affliction. Also for the lightening of the affliction. He has so often heard and answered my prayers."

C. B., Richmond Hill, N. Y. Let me acknowledge through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD (by the reading of which many years ago I received the light) that I know God answers prayer. When I was sick he visited me and delivered me from my sickness. May this testimony be blessed to others.

Mrs. C. W. H., Ohio. "I wish as a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to acknowledge the goodness of God, in answering my prayers for the restoration of husband and son from death's door to health."

Reader, Pennsylvania. "We were in trouble and I promised God if he would but answer our prayer I would acknowledge it. I wish to let the world know of his wonderful goodness to me and mine."

M. A. R., Pennsylvania. I want to tell, through your paper, that the Lord has answered my prayers. I was in distress over the health of my son, and now the Lord has answered by restoring him to health. Praise his name!

Sven Hedin's Journey Through Tibet

IN THE current issue of The Sphere is an account of the wonderful 4,000-mile journey through Tibet of Dr. Sven Hedin, the great Swedish explorer. Last winter reports were current that Dr. Hedin had perished either from exposure to climatic rigors or by violence. To the delight of the civilized world, the reports have proved false, and the indomitable explorer has been heard from safely in British India, having completed his great journey.

At the end of August, 1906, he left Kashmir with the intention of crossing Tibet from west to east, parallel with the Himalayas, and traversing a region completely unknown. His objective was Shigatse on the Brahmaputra, the second holy city of the royal lamas, the residence of the Tashi Lama, the most important religious person in the country after the mysterious Dalai Lama. There were 1,200 miles of desert to traverse, the most gloomy solitude in the world. There are no natural resources over all this distance, not even wood, the only fuel being the dried dung of game. This therefore necessitated a numerous caravan carrying provisions for men and beasts. Sven Hedin took with him no fewer than a hundred horses and mules and thirty men.

Dr. Sven Hedin, the Explorer of Tibet

After fording a great river the first obstacle that presented itself was a chain of mountains 19,300 feet high—3,700 feet higher than Mont Blanc. This was surmounted, they were on the Tibetan plateau, an infinite stony solitude with numerous lakes. The caravan halted there to repair. While the camp was being fixed the huntsmen went out in search of game, which was very abundant—antelopes, bears, wolves, foxes, and yaks. Of all these animals the only really formidable is the yak, who, confident in his strength, never hesitates to charge. Dr. Hedin himself had a narrow escape from an infuriated bull yak.

The explorer marched for weeks in this huge solitude, when there appeared before him a chain of mountains. Here the caravan experienced terrible weather. Blinding snowstorms enveloped the train as it climbed upwards. Exhausted with fatigue and dying with hunger, horses and mules fell one after the other, unable to rise again. Dr. Hedin realized that the only chance of salvation lay in a rapid march towards the east, where he had reason to believe habitations could not be far away. At last, after three months in the desert, they found men, Tibetan shepherds, from whom Sven Hedin bought some domestic yaks to replace his decimated horses and mules, and with these oxen as carriers he soon arrived at Nyangtse-tso, one of those numerous lakes which constitute the most remarkable feature of these deserted landscapes.

By this time it was the end of December, 1906, and this sheet of water had become a superb stretch of ice, across which it was possible to pass with sleighs. The thermometer fell every day 35 degrees below zero. One day, while they were by the lake, some horsemen arrived suddenly, surrounded the camp, and summoned the Swedish explorer to stop. He had not been authorized to enter Tibet and was told he must retreat immediately. Discussion took place, and after some days of talking the Tibetans retired one morning as unexpectedly as they had come. Sven Hedin could not believe his eyes, but set forward with all haste towards Shigatse.

From the information supplied by previous travelers, the Swedish explorer expected to find the ground between Nyangtse-tso and Shigatse comparatively little broken, and was astounded at discovering a new chain of mountains higher than any previously crossed and not mentioned by any explorer. This ridge, hitherto unknown, stretches over 1,200 miles long from east to west between Kuenlun and the Himalayas at the north of the long valley of the Brahmaputra. This discovery completely changes the appearance of former maps of Tibet. The scaling of this solid mountainous mass was their last great effort, and on February 11, 1907, after six months of marching across the highest mountains of the world, Sven Hedin entered Shigatse. Instead of being arrested on his arrival, as he feared, the traveler was well received. The Tashi Lama, the highest personage in the religious hierarchy after the Dalai Lama, evinced a desire to receive the Swedish scholar, and during his stay showed him sincere proofs of friendship. The Lama conversed for hours with Sven Hedin, and to do him honor, attached several monks to his person in order to see that he was properly treated and to guide him to temples and monasteries. The Tashi Lama is not an ignorant fanatic; he astonished and charmed Sven Hedin by his intelligence and inquiring mind.

Dr. Hedin, in private letters, gives this description of his journey across the inner or newly discovered chain of mountains: "You find the footpaths marked by pyramids of stones adorned with sticks, from which hang shreds of stuff with the ritualistic formula of Buddhism erected as votive offerings by pious travelers. On the granite cliffs gigantic effigies of Buddha have been sculptured, or the eternal litany, Om mané padmé um, and everywhere there are skulls of yaks and antelopes which have been offered to the gods."

Sven Hedin stayed for a month by the Manasarowar Lake. This sheet of water, buried away among the great peaks of the Himalayas, is the objective of a pilgrim route much frequented by Hindus and Tibetans. From all parts of India thousands accomplish the arduous crossing of the Himalayas to purify themselves in the waters of this lake and to oblate before Kailas, a magnificent mountain, situated on the borders of this picturesque lake. According to their ideas, this majestic summit carries the paradise of Siva, who from time to time escapes in the form of a white swan and swims on the transparent waters of Lake Manasarowar. In the eyes of the Tibetans, Kailas is equally the abode of the supreme gods, and for hundreds of leagues round about they perform the journey to the mountains to assure themselves of beatitude in eternity. "After observing the practice of the Buddhist pilgrims," Sven Hedin relates, "I myself traversed the sacred road of the Kailas, a distance of twenty-four miles. There was a constant movement of silent groups, plunged in the most profound meditation. There were men and women, old men and children, lamas and villagers, all sexes, all ages, all classes, represented in this defile, and all breathed so intense a feeling of naive faith that it inspired respect."

After Sven Hedin's arrival at Shigatse the Chinese mandarins, representing the Celestial Empire in the kingdom of the Grand Lama, had announced to the explorer that, residence in Tibet being refused to strangers, he must immediately quit the country. Once more Dr. Hedin succeeded in bringing the Chinese to his wishes. He agreed to set out for India, as the mandarins desired, but on condition that he did not take the most direct route, but went towards Kashmir; that is to say, crossing Tibet again and following a course more southerly than that taken in going. He could thus finish the exploration of the region begun during his winter campaign. The Chinese authorities besides were to furnish him with a complete convoy and escort. This second crossing of Tibet was not less prolific than the first in scientific results. Sven Hedin was able to explore more completely the enormous chain of mountains discovered the previous winter, to discover immense lakes, and to fix the position of the sources of the River Brahmaputra, of the Sutlej, the principal affluent of the River Indus, and of the Indus itself.

Dr. Hedin's Caravan Resting on the Shore of a Tibetan Lake

TIMELY TOPICS AT HOME AND ABROAD

—TURKISH WOMEN have seemingly concluded to live up to their privileges under the new constitution. Finding sanction in the advice of a distinguished mollah or Mohammedan priest, they have begun to discard the yashmak, or Turkish veil, and thousands of them are now going about as Europeans and Americans do, with faces uncovered. But they want more than this—they are clamorous for reform in the domestic life; they want real homes instead of harems and practical lavary; they want to receive visitors, to dress in modern civilized style, to reorganize social customs and usages, to educate their daughters, to transform not only their drawing-rooms but their kitchens and to make the monotonous Turkish menu, with its cloying sweets, hygienic and attractive. They are looking forward to a social emancipation quite as complete as and possibly more far-reaching than the reforms for which their husbands and brothers are now working in the political field.

—HOW MANY people would believe that ripe grain, standing in the field, could pass through all the necessary processes to convert it into a good loaf of bread in the short space of twenty-two minutes? Yet this is what was done a few weeks ago, on a special trial at Waitsburg, Washington. The ripe wheat was cut on a hillside farm, owned by N. B. Atkinson, president of the Washington State Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union, two miles from town; was ground into flour at the Preston-Parton mill and baked by A. Beck. Fifty residents witnessed it, and there were three timekeepers.

—EMPEROR WILLIAM has been criticised by some Continental writers for his occasional religious talks to his officers and men in the army and navy. A German correspondent in the Independent comments on this and finds it an admirable thing, instead of one calling for unfriendly criticism. He says: "The young Emperor has always been spoken of by those close to him as a sincerely religious man. During the past year his tendencies in this direction have visibly received a great impetus. The note of pious fervor is struck now with much greater frequency than formerly, and with a ring of candor which forbids the suggestion of pretence. He only the other day concluded a speech to a squad of recruits with the earnest injunction to use the Lord's Prayer, adding that he had himself derived much help from doing so. It is not an altogether pleasant commentary upon the value of the Christian profession of our day, that this remark has been cited as indication that William's mind was losing its balance." He adds that it might not be a bad idea to have some of the other sovereigns and princes of Europe imitate William's example.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly.
Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner
available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside
the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the
wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time
to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN
HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Japan and the Fleet

JAPAN'S magnificent welcome to our battleship fleet has convinced the whole world of the deep-rooted and genuine character of the friendship existing between the two nations. It has been more than a mere formal official demonstration of international good-will. For months, the Japanese government and people have been preparing for the coming of the white warships, and their reception of Admiral Sperry, his officers and men has been on a scale of lavish splendor which has probably no modern parallel, while the cordial feeling of the whole nation has been made evident in the generous plans for the entertainment of the visitors. All the resources of the island empire were drawn upon in devising the most delightful entertainments for their guests. Our Japanese friends nobly vindicated their reputation for doing things on a liberal scale, for their welcome was one of truly Oriental magnificence, and a revelation of the possibilities of hospitality to which the Western races cannot attain.

It was a week of red-letter days, the climax being the cordial greeting extended by Emperor Mutsuhito personally in the audience chamber. All traditions of royal exclusiveness were laid aside to honor the Americans when the Emperor clasped hands with Admiral Sperry and told him how Japan had valued America's friendship in the past, and of his desire to strengthen the bond of amity between the two nations in the future.

This was the crowning episode of the long and arduous voyage, and its results may yet be of far-reaching importance to both nations. It is a sufficient answer to those pessimistic forecasters who, when the voyage of the battleships was first projected, could see only trouble ahead, and it will reassure those who had little faith in American statesmanship and the American navy. All their gloomy predictions have vanished into thin air. We are the best of friends with Japan, and our gallant fleet has accomplished something that will be remembered in the years to come.

The Balkan Situation

"WARS and rumors of wars" still come to us over the cable from the land of unrest—the Balkans. Every nation whose borders lie near Turkey seems anxious, for the most part, for a call to arms rather than for a peaceful settlement. On Sunday, the 18th of October, it seemed as if Turkey would go to war with Bulgaria, and there were reports of troops of both armies massing along the frontier. Later, Serbia seemed nearer than ever to marching across the Danube and invading Austrian territory. Lack of war material alone seemed to have held her back. Now her arsenals are working night and day to supply the deficiencies, and when these are fully supplied she may make her words good with deeds. The various causes for irritation between Austria and Serbia have already been noted in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. How much longer Austria will stand the challenging cry of her small but warlike neighbor, is a serious question. Recently fuel was added to the flame by the arrest of an Austrian officer in Belgrade by the Servian authorities on the charge that he was a spy. This has not yet been proved and the Austrian minister threatened to force his release by sending for the gunboats in the Danube.

Little Montenegro seems hand and glove with Serbia and there seems to be an open understanding between them. Together they would make a force that could not be despised. If the demonstrations against Austria had been confined to the people alone they might be regarded as of no danger to European peace, but as the government has taken part in them they take on an entirely different aspect. Both the government and its subjects seem to be very unhappy because they are not already invading Herzegovina, which sometime they had hoped to add to Montenegro. An interesting phase is that both Serbia and Montenegro have looked with longing eyes on the same land, but now Austria has got it they will unite against her. Probably in case they won in an armed conflict Bosnia would go to Serbia and Herzegovina to Montenegro, but their success would be exceedingly doubtful; yet still greater surprises have happened. If Russia supports them against Austria, as rumored, no one could foretell the outcome. It looks as if a European conference would have to assemble quickly to have them come to a pacific arrangement.

"Not With Observation"

IN A CERTAIN city, when workmen were widening a bridge some years ago, they found in the arched vaults under the roadway the most wonderful caves of snow-white stalactites. The rain, percolating through the roof, carried with it the lime with which the stones were cemented, and by a slow and silent process, continued for many years, transformed the gloomy vaults into a fairy scene. Who would have suspected that under the common roadway, under the tread of the busy feet of toil and of the hurrying world, such a wonderful transformation was going on?

So in the midst of this common, everyday life of ours, amidst the rush of business, the strife of parties, the convulsions of political and social forces, the walls of an eternal city are going up, without noise of axe or hammer, without sound of trumpet or flaunting banners, by the secret, gentle but almighty working of the Spirit of God. "The kingdom cometh not with observation."

A Little Leaven

AT THIS time, when there is so much discussion concerning those questions that are closely related to the physical and moral welfare of the great masses of our population, it is a hopeful sign that the churches seem to be awaking to their opportunities. Here and there, we find an earnest, courageous, consecrated preacher who is giving to the Gospel a practical interpretation, and revitalizing religion within his sphere of influence by applying its remedies to modern needs, economic and social, as well as spiritual.

Recently, a body of Protestant ministers, 161 in number, and representing many different denominations in the United States and Canada, joined in a protest against the indifference of our Christian churches toward many of the great questions that are now stirring society to its depths on this continent. They pointed out that the religion of Jesus affords the true solution for the troubles between the classes, and that it is the church's duty to recognize this and emphasize it in its teachings. But even without discussing the socialization of society—by which they meant simply the modern application of Christ's own teachings—there are many urgent questions calling loudly for reform, which can be greatly helped through the co-operation of the Christian church. The Gospel, interpreted in the spirit of practical Christian effort, can deal with them all. It was given, not for philosophizing and theorizing, however admirable these may be in their own proper places, but to supply a rule of action applicable to all the affairs of human existence. The religion of Jesus is a practical thing, which takes hold of the daily life and comes down to the level of the general need and comprehension. Let us not forget that "the common people heard Him gladly." So, our own churches to-day, to meet the modern emergency, must come down to the people. Their true mission is to save not only the individual sinner, but also to save society by improving it, by bringing its component elements into better relationship, by teaching that the doctrines of Jesus—love, justice, generosity and human brotherhood—were not given to be preserved in books and missals or read once a week gravely in church, but to be lived in the daily life.

What has been accomplished thus far in the practical application of Christianity is only a little leaven; but there are signs that by and by it will leaven the whole lump. It may be the beginning of a new reformation, greater even than that of Luther's day, which will take out of the church its coldness, its selfishness, its indifference, and give it new life and energy by carrying it back to Calvary and filling it with the Spirit of Christ. What a mighty power it could exert toward the world's social and spiritual reformation!

There are at the present time somewhere about 135 American Protestant denominations, with 189,000 churches, 140,000 pastors, and about 20,000,000 followers. These organizations expend $160,000,000 a year. Some of the most devoted, earnest and eloquent ministers in the world are in our American pulpits to-day. It is impossible to estimate the tremendous and world-moving influence that might be exerted by a united church, applying the Gospel of Christ to the problems of daily life. While it is true that the reformation of society is a task too great for any human agency, we believe that the church, by dealing courageously and intelligently with present social problems, can demonstrate to the world the practical value of the Christian religion as it has been demonstrated in no previous age. Love to God and love to our fellow-men are the very essence of Christianity, and one cannot exist without the other. No one is a Christian in whose heart these two great commandments are not enshrined above all others, and whose life is not ordered in harmony with them.

A SPLENDID BOOK

FULL OF ILLUSTRATIONS

THE visitor's guide may conduct us through the stately salon of the Executive Mansion, but Mr. Gilson Willets in his latest book, The Inside Story of the White House, takes us beyond its beautiful gardens, wide corridors and spacious reception halls into the White House as a home. This excellent volume reveals the intimate, personal, fireside life of our 26 Presidents as husbands, fathers and grandfathers, and the true womanly side of the lovely and beautiful women who in turn have graced its functions as hostesses of the nation. It chronicles who were born, who christened, who married and who have died there. It echoes the wit and humor of resplendent banquets; reflects the festivities of Christmas days and holidays. This is not a mere biography of our Presidents, and the work they did, but shows us how they worked and how they played and how they spent their leisure moments brings to light rare bits of history and faded jewels of romance from the brilliant régime of the famous Dolly Madison down to the more recent day when Alice Roosevelt cut her wedding cake with the sabre of an army officer; * * * in short, The Inside Story of the White House unfolds in one continuous and sparkling narrative the story of all the tragedy and comedy, the joys and sorrows, that have been woven and interwoven with its long and romantic history.

Many full-page illustrations add to the beauty and charm of its 500 generous pages. The volume is handsomely bound in an exceptionally rich, olive-green, silk-finished art cloth, and stamped back and side with genuine gold leaf that will never tarnish.

Sent, charges prepaid, together with our incomparable Art Gallery De Luxe and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, for one whole year, on receipt of only $2.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, November 4, 1908

	PAGE
American Aeroplane Test at Fort Myer, Va.	Cover
OUR MAIL-BAG	862
Selling Cholera Preventives (Illustrated)	862
The Sultan's Railway to Mecca (Illustrated)	863, 865
By Charles M. Pepper
The Divine Ideal of a Human Life. Sermon	864, 865
By Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.
"The Saint of Second Avenue" (Illustrated)	866
Sven Hedin's Journey Through Tibet (Illustrated)	867
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	868
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER	869
In the Home Circle. By Mrs. Sangster (Illustrated)	870
"Baltimore." Serial. By Merritt Crawford	871, 878
Learning to Fly (Illustrated)	872
Japan's Welcome to the Fleet	872
Temperance Organizations. Christian Endeavor Topic	873
Soul Winning. Epworth League Topic	873
"He Careth for You." Sunday School Lesson	874, 875
The Lord Our Shepherd. By Mrs. M. Baxter	875
Open-Air Christian Endeavor Meeting (Illustrated)	877
Esperanto Lesson No. 22	877
Bishop Potter Buried	879

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

The Sacred Tooth of Buddha

TOWARD the heart of the island of Ceylon, Kandy, formerly a capital of a kingdom of the same name, is situated. It rests on the banks of an artificial lake and is surrounded by beautiful mountains. It is noted for its royal residence, its tombs of the kings, and especially for the heathen temples, twelve of which are Buddhist and four Brahman. The most notable structure in Kandy is the Temple of Maligawa or the Temple of the Tooth, where the sacred tooth of Buddha has been kept, it is claimed, for 1,500 years. The temple is a small building with a good-sized courtyard surrounding it, the outer walls of which are decorated with hideous, poorly executed frescoes of the various punishments of the Buddhist hell. The sacred Bo tree nearby is reported to be the oldest historical tree in the world, its record having been kept since 300 years before Christ. The great relic, which is two inches long and one inch thick, is preserved in a gold and jeweled shrine covered by a large silver bell, in the centre of an octagonal tower. Its peculiarly sacred character renders it the heart from which all Buddhist sentiment in Ceylon ebbs and flows. Because of his precious relic, the king and priests of Burmah and Siam continue to send valuable gifts to the temple annually. The tooth is exposed to view once a year, which is the occasion of the profoundest religious interest to the followers of Buddha in the island and everywhere.

Of course the tooth is not that of Buddha, but of a hippopotamus. The religious influence going out from it, of course, is a myth, a creation of the heathen imagination. These superstitions are one by one giving way. In the island of Ceylon and in Kandy itself, there are Christian churches, which teach the error of such beliefs. The sacred tooth and all other emblems of heathenism will soon be a thing of the past, and the cross of Christ, the symbol of life and love, will be the object of veneration and the centre of inspiration for the whole world.

Why do the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing? (Psa. 2:1.)

Model Farm in Africa

In an African wilderness under the equator and on a lofty mountain, the Italian fathers of the Catholic Mission of Kenia have established a model farm which is attracting the attention of the civilized world. They have substituted the yoke of cattle for the human beast of burden and the steel plow for the sharpened stick. Three hundred native black hands are employed on this farm and as soon as they acquire a practical knowledge of farming they are sent out to their dusky neighbors to instruct them in the art. They have such agricultural implements as American seed-planters, disk harrows, hand-cultivators, farm wagons, etc. Even in that rich virgin soil they are using fertilizers to increase the quality and quantity of their products. On that lofty altitude they are raising almost everything from American grains to the Irish potato. Wide as are the farming lands of this and other countries, still wider are those which are unemployed in other continents. The plow and the Bible, civilization and Christianity are to conquer the earth.

And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers, but ye shall be named the Priests of the Lord. (Isa. 61:5-6.)

Like a Mighty Army

Ten thousand men, women and children marched through the down-town streets of Chicago, recently, and, with band playing, choruses singing and children shouting, made the greatest demonstration against the liquor traffic that city had ever seen. Nearly one-half of the great temperance army was composed of children. The songs of these youthful crusaders, their cheering and the mottoes their banners bore, provoked a continuous outburst of enthusiasm upon the part of the multitude who lined the streets. There was a platoon of twelve-year-old boys, one hundred strong. They carried a banner bearing this inscription, which could be read blocks away: "The saloons want us. Do they get us?" This is only one of the thousands of spectacular demonstrations against the liquor traffic in all parts of the United States.

That thou by them mightest war a good warfare. (I. Tim. 1:18.)

Surgery and Reformation

A boy fourteen years old, of Nazareth, Pa., took the premium for badness. There was nothing too wicked for him to do. When he was about ten years of age, he whipped out a revolver and thrust it in the face of his teacher when she undertook to correct him, and would have killed her if she had not desisted. He was arrested a little later for stealing a horse, and he threatened to shoot the policeman who undertook to arrest him. It was thought that the boy's badness was caused by pressure of a bone on the brain, and he was taken to a hospital in Phila spiritual church, can cure the worst form of moral evil and turn the blackest demons into the brightest angels.

The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked (Jer. 17:9.)

A Pampered Dog

A gentleman in New York City imported a full-blooded poodle dog as a pet. He boards at one of the leading hotels in the city and has engaged a special room for this creature. There is a bathroom attached to it, with a tub, and also a shower bath. A maid is employed whose sole business it is to care for the dog. It does not eat with the ordinary dogs, but has a bill of fare of its own. A man is employed so many hours each day to teach him tricks of one kind or another. The dog has already learned to do many things that the ordinarily intelligent poodle can not do. The maid takes the dog walking in the park twice a day.

In these days, when people are found in hovels of poverty, dead for want of food, and when men sink down fainting in the streets, perishing with starvation, it seems a sin for a man to throw away so much money on a dog. In these days, when there are so many poor little children that need an education, it seems a misdirection of benevolence to spend so much time and money training a dog to do tricks. It is said that there is sometimes the disgusting spectacle of women of wealth and fashion, riding along Fifth Avenue in their carriages, with dogs in their laps or by their sides, while their children are being trundled through the paths of the park by nurses.

A love for and proper care of the lower animals is beautiful and commendable, but the substitution of affection which should be bestowed upon the support and education of children to dogs, is a mistake and fault; for there is something God-like in the child which the other creatures do not possess.

Ye are of more value than many sparrows. (Luke 12:7.)

A Ten-Thousand-Dollar Bed

A hotel in an American city boasts of a bed which cost $10,000, and beds of extravagant price are the fad with many people. There is a bed in Bombay which was made for a native ruler some years ago, which is still in use. At the four corners are full-sized figures of Grecian maidens—the ones at the top holding stringed instruments, while those at the foot bear in their hands large fans. Extending the full length of the bed is a music-box, capable of playing for an hour before the repertoire is exhausted. The weight of the bed sets this music-box in motion, while at the same time the figures at the head of the bed finger the strings of their instruments, while those at the foot wave their fans; a concealed motor furnishing the power that keeps the fans going all the night through.

The most magnificent bed in the world is that presented to the Czar of Russia years ago by the Shah of Persia. It is made of crystal ornamented with silver. It was cut from a solid block, and, in addition to being provided with steps of blue glass, was furnished with a fountain that threw, the whole night long, streams of scented water into the air.

It is not the cost of the bed, but the softness of the down, that gives rest to the body. It is not the palace of wealth or luxury that has the greatest certainty of refreshment. A poor man who works the hardest often sleeps the soundest, and the couch of the simple cottage is often to be envied. The temper of the mind and the quality of heart have much to do with the rest or restlessness of the body in the night time. It is thorns to the uneasy conscience and feathers to the one who is pure in heart.

In an account of the feast given by King Ahasuerus there is a description of the magnificence of the beds of the royal palace.

The beds were of gold and silver, upon a pavement of red, and blue, and white, and black marble. (Esther 1:6.)

The Procession of the "Sacred Tooth" of Buddha, at Kandy, Ceylon

adelphia, where his skull was cut open and a piece of the bone was removed. The operation made no difference whatever in the morals of the boy. He recently broke into the cellar of a hotel and stole a lot of wine and then robbed a cigar factory. There was badness in the boy's blood, and it could not be let out by the knife of surgery. His disposition to break into a wine cellar and help himself may have indicated one of the inspirations of the bad demons which had taken up their residence in his soul. In these times, there are many people who insist that the moral evils of life are simply the result of physical misfortune or malformation, and that, with healthful food and grooming and surroundings, everything will come right; but the sin of the human heart is more than skin-deep. The boy in the cradle inherited tendencies to moral evil from one or both sides of his family, and the surgeon might have taken off both of his legs and a good deal more of his skull, without touching the seat of his moral disorder. However deep may be the innate tendency to sin, there is an abundant cure for that tendency in the religion of Christ. The regenerating power of the Holy Spirit, and the healthful environment of

IN THE HOME CIRCLE

By Margaret E. Sangster

The Doctor's Gig

A FAMILIAR object in the past has been the doctor's gig with the doctor's horse that knew every foot of the road and every house at which the doctor was accustomed to stop. We have all seen the doctor jogging along, and if his route were in the country we knew that he might make a circuit of many miles before his day was over. In The Bonny Brier Bush the portrait of Dr. William McClure, drawn by the skilful hand of Ian Maclaren, lives in fadeless colors. One remembers with peculiar pleasure the tender ministrations of the fine old Scotch doctor to one poor woman who could be saved only by the skill of a famous London surgeon. Had Annie been a duchess, the doctor mused, she might have been saved, and then straightway he resolved to accomplish the impossible and procure for the wife of the farmer in the highland parish the aid that would have been hers had she been the resident of a palace or a free patient in a London hospital. The doctor sent for the great surgeon and the surgeon came, crossed a highland river at flood in the doctor's gig and was not a little relieved when he found himself safe on its opposite bank. After this he operated successfully on the patient and finally refused the fee that Dr. McClure had procured from a friend who could afford to spare it. There is no more winsome picture on the pages of any novel than this exquisite one of Dr. McClure, driving over hill and dale, with his sure-footed mare, Jess.

Some years ago in a fastness of the South I met a physician who reminded me in many ways of Ian Maclaren's hero. The American doctor was young and his patients lived at remote distances from one another, so that he was always to be seen setting off in the morning for a long day's round. He had been offered fine positions in cities where there were openings for such as he, ambitious, skilful and endowed with genius, but he had refused them one and all, "for," as he modestly put it, when I pressed him for a reason why he lingered where work was hard and pay was poor, "they needed a good doctor in the mountains."

The doctor's gig is passing away. It has been succeeded by the automobile in which the physician can go farther and faster and with less fatigue than in the old-fashioned way, and now instead of the horse that turned in of its own accord at a lane, or stopped by its own volition before a front door, we have the fussy, important machine that has ceased to be a marvel since it has rushed into all our streets, and made its way stormily into our literature. Somehow we regret the old-fashioned gig, although we cannot but rejoice that the motor-car enables the doctor to pay more visits, heal more sick people and do a great deal more good in a day than he could have done a few years back.

If ever a day shall dawn when health shall become universal and illness the exception, we shall feel that earth is taking on the hue of heaven. One of the joys promised in heaven is that there shall be no more pain, no more sorrow, no more parting within its gates. There the inhabitants shall never say "I am sick."

One of the most beautiful and inspiring things that we read in the Gospels, as they tell the sweet story of our Saviour's earthly life, is that he healed all the sick who were brought to him. They came one by one, or in crowds, but the dear Lord healed them all. There is something in the profession of healing that is very nearly allied to the divine ideal, which was of a ministry both to the soul and the suffering body.

Flowers for the Pulpit

As a rule the providing of flowers for the pulpit from Sunday to Sunday is in the hands of a Flower Committee, usually composed of young ladies. In city churches, money must be raised for the purpose, and often this is done by the Christian Endeavor, Epworth League or Young People's Guild. An arrangement is then made with a florist, who furnishes flowers or palms for every Sunday in the year,

THE FIRESIDE STORY

Happy indeed are the children who live in an old-fashioned house which contains a fireplace where the logs crackle cheerily on autumn evenings. The place for the story hour is before the fireplace, and the tales of brave men and good women, as they fall from the mother's lips, somehow seem more real in the half-light as the sparks go up the chimney.

Easter and Christmas requiring extra funds and extra plants. The flowers are frequently sent to the sick at the close of the day. In the country, or in villages where flowers abound in gardens, every one is glad to have a share in decorating the church, and the principal duty of the committee is to decide what flowers they will have according to the season, and to see that they are freshly gathered and carried to the church early on Sunday morning. Wild flowers, as the daisy and the laurel, are very beautiful at either side of the pulpit, and if used should be arranged in great masses. Roses and lilies in their season are exceedingly beautiful for this hallowed use. Flowers beside the pulpit remind of the love of God, who gives us not only grain and fruit, but sows beauty broadcast on hillslope and valley, and plants many a wild garden where never foot of man has trod. The flowers help us to praise God, and if it can be helped no pulpit should be without them.

A Neighborhood Centre

A SHORT story in one of the magazines late described a little informal village library: the neighborhood centre. Long before it had occurred to a generous-hearted millionaire to dot the land with libraries, this lonesome little village in the New Hampshire hills had possessed a lending library of its own. It had grown as naturally as a plant from a seed and had unfolded with the fragrance of the rose from the bud. First, a small collection of books, contributed by one and another friend, had been free to everybody, in the wing of a certain deacon's house. Once a year the village people gave an entertainment, and the money thus made was annually expended in the purchase of new books. The books were chosen impartially to please the taste of members of the community, from the squire, the doctor and the minister to the boy and girls at school. When the library outgrew the deacon's house it found quarters in the Town Hall, and every week on library day the ladies of the parish each in turn took charge of the giving and receiving of the books. They had no catalogue, no fees, no red tape, but on library day people met one another socially, and the little room became a neighborhood centre. The ladies took turns in serving as librarian, and the men of the village every winter each contributed a load of wood for the heating of the room. All was simple, bright and friendly, and the books went out as messengers of delight or instruction to homes near and far. In an evil hour for the village a wealthy visitor from Chicago was stranded within its gates by reason of an accident to his automobile. He conceived the kind desire of donating to the village a perfectly-equipped modern library, and straightway sent an architect and a contractor with carte blanche to erect a charming edifice, and at the proper time when the edifice was completed he sent a graduate librarian and twenty thousand books. Pandora's box opened for the village with the advent of the librarian and the books. There was an end to the old simplicity, the village ceased to read, the exotic refused to take root in the new atmosphere, and a feeling of gratitude came over everyone when the building and the books were accidentally destroyed by fire. The villagers decided to decline any future gifts of the kind, and went contentedly back to their cozy, shabby, comfortable neighborhood centre, the old library.

In suburban boroughs there is usually to-day a country club, an assembly room or a grange that focuses to itself the social life of the neighborhood. Commuters going back and forth on morning and evening trains become pretty well acquainted, and a woman's club, with its accompaniment of study classes and afternoon receptions, draws together the wives and daughters who stay at home while the men are engaged in business. Frequently, the church is the neighborhood centre, meaning to its members not alone an opportunity for worship and devotion, but for friendship and pleasant amenities six days out of seven. Our homes may be perfect in their love and trust, and within their doors we may be happy and contented, but we are the better for a larger life. Every group of homes that is united by a common bond of sympathy and good fellowship helps the town along, adds some brightness and stimulation to individuals and strengthens a principle of good neighborhood that makes us better citizens.

"BALTIMORE"

A TALE OF METROPOLITAN LIFE

I.

"JOHN BARKWELL!"

A ruddy-faced, young Irish patrolman stepped to the end of the prisoners' bench, where was huddled what seemed to be an inanimate bundle of filthy rags.

"Get up, Baltimore," he said roughly, though not altogether unkindly, "it's your tur-r-rn at th' rail."

The bundle started, shivered, and straightened up, disclosing the features of a man, though now so bloated and empurpled by many an evil debauch, so utterly lacking in every manly attribute, that the term became the veriest irony.

A week's accumulation of stubbly beard half-covered the prisoner's face, overshadowed by a shock of unkempt, matted hair, of that nondescript color known as grizzled, to which still clung several bits of the straw that had composed his last night's bed in the wagon where the policeman had found him. Two half-shut, heavy-lidded brown eyes looked piteously around the court-room, but nowhere found a friendly face. Dumb, hopeless, shifting eyes they were, that looked alike apprehensively at the judge, at the bluecoated policeman, and at the grimy, tremulous hands of their owner, as they wandered aimlessly over his tattered knees.

This was the man known to the records of the court as John Barkwell, but better known in those unclean haunts of the underworld by the simpler sobriquet of "Baltimore."

"John Barkwell — to the bar!" again came the monotonous sing-song of the court officer on the bridge.

"Baltimore" shuffled hesitatingly to the rail in front of the desk, and nodded apologetically to the magistrate. Evidently they were old acquaintances.

The judge glanced over the pile of legal papers that lay before him.

"What is the charge, officer?" he asked mechanically.

The ruddy-faced policeman smiled his surprise.

"Shure it's 'Baltimore,' yer honor," he replied, as if that statement answered the question, "an' it's th' same old charge, intoxication. It's th' second toime he's been here wid me in two months," he added, "an' I guess he's lookin' to be sent away for the winter."

The magistrate made no comment, and continued his search for the missing document. It had been a long and fatiguing morning, but the docket was now nearly empty, and he felt that he could spend a few moments on a case which he usually disposed of with a wave of his hand—toward the cells in the rear of the court-room; the more so as he knew that "Baltimore," old offender as he was, never was at a loss for some new and original excuse to account for his presence there.

He remembered four years before, just after his appointment to the bench, when "Baltimore"—he had not looked quite so disreputable then—had first been arraigned before him. He had believed the man's plausible story, deeming that the police had made some error, and discharged him. A shadow of a smile flitted across the judicial countenance as he recalled that less than a month later, "Baltimore" had again been arraigned, and with a brand new explanation. Since then he had been a regular visitor to the court.

Howbeit, there was no trace of amusement in the judge's voice when he spoke.

"Balt—Barkwell," he said sternly to the shrinking man at the rail, "how many times have you been before me during the past two months?"

"Baltimore" essayed a ghastly grin, but made no

By MERRITT CRAWFORD

response. In the lower depths of his dull understanding, he felt that this time excuses were useless and superfluous. Only a week before he had been discharged from the "Island," after serving what his companions called a "t'irty-day stretch," administered by the magistrate who now faced him, and he was convinced that at least three, if not six, months' imprisonment awaited him. He shifted from one foot to the other, and fidgeted nervously, but remained silent.

The burly officer on the bridge bent over toward him threateningly.

"Dijer hear th' judge ask yer a question?" he growled, taking a step toward the rail.

"Baltimore" cowered from the blow he felt was imminent.

"I was up here on'y three times, yer honor," he whined hastily.

Everyone within hearing distance tittered, but the excuses that the knowing ones expected were not forthcoming. Instead, the usually verbose

The judge was a whimsical, but kindly man, and he could not bear to see a woman's tears. As Mrs. Donovan left the room, loudly declaring her gratitude, he noticed that "Baltimore" was endeavoring to attract his attention. Perhaps the pleadings of this gray-haired woman had awakened memories of that other tender mother, who had watched over the cradle of this outcast long ago, for the dumb, brown eyes were filled with a strange sadness.

The judge looked at him curiously. Could this man, in whom every good impulse seemed dead, really have a better nature? he wondered. Strange that in all the time he had known him he had certainly never observed any indication of it, if he had. His thoughts were interrupted by the unmusical voice of the prisoner.

"I was drunk last night, yer honor," he said huskily, with the hoarse accents of the habitually intemperate man, "an' I have only been off th' Island a week—th' third trip there inside o' two months—but I'd like ter get a chance, Judge," he added, "just one chance." He lifted his voice a little, and went on. "They all know me"—he indicated the waiting policemen with a wave of his tremulous hand—"an' where do I get a show t' do better? I can't go nowhere but some o' them tells me ter move on, an' if I don't do it quick enough ter suit they fans me with their clubs, or runs me in. W'at can I do?" he queried plaintively, "w'at can I do? I never harmed anyone but myself, yet none of 'em's got anythin' but a hard word or a blow fer ol' Baltimore. I try ter earn my livin', but how can I, w'en they set on me wherever I go?"

"Baltimore" paused more from lack of breath than because he had finished, and the crowd tittered again, though not so loudly as before. This was certainly a new line of defense.

"If you'd only tell 'em ter leave me alone, Judge," quavered the prisoner, "an' give me a chance!" He had discovered some sign of wavering in the judge's eye, and was quick to take advantage of it.

The magistrate lifted his pen irresolutely.

"What can you do to earn your living?" he asked doubtfully, evidently struck with some sudden thought.

"Most anythin', yer honor," was the ready answer, "but mainly, I'm a—I'm a—I—er—sell kindlin's, sir."

The judge turned for information to his attendant, as another ripple of laughter swept over the room.

"He's what they call a 'woodchuck,' your honor," volunteered that official contemptuously, "a 'rock-carpenter.' A man who collects old boards and such wherever he can find 'em, and then breaks 'em up with a cobble-stone so's he can sell 'em for kindling-wood."

"Yes, that's it—that's it," agreed the prisoner, nervously wiping his dry lips with the back of his grimy hand.

The judge pondered a moment.

"Do you think you could keep sober, Barkwell," he asked kindly, "and really do something better, if I gave you the opportunity? Remember, the winter is coming on," he added.

Whatever may have been passing in "Baltimore's" mind just then is hard to guess, but his reply came without hesitation.

"I ain't always been a 'woodchuck,' yer honor," he said readily, yet withal tremulously, "an' if I had a fair show, I b'lieve I could."

The magistrate's fingers drummed thoughtfully

Continued on page 878

"Barkwell," said the Judge at last, "I am going to give you the chance you ask for"

"Baltimore" relapsed into his former dogged silence. "Have you anything to say, Barkwell?" asked the judge perfunctorily; "remember, this time I shall have to be pretty severe."

"I'll give him six months," he was thinking; "the winter's coming on and the poor fellow will be better off there, anyway—besides, it's what he really wants." He started to fill out the commitment papers when he was interrupted by the approach of a gray-haired woman, who had forced her way past the gate-keeper, and now stood before him.

"Yer honor," she said pleadingly, "I'm Mrs. Donovan—the mother o' Patsy—who ye sint away this marnin'."

The judge looked puzzled.

"Let me have 'im back, Judge—plaze let me have 'im back," she went on chokingly; "he's all Oi have in th' world. 'Tis the fir-r-st toime he's iver been arrested, an' he'll niver do it agin, Judge, if ye'll only let 'im go this wanst. Fer Patsy's a good bye, barrin' that he does take a drop too much now an' thin. Plaze let 'im go fer th' sake o' his poor ould mither." The warm tears were streaming down Mrs. Donovan's honest, wrinkled face, and the smiles had wholly vanished from the faces of the on-lookers.

"Come in at the afternoon session, Mrs. Donovan," said the magistrate kindly, as he strove to recall the case from the mass which he had decided that morning, "and I'll see if I can help you."

THE SUCCESS OF THE AERONAUTS

ALL the world seems to have become possessed with the idea that it must attach wings to itself and enter into competition with the birds of the air. What a short time it seems since the intelligent part of the community would smile indulgently when it was announced that some one was experimenting with a flying machine; a general raising of eyebrows and significant exchange of glances greeted the inventor's approach. To-day every civilized country in the world has its experimenters; their efforts are watched with interest, and cheers greet their success, and sympathy their failure.

There are several different flying machines that are being tested beside the old round balloon which goes wherever the wind listeth, and which is not popular for military purposes, as it would just as likely as not deposit the scouts in the very centre of the enemy's camp or float gently within easy range of his guns. The dirigible balloon, long and narrow, and carrying a propelling and steering apparatus, and the aeroplane are now striving for first place.

Of the long dirigible balloons and the aeroplanes there are almost as many varieties as there are inventors. The best of the dirigibles was that of Count Zeppelin of Germany, which was recently destroyed by fire after making a phenomenal flight of several hours, carrying nine passengers, going over two hundred miles.

On the cover page of this issue appears an accurate picture of the Wright machine, the most successful aeroplane yet constructed. The two wings, or planes, as they are called, are each forty feet in length by six and a half wide. They have a surface of 500 square feet. The wings have a space of six feet between them. The rudder has a surface of about seventy-five square feet. Its planes are two and a half feet wide and sixteen feet long. The Wright aeroplane used in this country is controlled by three levers or cranks. The machine used by Wilbur Wright in France has but two. In the American machine one controls the horizontal rudders and the others the main planes. Raising or lowering one of the great planes helps the rudder to change the course of the machine. The frame of the aeroplane is made of wood strips, pine, ash, and spruce being used. The weight of the machine is about 800 pounds.

The motive power is furnished by a small gasoline motor. It is four-cylindered and water-cooled. Its average with the rod which runs back to the vertical steering plane at the left of the centre. In flight this is balanced by the manipulator and his passenger, who sits on the other side of the line. The engine is twenty-five horse power.

Wilbur Wright and a Passenger Ready for an Ascent speed is 1,400 revolutions every minute and the propellers are driven toward each other at five hundred revolutions per minute. These propellers are of wood and about six feet in diameter. They cost about $50 each.

It is set on the lower plane in line

The machine in flight averages about twenty-six miles an hour, and can be forced up to forty. When the machine is coming down it moves sometimes at the rate of half a mile a minute, and yet if all goes well the operator feels no jar. The machine slides on landing.

Start of the Great International Balloon Race in Berlin

The course of the machine upward or downward is regulated by the two small horizontal planes seen jutting forward from the main body. The two aeronauts sit on the forward edge of the lower plane with their feet on a brace. The machine is started by being pushed on a monorail and then being suddenly jerked forward by blow and tackle. It always rises against the wind.

A monoplane, the invention of C. V. Williams, is being tried out on the grounds of the Aeronautic Society at Morris Park, New York. Mr. Williams's machine differs much from the Wright machine. There is one great overhead surface made up of four canvas planes all on the same level from which the machinery is suspended, the operator being some feet below the centre; consequently the machine appears to be well balanced in fact, is much like a great parachute and it is claimed it cannot be turned over.

While the inventors of the aeroplanes have been skimming about with varying success, the large balloon with which we are all familiar, is still holding its place in the interest of those who are studying the navigation of the air. One of the remarkable balloon races in history has just taken place in Europe, the competitors representing most of the European countries and the United States. The trophy competed for was the famous James Gordon Bennett cup. The American balloon, The Conqueror, met with an accident when it reached the height of 3,000 feet. The bag burst and all expected to see the occupants of the car dashed to pieces on the roofs below.

It dropped rapidly at first and then the bag filled with air like a parachute. It drifted slowly away and landed a little later on the roof of a house in a suburb of Berlin.

The wind bore the remaining racers, twenty-two in number, off toward Russia and misfortune seemed to go with them. Several of the balloons fell into the North Sea and swift launchers chased them to save the aeronauts. One balloon was found floating with not a sign of its passengers. It is supposed they perished, as there seems little chance that any ship was in the locality at the time.

JAPAN'S WELCOME TO THE FLEET

OUR battleship fleet arrived in the harbor of Yokohama, October 18, at 9:30 A.M., and was accorded a welcome by the Japanese officials and people which proved beyond all doubt the sincerity and friendship of that nation. Three Japanese cruisers met the fleet outside the harbor and acted as an escort. In the harbor they were greeted by sixteen Japanese warships. The roar of saluting guns, the dipping of flags on the decorated vessels, and the cheers of hundreds of thousands of spectators on other craft and on shore, made the scene memorable.

Then came formal calls, entertainments, receptions, dinners, etc., in an endless round. Almost every prominent Japanese gave expression to his pleasure and satisfaction at the fleet's visit, and the highest tributes were paid to the United States, to President Roosevelt and to the officers and men of our fleet.

Tokyo, the capital, gave a magnificent welcome to Admiral Sperry and his officers, who were the special guests of the government during a whole week. The enthusiasm of the populace was overwhelming and the street decorations superb. There were wonderful arches raised specially for the Americans; the Japanese musicians played American tunes; processions of school children welcomed our men with shouts of "Banzai!" and singing "Hail, Columbia!" The principal American officers were entertained at the Shiba palace, the others at the Imperial Hotel, and each had private carriages at his disposal.

Greatest of all the events, however, was the Mikado's reception to the American officers, which is declared to have been the most brilliant the Imperial Palace has ever witnessed. All the heroes of the Japanese army and navy were present. Ambassador O'Brien accompanied the American officers through crowded streets, lined with people bearing American and Japanese flags. The Emperor greeted Admiral Sperry in the Imperial Palace, the latter being presented in the audience chamber by our ambassador. Emperor and admiral talked a few minutes. Then Admiral Sperry delivered President Roosevelt's message to the Emperor. The other American officers were then taken to the audience chamber and duly presented. The Emperor shook hands with each. At the luncheon which followed, he sat at the same table with the Americans and remained throughout the repast, which was a most elaborate one. After the luncheon, he again expressed his pleasure at receiving Admiral Sperry and his officers. Each officer received a silver box with the royal crest as a souvenir of the occasion.

The American officers were next presented to the Empress, who received them with marked cordiality.

President Roosevelt's message to Rear-Admiral Sperry for transmission to the Emperor was as follows:

Sperry, Flagship Connecticut, Yokohama:

Convey to His Majesty, the Emperor of Japan, my best wishes for his continued good health and happiness and that of all the inhabitants of his realm. Express to His Majesty the high gratification afforded me and the people of the United States at this opportunity which permits the commander in chief of the Atlantic fleet in person to present my appreciation of the friendship which has existed from the earliest time between the United States and Japan and of the honor to the United States in this invitation to the United States Atlantic fleet to visit the Empire of Japan in its practice cruise around the world. You will present to His Majesty, the Emperor, my earnest wish for the strengthening and continuance of the cordial relations which exist and have always existed between the two countries.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The Emperor's reply, transmitted through Admiral Sperry, was as follows:

Admiral Sperry, it affords me especial pleasure to welcome you as the representative of the American navy and to receive through you from your respected President his very friendly message. I request you to assure the President that I most sincerely appreciate and most cordially reciprocate his sentiments of friendship and good will. It is a source of profound satisfaction to me that the most cordial relations of regard and good correspondence exist between Japan and the United States, and my thanks are due to the President for affording my subjects by your visit an opportunity to give new proof of their sincere attachment for your countrymen.

I also wish you to convey to the President this message: The historic relations of good understanding and genuine friendship with the United States I count as a valued heritage of my reign, and it shall be in the future, as it has been in the past, my constant aim and desire to weld the ties of amity uniting the two countries into indissoluble bonds of good neighborhood and perfect accord. I trust that the same success which has so far attended your voyage may still be with you to the end.

If you enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, your friends may do the same. Please tell them about it.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES

Temperance Organizations*

NO MANY of us it has seemed as though the temperance organizations had been of late years, perhaps not less active than of yore, but less effective. Asking a president of a W. T. U. branch in a large New England town why this was so, she replied, "don't know how it is in other parts of the country, but with us, we are discouraged by the attitude of the ministers and the church members. With our ministers preaching, as several prominent ones have lately done in our papers and magazines, that moderate drinking is good for everybody, and that alcohol is a legitimate food; and with church members giving receptions and serving strong punch at them, we are almost in despair."

It was no wonder. When those of a man's own household become his foes, what is left to him?

It has long been a wonder to many of us that professed followers of Christ should ever take for pleasure any kind of strong drink, in view of the awful curse upon society which everybody admits drunkenness to be. The glass of wine at dinner may add elegance to the feast. It may be that it is sometimes necessary to the health, and is prescribed by a physician. In that case, it may be allowable; but its benefit is very doubtful to the general health of usually well people in America, where pure drinking water can almost always be obtained. Watch the digestion of fifty wine drinkers against that of fifty total abstainers, both kinds picked out at random, and see how they compare. In cases where such a comparison has been made, the total abstainers have been far in advance of the wine drinkers in point of strength and efficiency. In fact, acknowledged invalids aside, it is usually only intemperate eaters who need spirituous liquors to aid their digestion.

It is little enough that the ordinary individual can do for the cause of so-called temperance, and to show his disapprobation of drunkenness; but he can at least set a personal example of abstinence. Then, when he sees a fellow being reeling through the streets; or when he hears of some family heart broken through the intemperance of one or more of its members, he can lift his hand to heaven and say, "I thank thee, O Lord, that I am guiltless of his man's blood, for never by look or act have I commended the awful thing which has worked his ruin."

To lend any aid to the saloon—to put even five cents into the till of one, something no Christian ought to do. The saloon is one of the worst enemies of our country. Patriotism no less than religion demands its extinction. All good women abhor it, and it should be equally abhorred by all good men.

Read the life of any criminal or any reformed man. In nine cases out of ten, you will find that he was led into sin by rum.

A few days ago, on a Sunday evening, in a city which has perhaps more than the usual proportion of good people, and which was long known as the City of Churches, those on their way to evening service were shocked to see a party of boys, some looking not more than twelve years old, and none of them more than sixteen, staggering along a quiet street, in a state of almost blind intoxication. Where were the temperance societies? Where were the parents? Where were the ministers? It was a sickening—a horrible sight.

Never was the call to labor in this great reform more urgent than now. Let all who love our Lord Jesus in sincerity fly to the support of those who are fighting its good fight.

*Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, November 15. Temperance meeting. Text: Jer. 15: 1-19.

Soul Winning*

THE modern preaching is usually of love. Love is indeed the greatest thing in the world. It is well that we should strive to love all our fellow beings, and that we should dwell much upon the endless love of the All-Father; but there has been one bad consequence following the practical exclusion from our thought of the justice of God. Has it not resulted oftentimes in the sealing of our lips when we have approached the impenitent?

We forget the awful words, "He that is not for me is against me." We do not realize that a soul remaining in sin is hardening every day and growing more and more unworthy of the salvation of God; probably, also, weaker to withstand temptation; and that it is virtually without hope and God in the world.

Dr. Louis Albert Banks has issued a volume of discourses which he calls "Sermons That Have Won Souls." We cannot all preach to masses of men and move them as Dr. Banks has been privileged to do—as Wesley, Whitefield, Asbury, Finney, Moody and Torrey have done—but we can touch individuals and thus increase our one talent, serving the Master as truly as did these fiery-souled disciples, upon whom he bestowed the ten talents.

It may have happened to many as it happened to a certain young woman in a Western city, that when she expressed a deep desire that her brother should become a Christian, one who was present asked, "Why do you not try to make me a Christian?" "I thought it was hopeless," she answered shame-facedly. "I have heard you make fun of churches and ministers, and I thought you had hardened your heart against religion." "Then," he answered truly, "you cannot really believe that your God can do anything and everything." "No," she confessed penitently, "I have sinned—but I beg you now to come to him. Let us pray over it."

They dropped upon their knees together, and she poured out a broken prayer for her friend's conversion. It was heard, and he is now one of the stanchest members of a great Western church.

Nothing is too hard for our God. Dr. Banks tells how the Rev. Hugh Price Hughes met an Oxford don in the street and said: "Excuse me, but I am irresistibly led to ask you, 'What do you think of Jesus Christ?' Do you know him as your Saviour?"

The don replied with evident emotion, "I have been waiting twenty years for some one to ask that question."

He was soon enrolled in the list of ardent and devoted Christians.

If we pray for the salvation of our friends, it is well, but that is not enough. Laborare est orare was the old motto of the fathers—to labor is to pray. We must have both sorts of prayer—the lip prayer and the prayer of aggressive, hard hand-work. We are too timid, too lethargic. It is easier to go into our closets and talk with God than it is to face the ungodly and try to win them from their sins. But God is saying to us as he said to Moses, "Why criest thou to me? Go forward! Lift thou up the rod."

A great source of strength in this matter is the reading of the lives of the great Christians. Read the life of Lord Lawrence, of Livingston, of John Newton, of Drummond. See how, when the way seemed hard and full of lions, God helped them, and he stands ready to help us also.

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, November 15. Text: James 5: 20; Dan. 12: 3; Ezek. 33: 7-15.

Purity Essential

In no other form of food is Purity so absolutely essential as in milk products. Richness is also necessary, as without richness, milk is of little value as a food. Purity and richness are the embodiment of Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk. As a food for infants or for general household purposes it has no equal.

The only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar is

Royal BAKING POWDER

Royal Grape Cream of Tartar is made from selected luscious Grapes

Absolutely Pure

Safeguards the food against Alum

CORNISH Sent To You For A Year's Free Trial

Name Your Own Price and Terms.

Why Shouldn't You Buy As Low As Any Dealer?

More than 265,000 people have saved from $25 to $150 in purchasing a high grade organ or piano by the Cornish plan. Here is our offer. You select any of the latest, choicest Cornish styles of instruments,—we place it in your home for a year's free use before you need make up your mind to keep it. You state your own terms, taking two years to pay if needed. That's the Cornish plan in brief. You save one-third to one-half what any other maker of high grade instruments must charge you—you buy as low as any dealer.

The New Cornish Book shows the choicest of 50 latest beautiful and artistic Cornish styles and explains everything you should know before buying any instrument. It shows why you cannot buy any other fine organ or piano anywhere on earth as low as the Cornish. You should have this book before buying any piano or organ anywhere. Let us send it to you free.

Save one-third—buy on the Cornish plan.

CORNISH CO. Washington, N. J. Established Over 56 Years

Violin Music Free

We want many thousands more violin players to know our celebrated "ROOT VIOLINS" and Certificate of Guarantee or Investment Offer. For the names of five violin players, we will give you a 50-cent music book containing 24 pieces of copyright music, Waltzes, Two-Steps, etc., printed on fine paper, also our new handsome illustrated color catalog of Violins, Guitars, Mandolins, Strings, Bows, etc. Write names and addresses plainly and enclose 10 cents for mailing charge on your music book.

E. T. ROOT & SONS

111 Patten Bldg. (Established 1857) CHICAGO

PULPITS. Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Desks, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only. C112 Church Fronts, School Desks B112 L112 Lodge Furniture Opera Chairs B112 B112 Bank Furniture Office Desks B112 E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"
Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set"
From a recent statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM.

AGENTS

are coming money. Claude H. Rogers sells 500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $3 to $10 a day. OUT-FIT FREE to workers. THOMAS MFG. CO. 423 Home Bldg Dayton, Ohio

15 CENTS trial 13 wks. In this illustrated national weekly all the important news of the world is stated clearly, fairly and briefly, for busy readers. Many special features of great interest. It is sincere, reliable, entertaining. —The paper for the home. $1 year; takes place of 8 to 12 papers. Try it 13 weeks for 15c. Pathfinder, Wash., D. C.

Any lamp, kitchen or parlor, looks better and gives better light, if fitted with a MACBETH lamp-chimney.

My chimneys fit; that means no smoke or smudge, no flickering flames.

My chimneys are made of glass that won't break from heat; that is clear as crystal. My name is on every one.

My guide, sent free, shows which is the right chimney for each lamp.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh

LABLACHE

FACE POWDER

AFTER THE SUMMER

Beautiful women everywhere use Lablache. Do you? It freshens and soothes the skin, making it clear and velvety. A toilet delight. Many imitators, but no equal.

Refuse substitutes. They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream, 25c. a box, of druggists or by mail.

Send 10c. for sample box. BEN. LEVY CO., French Perfumers, Dept. 22, 125 Kingston St., Boston, Mass.

TRADE MARK
FABRIC PAT. DEC. 1905
DESIGN PAT. DEC. 1905
Porosknit
REG. U.S. PAT. OFF.

For Boys - 25c.

Make your boy cool next summer with a suit of underwear like his father's. It lets the skin breathe, absorbs perspiration, prevents chills. Healthful, elastic, durable, comfortable.

Buy from dealers. GET THIS LABEL - on all styles. Men's 50c. a garment. Chalmers Knitting Co., 30 Washington St., Amsterdam, N.Y.

Made to Your Measure
by hand from choice new skins
(which outwear old stock in a store)

Guaranteed
Cummings Glove Pro $1 and paid up
Cape, Glace, Chamois, Silk—standard colors, all lengths, at factory prices. Winter Gloves, Children's Gloves. Write for our Style Book. Cummings Glove Co., 16 Forest St. Gloversville, N.Y.

LADIES ARE MAKING $3 TO $10 A DAY

Selling made-to-order C.Y.C. Corsets for stout women. You need only to show it to sell it. Our line also includes Bust Forms and other corsets. More ladies wanted to sell these goods. Write to-day.

WRIGHT FORMETTE CO.
134-J West 14th St., New York City

Angel's Lullaby: "Only Asleep"

This song has been composed as an ideal song for our loved ones sleeping. Tender, pathetic, beautiful in its simplicity. Arranged for solo; may be sung in a quartet. Sent Postpaid for 25 Cents (Silver). The Bright-Hayford Co., 23 North 6th St., Minneapolis, Minn.

Cook Book Free Write at once for copy of

"Kitchen Krinkles" Mrs. RORER

Rollman Mfg. Co., 183 Penn Ave., Mount Joy, Pa.

PATENTS that PROTECT

Our 3 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 6 cts. stamps. S. & A. B. LACEY, Rooms 20-30 Pacific Bldg., Wash., D.C.

HE CARETH FOR YOU*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THIS is the nightingale of the Psalms. It is small, of a homely feather, singing shyly out of obscurity, but oh, it has filled the air of the whole world with melodious joy, greater than the heart can conceive. Blessed be the day on which that Psalm was born! What would you say of a pilgrim commissioned of God to travel up and down the earth singing a strange melody, which, when one heard, caused him to forget whatever sorrow he had? And so the singing angel goes on his way through all lands, singing in the language of every nation, driving away trouble by the pulses of the air, which his tongue moves with divine power. Behold just such a one! This pilgrim God has sent to speak in every language. It has charmed more griefs to rest than all the philosophy of the world. It has remanded to their dungeons more felon thoughts, more black doubts, more thieving sorrows than there are sands on the seashore. It has comforted the noble hosts of the poor. It has sung courage to the army of the disappointed. It has poured balm and consolation into the hearts of the rich, of captives in dungeons, of widows in their pinching griefs, of orphans in their loneliness. Dying soldiers have died easier as it was read to them, ghastly hospitals have been illuminated. It has visited the prisoner, and broken his chains, and, like Peter's angel, led him forth in imagination, and sung him back to his house again. It has made the dying Christian slave freer than his master, and consoled those whom, dying, he left behind him mourning, not so much that he was gone, as because they were left behind and could not go, too. Nor is its work done. It will go singing to your children, and to my children, and to their children, through all the generations of time; nor will it fold its wings till the last pilgrim is safe, and time ended; and then it shall fly back to the bosom of God whence it issued, and sound on, mingled with all those sounds of celestial joy which make heaven musical forever.—Henry Ward Beecher.

Authorship of the Twenty-Third Psalm

It was written by David, whether as shepherd or king we do not know. We incline to think as king. It seems too full of experience to have been uttered by so young a person as David the shepherd boy. If written in after years the things which he had seen and felt as a shepherd were mellowed with age, just as a picture is more beautiful when it is old.

"The Lord is my shepherd." We must study the ways of the Oriental shepherd in order to appreciate the divine Shepherd. In our land, sheep are turned loose in the field to care for themselves. Perhaps once or twice a day some one will go to look after them. But the Oriental shepherd, the type of Christ, abides with his sheep by day and night. And so we are never out of God's sight, and his ear is ever open to our cry.

"I shall not want." How can we ever want with him looking at us and after us? He tells us that he knows what things we have need of before we ask him (Matt. 6: 8). But he desires that we shall ask him for what we want. The asking makes us more loving, and in the end more grateful.

"He maketh me to lie down in green pastures." The grass was needed for two purposes: for food and for rest. And so the shepherd never led his sheep into barren fields. When the shepherds of Abraham and Lot found that there was not enough grass to sustain the flocks and the herds of both masters, they began to quarrel with each other, but the masters themselves agreed to separate and live in different places, where there was no lack of grass. Our divine Shepherd promises abundant pasture to us. "No good thing will he withhold from them that walk uprightly." (Ps. 84: 11.)

"He leadeth me beside the still waters." In the margin of the Revised Version we read "waters of rest," and these are not the flowing, rippling streams that often become dry beds. The loving kindness of our divine Shepherd is like the never-failing deep well. Has he not said: "The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

"He restoreth my soul." The Oriental shepherd restores his sheep when it is lost and wandering. He knows when one is missing, because he counts them as they pass into the fold at night. He traverses near and far to find the lost one. And when he has found it, he brings it back, carrying it upon his shoulders or in his arms if it is too weak to walk.

Of the divine Shepherd we sing:

The Shepherd sought his sheep,
The Father sought his child;
He followed me o'er vale and hill,
O'er desert waste and wild;
He found me nigh to death,
Famished and faint and lone;
He bound me with the bands of love;
He saved the wandering one.

"He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness for his name's sake." The Oriental shepherd does not do as we have seen shepherds in our land, go behind his sheep and drive them ahead, and employ dogs to help in the driving, but he leads them, goes ahead of them, and the sheep follow on. The divine Shepherd came from heaven that he might show us the way from our sinful life below to his pure, sweet life above. Let us follow him by being and doing and loving like him.

"Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." Not only through sunny meadows did the Oriental shepherd lead his sheep. David, when he was a shepherd, living as he did where the hills were high, must sometimes have led his sheep through valleys that to timorous sheep must have seemed full of dangers. Among the people of Palestine it is quite common to speak of a valley as a shadow of death. In human life there are many deep, dark valleys of sorrow before the valley of death is reached. Through these valleys let us go trusting our divine Shepherd, saying:

I would rather walk with him by faith
Than walk alone by sight.

Poor desolate and afflicted Heinrich Heine, who had been a pantheist and a scoffer, was laid for years in what he called his "mattress sepulchre." There he took to reading the Psalms. One of his very last poems addressed to his wife bears the traces of the Shepherd Psalm:

My arm grows weak; Death comes apace,
Death, pale and grim; and I no more
Can guard my lamb as heretofore.
O God! into thy hands I render my crook;
Keep thou my lambkin tender.
When I in peace have laid me down,
Keep thou my lamb, and do not let
A single thorn her bosom fret;
And guide where pastures green and sweet
Refresh the wanderer's weary feet.

An Infidel Silenced

In gay Paris an infidel, noted for his eloquence, was asked to deliver an address in defense of his opinions. Among other things he said: "We are told by the clergy and the canting hypocrites that all infidels are harassed by fears of an approaching future. Sirs, I

Continued on next page

FREE A Paper Transfer
Pattern of this 22-cm.
BEAUTIFUL CENTERPIECE

The design is easily transferred to linen by passing a hot iron over the pattern. GIVEN until April 1, 1909, to every embroiderer sending 16 cents for our

New Embroidery Book for 1909

This book is entirely new and just off the press. It contains new ideas and designs. Invaluable to embroiderers showing what and how to embroider. Contains instructions for working above design; over 125 pages of other designs; hundreds of illustrations; complete instructions for all; diagrams for beginners.

THE NEW EMBROIDERY BOOK

Colored Plates showing the embroidery of flowers, vases, etc., in Wallachian, Lary, Eyelet and Mountmellick, and Work Designs: Centers and lies on Huck; Centers and lies with Net Insertion; House signs; Dainty Christmas No. Send 16c. for book and sample. One transfer Patten No. 1160A will be sent you. Ask for Pat. 1160A in letter. If more than one of this pattern is desired, price is 6c. each for duplicate. Book will reach you in an envelope and FREE pattern in separate envelope. Address

The Brainerd & Armstrong Co., 65 Union St., New London, Conn.

Music Lessons Free

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A wonderful offer to every lover of music, whether a beginner or an advanced player.

Ninety-six lessons (or a less number if you desire) for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Banjo, Cornet, Sight Singing or Mandolin will be given free to make our home study courses for the instruments known in your locality. You will receive one lesson weekly, and your only expense during the time you take the lessons will be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small. Write at once. It will mean much to you to get a free booklet. It will place you under no obligation whatever to us if you never write again. You and your friends should know of this work. Hundreds of our pupils write: "Wish I had known of this school before." "Have learned more in one term at my home with your weekly lessons than in three terms with private teachers, and at a great deal less expense." "Everything is so thorough and complete." "The lessons are marvels of simplicity." "My 11-year-old boy has not had the least trouble to learn." One minister writes: "As each successive lesson comes I am more and more fully persuaded I made no mistake in becoming your pupil."

Established 1868—have thousands of pupils from eight years of age to seventy.

Don't say you cannot learn music till you send for our free booklet and tuition offer. It will be sent to you return mail free. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

$3.25 Ease Your Feet

"THE PILLOW" SHOES

For Woman's Wear: absolute comfort for TIRED, TENDER FEET. A beautiful hand turned shoe, no breaking-in required; relief from pet Corns, Bunions; soft, flexible, durable, dress and stylish. The sole oak leather. The welt genuine Vici Kid, soft, pliable. RUBBER HEELS. No other shoe like it made. We guarantee to fit you perfectly. Absolute comfort and satisfaction or money cheerfully refunded. Oxford Style $3.00. Write to-day for our Free Illustrated Catalogue and special self-measure Blank and join Grand Army of delighted customers. Address

SUFFOLK SHOE COMPANY
184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

GIPSY SMITH

SPECIAL EDITION OF

HALLOWED HYMN

By I. ALLAN SANKEY, Son of IRA D. SANKEY

288 Pages JUST PUBLISHED Nearly 1

Responses $25 per 100 Returnable samples mailed to "Earnest Inquirers." 35c. mail

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

BECOME A NURSE

"I owe my success to the Chautauqua School of Nursing"

Mrs. Mary E. Tilton, King Ferry, N. Y.
"I have all the work I can do—receive $25 a week." Miss Virginia Aveni, 488 Nostrand St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
"On my last case I received $20 a week." Mrs. Elizabeth W. Stevick, 774 N. 23d St., Phila., Pa.

We trained these women in their own homes to become professional nurses.
We have trained thousands of others, beginners and practical nurses, to earn $10 to $30 a week.

YOU want a larger sphere of influence, greater independence and worthier remuneration, send TODAY for 52 page Blue Book explaining our method, interesting stories of experience by our graduates and endorsement by physicians.

Chautauqua School of Nursing 341 Main St., Jamestown, N. Y.

Convenient, Safe—Sound Investments at 5%

POST OFFICES and Postal Routes make it safer and easier to send and receive money by mail than to carry it over distances. Our LOCATION is the advantage that enables us to pay 5 PER CENT on sums deposited in safe, and Real Estate Mortgage Loans—and the mails enable every distant patron to share this advantage.

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, New York

Can Get $6.00 a year on every $100 you have if invested in our Guaranteed Certificates of Deposit. Write for the "Sulky Dollar" booklet.

Can Get 5% Interest on smaller sums.

Security is $2,000,000 First Mortgages deposited in trust of Germania Bank under State laws. No loss in 18 years.

GEORGIA STATE SAVINGS ASSN.,
10 York Street, Savannah, Ga.

Government Position for You

There are broad opportunities in the U. S. Civil Service for American men and women over 18. Life-long positions are granted to thousands every year. We enable you to qualify in your own home at small cost to pass any Civil Service Examination. Get Free Civil Service Book. International Correspondence School, Box 1105 Scranton, Pa.

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 for one invention. Book, "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in fourteen Manufacturers' Journal. Patent Obtained or Fee Returned
CHANDLER & CHANDLER, Patent Attorneys
Established 10 Years
1003 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

SAFE, CONVENIENT, PROFITABLE

Send postal to-day for book telling about this Company's 6% FIRST MORTGAGE BONDS. If you have money on deposit, or if you contemplate opening a savings bank account, you will be interested in this convenient and safe method.
REALTY MORTGAGE BOND CO.
324 Security Bldg., Minneapolis, Minn.

GOVERNMENT POSITIONS

46,712 Appointments were made to Civil Service positions during the past year. Good life positions at $840 to $1,500 per year. Excellent opportunities for young people. Thorough instruction by mail. Write for our Service Announcement, containing full information about all government examinations and questions regularly used by the Civil Service Commission.
COLUMBIAN CORRESP. COLLEGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Registered in U. S. Patent Office. Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick room. Worn in rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail, 25c a pair. Parker pays postage.
Look for Parker's name in every pair.
PARKER CO., DEPT. K 25 JAMES STREET, MALDEN, MASS.

Sunday School Lesson—Continued

stand before you to-night a witness to the falsity of the assertion, for even I, although a leader among those who espouse infidel doctrines, can proudly exclaim, "I fear no evil." At this point, a little boy, sitting in one of the front seats, said in a voice tiny and timid, and yet so distinct as to be heard throughout the hall: "But, sir, you have never been in the valley of the shadow of death." The effect produced was electric. The flowery orator was nonplused, and was hissed from the stage, while the little defender of God's Word was borne triumphantly from the building on the shoulders of the enthusiastic people.

It is said that people who dwell in lands where there is almost perpetual sunshine find it necessary to seek dark places in which to rest. When this is not done, they become victims of profound nervous depression or neurasthenia. Perhaps this will give us a new point of view for consideration of the valleys of affliction. For our soul's health we need the darkness of sorrow:

I cannot know why suddenly the storm
Should rage so fiercely round me in its wrath;
But this I know, God watches all my path,
And I can trust.

I may not draw aside the mystic veil
That hides the unknown future from my sight;
Nor know if for me waits the dark or light;
But I can trust.

I have no power to look across the tide
To know, while here, the land beyond the river;
But this I know, I shall be God's forever;
So I can trust.

So many are dying in the world, we could die to it! The deeper down in the well one goes, the clearer the stars appear in the heavens, even in the daytime; so the deeper into trial or suffering the true Christian sinks the farther up into heaven he sees, and the more fervent are his songs of thanksgiving.

"Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." One is for defense and the other for guidance. The staff is the club-like stick, and the sheep are comforted by it because they have seen their shepherd use it upon the wolves and the lions that have attacked them. They are comforted by the rod because the shepherd has used it to draw them out of thorn bushes and from between the rocks and out of the torrent, and they have passed under it when he was counting them as they entered the sheep-fold one by one, for the night.

How sweet and precious are the promises of the divine Shepherd to comfort us! From the wolf, Satan, he will defend us all the day long. And we have this assurance: that "he knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptations," and that he will keep all that are committed to his care. He is our rod and our staff.

"Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me," were the dying words of the great Scottish philosopher Sir William Hamilton.

"Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies." This does not refer to a banqueting table as is commonly supposed, but to the act of the Oriental shepherd in preparing the pasture for his sheep. There are apt to be poisonous plants in the grass, and sometimes snake-holes, out of which snakes come and bite the noses of the sheep. The careful shepherd prepares the table for his sheep by pulling up the poisonous plants and driving the snakes away. Shepherds neglecting to do this have been known to lose hundreds of sheep. Our divine Shepherd feeds us with bread for our bodies, and with bread for our souls. "The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it."

"Thou anointest my head with oil." As each sheep passes under the rod at the door of the fold at night the shepherd shows his tender care by inspecting each one. He has a horn filled with oil with which he anoints bruised or scratched places about the head. If a knee is injured, or a side bruised, he puts cedar tar upon it. Our divine Shepherd says, "As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you," and thus he anoints us for heart bruises.

THE LORD OUR SHEPHERD

By MRS. M. BAXTER

WHAT was it to David, and what is it to us, to have the Lord as our shepherd? The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want, is a personal relationship. He has undertaken the responsibility of me: he who is almighty, he whose name is love. How can I want? How can such an One fail me? He must cease to be my shepherd if he fails me; and I know that whatsoever God doeth it shall be for ever (Eccles. 3: 14); he cannot cease to be what he has undertaken to be. Therefore I cannot want. My God is to be trusted. He may test me and try me, but he cannot leave me nor forsake me. The tie which in grace he has established between him and me is eternal; nothing can change it. He will justify himself in his dealings with me; he has the plan. I have not; but I can trust him, for I have proved he is worthy to be trusted. I am unworthy, I have failed again and again, I have not in any way deserved his loving, faithful care, but because he has elected to be my shepherd, he cannot fail to do a shepherd's part. I shall not want. "He maketh me to lie down." It is the first introduction to his care.

And then, after a long rest, "He leadeth me." Oh, the intense security of knowing that where he is in charge I shall not go wrong; he has undertaken to lead me. And his first leading was "in green pastures, beside still waters;" an absolute rest in knowing that one was certain of the way.

Probably David's great fall had not taken place when this psalm was written, and if so, it was a prophecy of the grace of God when that dreadful time came. Had not David fallen and been restored, the oil from the crushed olives of his broken heart would never have reached us through Psalms 51 and 32. And we should never have had such psalms as those written in such brokenness and such reliance upon God, as those (Ps. 3-7), which were written when David fled from Absalom; when the evil out of his own house (II. Sam. 3: 11), the bitter foretold fruit of his sin, had come upon him. "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death"—not through death itself—"I will fear no evil." There are times in all our lives when we come to the borders of despair, when it seems to us as though we could no longer see God as we have seen him. There is one resource to hold on to: "that which is written." "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee."

"Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies." The Eastern shepherd, in the high mountains, risks his own life sometimes in seeking the pastures hidden in valleys high up, where there are many dangers for the shepherd and the sheep. But the shepherd is there to guard them, and in the presence of the wild animals or poisonous plants he finds them nourishment. And our Shepherd, in the difficult places, where we may be shut away from outward help, prepares a table before us in the presence of our enemies.

If you enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, your friends may do the same. Please tell them about it.

Cover Drawing By HOWARD CHANDLER CHRISTY

This Handsome Catalogue of Useful Christmas Gifts is Yours—FREE

All you need to do is to write NOW for your FREE copy of the "NATIONAL" Catalogue of USEFUL CHRISTMAS GIFTS. It will be sent you FREE, post paid, just as soon as we get your letter.

This "NATIONAL" Christmas Book completely answers the Christmas question. It is filled from cover to cover with pleasing gifts—the kind every woman would like to buy for herself, gifts of Beauty and Usefulness.

This Christmas let us solve the question of "What to Give" by enabling you to make your selection from New York's choicest stocks. Let us send you this Christmas Book FREE—write for it TODAY.

It shows in full variety the newest, choicest offerings in

GIFT APPAREL for Women, Misses and Children
Waists Furs Skirts
Sweaters Underwear Handkerchiefs
Gift Hosiery Plumes Neckwear
Feather Boas Kimonos Belts
Fur and Cloth Coats Cloth and Voile Costumes

The "NATIONAL" Policy

Every "NATIONAL" Garment has the "NATIONAL GUARANTEE TAG" attached—a signed guarantee to refund your money if you are not satisfied.

We prepay all express charges on "NATIONAL" Garments to any part of the United States.

Doubtless you have been reading our Ads. for years and have often been on the point of answering, but have ended by laying the magazine down and forgetting about it.

Won't you, this time, write NOW, before you lay this magazine down? Just say, "Send me my free copy of the 'NATIONAL' Christmas Book." Don't do it to-morrow, or next week, but NOW—TODAY.

National Cloak & Suit Co.

218 West 24th Street, New York City
Largest Ladies' Outfitting Establishment in the World.
Mail Orders Only. No Agents or Branches.

4 50cent Drawnwork $1.00 Handkerchiefs for 1=

These beautiful handkerchiefs imported and made especially for us by the most skilled workers are warranted all genuine hand drawnwork on sheer handkerchief linen lawn; 4 different designs, regular value 50 cents each. As a Special Introductory Offer to interest you in our Holiday Offerings of Genuine Mexican Drawnwork, Indian Handicraft and Native Gems, all direct from our native workers to you, we will send all 4 Handkerchiefs illustrated, postpaid to any address for only $1.00. The same handkerchiefs, but in sheer pure Irish linen for only $1.50. Satisfaction Guaranteed or money cheerfully refunded.

Our Holiday Catalog of Native Handicraft sent FREE anywhere. Complete 108 page Art Catalog for 6 cents in stamps.

THE FRANCIS E. LESTER CO.
Dept. E 11. Mesilla Park, New Mex.

PROFITABLE BUSINESS FOR LADIES

You can make a good income by devoting part or all of your time to selling, to your neighbors, our CHOICE LINE of SILK, COTTON and WOOL DRESS GOODS for LADIES. Large Variety—Latest Novelties—Splendid Values. We want one person in every community as our representative. Agents are protected in territory and their profits are large. Write at once for particulars to Dept. 11.

A. M. MOSELEY & CO., MILL AGENTS
59 LEONARD STREET, - NEW YORK CITY

BEAUTIFUL WORDS WITH MUSIC. "Cast Thy Burden Upon the Lord." Mailed flat, 10 cents. Francis Thompson, P.O. Box 8, Station L, Dept. 35, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Kalamazoo

Man = Tailored Walking Skirt

Let Me Send You FREE Samples and QUOTE YOU PRICES

Made to Your INDIVIDUAL MEASURE

I Believe that we are showing to-day the best and most complete line of skirt material in America.

I Know that we have the greatest establishment in the world devoted exclusively to making skirts to individual order.

I Promise you that we will make to your individual measure, a better skirt for less money than you get anywhere else.

I will make you a skirt from any material you may select from our samples, and send it to you, express prepaid. If you do not find it perfectly satisfactory in style, fit and finish, I will send back your money by return mail. The saving to you of $2 or $3 or $5 is well worth while, but the extra satisfaction is worth much more to you. Now, I can't send you our new Fall and Winter Styles Catalog and samples unless you send me your name. Are you not interested enough to get yourself how much we save you? Of course you are. Write to-day and get our style book by return mail. Address:

This Skirt Only - $5.41
Made to Your Measure
Express Prepaid

KALAMAZOO SUIT CO.,
311 Main St., Kalamazoo, Mich.
Makers of Man-Tailored Walking Skirts,
Petite and Children's Dresses

Do You Hear Well?

The Stolz Electrophone—A New, Scientific and Practical Invention for Those Who Are Deaf or Partially Deaf—May Now be Tested in Your Own Home.

Deaf or partially deaf people may now make a month's trial of the Stolz Electrophone at home. This is unusually important news for the deaf, for by this plan the final selection of the one completely satisfactory hearing aid is made easy and inexpensive for everyone.

This new invention (U. S. Patent No. 763,575) renders unnecessary such clumsy, unsightly and frequently harmful devices as ear trumpets, horns, tubes, ear drums, fans, etc. It is a tiny electric telephone that fits on the ear, and which, the instant it is applied, magnifies the sound waves in such manner as to cause an astonishing increase in the clearness of all sounds. It overcomes the buzzing and roaring ear noises, and also so constantly and electrically reproduces the vital parts of the ear that, usually, the natural, unaided hearing itself is gradually restored.

Prominent Business Man's Opinion

STOLZ ELECTROPHONE CO., Chicago. I am pleased to say that the Electrophone is very satisfactory. Being small in size and great in hearing qualities makes it PREFERABLE to ANY I HAVE TRIED, and I have tried all of them. I can recommend it to all persons who have defective hearing. M. W. HOYT, Wholesale Grocer, Michigan Ave. and River St., Chicago.

Write or call at our Chicago office for particulars of our personal home test offer and list of prominent endorsers who will answer inquiries. Physicians cordially invited to investigate. Address or call (call if you can).

STOLZ ELECTROPHONE CO.,

1265 Stewart Building, Chicago

Branch Offices: Philadelphia, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Los Angeles, Seattle, Des Moines, Toronto.
Foreign Office: 82-85 Fleet St., London, Eng.

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure

THIS DOES IT ALL
CUTS TO THE END
SELF-SHARPENING
The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles establishes agents. V.C. Gishner Co., O., send 22 pairs of Positive Tension Shears in 2 hours, made $13.50. We guarantee TO SHOW ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $10 to $100 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents, that are not found in store than any other house in the U. S. Samples free to writers. INVOICE BY RETURN MAIL. A Postal will do. Address: Thomas Mfg. Co., 16 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS
SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE.
OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.
Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

AGENTS NINE IN ONE

$5 monthly. Combination Rolling Pin, Nine articles combined. Lightning Seller. Sample free. FORBES MFG. CO., Box 206 Dayton, O.

PATENTS SECURED OR FEE RETURNED.
Free report as to Patents. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.
EVANS, WILKINS & CO., WASHINGTON, D.C.

Strainer Spoon, Rapid Setter, Latex Machine, etc. $4 to $40 each.
RICHARDSON MFG. CO.
Dept. 6 BATH, N. Y.

AGENTS Portraits $5, Frames 15c.
sheet pictures by the dozen, 5c. each.
50 days' credit. Samples and Catalogue FREE.
Consolidated Portrait Co., 290-155 West Adams St., Chicago

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

LIFE AN ENDLESS CHAIN*

BEMERTON'S is a second-hand bookshop in London. A gentleman who has been abroad for many years, returns to London in the Indian summer of his life and settles down in lodgings over this shop. Being a friendly soul he establishes charming relations with the people in the house, and being a book-lover, the shop is the object of attraction to him on most days of the week. It happens one day that Mr. Bemerton is absent on an expedition in search of books to replenish the stock, while his niece, Miss Wagstaff, is suddenly summoned to her home by the alarming illness of her mother. Who shall take charge of the shop is the question that presents itself to the mind of Miss Wagstaff in her agitation, and who should step into the gap and serve her in her need but the genial aristocrat and true democrat, Mr. Kent Falconer, who lodges above. Of course, Mr. Falconer knows nothing about selling books, though the world of books is his familiar abiding place. He does, however, know human nature and he loves to lend a hand wherever he has opportunity. The chapter entitled "The Linkedness of Life" from which I make a quotation has impressed me anew with the thought that all our lives are an endless chain. We often say to one another when we unexpectedly find acquaintances in strange places that this is a little world. So it is. Life, too, is full of surprises just as the world is, because all life is an endless chain reaching through time to eternity. Here now is my extract by way of illustration:

"It was about a quarter to three and Mr. Bemerton was due back at three exactly, when a nice looking schoolboy of about fourteen, with a frank and courageous countenance, walked in carrying a book. This he handed me a little self-consciously, with a request to know if I could give him a shilling for it. It was Hall & Knight's Algebra, and inside was written Estabrook I. Now I am no censor, but I have certain fixed theories as to the law of meum and tuum and the training of boys, and also some undimmed recollections of the financial straits of my own school days; moreover, I liked this boy's ingenuous face.

"So I said, 'The book is yours to sell, of course?'

"Oh yes," he replied.

"You bought it with your own money?" I continued Socratically.

"Well, I didn't exactly buy it with my own money," he admitted. "But it's mine; that's my name in it."

"A schoolbook," I said; "one that you use in your lessons?"

"I shan't want it again," he replied. "I go into another form next term."

"But you think you have a right to sell it, as it was bought for you and you only?"

"Oh, yes, of course I do," he answered; "and I want a bob to-day most fearfully. We've got a half-holiday, and it's the Yorkshire match at the Oval."

"You think your father would like to know that you are raising money on a schoolbook to go to a cricket match?" I asked.

"But I've done with it," he repeated.

"You think your father would like to know? That is the whole point. If you can assure me that he would not mind your selling the schoolbook like this just for an afternoon's pleasure, I will give you a shilling for it at once."

"He thought a little while and shuffled his feet, and his fine face clouded.

"No," he said at last, 'he wouldn't like it.' And he put out his hand to put the book back.

"How much pocket-money do you get?" I asked, as I gave it to him.

"Threepence a week," he said.

"Well," I said, 'I will lend you the shilling, and you can pay me back as soon as it is convenient.'

"Oh, I say, how frightfully decent of you!" he exclaimed.

"So I handed him the shilling, and he crammed the book into his pocket and rushed off, being joined just outside by a smaller boy, whom I guessed to be Estabrook II.

"Estabrook! Now you see the conjunction of ideas; for one of my closest companions at school forty years ago had been an Estabrook, and it is not a common name. Could this boy, I wondered, be the son of my old friend? I had not long to wait to discover, for an unexpected tip from an uncle made it possible for him to discharge his debt quickly, and he was back within a week with the shilling in his hand.

"Bemerton sent him upstairs to me, after having explained that I was not really the bookseller, but an eccentric gentleman masquerading as such; and I asked him at once about his father, and soon ascertained that it was really my old schoolfellow; and so I gave Kenneth, which was the debtor's name, a message to the effect that I should give myself the pleasure of calling upon him next Sunday afternoon. We agreed that nothing should be said as to the circumstances under which Kenneth and I had originally met; all we were to say was that we had come upon each other accidentally at Bemerton's. This harmless compact of secrecy made, as must so often have been the case, a very firm foundation of our friendship—a friendship which led to some very agreeable afternoons.

"But see how it came about. The Rev. Ephraim Pye-Lipwood, tiring of horses, buys a motor-car of one of his parishioners. He goes for his first ride and forgets to put on enough wraps. He catches a cold, which develops into double pneumonia, and he dies. His widow wishes to sell his library, and asks a friend to recommend a good dealer. The friend recommends Mr. Joseph Bemerton of Westminster, and Mr. Bemerton arranges to go down by the 10:07 from Victoria. He does so, leaving the shop in the capable hands of Miss Ruth Wagstaff. Meanwhile what does Miss Wagstaff's mother do? For a long time she has not been quite herself; ever since, in fact, she ate that pork chop at her sister's husband's aunt's. Nothing somehow had seemed to agree with her since; and her dyspepsia came to a head this very morning, at about half past ten, just as Mr. Bemerton in his third-class compartment had finished The Daily Telegraph. Hence the summons to Miss Wagstaff, and cause of my finding myself stationed in the shop all ready to deal with Master Kenneth Estabrook, and thus resume acquaintance with an old friend and make acquaintance with a delightful family. We never know when we are moulding destiny."

MARGARET E. SANGSTER.

Pictures that Touch the Heart

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Your "reward" for a little service rendered has just been received. I am delighted with the pictures. All of them are beauties, but "Little Eva" touches the heart. She shall have a choice place on my wall.

MRS. J. POTTER.

Burlingame, Calif.

FREE

Write at once for this handsomely illustrated York catalog. It describes the Fifth Avenue of New York, including hundreds of the Sensational "DIRECT COSTUME" the talk of Europe and America.

contains 144 pages of wearing apparel exclusively tells you how you can dress in the latest advanced without having to pay retail prices. It is the exclusive wearing apparel catalogue issued in New York City. Sent absolutely FREE to any address application. Write for it to-day.

BELLAS HESS & CO.
BROADWAY, PRINCE & CROSBYS STS.
NEW YORK CITY, N.Y.

The Giant Heater

Polished Brass, $1.50; Nickel Plated, $1.00. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded if returned in 10 days. The Giant Heater Co., 263 Monmouth St., Springfield, Mass.

Trade Mark
Free Sample. Write Dept. B-11
Lamont, Corlies & Co., Apts. 7, Hudson St., N.Y.
CANNOT EXPLOD

Christmas Post Cards

FREE Six finest gold embossed Christmas Post Cards with lovely designs, in exquisitely beautiful color, our big post card Bulletin and trial subscription to post magazine—all free if you send 10 cents for mailing expenses. 18 cards, all different, and one year's subscription, 25¢. Your own cards and subscription free if you send us cards for 2 friends. HOUSEHOLD, 838 Jackson St., Topeka, Kan.

15 CENTS A-RO
For a 22-inch Hog Fence; 27¢ for 47-inch Farm Fence; 37¢ for 50-inch Poultry Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. 68 styles different heights. Catalog free. Write for it to TITSELMAN BROS., Box 297 WUNCIE, INDIA.

NICK-NAMED

But Doesn't Object In the Least.

A young lady from Troy was nick-named "Grape-Nuts" but she has been so greatly benefited by this world-famed food that she did not object to the sobriquet given her by friends. She writes:—

"From overwork my health failed me last summer and I feared for the future. Nearly everyone I knew had something to recommend, and I tried them all without benefit. A cousin, however, was persistent in recommending Grape-Nuts, because of a really wonderful good the food had been to her. Finally she sent me a package and please her I commenced to eat it.

"Almost from the very start my strength began to improve, and soon I began to gain in weight. After about five months eating Grape-Nuts for breakfast and supper daily, became well again.

"My appearance improved so much my friends wondered and asked the reason. I told them it was Grape-Nuts and nothing else. I have talked so much about the benefits to be derived from this food that they have nick-named me 'Grape-Nuts.' I don't object in the least. This food has certainly proved a great blessing to me. 'There's a Reason.'

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," pgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

OPEN-AIR CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR MEETING

The New York State Convention of Christian Endeavor this year, held in Albany, October 13, 14, 15, was a notable one in many respects and showed the organization to be steadily progressing. Our photograph shows an open-air Gospel meeting on the corner of State and Pearl Streets, two leading thoroughfares of the State capital.

A COURSE IN ESPERANTO

LESSON No. 22—By Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

A Journey to the Far East

DUM la 2^aplimulto de la jaro mil-naŭcent-sepa mi estis 3^ovojiranta 4^akune kun mia edzo en la 5^amalproksima Oriento, 6^airante al 7^aJapanujo, 8^afinujo kaj 9^aKoreo. Ni ankaŭ vizitis 10^aFilipinajn Insulojn, 11^aAŭstralion, 12^aFigiajn Insulojn kaj 13^aHavajon. Niaj 14^akomisioj estis 15^ahelpi 16^akontrakton 17^acivilizitaj 18^anacioj por 19^amalpermesi la 20^avendadon de opio kaj 21^aebriigaj kvoroj al 22^anecivilizitaj popoloj kaj 23^asovaĝuloj.

Guste kiam ni 24^aekiris Sekretario Elihu Root de la ŝtata Departemento diris al Doktoro Crafts: "Mi estas kun vi, kaj iu ĉi 25^aRegistaro estas kun vi en 26^aambaŭ proponoj 27^arilate al opio en finujo kaj endado de 28^aebriigaj likvoroj inter ovaĝuloj. Ili estas la 29^aabomenoj de la 30^acivilizacio. 31^aMiaflanke estas 32^adiplomatio, 33^aviaflanke estas 34^aagiteco." Doktoro Crafts 35^apermesigis 36^aprezenti iun aferon al la Registaro de Japanujo, Koreo, finujo, kaj Aŭstralio, ankaŭ 37^aSenato de Havajo. Ni 38^atrovis ke en 39^aapanujo la vendado de opio estas 40^amalpermesita 41^aescepte kiel 42^akuracilo. En 43^afinujo ni trovis grandan 44^abarakton kontraŭ opio. La 45^aImperiistino 46^aeldonis 47^adirektojn kontraŭ 48^aopiaj fumuloj. En 49^aAŭstralio grandaj nombroj de personoj estis 50^avarbitaj por 51^aurgis Anglan registaron 52^akunhelpi en la 53^akontraŭopio 54^amovado. Ni trovis la opion kaj 55^abrigiajn likvorojn de 56^ablankuloj la plej granda 57^amalhelpo al 58^aKristanaj misioj en la insuloj de la 59^aSuda Maro. En Havajo iuj ĉi du 60^akomercoj estas granda 61^adefektaĵo al 62^abonmoroj kaj 63^abonsaneco. Ni 64^abedaŭras ke la vendo estas 65^aplimultiganta. En La Filipinaj Insuloj ni trovis grandan uzon de opio, dudek mil 66^apermesitajn opiajn fumulojn. Sed ĝi estas nun malpermesita. Ni 67^agojas ke Prezidanto Roosevelt 68^asukcesis 69^aaranĝi pro 70^akonferenco de sep 71^anacioj kiuj 72^akunvenos en la 73^aurbo Sanhajo 74^aJanuaron mil naŭcent-naŭ por 75^apripensi la 76^akontrolon de 77^aopiovendado.

Explanation of Some Words

1^aDuring. 2^agreater part. 3^atraveling. 4^aalong with. 5^aFar East. 6^agoing. 7^aJapan. 8^aChina. 9^aKorea. 10^aPhilippine Islands. 11^aFiji Islands. 12^aHawaii. 13^acharge. 14^ahelp in making. 15^atreaty. 16^acivilized. 17^anations. 18^ato prevent. 19^athe sale. 20^aintoxicating liquors. 21^auncivilized people.

22^asavages. 23^agoing away. 24^aGovernment. 25^aboth. 26^apropositions. 27^arelating to. 28^aintoxicating liquors. 29^adisgraces. 30^acivilization. 31^amy part. 32^adiplomacy. 33^ayour part. 34^aagitation. 35^awas permitted. 36^ato present. 37^aSenate. 38^afound. 39^aprohibited. 40^aexcept. 41^amedicine. 42^astruggle. 43^aEm-press. 44^aissued. 45^aedicts. 46^aopium smokers. 47^aenlisted. 48^aurge. 49^aco-operate. 50^aanti-opium. 51^amovement. 52^awhite men. 53^ahindrance. 54^aChristian Missions. 55^aSouth Sea. 56^amerchandise. 57^adamage or injury. 58^agood morals. 59^agood health. 60^aregret. 61^amuch increasing. 62^alicensed opium smokers. 63^aglad. 64^ahas had success. 65^aarrange. 66^aconference. 67^anations. 68^awill convene. 69^acity of Shanghai. 70^aJanuary 1909. 71^acon-sider. 72^acontrol. 73^aopium selling.

Questions About the Construction

Explain the form "estis vojiranta." Why does "proksima" end in a? What kind of a participle is "irante"? What is the significance of uj in the names of countries? Why is n placed after Filipinajn Insulojn, Figiajn Insulojn and Aŭstralion, and not after Japanujo, finujo and Koreo? Why does the adjective "civilizitaj" end in j? What is the meaning of ad in vendadon? (The taking apart of an Esperanto word to find its full significance, is like analyzing a flower when we separate from each other sepals, petals, stamens, pistil, etc. Take for example the word Esperantistidinetto: what does it mean?) What kind of adverbs are miaflanke and viaflanke? Why does Havajo end in o after Senato de? Explain the form of "blankuloj." Explain "bonsaneco." Explain "permesitajn."

The World's Esperanto Congress

It will meet in the United States by invitation of the Esperanto Association of North America and the Chautauqua Institution. Chautauqua, N. Y., will be the place of meeting, and the last week of August, 1909, the time. It is hoped that every CHRISTIAN HERALD Esperanto student will help on the plans of this great Congress by joining the Esperanto Association of North America. All applications should be sent to Mr. E. C. Reed, 3981 Langley Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

"Where can I invest my money so that it will be safe and where I can have it when wanted, and yet so it will bring me reasonable earnings when invested?" This question will be answered to your satisfaction if you will write the Industrial Savings & Loan Co., whose advertisement appears on page 875.

Yours for the Asking

Two Books to Help You Buy Christmas Jewelry

WHY should you pay two or three profits on jewelry — when you need pay but one — and that a very small one? New York City is the home of the jewelry industry. Some New York City house realizes a profit on nearly every article of jewelry sold in America.

Why, then, should you not buy in New York City — direct from "The Home of Jewelry?"

Why not buy from the makers — and pay only one small profit? We have been in business, in the same neighborhood, 32 years. We sell direct to users of jewelry only.

No brokers, dealers or agents realize profits on our goods. Buy from us and you buy direct from the makers. So far as we know, we are the only Diamond Importers and Manufacturing Jewelers issuing an illustrated catalog and selling direct to users only, at retail and by mail.

Send for our two FREE books. They are yours for the asking. Write us a postcard, or a letter, and both books will be yours as soon as we can get them to you.

One is our catalog — 160 pages — illustrating over three thousand articles of newest and latest style jewelry at prices ranging from a dollar up.

FREE Book—"What to Give"

The other book "What to Give" is filled with suggestions of gifts for mother, father, wife, grandparents, sisters, children, "baby" relatives and friends.

Both books will help you with your Christmas shopping and both books are yours for the asking — FREE and postpaid — for a postcard mailed to us at once.

The book "What to Give" also tells you the correct jewelry to wear on all occasions and much other information well-dressed people appreciate.

Write us at once. A post-card is sufficient, but write a letter if you prefer. Address

Lambert Brothers, 111 Christmas Corner, New York City.
3rd Ave. and 58th Street.

7760 — Large, handsome, solitaire Diamond, purest white and full-cut with 6 full-cut white Diamonds set in Platinum-topped solid 14 karat gold ring. Price, $250.00. 7761 — Solid 14 karat gold ring with fine large Topaz set about with 6 full-cut, white Diamonds. Amethyst or Garnet may be substituted for the Topaz. Price, $25.00. 7765 — Solid 14 karat gold ring with 9 fine, full-cut white Diamonds set in Platinum top. Very brilliant. Price, $120.00. 7766 — Fine, full-cut, white solitaire Diamond set in Platinum-topped solid 14 karat gold ring. Price, $200.00. 7768 — Solid 14 karat gold, rose finish bracelet with Platinum initial set with 18 fine, full-cut, white Diamonds. Price, $100.00. Same bracelet with plain gold initial — no Diamonds. Price, $20.00.

Make that Cold Room a Cozy Den

In nearly every house there is one room that is extremely hard to heat—it is therefore practically closed for the winter. This room can be made the coziest room in the house with no trouble by the use of the

PERFECTION Oil Heater

(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

This heater gives intense heat, with no smoke, no smell. Turn it as high as you can to light it, as low as you can to extinguish it. Easy to clean, easily carried from room to room. Nickel or Japan finish. Every heater guaranteed.

The Rayo Lamp is the best lamp for all-round household purposes. Gives a clear, steady light. Made of brass throughout and nickel plated. Equipped with the latest improved central draft burner. Handsome—simple—satisfactory. Every lamp guaranteed.

If you cannot get heater and lamp at your dealer's, write to our nearest agency.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY
(Incorporated)

"BALTIMORE"

Continued from page 871

on the desk. Would it pay? Could this wreck of all that was good and noble in a man drag himself from the slough of vice and degradation into which he had sunk?

"Barkwell," he said at last, "I'm going to give you the chance you have asked for. Whether it will do you any good I have considerable doubt, but I am willing to try the experiment—this once. Here," he scribbled something hastily, as the crowd gazed curiously at him, "take this note to the man whose address I have written here. If there is anyone who can help you, he can. And now," he added gravely, "I am going to release you under a suspended sentence. You will report here—to me—every week, and I hope you will be able to report progress. Court is now adjourned."

For a moment "Baltimore" did not move. He was not certain that he had heard aright. Then, as the realization dawned on him that he was free, with a half-articulate "thank yer, Judge," he carefully deposited the note somewhere in the mysterious recesses of his clothes and shuffled hurriedly from the room, fearful lest the magistrate might reconsider his decision.

Once in the hall-way, he paused and drew out the missive he had just received. He turned it over gingerly in his hands as though, perhaps, it might retain some of the arbitrary power of the writer. A hasty glance told him that none of the inquisitive court officials were looking, and he examined the address.

This is what he read:

"To Mr. J. G. H., Bowery Mission, City."

Again he looked furtively about him, but no one was near. He saw that the flap of the hastily sealed envelope had become loosened, and his curiosity overcoming any scruples that he might have had, he drew out the note.

Alcohol is apt to blunt the finer sensibilities—the nicer points of honor—and it had made no exception in the case of "Baltimore." He only thought that it might be embarrassing if he was observed, if, indeed, he thought anything about it.

"My dear Mr. H.," the note said, "the bearer, John Barkwell, or 'Baltimore,' as he is more commonly known, is one of our 'regulars.'"

"Only a week ago he was released from Blackwell's Island, after serving a thirty-day sentence there—the third that I have imposed on him within two months—though, of course, the other two were for shorter periods. He was brought before me again this morning on the same charge—intoxication—and, for the first time since he was originally arraigned before me—now more than four years ago—he has asked me for a chance to do better.

"Personally, I fear that he is hopelessly incorrigible—at least as far as liquor is concerned—but I recalled our conversation of some time ago regarding this matter, and the wonderful work you are doing among those unfortunates who have come down the ladder through intemperance as well as other causes, and I thought I would try the experiment of sending this man to you. He needs your help if anyone ever did, but if you can't arrange for him—I know you aim chiefly to help those who really want to help themselves—send him back to me. He is out under a suspended sentence, and in any event must report to me every week.

"I am informed that he originally belonged to a good family, but, like so many others, alcohol has wrought his ruin. If you can save him, there's nobody whom you can't reach.

"Sincerely,
"R. S. D."

"—th Magistrate's Court, City of New York."

"Baltimore" pondered deeply—as deeply as his drink-clouded intellect would allow—as he returned the note to his pocket, and stepped into the chill October rain.

"Th' ol' man'll fool 'em yet," he murmured somewhat vaguely; "he'll fool 'em yet. It's th' first kind word 'at's been said t' ol' 'Baltimore' in five years." And something very like a tear furrowed down his grimy cheek, and fell unheeded to mingle with the rain-drops on the pavement.

Should he go to the Mission now or wait until evening? Something told him, "Don't wait! Go now!" but still he hesitated.

Alas for his wavering resolution! Alas for the weakness of a moral nature undermined by years of intemperance! As he passed down the street, his still trembling hand clutched something in his pocket. He drew his hand doubtfully forth, and disclosed an unsuspected dime.

The dime and the rain decided him. "Baltimore" turned into the saloon on the corner.

(To be continued)

"Good Night, Mama"

Written For The Christian Herald.

THE prayer is finished, and the light Burns dimly in the distant dark,
As if some fairy hand and bright Had left naught save a tiny spark.
Two little arms steal up and hold Me round the neck in sweet embrace.
Two chubby hands my own enfold And upward tilts a wee, pink face.
"Good night, dear mama, tiss me right;
Our 'owney' tiss, you know—good night."

The magic evening shadows steal Athwart the casement, flickering;
A cricket sounds and we two kneel With Him alone, while everything Is sweet with quiet and with peace.
All motherhood may read the spell Of baby lips and coo that cease.
Their song when fairies say: "All's well."
"Good night, dear mama; hug me tight;
Our 'owney' hug, you know—good night."

I smooth the pillow into place And draw the snugged covers round;
And, bending o'er that little face, Love it anew till not a sound,
Save that soft breathing, breaks my dream;
My tiny lambkin gone to sleep;
While angel shepherds cross the stream Of slumberland to vigil keep.
"Good night"—a drowsy whisper light,
And then, with eyelids closed: "Good night!"
W. LIVINGSTON LARNED.

PUZZLE SOLVED

Coffee at Bottom of Trouble.

It takes some people a long time to find out that coffee is hurting them.

But when once the fact is clear, most people try to keep away from the thing which is followed by ever increasing detriment to the heart, stomach and nerves.

"Until two years ago I was a heavy coffee drinker," writes an Ill. stockman, "and had been all my life. I am now 56 years old.

"About three years ago I began to have nervous spells and could not sleep nights, was bothered by indigestion, bloating, and gas on stomach affected my heart.

"I spent lots of money doctoring—one doctor told me I had chronic catarrh of the stomach; another that I had heart disease and was liable to die at any time. They all dieted me until I was nearly starved but I seemed to get worse instead of better.

"Having heard of the good Postum had done for nervous people, I discarded coffee altogether and began to use Postum regularly. I soon got better and now, after nearly two years, I can truthfully say I am sound and well.

"I sleep well at night, do not have the nervous spells and am not bothered with indigestion or palpitation. I weigh 32 pounds more than when I began Postum, and am better every way than I ever was while drinking coffee. I can't say too much in praise of Postum, as I am sure it saved my life."

"There's a reason."
Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

When this label appears on the end of a mattress, you KNOW it is an Ostermoor.

When it does NOT appear, you KNOW equally well that it is not the genuine

Don't trust to your judgment alone; not even an expert can tell much about a mattress by the looks. A poor mattress may to all appearances seem like a good one; look like one.

The sure and only safe way to choose a mattress is to be guided by the guarantee of the Ostermoor trademark above. It appears in plain sight on the end of every genuine mattress. It's there for your protection. When you see that trade-mark, you can know you're getting the best mattress made—buy without worry.

Unless that trade-mark is there, you are taking chances.

There is no other mattress like the

Ostermoor

Mattress $15.

of an Ostermoor dealer or by express, prepaid, when no dealer can supply.

An Ostermoor never needs renovating. Just an occasional sun-and-air bath will keep it always pure and clean—there's no wear-out to it.

The Ostermoor Mattress is not stuffed, not packed; but built up, sheet upon sheet. Thus, an Ostermoor can never mat or pack, never get lumpy or hard, like a hair mattress, but will remain luxuriously elastic, supremely comfortable and restful for a life-time. Testimonials covering 30 years' use, will be found in

Our 144-Page Book and Samples Sent Free

Our book, "The Test of Time," is a mighty interesting story about beds of all the ages, about mattresses and about sleep. It tells you how to get a good night's rest. It's free—a postal brings it.

Sleep on an Ostermoor Mattress for a month—then, if for any reason you're dissatisfied, we'll return every penny of your money.

There's an Ostermoor Dealer in most places—the liveliest merchant in town. If you'll write us, we'll tell you where to buy. But don't take chances with other mattresses—make sure you're getting the genuine Ostermoor—the trademark label is our guarantee. Mattress shipped by express, prepaid, same day your check is received by us if the dealer has none in stock.

OSTERMOOR & COMPANY
115 Elizabeth St., New York
Canada: Alaska Feather & Down Co., Ltd., Montreal.

WILL NOT MAT VERMIN PROOF NON-ABSORBENT NEVER GETS LUMPY

HAND LAID OSTERMOOR FILLING

NEVER REQUIRES REMAKING

OSTERMOOR & CO. NEW YORK

Exact label—1/4 size

9 GORDS IN 10 HOURS BY ONE MAN

RUNS EASY; NO BACKACHE.

Forced to cut fast by large coil springs.

Springs can be adjusted to suit a boy 12 years old or the strongest man.

Easily Carried. Folds Like a Pocket Knife.

Saws Down Trees.

With our Folding Sawing Machine. Saws any kind of timber. Instantly adjusted to cut log square on rough or level ground. Operator always stands straight. One man can saw more with it than two men can in any other way, and do it easier. Saw blades 6 1/2, 6, 6 1/2 or 7 ft. long. Champion, Diamond or Lance Teeth, to suit your timber. Send for Free Catalog showing latest improvements, giving testimonials from thousands. First order secures agency.

FOLDING SAWING MACHINE CO., 158-164 E. Harrison St., Chicago, Illinois

The HOLSMAN

High wheels travel all roads because all roads are made to be traveled by high wheels. The Holzman will go up any hill, over rocks, ridges or stumps, through deep mud, ruts and sand. Winner in greatest 1908 hill climb in America. Operation under one cent a mile. Up-keep under ten cents a day. Solid rubber tires. No differential gears or friction clutches. Built by the oldest and largest manufacturers in the world.

Sales Last Year $600,000
Get catalog and testimonial
HOLSMAN AUTOMOBILE CO.
256 Monmouth Bldg. Chicago, Ill.

Goes Anywhere

SILK EMBOSSED POST CARDS

Floral, Birthday and Christmas; lovely designs; beautiful colors; 10 cards with 3 mos. trial subscription to our popular magazine, 10c.; 30 cards and 1 yr. sub. 25c.

HOUSEHOLD CARD CO., Dept. 35, Topeka, Kas.

Deafness

"The Morley 'Phone"

A miniature Telephone for the Ear, invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E, Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Built strong chicken-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue free.

COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.

YOU CAN AFFORD

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

What brings release from dirt and grease? Why, Don't you know?

SAPOLIO

Wild West 10c

Cowboy-Indian Two-Step

Try these bars on your piano, then send 10c for the two pieces, or 10c for any of the following: 50c SHEET MUSIC: Star of the West (Rev. J. H. Miller)—Soldier's Dream (Descriptive March)—Western Flyer March and Two-Step—Moonlight on the River, waltz—Auto Race March (With much violin)—Dancing Shadows (Very beautiful)—Fairy Barque (The)—St. Paul (Waltz)—Under the Flag of Victory March—Musio the Union (Am. Melody)—Mocking Bird (Mack)—Barn Dance (Great Hit)—Patriotic Medley (National Airs)—Christian Endeavor March—Sacred Song Medley (Very beautiful)—Old Black Joe (Variations)—Moon Kisses (Three-Step)—Jesus, Lover of My Soul (Vocal)—In Joy I Praise the Lord (Vocal)—Avo Mario (Millard)—Abbie with Me (Vocal Duet)—Where the Ivy Leaves Grow (Close Beside the Door (Vocal)).

Large free catalog contains over a thousand others as good as 10c. All the old favorites everybody loves all the new ones being played and sung everywhere. w, Popular, Standard and Classic Sheet Music—full of best paper, clear, handsome printing—10c per copy, the page in two and three colors.

FREE To anyone buying one or more of the above pieces, who will send in addition the names and addresses of ten persons who, for a year, we will send an additional piece without charge. Names of music teachers, particularly requested. Always give street address when sending names of musical friends.

10c FOR BEST 50c Sheet Music

McKINLEY MUSIC CO.
56 Patton Bldg., Chicago 108 5th Ave., New York

WANTED

To Hear From Owner Having a Good Farm

For sale. Not particular about location. Give price and description and reason for selling. State when possession can be had. Will deal with owners only. By my unique plan of selling properties you pay not a cent of commission to any one. Write to-day for full particulars. Right now I have more customers for farms than I have farms for sale. If you want a quick sale, let me hear from you immediately and I know you will be pleased and surprised with my new methods of bringing buyer and seller together.

L. DARTSHIRE, Box 378B. Rochester, N. Y.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.

Vond Rollers Tin Rollers

These trade-mark crosscross lines on every package of CRESCO FLOUR DIET FOR DYSPEPTICS And Cases of IDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES AND OBESITY Makes delicious foods for everybody. Unlike other goods. Ask grocer. For book or sample, write ARWELL & RHINES, WATERTOWN, N. Y. U. S. A.

2.45 for THIS WASHER

Guaranteed equal to $5.00 and $6.00 machines sold by dealers and agents. Made full size. Will last for years. We sell Washers and Wringers to users at manufacturers' prices. Save you $2.00 to $3.00 on washer and $1.00 to $2.00 on wringer. Write today for Catalogue. It will save you money.

AVORITE WASHER CO. BOX 42, MUNGIE, INDIANA.

THREE MONTHS' FREE TRIAL

on every sewing machine we sell. We Ship on Approval and trial to anyone and Prepay Freight. If not satisfied after using it three months don't pay a cent. Factory Prices Do not pay more than you receive our latest Art Catalogue and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers. Write us a postal and everything will be sent FREE by return mail. You get much valuable information. Do Not Wait; write! Now! HEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. 701 Chicago

CORNS Whether they are new or old, A-CORN SALVE brings immediate relief. The corn disappears, roots and all. No dangerous cutting, no burning poisons. 15c. at druggist's or by mail. Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure, sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for 50c. size, postpaid. DR. LYONS, 180 Day St., Pekin, Ill.

LAWN FENCE Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries. Coiled Spring Fence Co. Box 6 Winchester Ind.

Bishop Potter Buried

ON OCTOBER 20, the body of the late Bishop Potter, of New York, was committed to its last resting place in the crypt of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine on Cathedral Heights, New York City. As Bishop Potter was the founder of the cathedral, no more appropriate place of interment could have been found. The services were first held in Grace Church on Broadway in the presence of many distinguished men and clergy. A large crowd surrounded Grace Church, and as many as possible were permitted to enter the edifice.

The coffin rested in the chancel. Over it was placed a pall of rich material which had been purchased by the Bishop during his last trip to Europe. It bore a Bible quotation in gilt letters. There were no flowers, but a single palm branch rested on the pall. The choir led the procession in the church, followed by over four hundred clergy of the Episcopal Church, and the twenty-four pall-bearers, the latter distinguished laymen of the New York diocese. Four bishops took part in the impressive ceremonial—Bishop Lawrence of Massachusetts, Bishop Greer of New York, Bishop Hare of South Dakota, and Bishop Doane of Albany. There was no eulogy. The body was then taken to Cathedral Heights, and as the procession moved up Fifth Avenue, the men on the sidewalks bared their heads. Around the unfinished cathedral a dense crowd of many thousands had gathered. The choristers met the coffin at the purple-draped entrance and, singing, led the procession into the crypt, where the committal service was read. The body rests just in front of the altar, and the marble slab above it bears only the Bishop's name and the dates of his birth and death.

Among the Workers

—REV. A. D. ZARAPHONTHES, lately conducting an evangelical work among the Greek residents of New York City, is about to establish a Greek colony in California.

—A SERIES OF MEETINGS led by Rev. Theo. F. French, D.D., Noble Street Methodist Episcopal Church, Anderson, Ind., closed with 130 conversions and accessions. E. B. Westhafer, of Muncie, Ind., was the evangelist.

—NOT SINCE the memorable visit of Messrs. Moody and Sankey have Baltimore and Washington been so deeply stirred as now by the preaching of Gypsy Smith. Thousands of people are unable to gain admission to the meetings. Many conversions are reported.

—EVANGELISTS DAVIS AND MILLS have held in Latrobe, Pa., a series of remarkable meetings, and many conversions are reported. The meetings were held in a large skating rink, all the churches uniting in the campaign. Derry and other towns nearby entered into the spirit of the revival, and the work deepened the spiritual life of the country round about.

CALLED HIGHER

Mrs. August N. Carlson, of Victoria, Ill., passed to her reward on August 18, 1908. The was born in Helsingland, Sweden, in 1845. She, together with her parents, came to this country in 1850. Her husband and three children survive her. She was a staunch friend and reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for thirty years. She was a life-long Christian woman, and devoted to her family and to her God. She was a member of the Methodist Church. She greatly enjoyed reading the sermons in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and was also a constant reader of the Bible.

Her v Yost, who died August 30, in his ninety-ninth year, at Waterloo, N. Y., was one of the oldest readers and most loyal supporters of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He retained his faculties until the very end. He was a devoted and earnest Christian, having a faith and trust in the goodness and mercy of God that was unshakable. He passed so beautifully and peacefully to his rest that his death formed a fitting benediction to his long Christian life.

Delighted with the Premiums

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The book "Capital Stories About Famous Americans," and "Lady Washington's Reception," that splendid picture, were received. I am delighted with them. They are certainly splendid premiums.

Sunbury, Pa. MRS. E. C. ROGERS.

If every one of our subscribers should send in one new subscriber, before the close of the year, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD would go into half a million homes during 1909. Are you doing your share?

BUY YOUR GLASSES OF US

READ SPECIAL
FREE
OFFER BELOW

SATISFACTION
GUARANTEED
OR MONEY BACK

You Get Dealers and Oculists Profits — Saves 1/2

YOU can buy your glasses of us by mail with every assurance that you will be properly fitted. Our Mr. Shellman, who has been fitting glasses for over 27 years, will give personal attention to your requirements.

We sell glasses all over the world and have yet to find a person whom we cannot satisfy. We use the "Ocularscope," the only reliable, accurate device for testing eyes at home. We own the patents, so no one else can use this wonderful device. We send it free to all who ask for it.

Remember, we are the oldest and largest house of the kind in the world and can save you more money on your glasses than anyone else.

Dealers and oculists cannot compete with our enormous organization. We sell you at lower prices than they pay. Let us prove it. Write to-day for prices.

We guarantee satisfaction or refund your money, so don't hesitate to give us a trial. We fill orders promptly — no delay.

SENT FREE Large Illustrated Catalog of Eye Glasses and Spectacles and Ocularscope, both FREE, prepaid. Write for them to-day.

Our Mr. A. J. Shellman, inventor of the Ocularscope and originator of the System of Fitting Glasses by mail, 27 years in the retail optical business in Grand Rapids, Mich.

Special FREE Offer

If you can use a book of chemically prepared tissue paper for cleaning glasses and will mail us a two-cent stamp, we will send you a book at once. Use Coupon — not necessary to write letter. If you want advice as to the care or treatment of the eyes, write us to-day.

FREE COUPON

Grand Rapids Wholesale Opticians: Without any obligation on my part, please send me FREE, prepaid, your Illustrated Catalog and Ocularscope eye tester.

GRAND RAPIDS WHOLESALE OPTICIANS

111 Ledyard Bldg., Grand Rapids, Mich.

"Oldest and Largest Mail Order Optical House"

Name

Town and State

I enclose two-cent stamp, for which include FREE a book of tissue paper for cleaning glasses.

Don't Buy a Stove or Range Until You First See

How Much
You Save
By Getting

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

YOU want to make every cent you spend this year, count for quality and economy.

If you need a stove or range, don't buy until you get our factory prices. I promise you that I will save you $5, $6 or $10 on our smallest stoves, and as high as $18, $20 and even $30 on our largest. And I promise you that you cannot get anywhere at any price, a better stove or range than the Kalamazoo.

Just let me quote you prices. Take our catalogue and compare the Kalamazoo quality and prices, with the best line of stoves and ranges you can find sold at retail. That will tell the story. You can see for yourself. You want to save money and you want to get high quality. Why not investigate our plan, then? Why not let me show you the difference between manufacturers' prices and retail prices on stoves or ranges?

We sell to you, direct from the factory, at actual factory prices.

On 360 Days Approval Test—We Pay the Freight

I promise, in black and white, to refund your money—every cent of it—if you do not find your purchase in every way exactly as represented.

Remember, every Kalamazoo is of the highest possible grade, made of the best materials and in the best manner. You deal directly with the manufacturers—a company that has a larger number of individual customers than any other stove company in existence. We have sold thousands of stoves and ranges to readers of this journal, and no doubt can refer you to near neighbors who have saved money by buying a Kalamazoo.

Many customers write that they have saved enough on a single Kalamazoo to pay for a whole season's fuel. You can save enough to buy a new suit, a new dress, an article of furniture, or perhaps to pay your taxes. Is it not to your interest to get our prices?

Send Postal for Catalogue No. 103

describing more than 300 sizes and styles of Coal and Wood Ranges, Coal and Wood Heaters, Hotel Ranges, Base Burners, Laundry Stoves, Etc.

I know that if you get our prices—and see our quality you will not even think of buying any other make. Let me show you how much you can save.

William Thompson, Vice-Pres. & Gen. Mgr. KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Mrs. Kalamazoo, Mich.

All Kalamazoo cook stoves and ranges have patent "thermometers" which make baking and roasting easy.

SPRAY

It will pay you to spray your Fruit Trees and Vines for protection from scale and all insect pests and fungus diseases. FREE Instruction Book shows the famous Garfield, Empire King, Orchard, Monarch, Leader and other sprayers; also gives a lot of formulas and other valuable information.

Field Force Pump Co., No. 75-11th St., Elmira, N. Y.

BE A RAILWAY MAIL CLERK

We prepare you by mail to successfully pass the Civil Service Examination. Our instruction embraces features no other school can use. If you want to be sure to pass get our free catalog. Write today.

The Wenthe Railway Cor. School, Dept. C-8-175, Freeport, Ill.

Woman's World

Four Months FREE

THE Woman's World has the Largest Circulation of Any Publication in the World—2,000,000 copies monthly. In order to retain this pre-eminent circulation, and to demonstrate to new subscribers that the Woman's World is the liveliest and best magazine published to-day, we will send the Magazine for September, October, November and December of this year Absolutely FREE, in accordance with our FREE offer below. To give you an idea of the value of the Woman's World, the following are a few of the features in these four FREE issues only.

CHICAGO TRIBUNE SAYS EDITORIALY:

THE revelations made by United States District Attorney Sims in the current number of Woman's World should be given as wide a currency as possible.

As Mr. Sims says, thousands of girls from the country are entrapped each year, and he points out the pitiful fact that the parents of a great majority of these unfortunates are unaware of their fate. As a consequence of this state of public ignorance, the traffic proceeds unchecked save by the efforts of pre-empting officials, which are necessarily restricted and temporary in effect.

What is greatly needed as a supplement to vigorous prosecution of offenders is a campaign of education. Clergymen should take up this evil and instruct parents in their congregations as to the reality and extent of the danger. In small towns there is virtually no knowledge of this evil and how it manifests, and there is far too little even in cities.

The problem is enormous, but it can be solved largely by educational means. The responsibility for a broad and systematic campaign of enlightenment rests with the religious and social agencies now existent in every community—the churches, the women's clubs, the civic leagues, and associations. The press, too, should give a reputable publicity and exert its influence directly and on educational lines, to the end that the public may know the gravity of the evil and its conditions.

"THE ILLINOIS VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION"

Object: To Protect Our Women and Girls.

ASSOCIATION BUILDING,
Chicago, September 17 1908.

WOMAN'S WORLD: We thank you for the copies of WOMAN'S WORLD for September. We shall ask a donation for more. The article by Mr. Sims must do great good.

ERNEST A. BELL, Cor. Sec'y,

THE ROCKY MOUNTAIN RESCUE HOME.

"A Christian Home for Erring Girls."

COLORADO SPRINGS, COLO.,
September 18, 1908.

WOMAN'S WORLD: I write to ask permission to publish in our official organ the article in the September WOMAN'S WORLD entitled: "The White Slave Trade of To-day." We desire to extend to you our personal thanks for the publication of this great article.

WM. H. LEE,
Supt.

FREE Copies Coupon

Woman's World
Sub. Dept. 55, Chicago

Send me the four FREE copies containing all of the features advertised. Enclosed find 25 cents for 1909 subscription. Send me the photo of Miss Carson. This 1909 subscription sent or your "Money Back" guarantee offer.

Name.....

Address.....

Date.....

WHITE SLAVE TRADE By EDWIN SIMS, U. S. District Attorney

An account of the prosecution of the "White Slave" traders who, Mr. Sims states, "Have reduced the art of ruining young girls to a national and international system." In comparison, the lives of the women of the ancient cave dwellers, clubbed and beaten insensible by brutal men, were to be preferred to the lives of these girls, who are lured from loving homes. Do you know that White Slave trappers search the City and Country towns for their victims? Do you know that they go to Railway Stations to decoy their unsuspecting prey? Do you know innocent girls, when once they fall into the hands of those merciless, pitiless beings, are sold for money. This article by the great District Attorney should be read by all.

THE PATH OF THE ERRING

This is the subject of a second article in the Woman's World, by the Honorable Edwin W. Sims, U. S. District Attorney in Chicago, written as was the "White Slave Article," strictly from the viewpoint of the lawyer, who finds himself called upon, as an officer of the law, to deal with this extremely difficult subject.

THE SINS OF SOCIETY By JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON

Author of "A Little Brother of the Rich," the greatest book sensation of the year. Mr. Patterson as an insider says that we have in the Country among the rich society people a practical Court; that society women relegate to others all functions of usefulness, with a single exception—and they are not inclined to discharge this function as they ought.

MY FACE WON $10,000 By MISS DELLA CARSON

First prize winner in the Chicago Tribune's $10,000.00 Beauty Contest, also in World Contest. In this article, of vital interest to women in many walks of life, Miss Carson tells the secrets of how she has retained, preserved and accentuated her beauty and health and how, although she is now thirty years old, everyone says she looks like a girl of sixteen; it is within the reach of every woman to improve her personal appearance.

"The Christian Science Faith," by Mrs. Clara Louise Burnham, Author of "Jewel," "Jewel Story Book", "The Opened Shutters," etc.

"The Most Interesting Thing in the World," by Geo. Ade, Geo. Barr McCutcheon, Forrest Crissey and William Hodge.

"Love Making in Foreign Lands," by Frank L. Pixley, Author of "King Dodo," "The Burgomaster," "Prince of Pilsen" etc.

"The Old Homes and the New," by Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, former Vice President of the United States.

"The Sins of His Fathers," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, Author of "A Little Traitor to the South," "Richard, the Brazen," etc.

"The Maid of Millions," by one.

"New Arkansas Traveler Series," by Opie Reid, author and originator of The Arkansas Traveler.

Other contributors to these four FREE issues are: Margaret Sangster, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Roswell Field, General Charles King, Harriett Prescott Spafford, Elia W. Peattie, Elliott Flower, Stanley Waterloo, Frank L. Stanton, Edwin Balmer, Maude Radford Warren, John Kendrick Bangs, Allen D. Albert, Dr. W. F. Waugh, Ellen Stan and many others. The Woman's World is printed in colors and is a great national woman's magazine.

FREE OFFER We will send at once copies of The Woman's World of the September, October, November, and December (Christmas) Issues, Containing all the features in reference to above, absolutely FREE to anyone who will send only 25 cents now to pay for a subscription for the entire year of 1909.

EXTRA OFFER Also, everyone who accepts this offer will be sent, as a receipt for their 1909 subscription, a double cabinet size photo of Miss Della Carson, who was awarded the First Prize in Chicago Tribune's $10,000.00 World Beauty Contest.

WOMAN'S WORLD

Sub. Dept. 55, CHICAGO

MRS. CLARA LOUISE BURNHAM
Novelist who has introduced into fiction the element of Christian Science.

HON. EDWIN W. SIMS
The U. S. District Attorney who represented the U. S. Government in the $29,000,000 Standard Oil Case.

JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON
Author of "A Little Brother of the Rich"

GUARANTEE

WE are so confident that you will say that the "Woman's World" is the greatest reading value to-day after you read it free at our expense until January 1, that we are willing to make the following guarantee: Anyone who accepts our free 1908 offer now and sends 25 cents to pay for subscription for the year 1909, and who any time during December 1908, after receiving the free September, October, November and December issues, should write and say they are sorry they subscribed, will be immediately refunded their 25c., 1909 remittance, without question, without fuss.

FOR PREMIUM ANNOUNCEMENTS SEE PAGES 891 TO 894

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Copyright, 1908, by Louis Klopsch

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 11, 1908

VOL. 31—NO. 46. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Copyright, 1908, by Pach Bros.

See next page

PRESIDENT-ELECT TAFT, MRS. TAFT, AND CHARLES, THEIR YOUNGEST SON

TAFT AND SHERMAN ELECTED

THE Presidential campaign of 1908, which has resulted in the election of William Howard Taft as twenty-seventh President of the United States, will long be remembered as one of the most vigorous ever known in our national politics. It resulted in a great triumph for the Republican electoral ticket. The electoral vote will probably stand as shown in the table in the next column.

Some of the pluralities for Taft were enormous. New York gives him nearly 200,000, Maine 31,000, Vermont 18,000, Massachusetts 100,000, New Hampshire 20,000, Wisconsin 75,000, Michigan 100,000, Illinois 200,000, Pennsylvania 350,000. The Pennsylvania figures are furnished by Senator Penrose. These were estimates made immediately after the election, and may be slightly changed by the complete vote. In the South 20,000 more votes were recorded for Taft than Roosevelt received four years ago; but the Southern States remain practically solid with the sole exception of Maryland, which gave Taft an estimated plurality over Bryan of 3,500. Among the Western States there were some surprises. Illinois gave Taft a sweeping majority of 170,000, although it had been considered debatable territory. Indiana and Ohio, both bitterly contested, added substantial majorities to the Taft column. Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Kansas, and the Dakotas all gave surprising Taft majorities. He carried all the Eastern States from Maine to Virginia and from the ocean to the Alleghenies by good majorities.

President-Elect Wm. Howard Taft

New York was the scene of a struggle which made it a centre of national interest. Governor Hughes, whose moral crusade against the race-track gamblers had allied against him all "the forces of evil" in the metropolis, and whose re-election was opposed by the sympathizers with the gambling and saloon elements, came out triumphant, being carried through the battle safely in the wake of the tremendous Taft wave which swept the Empire State. Taft's plurality in New York is estimated at between 175,000 and 200,000. Hughes for Governor has a plurality between 60,000 and 70,000. These figures, however, may be modified by complete returns. Gov. Hughes's re-election is a magnificent triumph for public morality and good citizenship.

One of the unexpected developments of the election was the revolution in Manhattan and the Bronx. In former campaigns, the political leaders have always counted New York City as certain to give the Democratic candidate for President or Governor an assured majority anywhere from 75,000 to 125,000. It was generally expected that Mr. Bryan would have at least 50,000 and possibly 75,000 plurality. To the astonishment of the politicians of both parties, this old-time majority disappeared wholly in the present election. Bryan carries Manhattan and the Bronx by a few thousand votes, but in the Greater New York, which includes Manhattan, the Bronx, Brooklyn, Queens and Richmond, Taft has a plurality estimated at 10,000. This same territory in 1904 gave Parker, the Democratic candidate for President, a plurality of 37,645.

President Roosevelt, on learning the result of the election, wired his heartiest congratulations to Judge Taft and also to Congressman James Schoolcraft Sherman, the Vice-President-elect. President Roosevelt voted at Oyster Bay, N. Y., making the trip for that special purpose on election day morning. Mr. Taft voted in Cincinnati and Mr. Bryan in Fairview,

How the Electoral Vote Stands

TAFT			BRYAN
California	10	Washington	5
Colorado	5	West Virginia	7
Connecticut	7	Wisconsin	13
Delaware	3	Wyoming	3
Idaho	3	Total	314
Illinois	27
Indiana	15
Iowa	13
Kansas	10
Maine	6	Alabama	11
Maryland	8	Arkansas	9
Massachusetts	16	Florida	5
Michigan	14	Georgia	13
Minnesota	11	Kentucky	13
Montana	3	Louisiana	9
New Hampshire	4	Missouri	18
New Jersey	12	Mississippi	10
New York	39	Nevada	3
North Dakota	4	North Carolina	12
Ohio	23	Nebraska	8
Oregon	4	Oklahoma	7
Pennsylvania	34	South Carolina	9
Rhode Island	4	Tennessee	12
South Dakota	4	Texas	18
Utah	3	Virginia	12
Vermont	4	Total	169

Total number of votes in Electoral College, 483; necessary to a choice, 242.

Neb. The latter received the election returns in his own home at Fairview.

Congress is Republican by a decreased majority. It will probably stand 221 Republicans to 170 Democrats, as against 223 Republicans and 167 Democrats in the present Congress. Hon. Joseph G. Cannon, the Speaker, is re-elected, and practically all the present Republican leaders will return, including Representatives Dalzell and Payne. The last named, it is said, will plan the tariff bill and direct tariff legislation in the next House.

MR. TAFT'S CAREER

Few of our Presidents have had such a long training for the highest office in the gift of the people as the President-elect. Mr. Taft from boyhood has 1857, and spent his boyhood in the fine old house still occupied by his brother in Cincinnati. Young Taft went through the usual public school course at the Woodward High School, where he was popular with his fellow students, and his record as a student is said to have been good. He graduated in 1874, and then went to Yale, where at the completion of his university course he stood second in a class numbering one hundred and twenty-one. He received the honor of salutatorian from the faculty, and was elected class orator by his classmates. He returned to Cincinnati and at once started on his real work in life as a reporter on a local paper. While doing newspaper work young Taft resolved to follow in the foot-steps of his distinguished father and study law.

Vice-Pres-Elect James Schoolcraft Sherman

He graduated from the Cincinnati College Law School in 1880 and divided the first prize awarded with another member of the class whose marks equaled his. He was admitted at once to the Ohio State bar and began the active practice of his profession. In 1881 he became assistant prosecuting attorney for Hamilton County. In 1882 he was made collector of internal revenue, and in 1885 assistant county solicitor. Two years later he became judge of the Superior Court of Ohio. For thirteen years he remained on the State bench. In 1890 he became solicitor-general, and later was made United States circuit judge. Up to 1900, Judge Taft's reputation, though growing, had been largely confined to Ohio and the Middle West. His appointment as President of the Philippines Commission at once brought him before the entire American public. The first favorable estimate that was formed of him at that time has never been revised. He was made the first civil governor of the Philippines in 1901, and held the post for three years. In 1904, he had completed his plans for the government of the islands and for the reform of the Philippine judiciary, and felt free to accept a position in President Roosevelt's Cabinet as Secretary of War.

The Cuban insurrection of 1906 threatened to undo all of the good that had been accomplished in Cuba since the war of 1898, and the day the red and yellow standard had dropped forever from the flag-staff of the palace of the Spanish governor. President Roosevelt felt that Judge Taft was the man on whom he could depend. He was sent to restore order and to prepare the people for a new election of a Cuban President. Last year he made an official tour of inspection of Panama, Cuba and Porto Rico. Then he started on another in which he girdled the earth. He went to Japan, then to the Philippines and returned home by way of Europe, stopping at St. Petersburg and Berlin. As he was already talked of as a presidential candidate Europe watched his movements with great interest. The estimate formed of Mr. Taft by the European press was most favorable.

Mr. Taft married in June, 1886, Miss Helen Heron of Cincinnati. His wife has been a help-mate to him in every sense of the word and is admirably fitted to be the mistress of the White House. They have three children.

Robert Alphonso Taft

Miss Helen Heron Taft

been an associate of men prominent in the councils of the nation and his own family have played no small part in its history. He comes from old New England stock, the Tafts having lived for some generations near Worcester, Mass., before going to Ohio. His father, Hon. Alphonso Taft, was one of the most prominent citizens of Cincinnati in the days before the Civil War, and through the administrations of Lincoln and Grant. He was active in the business and political life of the State, and highly respected as an able lawyer. He was the first of the Taft family to hold a cabinet position, being made Attorney-General by President Grant in 1876. He married Miss Louise M. Torrey and their family life was most happy.

William Howard Taft was born September 15,

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Farming Students Threshing Barley

Worshippers at a Wayside Shrine

Converts Going to an Open-Air Service

THE OLD JAPAN AND THE NEW

By Matthias Klein, Akashi

AKASHI is right in the centre of Japan's most picturesque scenes. Here we find old and new Japan in vivid contrast. Old temples and shrines are here, in connection with which religious festivals and bazaars follow each other in rapid succession, where the people in streams approach the front of the temples and jerk the long, clumsy ropes of the clanking bells hanging above the big treasury box. Into this box they cast their coins, generally of the lowest denomination, on certain occasions keeping the priests busy sweeping up those which fall outside the receptacle. The devotees then, with clasped hands, offer their prayers and walk away. Theatrical performances and light-of-hand exhibitions, the beating of drums, the blowing of horns and the constant cries of the vendors at the booths heighten the roar. However, one is impressed with the good behavior in the midst of the excitement.

But this picture is not completed without mentioning the noble company of Christian pilgrims who after dusk enter this arena with a supply of rackets, also carrying attractive, bright red lanterns, upon which are painted large white crosses. The people flock after us to a more quiet spot, where he cause of Christ, with song and prayer, preaching and testimony, is joyfully and zealously presented. This festival is the yearly celebration in honor of the discoverer of Awaji Island, said to be the ancestor of the legendary first Emperor, Jimmu Tenno. The channel beyond which this island lies is a very strong current, yet in earlier days, for centuries even, a crowd of skilful swimmers, under the observation of Shinto priests and people, would leave the Akashi shore, pushing little thimble-like boats before them, now and then climbing into them, until they reached the island where they went to meet the idolized spirits of their ancestors. These they then escorted back to the shrine erected for them at this place. The crossing in such a manner has always been exceedingly dangerous, and it usually happened that one or more were killed by the sharks, consequently in recent years this kind of crossing is prohibited by law.

Speaking of this island, it was from this place that the grandfather of one of my Japanese teachers drew a picture of Commodore Perry's black-rigged man-of-war, as it lay at anchor near here luring a storm after his famous visit to Yokohama. The natives lined the shores, gazing with awe and terror upon this monster; but now they proudly behold their own gray-painted war-dogs plowing through these waters.

As to the magnitude of the great door opened for the Gospel, a few Sundays ago, at the next railroad station, a great crowd congregated at a picnic in a shady park of pine trees. The newspapers gave the number as over 100,000. To that multitude the Gospel was also presented by preaching and tracts.

In this place there is an ancient renowned castle, the towers of which in earlier days served as watch towers. It was built nearly three hundred years ago. With the beginning of the "Era of Enlightenment," the last living "daimyo," or governor of this castle, like all other living daimyos, was removed to Tokyo, the capital. The castle property now belongs to the imperial family. On its grounds now stand the modern buildings of an Agricultural School, where students are thoroughly instructed in the different branches of this science, though implements are in part still old-fashioned. Besides a number of other up-to-date schools in this city, we might mention the Girls' Normal School, which we recently visited. Passing through the various halls in the library, we joyfully noticed, among other volumes, a Reference Bible. In the history class-room we found the walls lined with photographs of a number of the earth's great men. On one side were those of the West, Homer, Aristotle, Socrates, Luther and others. On the other side were the Asiatics, and we were both surprised and pleased to see Jesus Christ placed first; then came Confucius and the other famous sages.

Farmer Women on the Way to Market

Japan, and indeed this immediate vicinity, is as thickly dotted with historic and legend-haunted places of interest—castles, towers and temples—as any country in Europe. Here, for instance, is a turtle-shaped hill, called "Sen-tsubo," which means a thousand crocks or earthen tubs. Upon this height the ashes of a certain Emperor's family and descendants, numbering over a thousand, were carefully interred in these tubs, which were arranged in circles. What wonderful tales these Japanese are able to relate in connection with this and many other places!

Like other Oriental countries, Japan also had its day when people were buried alive. Up to 1,500 years ago, when an Emperor or some other great man died, his wives and servants were buried alive with him. Then later, until 700 years ago, these were buried only in effigy, but all this has since been prohibited by law. Not only such savage rites, but idolatry itself, must give way before the Kingdom of Jesus. The conversion of stanch idolaters, such as that of a friend of mine, well illustrates the above. This Japanese, who is an aggressive business man, just a few months ago found the grace of God thoroughly revolutionizing his heart and home, till with holy zeal he snatched all the idols from his house, over one hundred in number, and made a bonfire of them.

When the natives bury their dead, instead of Western-style coffins, they simply use wooden tubs, about three feet high, with a cover, into which the corpse is placed in a sitting posture, dressed in white. When the Buddhists bury, they also place six rin in the coffin (ten rin are equal to one-half cent), representing the Buddhist "Amen," consisting of six syllables, "Na-mu-a-me-bu-tsu." Friends shave the scalps of their dead; some of the hair is placed in the temple for worship, or again it is buried with the body.

Foreigners in this country are struck with the comparative absence of songsters in the forests, but there is no end to the flowers, both wild and cultivated. On some festival days, the country people haul their flowers to the towns and cities in loads, as the American farmer hauls his cord-wood. Oh, the grandeur, in some sections of Japan, of the beautiful large white and gold mountain lilies! I have seen whole hillsides almost covered with these emblems of purity, much larger than our American Easter lilies, and delightfully fragrant.

Nature itself is very beautiful in Japan, but becomes exceedingly so with the assistance of skilful and scientific florists and horticulturists, among whom even temple priests appear as rivals. Here are plenty of dwarf peach, plum and other trees, whose slender limbs hang down along the knotty trunks like weeping willows. Their light or dark pink blossoms are usually double and remind one of American carnations. Well did the poet sing:

Land of wondrous beauty, what a charm there lingers,
Round her every landscape, every flower and tree!
But a brighter glory waits to shine upon thee
Than thy cloud-capped mountains or thy inland sea.

THE American Pulpit

A SERMON BY
Rev. Len. G. Broughton*

THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT

TEXT—Judges 16:20
"And he wist not that the Lord was departed from him."

I AM going to speak this afternoon from the twentieth verse of the sixteenth chapter of the Book of Judges. You are all familiar with it, and I simply take out of it this text: "And he wist not that the Lord was departed from him." I want to speak to you of what is practically a lost art with the church, and that is the power to bring things to pass by way of heaven, by way of the supernatural. Before I start to discuss "The Lost Power of the Church," it might be well for me to tell you what I mean by power. By power I do not mean numbers. There never was a time in the history of the Church of Jesus Christ when she had so many numbers as now. To be sure, we have not kept up with the progress of the world in many things, not even in numbers; but we have a great many members of our churches. We have more than we ever had in the history of the church, and we have lost power.

Nor do I mean culture. There never was a time in the history of the church of Jesus Christ when she had so much culture as to-day. I believe in culture, and the church has a great deal of culture. The majority of the culture of this world is in the church; but culture is not power.

Wealth Is Not Power

Nor do I mean wealth. There never was a time in the history of the church when she had so much wealth as to-day. But wealth is not power. Sometimes we are led to imagine that wealth is power. Some time ago I was standing at a little railway station in Mississippi, waiting for my train, and a brother came up to me and engaged me in conversation. I asked him, "What is the most powerful church in this beautiful little city?" And he pointed up the hill to a little stone building, and said, "I think that is." I said, "Do you live here?" He said, "Yes, I live here." I said, "Are you a church member?" He said, "Yes, I am a member of that church." I said, "How many people are there in that church?" He said, "I do not know." I said, "How many people go to prayer meeting?" He said, "I don't know that they have any prayer meeting." "How many people are there in the Sunday School?" I said. He said, "I really cannot tell you, for I have not been in ten years." "How many people," said I, "do they usually have at the communion?" You know these are good methods to test a powerful church. He said, "Well, really, I am sorry that I cannot tell you." I said, "What made you say that that was the most powerful church in this community?" "Why," he said, "they have three millionaires in that church. The fact is, about the only millionaires that this State has are in that church."

That man had the conception that wealth was power, but he was mistaken. The fact is, usually the wealthiest churches that we have are the churches that have least power. I do not think it should be so; I see no reason why it should be so; and yet it is a fact.

The Pentecostal Power

Nor do I mean influence when I speak of power. Influence may be power; influence may not be power. Some of the most influential churches I know are the most powerless. Some of the most powerful churches that I know are churches that have the least influence in shaping the affairs of the community. That is the difference between what the world is seeking for and the thing God wants to give. That is the difference between power and influence. Now, what I mean by power is the power of God coming upon a man, enabling him to do that which otherwise he could not do. That is what I mean by power; and I thank God that that power is possible for a man to-day. I do not believe that God has any favorites among us. If he has favorites, his favorites are made up of those who are perfectly willing to let him do with them as he sees fit; and the man who is willing to let God do with him absolutely and without reserve, is the man who is clothed with the power.

Now, there has been a time in the history of the church when she had this power more than she has to-day. She had it in the beginning; on the Day of Pentecost, when the church was founded, there was this power manifesting itself. It manifested itself in the rushing of the wind; in the tongues of fire; in the gift of tongues. Mind you, however, it was a gift of tongues, a gift of language—not the kind we are hearing about now in some sections of the world, a mere gift of gabble. The gift of tongues at Pentecost, which made that occasion stand out with such glory, was a gift of language. It was a man being given the gift to speak to another man in his own language. I believe in that kind of gift of tongues. But I do not believe God is the author of confusion. From the day when the church was founded, all through the apostolic age, the church was characterized by that inexplicable power. It was the normal thing, in the early days of the church, to resort to prayer when it got in trouble. Take in the twelfth chapter of the Book of the Acts, when Peter was in prison. Where is the church? Out yonder in prayer. And what happened? The prison doors were opened, and Peter walked out. That is what they did in those apostolic days. Now, when such a thing occurs, the church rushes to the State, or to the nation, instead of rushing to prayer meeting.

All through the ages of the church, we have had periods and seasons when the church has come out and stood conspicuously for this, and we have had men in all ages that have done it. Take Martin Luther, whose business it was to stand for a certain phase of truth; and then take John Wesley, whose business it was to stand for another phase of truth; and then take Moody, on this side, whose business it was to stand for still another phase of the truth. These men were conspicuously led and equipped of God, and empowered of God to do their work. But for the most part, we are bound to admit that the church of our Lord Jesus has departed from the power, or the power has departed from the church. There is not to-day, in the active work of the church, direct connection between the old-time power-house and the Church of Jesus Christ. Why do I say that? I say it because we are not having things come to pass by way of heaven, as we had in those days. We are having come to pass in the life of the church to-day simply those things that we can explain, and rarely do we see a thing take place in the church that is beyond explanation.

Losing Touch With the "Power House"

We Christians of to-day have lost touch with the power house because we have failed to rigidly insist upon a separation of the church from the world. Now, the Church of Jesus Christ is intended to be a separate body of men and women. It is not to be of the world; its methods are not to be the methods of the world. Its mode of life, the things in which it finds pleasure and comfort and blessing, are not to be the things that the world finds pleasure and comfort and blessing in. It must be separate and distinct—a separate and peculiar people. And the church is to carry about with her, wherever she goes, the marks of her Nazariteship, the mark of her separation. The world must be able to see a clear-cut line of demarcation between the church and itself; and until it does see that, it will be lacking in respect for the church. Now, if the church wants to go after the world, and the pleasure of the world, and the wealth of the world, and the influence of the world, in the world's way of getting things, let it do it; but in so doing, it partakes of the weakness of the world.

If I had to sound one note to-day for the Church of Jesus Christ, it would be this: "Come ye out from among them; be ye separate, saith the Lord." I am not surprised that many churches have had a hard time financially. Some time ago, I was in the southern part of our State, and after a lecture I was invited by a lady to accompany her to a reception. Just as we got to the building, I asked, "What is this thing for?" She said, "It is to raise money to pay off our pastor's salary. We are just two hundred dollars behind in his salary." I said, "What do you give your pastor?" She said, "Six hundred dollars a year." That woman's husband was worth a quarter of a million! We went in, and the first one who met me at the door was a little girl, with something like a dozen or more little south Georgia wild roses, and ribbons tied around them. She approached and said, "Won't you buy one of my bouquets?" I said, "Yes, pin one on my coat." She pinned it on, and I said, "Pin one on my friend here," and she pinned one on her. And I said, "What are they worth?"

She said, "Seventy-five cents apiece." Now, you could have bought an acre of ground where the things grew, and the acre would have grown for hundred and fifty-nine thousand of them—you could have bought that for seventy-five cents. Are you surprised because that church had to rely upon such methods? When once a church begins that sort of thing, it partakes of the weakness of the world, carries out none of its strength; it leaves behind strength, and simply becomes a part of the world, and God lets it alone. And every church that tries such methods will find out that this is true.

Have We Lost Faith?

But let me suggest another thing. We have lost power because we have lost faith. There is very little faith, as I find it in the church to-day. Churches are keen to discover the depth of the religion of their pastor. They will detect any defection in his faith before he will, and whenever they see that the pastor himself is lacking in faith it is absolutely out of the question to try and lift that church up in the matter of its faith.

And so, after all, this thing lies right at our door. We will never get the church up in the matter of faith until the ministers are willing to live by faith. Faith, in a religious sense, is the undertaking for God of a thing, the end of which we cannot see at the time of the undertaking. If that is not faith, then I know nothing about it. How many of us have the kind of faith? It is easy to trust God for the great things of life, but oh, how hard we find it to trust him for the little things! It is the little things of life, after all, that test our faith; not the big things. We do not hesitate to undertake big things for God by faith. We would plunge in to build a house all by faith. We would plunge in to live by faith, throwing our salary overboard, just trusting God by faith, and yet we could not be persuaded that that God who could keep us under those circumstances, could save us from fretting and worry and ill-temper and idle talk, and the like. We have lost ground because we have lost faith. I want to see the day arrive for the church universal, when she will come back to the position of the old, primitive church, and from minister to deacon, and from deacon to sexton, we will altogether live by faith. I would like to see the time come when we will have a reproduction of the apostolic church.

A Christian's Birthright

Again, let me say, we have lost ground because we have failed to claim our birthright. Every Christian man and woman has a birthright to the power of the Holy Ghost. "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you," Jesus Christ is talking to his disciples. They were converted men, as I believe, prior to this. I believe every one of those men was converted before he entered that upper room for the endowment of power; but there was needed another equipment; hence Jesus sent those disciples to that upper room, and there they waited for ten days until the power came. And I feel that promise is just as distinctly the promise of Jesus Christ to the church to-day as it is the promise of salvation to the world. I believe that Jesus Christ would equip every believing child of his with the power of Pentecost, and do it just as easily, and just as powerfully, as he did those disciples, if we were to comply with the same conditions. The power might manifest itself, to be sure, in different ways, as I believe it would; but it would be the same power, the same supernatural equipment for service that came then, manifesting itself in every instance according to the needs and exigencies of the case. But we have failed to claim our birthright. I believe that in the one act of regeneration there is, provisionally, everything God has to give his children—the endowment for service, sanctification, everything. But we are not introduced to that great fact, for the most part, until years after, and sometimes not at all.

Down in southwest Virginia, where I used to live, there are the Pocahontas coal fields, in many respects the richest in the world. Those fields were once owned by a farmer, who eked out a miserable existence for himself and his family. One day there came some men from up North. They walked through the village; they examined those fields, and

Continued on page 885

THE "FAMILY ALTAR LEAGUE"

ONE generation ago, in almost every Christian home in the country the family altar was a recognized fixture. Every day it was the custom of the family, young and old, to gather together, while the father read some portion of the Word of God, and then children rarely hear their parents' voices raised in prayer in the home.

To him who has ever known the rich blessings of family prayer and felt its influence, and who treasures the sacred memories that cluster round the family altar of his childhood, it brings a feeling of sorrow as he realizes that the good old custom has almost passed into neglect and disuse, and that children are coming up into manhood and womanhood in homes where the Scripture is practically a sealed book and prayer unknown. One cannot but wonder what will be the effect when, under such circumstances, this generation rises to the place of control in the nation. It does not augur well for the future of our Christian land.

This is one of the most disturbing problems of the Christian church today. Many hearts are fervently longing for a crusade that will bring to pass a change in the conduct of our Christian homes. For this reason, it will gladden many to hear of the Family Altar League, just now in the process of organization. The plan was presented to a great gathering of evangelists in August last, and received their enthusiastic approval and a promise of their support. The author of the idea is Rev. W. E. Biederwolf, the well-known evangelist, and he, with the active co-operation of a few other Christian workers, is pushing the undertaking to completion. Prominent among these is Rev. Hugh T. Kerr, pastor of the Fullerton Avenue Presbyterian Church, Chicago. The plan in brief is this: Attractive cards are distributed by evangelists and pastors, bearing the following covenant:

Believing myself to be largely responsible for the eternal salvation and religious training of my children, and realizing the need of God's grace for my own Christian life, I covenant with God to make it the rule of my life to gather together, each day, so far as possible, the members of my family, and together read some portion of his word and pray for his blessing upon my home.

HUSBAND.....
WIFE.....

Place and date.....

This card is signed by the husband and wife, and sent to the headquarters of the League in Chicago, where it is filed, and in its place is sent a beautifully engraved wall-card, certifying that "This home is enrolled in the Family Altar League," and bearing also the words of the Covenant. A detachable portion of the card is given to the pastor as a reminder that the family is registered in the League. Every card is numbered, and an exact record kept of every registry.

To make the League a vital and permanent thing, there will be published in connection with it a little monthly magazine filled with helpful thoughts and suggestions. Dr. Biederwolf has associated with him on the editorial staff some of the most consecrated Bible teachers and prominent leaders in the devotional life in the country, and the magazine will be a valuable help to all Christians. The whole undertaking will entail no small financial outlay, but it is backed by men whose money is consecrated to the work of Christ, and the return in good done will mean more than any financial gain possibly could.

Surely God will abundantly bless such a worthy effort as this, for if the evangelists and pastors give it the support it deserves, it will mean great things for the Kingdom of Christ, in

Rev. W. E. Biederwolf

He would kneel as a blessing was reverently invoked upon the home and its members. To-day, that household is exceptional where united daily prayer is a custom. In most Christian homes, the sad fact is that the Scriptures are seldom opened in the presence of the family, and the chil-

Rev. Hugh T. Kerr

the quickening of the religious life of the home, and it will tell for years and generations to come. The coming twelvemonth ought to see the establishment, or the re-establishment, of the family altar and the united worship of God in thousands of homes.
Ingram, Wis. RAY Y. CLIFF.

THE POWER OF THE SPIRIT

Sermon by Rev. Len. G. Broughton became convinced that there were great coal pits there. They went up to this old farmer and made him a proposition. They said, "We will give you a thousand dollars for this piece of ground," and he accepted it almost before they finished the proposition. They gave him his thousand dollars; he gave them the deed. He moved down the valley, where he lived until a few years ago. And those men got possession of those coal fields, and you could not buy that same piece of ground to-day for millions on top of millions. Now that old farmer had all that when he got that deed from his father, but he did not know it. My brethren, we have all that God has for us when Jesus Christ saves us, but for the most part we do not know it. I did not know about it for five years. Thank God, one day I was told about it, and I simply moved out and occupied my rightful territory. Instead of surrendering it to somebody else, I took possession of it myself.

Continued

Now, what the Church of Jesus Christ wants to-day, first of all, is information regarding the extent of her territory—what she has; and then, when she is informed of it, surely she is going to move out and occupy it, and occupying it, she is going to find herself in possession of power she never dreamed of before. I was down in Washington some time ago, riding on an electric street car. I observed that the motorman could easily make that car go slow or fast; by a touch of the handle in his hand the car would go slower, almost stop, and yet not quite stop, but just go creeping along like a snail. And then he would touch that thing again, and the car would go almost at the rate of a mile a minute. I got curious to know how the thing was done. I said to myself, "I can't see how it is that if he touches that wire at all, he does not get all the power that there is in the power house," so I ventured to go out on the front platform and ask him. "Would you mind a stranger asking you a question about this machine?" I asked. "No, certainly not," he answered; "what is it?" "How is it that you can go slow or fast just by touching this instrument you hold in your hand?" "Why," he said, "I squeeze this handle, and when I want it to go slow, I open the mouth that grips the trolley, and it just touches it. When I want to go fast, it turns loose and grips the trolley and gets all the power in the power house. We fellows call it 'skinning the wire.'" I said, "Yes; good morning." I have two thousand people, members of my church in Atlanta, that are just "skinning the wire"; never have done anything but just "skin the wire." And you know that just about nine-tenths of our churches—I say this with intense sadness in my heart—are just "skinning the wire." But there is the power house; all the power of heaven is there at our disposal, if we will only just grip the wire with the trolley of faith. The trouble is that our faith is so weak that it just "skins the wire." God help us to have faith enough to lay hold of the handle of his power and let come down all the old-time power, the power our fathers had, the power the apostles had, that once again we may show to the world the power of God!

Several years ago, we had a young man come to visit us who had been, in the days gone by, a member of our church. He was a splendid young fellow, though a very poor boy. His people were poor people, but among the best people we had in the church. He had been off to school. He had passed two years in one of our seminaries for the education of young ministers, and had been for two years doing evangelistic work in the mountain sections of one of our Southern States. He came home to visit his people for the first time in years. I learned that he was in the town, and I went over to visit him at his mother's home, and when I was leaving, I said, "I want you to preach for us Sunday morning." "Oh," he said, "I could not think of such a thing. It would scare me to death." I said, "No, it would not." He said, "You don't want me; you are just asking me because I am a visiting minister." "No," I said, "I am asking you because I feel that you have got a message for our church." "No," he said, "I have not; I am afraid I have not." "Well," I said, "I am asking you because of your old mother. I want your old mother to hear you preach in our church." And the tears began to roll down his cheeks, and he said, "That is one reason I can't preach." I said, "You must preach." "No," he said, "I can't preach Sunday morning, but I will preach Sunday night if you want me to." I said, "No, you won't; I am going to take Sunday night myself. You can have Sunday morning if you want it." He said, "I will let you know to-morrow."

Sunday morning, when I went to church, the young man came into my study and said he had asked God to give him some sort of a message that would keep him from wasting the hour. We got on the platform. Very few of the people had heard about it, and when they saw him sit down, I could see that they were wondering what little, insignificant part of that service I was going to give him. After a while I said: "Brethren and sisters, one of our boys has just come home for the first time in four years, who has been greatly blessed in the mountains of this State, leading souls to Christ, and the representative of one of the best families in this church." And there sat his mother, bless her old heart, already weeping, and right by her side two or three of his sisters. And I said, "I have asked him to preach this morning, and I want you to pray for him while he tries to preach. He feels very much the need of your prayers." And then I could see a kind of scowl and a frown come over the faces of the old saints. They never thought of how they were grieving the Spirit of God with their lack of fellowship and sympathy.

Then he rose, opened his Bible at this first chapter of the Acts of the Apostles, and read that one verse: "Ye shall receive power after that the Holy Ghost is come upon you; and ye shall be witnesses unto me." He laid it down, and walked out from the desk, looked the people in the face, and for a moment his lips quivered and his eyes rained tears. And then, after choking two or three times, he said: "It is a hard task for me to preach to you. Here is my Sunday School teacher. He taught me for four years. He knows I don't know much; he knows I am nothing but a blundering, stupid boy. If he were not here I could do better. Here is my mother, and she knows my imperfect life; and these sisters of mine know my impatience; but I am going to tell you what God has been doing for me." Then he told the story of how he came to see his need of receiving the Holy Ghost after he was converted, after he had been licensed to preach, after his ordination, and how immediately after he had bowed his knees and opened his heart, and how God had saved the mountain men and women by the hundreds in those two years. I never saw such an effect as that sermon produced upon the audience. I never saw men so swept and swayed as they were that day. The old Sunday School teacher bowed with his head in his hands. Then, when the preacher had finished, he said, "It may be that there are some of my former schoolmates here who are not saved. I want to see you come to Christ. I see one dear fellow that I used to play with; I do not know if he is a Christian." And he called him out, and the youngster shook his head, and he said, "Won't you come to Jesus this morning?" And he said, "I will." Fourteen young men and six or seven young women that morning at eleven o'clock all came walking down the aisle, taking that young minister by the hand, accepting Jesus Christ.

As soon as the benediction was pronounced, that old deacon sprang to his feet, rushed up to me and threw his arms around me, and said: "Pastor, pastor, where did he get that sermon?" He was the man who had talked about the "wasting of the hour." I said, "Deacon, he got that sermon where you ought to get more religion; that is where he got it. He got it down yonder in that little room, lying flat on his face before God, in prayer that God would help him to withstand your criticism. That is where he got it."

If we could have a reproduction of that kind of God-dependence on the part of us preachers, when we go back to our people, how long would it take for us to find America in the sweep of a great, cyclonic revival? God help us that it may be so.

A REVIVAL IN AUBURN PRISON

TWO notable meetings were conducted by Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Mr. Charles M. Alexander on a recent Sunday for the men and women confined in the prison at Auburn, N. Y. The evangelists were conducting a two days' conference in Auburn, and gladly accepted the invitation to address the prisoners. The meeting was arranged through Chaplain Herrick by Rev. William H. Hubbard, pastor of First Presbyterian Church.

Auburn prison is one of the largest and best managed institutions of the kind in America. It was erected in 1816, and is built in the form of an old English castle. There are about twelve hundred men and one hundred women serving sentences within its walls. The meeting for the men prisoners was arranged for nine o'clock on Sunday morning. The evangelistic party met at the prison gates shortly before that time, and a little later went into the chapel. It was one of the most touching sights they had ever witnessed to look down upon the great audience of men, most of them with hardened and sin-stained faces. As each man entered the room he was given an eight-page leaflet containing several of Mr. Alexander's gospel songs. In a few minutes Mr. Alexander had turned the entire audience into a choir and the men were singing revival melodies as though they had known them for years.

Dr. Chapman spoke briefly but powerfully to the men, telling them at the beginning of his address that he had never forgotten his experience in addressing the men eight or ten years previous. He took as his text part of Jer. 18: 4: "So he made it again." He gripped the hearts of the prisoners, who gave him the closest attention. As he concluded, the men were deeply affected. He asked all those who desired to be prayed for to raise their hands, and large numbers of the prisoners responded. A few moments later, while they continued in prayer, Dr. Chapman asked all who would make that day the time when they would accept Christ to raise their hands, and a large number of hands were upraised in response.

Mr. Ernest W. Naftzger, who accompanies the evangelists as soloist, sang in a touching manner, "Memories of Mother." When he had finished, the prisoners applauded so heartily that he sang the chorus of "Tell Mother I'll be There." The next feature of the service consisted in telling the men about the Pocket Testament League. They were keenly interested in the plan; and then Dr. Hubbard gave them a surprise by offering to present a handsome Testament to every prisoner who would join the League. Chaplain Herrick later reported that hundreds had sent in their names for Testaments.

The unique and memorable service concluded with Mr. Alexander leading the men in singing "The Old Time Religion."

The evangelists then went to another part of the prison, where the women were gathered in a much smaller chapel. The sight of the men prisoners had moved the party, but the picture of the sad-faced women was even more touching. Mr. Alexander opened this meeting also with a brief song service, and the women sang with whole-souled fervor. As they sang their faces changed, and they seemed lifted out of themselves. While they were singing "Don't Stop Praying" tears stole down the faces of a number of them. Then Dr. Chapman spoke tenderly and sympathetically on the 23d Psalm. As he spoke, a number of the women could restrain themselves no longer, but burst into tears. When he concluded, he requested all the who desired to accept Christ to raise their hands, and many hands were lifted.

Auburn Prison—Evangelist J. Wilbur Chapman

E. W. Naftzger C. M. Alexander Robert Harkness

A Musical Trio

A number of colored women were in the audience. These sang with all the fervor of a Southern camp-meeting.

The plan of the Pocket Testament League was also explained to the men, and Dr. Hubbard repeated offer to them. The matron said she felt sure each of the women would gladly carry the Testament about with her in the prison.

Just before the service concluded Dr. Chapman requested all to join him in repeating the 23d Psalm, especially emphasizing the personal pronoun and it was beautiful to hear him heartily and accurately all joined repeating it. On Sunday afternoon a evening Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander concluded the two days' conference at Auburn with two large mass meetings in the Burtis Auditorium, accommodating nearly a thousand people. Many confessed Christ, and hundreds of Christians were stimulated to new consecration and zeal. All the Protestant churches in the city had united in the meetings, and the entire community was deeply stirred.

Revival in a Canadian City

Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander several weeks ago began holding meetings in Orillia, Canada, a city of about 6,000 population. Hundreds were swept into the kingdom and the religious life of the community was revolutionized. The campaign was part of a simultaneous revival conducted in the Dominion under the leadership of Dr. Chapman in co-operation with the Evangelistic Committee of the Presbyterian Church of Canada. The party working in Orillia included Dr. Chapman; Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Alexander; Mr. and Mrs. William Asher; Robert Harkness; Ernest W. Naftzger, and Ralph Norton, superintendent of personal workers. The gatherings were held in a large skating rink, accommodating nearly four thousand. Among the converts were some of the most depraved characters in the community. One "cocaine fiend" surrendered his drug bottle and his tobacco. One of the ministers spent whole night in prayer for the meetings; while scores of church people pledged themselves to spend fifteen minutes daily upon their knees in prayer for an outpouring of the Spirit. In less than two weeks, over a thousand people joined the Pocket Testament League, agreeing to read at least one chapter in the Bible daily and to carry a Testament or Bible about with them.

GEO. T. B. DAVIS.

An Old-Time Revival

THE "old-time religion" has been enjoyed by the members of the Rev. J. B. Phillips

North Baptist Church, New York City, in a recent revival which has been in progress under the leadership of Rev. J. B. Phillips, who recently resigned his pastorate in the Second Baptist Church of Macon, Ga., to enter an evangelistic campaign. His Northern tour began at the North Baptist Church, in West Eleventh Street, New York, and is continuing till Christmas in Newark and Jersey City churches.

During his work in New York his messages and methods brought happy memories of old-time fervor. Mr. Phillips is an expository preacher, using many Old Testament texts and characters from which to draw spiritual lessons. He begins his meetings with searching truths, urging church members to lay aside every weight and surrender all to God. One father was deeply stirred by the truth, and as a result was given the joy of seeing his whole family brought to Christ.

One deacon was enabled to rejoice in seeing his whole Sunday School class come out on the Lord's side. The Baraca class of eighteen young men, many of whom assisted in the auxiliary chorus, are now all in the Christian army except two. In the woman's meetings in the church and in other parts of the city God honored the messages with the power of the Spirit. A woman's prayer circle is planned for the North Church.

Mr. Phillips is a young man who experienced a remarkable conversion, which is making his life a miracle of grace. He is giving his entire energies to a service of gratitude to his Saviour. He is assisted in Newark and elsewhere by Rev. W. H. and Mrs. Scott, who sing and do personal work.

The congregations in Fairmount Baptist Church are large and enthusiastic. At the afternoon session for men, almost the entire body came forward to confess faith in Christ as Saviour. Never in the history of the church had such a demonstration been seen. The Rev. Dr. Lombard is pastor of the church.

The Florida Cuban Mission

THE Cuban Mission (M. E. Church, South), of Ybor City, Fla., continues to grow in numbers and interest. Since Rev. Douglas Lewis succeeded the late Rev. Joseph Norwood as pastor a small hall has been added to the church. It affords an attractive place for the social meetings of the League and for a club room for boys. Mr. Lewis has been untiring in his work, which has been unusually hard. He is now away taking a much needed rest, and in his absence his pulpit is filled by his assistant, Rev. Ignacio Gonzales, one of the young Cuban ministers whom Mr. Norwood was training for the ministry, and a consecrated Christian.

Wolf Mission School for Cuban children, under Miss Josephine Baker as principal, is doing a good work in giving these little ones a true Christian education. Mrs. Joseph Norwood, whose health was impaired by exposure while sick during the fire, after a long rest in Texas and New Mexico has returned to her work. She has set her heart on working for the children of Cuba, Colombia and Venezuela. Her plan is to raise a fund to be used for the support of competent Christian teachers in Venezuela and Colombia in educating poor children. She proposes to visit South America next spring and to personally aid and direct the work.

A Neglected Tribe of Central Brazil

ON the banks of the beautiful river Araguaya, which separates the States of Goyaz and Matto Grosso, lives a wild tribe of Indians called the Carajas. It is estimated that the number of "braves" is about 4,000, so that probably the total would come up to 10,000, counting men, women and children.

A Native Caraja Hut

They are pure-blooded redskin Indians, of fine physique and great agility. They are dextrous hunters with the bow and arrow, which, together with a rosewood club, are their only weapons and means of gaining a livelihood. They live almost entirely on fish, which they kill with the bow. They have no worldly belongings besides their weapons, save a few beads, a knife, and a stone axe or two. The tribe has its supreme chief, and is divided into groups, families and villages, with a "capitao" or minor chief over each. Of a shiny, copper bronze color, with beautiful long, black, lustrous hair, they are a very striking and interesting looking race. Their eyes are almond shaped, black, and with more of a tender than a ferocious look in them, while each bears on both his cheeks the circular tribal mark of the Caraja.

They are much more primitive and less energetic than their neighbors, the Chavaantes, but in spite of their indolent disposition there are many able craftsmen among them, who give themselves to the making of objects of art. Their spears and clubs are bound with cane plaits of variegated colors, in neat and uniform designs. They also make fine cloth of vegetable fibre, while their elegantly woven baskets would figure well among other like objects manufactured in the home lands.

It is said that the Caraja Indian is very affectionate, and that the mother is very much attached to her children. The day when an infant Indian warrior is named is an occasion of much feasting and rejoicing. The baby is first anointed with a kind of vegetable gum, and then covered with beautiful, small, white feathers, while its little head is decorated with a crown of large, gay-colored feathers. Thus prepared, the babe awaits the terrible ordeal, while the mother, convulsed in sobs, is held in her husband's arms. This takes place just before daybreak and on the highest ground of the village. The people gather round chanting an Indian melody, and awaiting the first peep of day. As soon as the first rays of the rising sun appear, the "bare," a kind of witch doctor, starts jumping and gesticulating in an excited manner, and suddenly, with a loud shriek, he pronounces a name, and at the same moment seizes and pierces the lower lip of the poor baby with a sharp-pointed bone used for this purpose. The name is chosen on the spur of the moment, and depends on what chances to catch the "bare's" attention at the time. It may be a cloud, a passing bird, a leaf, a palm tree seen afar off against the brightening sky, a vanishing star, a butterfly, or a humming-bird. And the gathered Indians all repeat the chosen name, "Pio-dudo," and "Pio-dudo" is re-echoed through the village; and he thus receives official recognition as a member of the tribe. Later on, an ornament of wood or shell is inserted in the orifice pierced in the young warrior's lip.

The death of an Indian warrior is attended with much ceremonial mourning and lamentation, after which the body is carried out into the woods, and for six months is supplied with food by members of the tribe. The women then wash and scrape the bones, which are religiously preserved in a clay urn, and placed in a cemetery, the location of which is a jealously guarded secret.

F. C. GLASS.

Goyaz, Capital.

The above account of the Carajas has been sent us by Mr. F. G. Glass, resident missionary in the capital of Goyaz. This city is within riding distance of Leopoldina, which would make a good base for missionary work among this and other wild tribes of the great Brazilian republic.

Civilized Indians of South America

Their evangelization has long been on our hearts as a mission—indeed, ever since God in his goodness turned our eyes to this land our aim and hope has been to ultimately reach these uncivilized interior tribes. Some years ago attempts were made in the North to reach the Indians on the River Tocantins, by way of Maranhas and Carolina, but having no base on the coast, sickness with its consequent breakdowns forced the missionaries to give that point up. The missionaries now have a good base near the coast, Sao Paulo, and a chain of stations through the State of Goyaz to the capital of the same name, and we believe that the "day of the Lord" has come for these people. We wish to secure the services of three young men of the highest mental and moral calibre, who would be willing to endure the rough manual toil, coarse food and hardships essential to all such pioneering work, and in conjunction with this appeal a fund has been opened in the Mission books to receive sums for this special end.

Correspondence may be addressed to: Rev. R. V. Bingham, 262 Delaware Avenue, Toronto, Canada; Pastor D. M. Stearns, 67 West Cheltenham Avenue, Germantown, Philadelphia; Mr. G. R. Witte, P. O. Box 23, East Northfield, Mass.

Children of the Carajas and their Primitive Surroundings

TWENTY THOUSAND ARMENIANS STARVING

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received the following cable dispatch from Rev. Mr. Peet, of the Bible House, Constantinople, with the request that it be laid before the sympathetic American people:

CONSTANTINOPLE, October 28.

DR. LOUIS KLOPSCH, New York:

Missionary Andrus, at Mardin, appeals for twenty thousand people there who, having lost everything, need winter food and shelter. Can you help them in their great distress? Have written particulars.

(Signed) PEET.

In view of the urgency of the case, Dr. Klopsch immediately cabled $250 to Rev. Mr. Peet, to be applied toward relief.

Mardin, like many other localities in Armenia, has suffered this year from a total failure of crops, the result of protracted drought. It is a centre of missionary work, and the American Board has had a station there for many years, with eight American workers, many native helpers, a score of outstations, eight churches and a large membership; also flourishing schools and a high school, which is virtually a college. During the widespread suffering and destitution which followed the great massacres of 1894-6, Mardin was a city of sorrowful tragedies. At that time THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers generously contributed a relief fund, which was disbursed by the American missionaries at sixteen different stations throughout Armenia, resulting in saving thousands of lives and in alleviating the distress of multitudes of the destitute.

Mardin, in its present disaster, naturally turns to the same source which gave it bread and life and hope during the great persecution. It should not appeal in vain. We trust that our readers will respond heartily and quickly to this cry for succor and that they may be once more the means of saving the unfortunate Armenians of Mardin from the fate of starvation by cold and hunger which now threatens them. All contributions for the Mardin sufferers will be acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mardin is an ancient city of Armenia (Eastern Turkey) about sixty miles south of Diarbekir, and situated on the slopes of the Taurus Mountains overlooking the great Mesopotamian plain. It has a population of some 25,000, including Armenians, Jews, Chaldeans, Arabs, Syrians and Koords. It is on the border of the most ancient Bible lands, and lies between the two great rivers Euphrates and Tigris. To the southeast is the traditional site of Eden, which many learned scholars identify with the description in Genesis 2:10-14. Northward lies Ararat, the scene of the descent from the ark, after the subsidence of the Flood. All around Mardin are cities that have become historic through centuries of war and suffering. Fourteen years ago, when the Sultan issued his famous pronouncement against the Armenians, known as the "Edict of Extermination," great massacres followed at Diarbekir, Van, Bitlis, Malatia, Oorfa, and other surrounding cities. Mardin itself became a scene of slaughter and rapine, when the fierce Hamidieh troops descended upon the place and butchered many of the defenseless Armenians.

A Beautiful Home Decoration

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I send you many thanks for the three pictures which you kindly sent me. I find them beautiful, artistic and of a very fine tint. They certainly will be a great addition to my home decorations.

Longview, Tex.

MRS. LEONIE HATSCHKE.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly.
Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner
available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside
the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the
wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time
to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN
HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

A Personal Suggestion

THIS is the time of the year when we are most urgently in need of the hearty co-operation of every member of the great CHRISTIAN HERALD Family.

This co-operation should be twofold, and should consist of:

First, The putting forth of reasonable effort at this opportune season to induce new subscriptions, and thus, through the advantage of increased circulation, enable us to continue the extensive line of improvements now already under way; and,

Second, The prompt and early renewal of your own subscription, more particularly so if other magazines or book premiums form part. Our December transactions are just one hundred times as large as those in September, and it goes without saying that December is a "rush month" with us.
But though we move more expeditiously to meet the changed conditions, we must nevertheless exercise the greatest care that annoying errors may not creep in. Hence we must avoid even the semblance of confusion. Right here your kind co-operation will prove most welcome, as the anticipation by even a few weeks of your renewal helps us spread over a more protracted period tens of thousands, in fact hundreds of thousands of transactions, which, with reasonable time allowance, can be put through accurately, promptly and in an orderly manner, while chaos might ensue were our unusually large force unduly pressed for time.

Of course this is only a suggestion, for no matter how late your subscription may be sent in it will always receive the best attention at our command; but a little more time may not only help us to serve your interest better, but it will also be a great relief to clerks and shippers, and especially to

Yours very cordially,

Louis Klopsch

New York, November 10, 1908.

Taking the World for Christ

THERE is a thrill in the thought that, at a time when the armies and navies of the nations are being strengthened to an extent never before known, the great army of those who are fighting for the inbringing of Christ's Kingdom upon earth is also increasing its forces and intensifying its activities everywhere. Never were church organizations, home and foreign missionary boards and the workers in the field so earnest or hopeful as to-day. With the high purpose in view of evangelizing the whole world in a single generation, they are marshaling their forces under able leaders and are steadily strengthening the ranks by recruits. The wealth of the world, too long withheld or employed for less noble purposes, is now being poured into the Lord's treasury to equip and maintain the Gospel army.

Doubting critics, who may characterize these as merely general statements, designed to encourage but impossible of substantiation, would do well to examine the situation and investigate the facts, which are accessible to all. Two years ago, the Laymen's Missionary Movement was started for the sole purpose of strengthening and energizing the Gospel battle line by extensive reinforcement of both men and means. In this movement all the Missionary Boards in the United States have joined heartily at home and co-operated cordially with Boards in Canada and Great Britain. The results of two years' effort in this far-reaching campaign are summed up in an inspiring and instructive report by Rev. Dr. Samuel B. Capen, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Laymen's Movement. In twelve American cities, the gifts to foreign missions rose from $219,000 to $790,000.

Seven Canadian cities increased their offerings from $344,000 to $977,000. Six Pacific Coast cities rose from $116,000 to $470,000. Individual churches voluntarily doubled and quadrupled their yearly tribute for the spread of the Gospel. Churches of Toronto, alone, voted to increase from $132,000 to $500,000. Twenty Canadian Anglican churches
(some of them comparatively small) rose from $25,270 to $65,850, and twenty Presbyterian Canadian churches from $27,000 to $90,000. The Methodist Episcopal Church, South, rose from $750,000 to $1,000,000, and promised a half-million increase yearly, the enlistment of 10,000 medical missionaries and the organization of an Emergency Corps of 10,000 men, ready to respond to financial calls in sudden need. The Southern Baptists have increased $100,000 over last year. The grand object of the larger movement, as the Methodist Episcopal Church has interpreted it, "is to increase fourfold the missionary force in the next quadrennium and the scale of giving as follows: $3,000,000 for 1909, $4,000,000 for 1910, $5,000,000 for 1911, $6,000,000 for 1912." These figures apply to the Methodists alone, but all the other American Protestant denominations are liberal in proportion.

Dr. Capen sets the line of battle before our eyes in this significant passage:

It is a matter of profound gratitude that so many of the denominations (in the United States and Canada) have already taken action in this matter and declared themselves responsible for the evangelizing of the following numbers in non-Christian countries:

United Presbyterians.....	15,000,000
Southern Presbyterians.....	25,000,000
Northern Presbyterians.....	100,000,000
Northern Baptists.....	61,000,000
Southern Methodists.....	40,000,000
Northern Methodists.....	150,000,000
Congregationalists.....	75,000,000
Dutch Reformed.....	13,000,000

Other denominations have not yet made an official statement.

This is a movement beside which all secular enterprises fade into insignificance. It should be the paramount issue in the life of every good man and woman, who believes that the "Great Commission" which Jesus gave to his followers was meant to be carried out by the preaching of the Gospel to all nations. And the splendid showing given above proves that the churches are rising to the opportunity. God's people in other lands—in Continental Europe, India, and even in Australia—have caught the same glorious inspiration. All the forces of Christendom are preparing to stand shoulder to shoulder for the world's evangelization.

The Sin of Worry

HOW few of us realize that worry is the result, probably in a great majority of cases, of lack of faith! Isaiah, in one of his prophecies, conveys a blessed assurance which worrying Christians should remember: "Thou shalt hear a voice behind thee saying, This is the way. Walk in it."
If we could but be content to take life moment by moment, hour by hour, day by day, a step at a time, how our doubts would vanish, our difficulties disappear and our spirits rise!

Some of us are never free from morbid fears about the past or the future. We are afraid that we did the wrong thing yesterday, or that we shall do the wrong thing to-morrow. We carry an immense amount of wholly superfluous luggage.
Either we are worrying about money or about health or about our family, not seeing that the present moment is all we have to think of, and that if we fill it to the brim with honest work God will take care of the rest.

Work hurts nobody. It is questionable whether there would be so much overwork as there is if the element of worry could be entirely left out. It is worry that writes wrinkles too soon on our faces, that bows our shoulders and drives the smile from our lips. Indigestion, that baleful demon of the haunting presence, owes its very existence in thousands of cases to the chronic worry that saps wholesome vitality and drives people into nervous depression.

"One step enough for me." Suppose we take the thought of it, as a comfort and a cure, into today's task. We shall not need tonics and cordial trips and jaunts, change of scene or anything el-that we cannot easily obtain, if we only can wa-confidently forward one step at a time, sure th-our hand is fast held in the hand of the heaven

Father. With Whittier, let us say:

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

The Suffragettes

PERIODICALLY the joy of life is increased these days by the strenuous efforts of certain British matrons and maids to break down the in-memorial defenses of John Bull and invade his sp-cial privileges. English women have always take intense and intelligent interest in national and municipal politics. But the women who wear th-title "suffragettes" do not represent the entire erolment of their sex in Great Britain. The violencof their demonstrations, the fury and clamor, add-to the futility, of their proceedings make them laughing-stock to the thoughtless in many a Britis-household. Nevertheless, the women who so earnestly desire the ballot are a not despicable minority.
Their leaders are drawn from the ranks of the aristocracy and gentry and they consider themselves th-advance guard and the pioneers in a new movemen-They willingly incur the consequences of their vehemence, and suffer contumely without complaint and go to jail with the fortitude of martyr.

The truth is, these suffragettes mean busines-Undoubtedly, there are thousands of English speaking women on both sides of the sea, womeliberally educated, owning property and payin-taxes, and women of ambitious fibre, who fail t-understand why a certain class of men, with little at stake in land or money, may vote while the-are forbidden. The suffragettes in our own lan-are just beginning to be in evidence, and it manot be long before we have to face the problein as acute and formidable a fashion as we find i-in England to-day.

Among the Workers

—REV. J. WILBUR CHAPMAN, accompanied by Charles Alexander, the Gospel singer, and his wife, Dr. Zartman, Mr. G. T.
B. Davis, and others, held a Christian Workers' Conference at Berea, October 21 and 22, attended by students and faculty of Berea College, and representatives of seven other Kentucky institutions, and a great concourse of citizens. Nearly 60 Berea students joined the Pocket Testament League, and about forty began a Christian life.

—MISSIONARY F. H. L. PATON, of the New Hebrides Missiowrites to Dr. Klopsch: "Again I have to thank your readers for their contribution for the New Hebrides Mission. The latest reports are much more encouraging. The joint government is setting itself to stamp out the traffic in strong drink and firearms. The Gospel ingathering continues on Tanna and about half the population are now Christian. On Paama Mr. Frater baptized 103 adults a few weeks ago, and there is only one heathen village left on that island."

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, November 11, 1908

	PAGE
Results of the Election (Portraits)	882
The Old Japan and the New (Illustrated)	883
By Matthias Klein, Akashi
The Power of the Spirit. Sermon	884, 885
By Rev. Len. G. Broughton
The "Family Altar League" (Portraits)	885
A Revival in Auburn Prison (Illustrated)	886
A Neglected Tribe of Central Brazil (Illustrated)	887
20,000 Armenians Starving	887
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	888
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER	889
"Baltimore" (Illustrated).	890, 900
Serial. By Merritt Crawford
In the Home Circle (Illustrated)	895
By Margaret E. Sangster
OUR MAIL-BAG	896
Fishermen Drying their Barrel Nets (Illustrated)	896
How a Street Preacher Founded a Mission (Illustrated)	897
Topics at Home and Abroad	897
Crowned for Time and Eternity	898, 899
Books Received	900
Gratitude. Christian Endeavor Topic	901
Controlled by the Spirit. Epworth League Topic	901
Giving a Start in Life.	902

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

England's Labor Troubles

THERE is widespread industrial and social unrest throughout the world. There is always more or less poverty and distress; but the unfortunate conditions of the working people of the world have been rendered more depressing by the panic of the past year, which has been felt in almost every nation of the earth. The unemployed of London had a great demonstration on a recent Saturday night in Trafalgar Square. Some of the banners were inflammatory in character. One was: "Work or Revolution—Which? The Government Must Decide." Another was: "Starved to Death in a Land of Plenty," the banner being surmounted by a human skull. The discontent among the multitude of unemployed was greatly heightened by a large delegation of female suffragists, who poured out their grievances, and in fervid eloquence besought their fellow unfortunates to join with them in a raid on the House of Commons. The Tuesday following, a great throng of the unemployed and women suffragists combined made a determined effort to invade the House of Commons, and it required the most tactful and most vigorous service of seven or eight thousand policemen to resist their attack. The serious subject of dealing by legislation with this dissatisfied constituency must engage the attention of ministers. Mr. Asquith has pledged himself to make specific proposals concerning it. Just what the Parliament will wish to do, or be able to do, is a question which remains to be seen. In our own country, we are confronted with the same unrest and the same demand, upon the part of the industrial classes, for friendly legislation. It is claimed by some that many in the London assault were not unemployed at all, but were men having tasks and earning wages; and others say that a number were persons mentally and morally unfit for any responsible work, being rendered so by a fondness for rum and evil habits. Even if his has been proven to be the fact, there must have been a large number of honest, industrious men, who, by the pressure of hard times, have been unable to secure work and naturally look to the government to see if there could not be some relief.

Legislation, of course, can improve the condition of the masses; but the permanent adjustment of the difficulties between capital and labor must come eventually from bountiful harvests, industrious individuals, frugality of life, integrity of character, and benevolence of disposition. In so far as the example and spirit of Christ shall have its way, capital and labor will each recognize its obligation and privilege, and each will recognize its necessary relationship to the prosperity of the other.

Why stand ye here all the day idle? They say unto him, Because no man hath hired us. (Matt. 20: 6, 7.)

Gift at Golden Jubilee

Mr. John S. Kennedy, who came from Scotland to this country when a young man and amassed a great fortune, has shown unusually good judgment in the objects of his benevolences. He gave the United Charities a building which cost about $600,000; he founded a school of philanthropy which has been of great service. He has made large contributions to Columbia University, the Metropolitan Museum of New York, and other institutions. He has just given a million dollars to the Presbyterian Hospital in New York City, of whose board of trustees he is the president. He had given generously to the institution before, but has made it possible to greatly enlarge the work by his recent gift.

The million dollars were given in recognition of the fiftieth anniversary of his marriage. A benevolence of this character is beautified by the divine relationship which it commemorates. This act is in marked contrast to the too numerous divorces in high life and carries with it a wholesome example, as well as a permanent charity.

Events, and especial acts of divine providence, in olden times were marked by piles of stones. Some of the most magnificent buildings and monuments of the past and present mark the love for a nation or a hero, or a member of the family. The new hospital building with its Christlike sympathy and service will befittingly commemorate the conjugal love grown so ripe and sweet with the years.

What mean ye by these stones? . . . These stones shall be for a memorial unto the children of Israel forever. (Josh. 4: 6, 7.)

New Uses of Peat

Consul Henry S. Culver, of Cork, writes that the peat beds of Ireland may yet become a valuable asset in that country's industrial development otherwise than for fuel, if, as is now claimed upon the authority of an Austrian expert, the fibres of the remains of the reeds and grasses, of which peat is composed, can be utilized not only for paper making and carpets but for weaving the finest fabrics as well. The claim is put forth that the fibre is elastic and durable, and, being a non-conductor of heat, the cloth manufactured from it is as tough as linen and as warm as woolen. If the inventions of men can turn the wood of a tree into delicate paper, it will not be surprising if they shall be able to transmute dirt into a beautiful fabric.

London Police Keeping Order Among the Crowds of Unemployed

I wisdom find out knowledge of witty inventions. (Prov. 8: 12.)

A Noted Missionary Gone

The Rev. Hiram Bingham, the distinguished Congregational missionary, died after a surgical operation at Johns Hopkins Hospital, in Baltimore, October 25. The death of this divine removes one of the most unique and potential characters from the universal Christian Church. His father, Hiram Bingham, Sr., went as a missionary to Honolulu, Sandwich Islands, in 1819, where he remained, doing service of unspeakable value to the natives, until 1841, when the sickness of his wife required his return to this country. In 1831 Hiram Bingham, Jr., was born in Honolulu. He came to this country to graduate at Yale in 1853, and then returned to the Islands to take up his father's work as a missionary. Immediately after marrying Dr. Bingham became captain of the American Foreign Mission Board's missionary vessel, Morning Star. They went to the Gilbert Islands, where they remained with the savages. Both became dangerously ill with tropical fever and went to Honolulu, and after five years of service returned to the Gilbert Islands. It was his father's expressed request that the son should translate the Scriptures into one of the island languages. The son, under the inspiration of an industrious, enterprising, consecrated wife, set himself to the great task, and translated the Scriptures into Gilbertese. Next, he wrote a commentary of the New Testament in the Gilbertese language, and two months ago he was summoned from the Sandwich Islands by the Prudential Committee of the American Board to correct its proofs. Upon his arrival in New York he was stricken with pneumonia, and, against the advice of his physician, he appeared at the annual meeting of the American Board in Brooklyn. He had hoped to be spared long enough to finish his translation of a commentary of the whole Bible in Gilbertese, but death came swiftly and the pen dropped out of his fingers.

It makes one proud of his race and of the religion of the Master to see such heroic characters as those of Dr. Bingham and his sainted father and of the wives that wrought with them. Savages and cannibals, under their message and the sweet spell of their love, were changed into good citizens and true Christians. Dr. Bingham, through his pen and influence, will live through the centuries in the hearts and institutions of the Pacific Islands.

And the isles shall wait for his law. (Isa. 42: 4.)

Chestnut Trees Dying

Thousands of the finest chestnut trees, especially in the eastern parts of the United States, are dying from a blight or fungus, which was first noticed about four years ago, and has made such rapid progress that there is danger of losing the chestnut forests of that section. Country Life in America says: "The infection is caused by spores entering the bark of the tree through wounds which cause an exposed surface of dead wood. Once established, the infection spreads in all directions through the tender inner bark, girdling the limb or the trunk in a few weeks and causing the death of the portion above the infected area." The difficulty of treating it in the forest is very great, as the trees must be looked after individually. The blight is so deadly that the United States Department of Agriculture has advised that all who have chestnut trees affected with this disease should destroy them immediately, and thus prevent infection to the other chestnut trees, unless they regard the tree as sufficiently valuable to be treated individually. The death of the diseased tree is only a question of time and of a very short time, and, by cutting it down immediately, the danger of infecting trees still healthy is reduced to a minimum.

Wherever we find a thing that lives, we find an enemy that desires and undertakes to kill it. Every plant and animal life has some deadly enemy waiting to prey upon it.

And shall eat every tree which groweth for you out of the field. (Ex. 10: 5.)

Pearl Farming

The largest pearl farm in the world is to be found in the Gulf of Lower California. A thousand men are required to harvest the crop each year. After twenty-five years of experiment, it was discovered that the shell loses its gem after it is two years old, and, unless opened at the proper time, there will be no pearl within. Jewels of character are grown in the human heart by right thoughts, pure sentiments and holy deeds.

The kingdom of heaven is like unto a merchantman seeking goodly pearls. (Matt. 13: 45.)

"BALTIMORE"

A TALE OF METROPOLITAN LIFE

SYNOPSIS OF THE FIRST CHAPTER

John Barkwell, though a member of a highly respected family, has fallen through drink and is leading the life of a homeless tramp. He is known as "Baltimore" to his associates. For the second time in two months he is brought before the same judge, who lets him have another chance, on "Baltimore" asserting that the world was against him. The judge sends him with a card to the head of the Bowery Mission. "Baltimore" promises the judge he will not drink, but finding a dime, he cannot resist and turns into a saloon.

II.

It had been a particularly blessed meeting at the Bowery Mission. The text of the evening had been, "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, to repentance," Luke 5:32; and more than twenty men had responded to the call. The heart of the kindly superintendent was supremely happy.

"Perhaps there are some of you," he said, as the meeting was about to close, "whose hearts have been touched by the talk we have just heard—who hesitate to come forward because of some doubt—some fear—that the way may not be open to them. The way to God's grace is as broad as the sky, and all may travel it who wish to find him. His door is ever open to his children—no matter how far they may have wandered—and over it is written, in letters of shining gold, 'REPENT YE, AND ENTER IN.' There are none of you—not one—who may not partake of God's boundless love; not one who may not 'enter in.' For those of you who have hesitated to come forward, and who wish to speak their heart, we have the after-meeting. Let us help you to find that blessed peace and comfort which our Lord has so bounteously provided for us all. If he is knocking at your hearts, do not deny him entrance. Remember that he suffered and died to save all."

The superintendent paused, and turned over the pages of the Testament which he held in his hand.

"Before I say goodnight to you," he went on, "I want to read to you two verses which I wish you would take with you when you leave to-night. They are the ninth and sixteenth verses from the tenth chapter of John. I want you to carry them always in your hearts—they will help you to find Him."

As he read the verses six hundred men—from every class, and almost every land, but all brothers now in their common adversity—hung reverently on the words which the Master spoke to his disciples and the Pharisees upon the Mount of Olives nearly nineteen hundred years ago.

"I am the door; by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture. . . .

"And other sheep I have, which are not of this fold: them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." John 10: 9, 16.

As the men quietly withdrew the superintendent turned to the others on the platform.

"I pray that his voice may reach some of these poor lost ones to-night," he said.

"There's someone waiting to see you, Mr. H——," said his assistant a few moments later, as the superintendent was leaving the platform; "one of the worst specimens I've seen in a long time," he volunteered; "he says he's got a letter for you from Judge D——."

"Ask him if he will join us at the after-meeting, Mr. Long," he glanced at his watch, "and say that I shall be very glad to see him afterward."

The superintendent hurried from the platform, stopping to shake the hands of one or two men who were waiting for the after-meeting to commence, or to give a kindly word of encouragement or advice.

He did not notice the waiting "Baltimore," and, if he had, would probably have concurred in his assistant's opinion. Except that he was a little cleaner, and, moreover, absolutely sober, there was little change in his appearance.

Had the superintendent looked, however, his quick eye could not have failed to observe the strange exaltation that possessed the man. There was a light in "Baltimore's" eyes that had never been there before. No longer were they dumb, hopeless, and full of a nameless fear, but bright with hope and eagerness, and glistening with a new excitement. Truly, it was as if another man was looking out of old "Baltimore's" swollen, sin-worn face, which now seemed like some grotesque and hideous mask, hiding the beautiful, newly-wakened soul.

By MERRITT CRAWFORD

His hands trembled, as they had in the courtroom on the day before, but it was because of this wondrous power which now filled and thrilled him, rather than the effects of his past excesses.

He had not come to the Mission on the previous evening because of his broken resolution, and, indeed, had only attended the meeting to-night because he felt he owed it to the judge's kindness to do so, and also through some fear of incurring his displeasure. The magistrate's somewhat whimsical kindness had somewhere touched a chord, hidden deep in this outcast's sordid nature, and he had awakened that morning with a sense of shame entirely novel to him. He had broken his promise to the only man who had treated him as if he was a human being in five long years, and "Baltimore" had determined to carry out the letter, if not the spirit, of his directions.

"'Are—those—things—true?' asked Baltimore appealingly."

He had entered the Mission shortly after the beginning of the service and had seated himself, half-sullenly, in a corner, as far distant from the platform as he could. "Baltimore" had a contempt for missions in general. They might be all very well for some people, he thought, but what good could they do him here? His chance was gone—gone with the dead leaves of that long-dead year when he found he could no longer control his growing taste for alcohol.

Some word—some phrase—of the speaker attracted his attention, and he had listened to his words, full of a golden hope and promise, at first cynically, then more attentively, and finally with absorbing interest.

"I came not to call the righteous, but sinners, repentance," repeated the voice on the platform. "Baltimore" started. He had not heard the text in the beginning, and it brought to him a flood of recollections which he had striven vainly to blot out with drink.

He remembered his mother—he used to take her to church in those almost forgotten days. Who was she now? He remembered—it seemed like a stab in his sin-steeped heart—when a loving wife and two prattling babes had meant all the world to him. That was before he had lost all ambition, before he dreamed that he could sink so low; before but they were dead now, and—and he was only "Baltimore."

He listened. Could these words be for him? Did Christ mean those words for such as he? He listened. And in the dark depths of his cankered, calloused heart, its pure rays scattering the black cloud of sin that enveloped it, a tiny star of hope appeared—a star that grew and grew, filling his whole soul with the light that never dies.

When the superintendent had spoken, a great yearning came over him—a yearning to know more of this beautiful joy that thrilled him—a yearning for the loved ones who he knew he could never see in this world again. Yet if the words he had heard were true there was hope that he might—might see them again and clasp them to his heart, praying for the forgiveness he had not sought until it was too late.

Oh, wonderful grace, that could cleanse the heart of this poor outcast, sodden with sin and shame though he was, and make him "even as a little child!"

III.

One by one most of the men at the after-meeting had risen and related their experiences and expressed their hope of leading a better life, and for each the superintendent had some helpful word to light and guide their faltering steps in the new pathways they had chosen.

"Is there not one more of you," he asked gently, as no one rose to take the last speaker's place, "who wishes to give his heart to God?"

In the rear of the room a chair creaked and a man rose to his feet. He cleared his throat with some difficulty and licked his dry lips. Yet when he spoke his voice sounded so hoarsely that the others could barely understand him. It was "Baltimore."

"The reason why I came here to-night," he began awkwardly, as if some apology for his presence there was needed, "is because I've got a note for Mr. H——."

He indicated the superintendent with a gesture. "I never 've been in a—mission before," he went on hesitatingly; "somehow they didn't seem t' be th' place for a man like me—some how I couldn't see how they could do a man like me any good. But I've heard some things here to-night—that's set me thinkin'—thinkin' o' things 'at I thought I'd forgotten long ago. W'at I want to know is," he looked around appealingly, "are those—things—true? Has a man like me got any chance to go—there?"

Behind his commonplace language and evident embarrassment, there was some stronger emotion with which he was struggling that caused the superintendent to look toward him with quick sympathy. The hungry, pathetic look he saw in "Baltimore's" eyes made him wince.

"Our Lord suffered and died that all men might be saved," he said simply, "and none of us can fall so far that his loving hand cannot reach out to save—if we seek him."

"W'y should He want ter save me," queried the other despairingly, "w'en I've got nothin' worth savin'?"

"There is more joy in heaven, brother, over one

Continued on page 896

Our Wonderful Art Gallery De Luxe

Painted by J. L. G. Ferris

Size 12 x 15 Inches

Washington's March Through the Jerseys

Painted by S. Paulus

Size 12 x 15 Inches

"Saved at Last, Thank God"

Free to All New and Renewing Subscribers

WE ARE at a Loss for Words to Describe in Adequate Terms the wondrous beauty of the "Art Gallery De Luxe," which the Christian Herald generously offers to send free to each and every subscriber. This fine collection consists of exquisite reproductions of Six Masterpieces in their Original Colors, aggregating a full thousand square inches of superb color-work, the value of which cannot be measured by the ordinary standard of dollars and cents. The little reproductions on this page, while insignificant as to size, give an idea of the subjects represented in our Gallery De Luxe, but we lack the descriptive powers to convey to the reader an intelligent idea of their artistic merit.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

The Christian Herald always excels in its premiums the advertised description, but this year even its oldest and best friends will marvel at the surpassing attractiveness of its "Art Gallery De Luxe." New subscribers, who are not acquainted with the generous treatment that characterizes its every transaction, will not be able to understand how The Christian Herald can afford such a generous gift. Nevertheless it is a fact, though it may baffle many to understand how it is possible.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Four months of steady labor, by the ablest artists, have been spent on this work, and the result is grand, glorious, superb, beyond compare.

Just think of Six Beautiful Separate Pictures, Unmounted, aggregating 1,000 square inches—offered FREE as a Premium, with a yearly Subscription to the Brightest and Best Family Paper in the World; All together for only $1.50. It seems incredible, but it is nevertheless true. How we can do it is our Secret. You get the benefit.

Painted by C. Von Bergen

Size 12 x 15 Inches

Under the Shade of the Apple Tree

Size 12 x 15 Inches

Painted by Wilhelm Haselbach

"Hide and Seek"

These exquisite pictures, Each of Which Will Make a Handsome Christmas Gift, aggregate 1,000 square inches, and are reproduced in all the full splendor of their original colorings by the finest lithographic process in the world. Each and every one, framed and hung, would be a credit to the most refined home in the land. Moreover, these pictures cannot be purchased at any art store for any price, because the exclusive right for reproduction belongs to The Christian Herald; yet $1.50 entitles you to all six of these large pictures and a year's subscription to the Brightest and Best Family Paper in the World.

★ ★ ★ ★ ★

Christmas time is coming. It will be here before you are fully aware of the fact. These Six Pictures will make Six of the Finest Christmas Presents one can think of, or they will adorn the walls of your own home for many years to come.

To get a set of these Famous and Beautiful Masterpieces, you must act at once, or you may be disappointed. But remember that if you are too late your money is Immediately Refunded, or if you are not altogether satisfied—in fact, more than pleased.

Five pictures are illustrated on this page; the sixth picture of the set, and the most famous of all, is the celebrated painting by Abbott Graves, entitled The Foundling. This represents an aged couple discovering by the light of a lamp, a wee babe left in a basket at their door.

Should your subscription reach us too late to entitle you to this unprecedented gift, we will send you a telegram at our own expense, and your money will be immediately refunded by mail. This is done to modify disappointment, and to enable you to use the money, without unnecessary loss of time, in some other direction.

Painted by E. Debat Ponson

Size 12 x 15 Inches

The Tryst at the Brook

Our Money-Saving Combinations

American Boy

Biggest, brightest, best boys' monthly magazine in the world. Profusely illustrated. Edited by experts who understand boy nature. Give your boy reading that not only interests but develops him.

The stories are by the best known writers for boys. All boy hobbies are exploited, such as stamps, coins and curios, photography, mechanics and electricity, popular science, puzzles, biography, athletics, etc. Parents like and respect its clean uplifting influence and all boys are enthusiastic over it. Parents need never worry about their boy's company when he is chumming with The American Boy. It is truly the ideal boy's magazine and is welcomed in 125,000 homes.

American Magazine

Is selected by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this year as one of the leaders in its club offers because of the illustrious group of writers announced for the coming year. F. P. Dunne ("Mr. Dooley"), Ida M. Tarbell, William Allen White, Samuel Hopkins Adams, William J. Locke, May Sinclair, Stewart Edward White, Ray Stannard Baker, O. Henry and Brand Whitlock are a few among the many. Every number of The American Magazine contains the best that can be gotten from the pens of the greatest writers—literature that lives and breathes and spurs to better living—illustrations that are true to life and nature. It is a new magazine in every sense—new writers, new subjects, new artists and new fiction—and an appeal to the mind and heart that is brand new in periodical literature.

Cosmopolitan

No matter how many magazines you take, Cosmopolitan is the one you cannot afford to do without. Its subscribers of last year are subscribers this year—with their friends! They'll be subscribers next year—with their friends' friends! This, after all, is the real test of a magazine's merits—that its readers tell their friends about it. You can be sure that in 1909 one feature in each issue will be of such universal interest as to dominate the magazine world for that month—as single instances, take Cosmopolitan's great series of brilliant short stories by George Randolph Chester, or its remarkably popular special articles on "The Owners of America." The motto, "The best—no matter what it costs," makes Cosmopolitan resemble no other magazine but Cosmopolitan.

Good Housekeeping

Good Housekeeping is a richly illustrated magazine for all the family. It is, by general acknowledgment, the most practical of the household magazines, and at the same time one of the brightest, most refreshing periodicals for general reading. It has at least one first-class short story each month, abounds in good illustrated fun, and is an all-around family magazine. It makes a specialty of discussion of vital problems of the home in an incisive yet popular manner, of arts and crafts, of its inimitable "Discoveries." It was the pioneer in Emmanuel Church literature, and still maintains the most helpful department of this kind. It is issued monthly and reaches no less than a million readers. Whatever magazines you take, Good Housekeeping should be one of them.

Harper's Bazar

For forty-one years Harper's Bazar has been the leading American authority on fashion, good form, and entertainment. It will continue to be an invaluable household guide and assistant.

Harper's Bazar is made for all refined American women. Such women are its most ardent admirers, whether their incomes are large or small, whether their scale of living is simple or complex, whether they dwell in town or country.

Harper's Bazar preaches economy—rational domestic economy—and wise spending. Harper's Bazar preaches simplicity—the simplicity of sane, wholesome living. Harper's Bazar preaches progress—progress in the kitchen, in the nursery, and in every other home department.

NOTE—The descriptive matter on this page concerning the above magazines is supplied by their respective publishers for the information of our readers.

Magazine Clubs

Originated with Dr. Louis Klopsch of The Christian Herald, in 1897. Magazine readers are therefore indebted to The Christian Herald for the opportunity of securing two or more magazines in a combination at about half price. For this year our selected list of choice magazines which we offer in clubs is as follows:

American Boy,	(Regular Price)	$1.00	Little Folks,	(Regular Price)	$1.00
American Magazine,	"	$1.00	McClure's,	"	$1.50
Cosmopolitan,	"	$1.00	Pearson's,	"	$1.50
Good Housekeeping,	"	$1.00	Success Magazine,	"	$1.00
Harper's Bazar,	"	$1.00	World To-Day,	"	$1.50
Woman's Home Companion, (Regular Price) $1.25

Four Genuine Bargains!

1. CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 1 Magazine above, $2.00
2. CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 2 Magazines above, $2.65
3. CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 3 Magazines above, $3.30
4. { CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) Send Us Only
REVIEW OF REVIEWS ($3.00 a Year) $3.00
ANY ONE OTHER Magazine on this Page For All Three

(Foreign Postage Extra. Canadian Postage Extra on Magazines.)

Each Magazine may be sent to a different address.

Our "Art Gallery De Luxe" goes FREE with every offer.

For "Modern Priscilla" (Fancywork—Monthly) add 25 cents to any combination.

After Feb. 1, 1909, 25 cents must be added whenever Woman's Home Companion is included.

EVER POPULAR GIFTS

Search wherever you may, you will never find anything that, at the price, gives greater and more genuine satisfaction as a gift than a weekly or monthly magazine, which the whole year through periodically reminds the recipient of the thoughtfulness of the giver.

Little Folks

A beautifully illustrated monthly magazine for young children. Mothers and fathers who wish to provide the very best reading and pictures for their young children, that will be read and re-read, and looked at and looked at, welcome Little Folks. It is a story-teller, a picture book, a playfellow, an out-of-school magazine. Its fun is of a simple, sunshiny sort. Its little tales of children possess an ethical value—they stimulate their readers and hearers to be fearless, cheerful, unselfish, and above all true and honorable. All stories of a painful kind are excluded, especially such as would haunt nervous and imaginative children. There is much curious and interesting natural history, also play-work for little fingers.

McClure's Magazine

The magazine of the hour. McClure's is an American institution—it reflects the opinions and beliefs of authoritative writers on the problems that are of vital interest to the American people.

McClure's is always a step in advance of other magazines. Besides the articles on government, politics, people and things, McClure's is also famous for its fiction. McClure's Magazine was the first to make the monthly periodical a vital influence in good government and good citizenship—an instrument to help a great, wide-spread people understand itself and its possibilities. The coming numbers will make new history for McClure's—you'll want them surely.

Pearson's Magazine

You hear more about Pearson's than any other magazine because it regularly contains things that tend to encourage and invigorate the America-loving American. Red corpuscles in its blood. Stalwart articles by James Creelman, Henry Reuter Dahl and Rupert Hughes—"The Message," a new serial by Louis Tracy, author of "The Wings of the Morning," which will run well into 1909. Short stories that are genuinely good—serials that are standard—the best the world to-day produces. Pearson's fits everywhere. It fits every combination of magazines—unlike all the others. It fits your ideas of instruction and entertainment—healthful, upbuilding. No bones to pick—no muck-raking.

Review of Reviews

The Review of Reviews is accepted by intelligent people as the one best periodical to keep up with the times. Dr. Shaw's editorial "Progress of the World" opens the magazine with twenty splendidly illustrated pages that give the reader a clear, finely interpreted account of the men and events of the month.

The character sketches of just the notable figures who are interesting at the time, and the other contributed articles on the topics most "alive" are the most timely and valuable to be found in the periodicals.

Thus you have the month's history elucidated, the most valuable contributed articles published, the best things picked out of all the other magazines for you, and a hundred illustrations entertaining and educational at the same time.

Success Magazine

Success Magazine combines in a most unusual way, great inspirational features with high literary excellence and a special service to subscribers through its Home Departments and Correspondence Bureaus, which is quite unique. Its inspirational editorials by Orison Swett Marden (author of "Pushing to the Front") are world-famous; its fiction is by the best American and European authors, and its illustrations and cover designs are by the leading artists of the day.

Among the important features for the coming year will be a continuation of the series recently begun upon "The Country Church and Minister and Their Life Problems," contributed by "those who know" from actual and heartfelt experience.

Woman's Home Companion

The Greater Woman's Home Companion at the new price of $1.25 has set a new standard for women's magazines. Fiction by Kate Douglas Wiggin, Mary Wilkins Freeman, Josephine Daskam Bacon, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; The Reminiscences of Dr. Edward Everett Hale; Jack London's Round-the-World Letters—all will be a part of the Greater Companion for 1909.

Love scenes of the great novels are being painted for the Companion by Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy, C. Allen Gilbert and James Montgomery Flagg. Another unique art feature will be the portraits of the most beautiful women of all times—a remarkable collection of the famous beauties of the world. The Children's Department, and the twelve special departments for women, even more than in the past, will be the backbone of the magazine.

World To-day (The)

The only magazine of its class sold at a popular price. The World To-day is a monthly world review, but is not made up of clippings of other publications. It obtains its information from original sources, and is reliable and up-to-date. Its contributors are the foremost men and women of the day. The reader will find in it recreation for the idle hour and—best of all—something worth while. Many illustrations are in colors. All other magazines of its class sell at $3. The World To-day is but $1.50. Its remarkable quality and low price make it an exceptional bargain, and we recommend it strongly to our readers.

Only India Paper Red Letter Bible

What Is a Red Letter Bible?

A Red Letter Bible differs from an ordinary Bible in many important points. While the text is the same in both Bibles, the ordinary Bible is printed in black throughout, but the Red Letter Bible employs two colors, viz., RED and BLACK. Although the black color largely predominates, the red color is used to excellent advantage, thus:

FIRST—In the Old Testament all passages quoted by our Lord, or referred to by him, are printed in red.

SECOND—In the New Testament all the words universally accepted as spoken by our Saviour are printed in red.

THIRD—Every verse in the Old Testament which embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah is distinguished by a red star.

The style of type used in this Bible is the same throughout, whether the passage is printed in black or in red.

The Words of Our Lord

It is interesting just here to recall the divergence of opinion among a group of notable clergymen, who were in conference in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD offices when the question was put to them: "What percentage of the Gospels do you think was actually spoken by Christ himself?" One answered about ten per cent., another said fifteen per cent., while a third ventured to estimate them at twenty-five per cent. An investigation revealed that all the clergymen were wrong and that the actual number spoken by our Lord equaled nearly one-half of all the words contained in the Gospels.

The Red Letter Bible gives the exact proportion, and according to it Christ uttered of the Gospels as follows:

Of Matthew,	54 per cent.
Of Mark,	36 "
Of Luke,	55 "
Of John,	41 "

or an average of 47½ per cent. of them all.

Thus, nearly half of the words contained in the Gospels were spoken by our Lord. The relative length of the Gospels is as follows: Matthew, 5,050 lines; Mark, 3,206 lines; Luke, 5,350 lines; John, 3,952 lines.

Small Bibles in Greater Demand

Heretofore, large Bibles were preferred on account of their low price, but now the demand is for small Bibles printed from clear and easily legible type on thin paper of light weight. This demand is met in our new Red Letter Bible, which, though weighing only one pound and four ounces, is as legible as our former Red Letter Bible, weighing nearly three times as much, the contents being absolutely the same. Bold-face type of our special design and India paper enabled us to achieve this great triumph in Bible-making.

How Do You Like the Type?

This Article is set in the type used in our India Paper Red Letter Bibles, more fully described in the opposite column. It is a very bold and very legible type, designed expressly for this Bible.

MEASURES
7x11 INCHES
WHEN
OPEN

THIS IS A GREATLY REDUCED
PICTURE OF OUR RED LETTER BIBLE

Description of Our RED LETTER Bible

➡ Weighing Only Twenty Ounces ➡

THE text of this Bible is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. Then there are 268 pages of Helps (or Concordance) and 17 superb maps. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and Very Durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market. For size of type, see opposite column on this page.

We send this superb book, together with $3.00 The Christian Herald for one whole year and our incomparable Art Gallery De Luxe for only

We Issue this Bible in the Authorized Version Only

Something Still Better

If you can afford to pay $1 more, ask for the same Bible bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leather Lining, Silk Sewed, which will wear a Lifetime. This Bible is Equal to Any $10.00 Bible. It $4.00 is sent with The Christian Herald for one year, and our "Art Gallery De Luxe," For Only

Our Red Letter Testament

This beautiful volume is the Only New Testament which contains All the Words Spoken by Our Lord Printed in Red. The Type is Very Clear, and the Alignment of the Red and Black Lettering Absolutely Perfect. The Red Letter New Testament is Exquisitely Bound in American Levant, Soft and Flexible, with Overlapping Edges—Red Under Gold—with Book-mark, making a Compact Volume that may be Conveniently Carried in the Pocket.

☆☆☆

The Red Letter New Testament is Issued in Both the Authorized and Revised Versions, and is Sent, All Charges Prepaid, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Year, $2.00 and ART GALLERY, for ONLY

➡ When ordering, state whether you want Authorized or Revised Version of the New Testament. ➡

MAGAZINE COMBINATION BLANK

To THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 to 116 Bible House, New York City:

Enclosed please find $_____ for The Christian Herald and the following Magazines, to be sent to the Addresses as below, service to begin at once, if not otherwise specified.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with any ONE Magazine (except Review of Reviews) listed on OPPOSITE PAGE, $2.00; with any TWO Magazines, $2.65; with any THREE Magazines, $3.30.

Send The Christian Herald		NAME	STREET AND POST-OFFICE	STATE
FOR ONE YEAR—52 TIMES—With ART GALLERY DE LUXE, $1.50 for United States and Canada. Foreign Countries $1 Extra.
to		IS THIS A RENEWAL?
SEND	to		With ONE Magazine, $2.00
HERE GIVE NAME OF MAGAZINE
SEND	to		With TWO Magazines, $2.65
HERE GIVE NAME OF MAGAZINE
SEND	to		With THREE Magazines, $3.30
HERE GIVE NAME OF MAGAZINE

FREE Our Superb ART GALLERY DE LUXE goes FREE with Every Annual Subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Name of Sender

Date 190

Address

EACH MAGAZINE May be Sent to a DIFFERENT ADDRESS

Three Remarkable Premium Offers

The Story of the White House

The American People have just decided the Momentous Question, "Who shall be our next President?" and during the next few months all eyes will be especially turned on the White House and its Present and Prospective Occupants. Could any Book be more Timely than "The Inside Story of the White House," which Unfolds, in Brilliant and Realistic Style, for the first time the Story of the Comedy and Tragedy, the Joys and Sorrows, and the Loves and Heartaches of that are interwoven with its Intensely Dramatic History? Here we see the Intimate, Personal, Fire-side Life of our 26 Presidents, their Wives, their Daughters and their Sons, since that New Year's Day when, with a splendid Reception, John Adams, our Second President, first opened the doors of the Stately Mansion. It tells how they Worked, how they Played, and how they Spent their Leisure Moments. Never was a Book more full of Captivating and Diversified Incidents or more Absorbing from the First Page to the very Last. Remember 1909 is Inauguration Year.

Presidential Home Life

Right Up to Date

As we read The Inside Story of the White House our eyes are now Dazzled with the Brilliance of State Functions and again Dimmed by an Unexpected Bit of Pathos, as, Pushing aside the Curtain of Pomp and Ceremony, We Enter the Private Lives of the Great Men and Good Women who have, each for a brief period, made the Stately White House their home. Once we own this book it is read from cover to cover. An Entire Chapter of this Volume is Devoted to the Incoming Presidential Family, with Portraits of all its Members.

A Glimpse Beyond

Whether Dr. Peters has looked into heaven with his own eyes we know not; but in this substantial and handsome volume he sees and makes his readers see the beauties of the Cloudless Land. In a lucid, simple yet scholarly manner, Dr. Peters treats of and discusses questions that have deeply agitated thinking men and women from time immemorial. This Masterpiece of Thought and Literature also contains

A Book for the Whole Family

The Attractive Volume of Enchanting Stories and Immo- Legends, compiled by Hamilton Wright Mabie, under the C- titivating Title, "World-Famed Stories and Legends," is a B- for the Library Table; a Book to be Read Aloud on Win- Evenings; a Veritable Treasure-House of Fiction. Here the Stories that Young Folks Instinctively Love and Delight- that Old Folks Keenly Relish; Stories that Appeal to the He- at Eight or Eighty; t- Develop the Budding Mi- Strengthen the Mor- Character, and, in so- Subtle Way, never fail- Make Us who are Gain- in Years feel Young- Fresher and Better- having read them.

Old, Yet Ever New

Here, too, in the sec- half of this Generous V- ume, are the Legends t- have Rocked the Crac- of Nations in their- fancy, and have be- handed down through- ages; Legends that- Ingrained in the Fibre- all English-Speaking P- ples; that are, many- them, Old beyond Yea- yet will be New long af- we are dead and gone.

Each a Priceless Gem

Thus does this Deligh- ful Volume present in- 540 Beautifully Print- Pages the Stories a- Legends that Yesterd- To-Day and Forever ex- their Irresistible Fasci- tion over Old and Youn- that are Each and- Priceless Gems Gather- from the Imperishable Literature of the World.

These are the stories and legends that have woven the enchanting spell over succeeding generations; that have sto- the test of time and that never fail to meet the needs of t- imagination, and answer the cravings of the heart.

What $2.00 Will Buy We Will Send Any One of These Superbly Bound Books with Our ART GALLERY DE LUXE and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Whole Year for Only $2.00 a Vast Collection of Golden Gems from the greatest Histor- ians, Philosophers, Preachers and Poets of all Ages and Nationalities on every phase of the Future Life. This Splendid Volume Inspires Its Readers With the Holy Ambition to Live for Eternity.

REGULAR SUBSCRIPTION BLANK

To THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 to 116 Bible House, New York City:
Find enclosed $_____ for One Year's Subscription and Premiums as entered below, which send, all Charges Prepaid, to the following Addresses:

	NAME	STREET AND POST-OFFICE	STATE
Send The Christian Herald FOR ONE YEAR—52 TIMES—With ART GALLERY DE LUXE, $1.50 for United States and Canada. Foreign Countries $1 Extra.
SEND . . Inside History of the White House By GILSON WILLETS. 500 Large Pages; Beautifully Illus- trated; Bound in Silk Finish, Olive Green Cloth, Gold Stamp. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00. Extra Copies, $1.00
SEND . . After Death—What? By MADISON C. PETERS, D.D. 400 Generous Pages; Richly Bound in Purple Cloth; Gold Back and Side. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00. Extra Copies, $1.00
SEND . . World-Famed Stories and Legends By HAMILTON W. MABIE. Two Books in One; 540 Fasci- nating Pages; Bound Most Attractively in Red and Gold. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00; Extra Copies, $1.00
SEND . . Red Letter New Testament ALL THE WORDS OF OUR LORD PRINTED IN RED With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00. Extra Copies, $1.00
SEND . . India Paper Red Letter Bible HELPS, MAPS, CONCORDANCE; Overlapping Edges; Bound in American Levant, Divinity Circuit; Red under Gold. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $3.00. Extra Copies, $2.00 (Weights only 20 oz.) AUTHORIZED Version ONLY

OUR SUPERB ART GALLERY DE LUXE FREE

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and Each Premium may be Sent to a Different Address Without Extra Charge.

Date _____ 190__ Name of Sender _____

Address _____

WHEN Premiums are ordered, Please give both Post-Office and Express Addresses

IN THE HOME CIRCLE

By Margaret E. Sangster

The Making of a Duchess

THE wooing of the royal Italian Duke who has for some time past been paying his court to the beautiful daughter of a Senator of the United States has formed the topic of conversation at thousands of American breakfast tables. We were told some time ago that the opposition of the royal family of Italy to the marriage of one of its members with a girl not of royal blood could not be overcome. It was apparently overlooked by those who formulated this opinion that every American girl is a princess in her own right, with fully as much distinction and as many claims to queenliness as any princess born in a European palace. No American girl of good birth and education is elevated by marriage with a nobleman or a prince of the old world. She meets her suitor on equal terms; often she condescends in accepting him.

In the instance of the Duke of the Abruzzi, Americans believe that he and the lady whom he has chosen (and who is reported to have chosen him) are on a footing of agreeable equality. Miss Katherine Elkins is an unsurpassed young woman, charming, fascinating, trained in all the graces and social conventions that fit a woman to take her place in any circle, however exclusive, on either side of the Atlantic. The Duke is a knightly gentleman, scholarly, brave, an explorer, a man fearless and splendid, who has borne himself worthily, and whose achievements would commend him to any sane American father as a suitor for a daughter's hand. Yet these two people, patrician in training and aristocratic in feeling, have been so talked about, so discussed, their most private affairs have been so blown to the four winds, that their marriage must be shorn of some of its sweetness. A bride has a right to her own privacy. Engagements and marriages are affairs for the family circle, not for the glare of the footlights. We can hardly help wishing that the making of a duchess were easier or that dukes would go courting at home, and not come so far afield. When will the day dawn in which our American girls will be satisfied with plain, untitled American husbands?

Correspondence, Elegant and Otherwise

In my lady's desk, if it be well appointed, there are several varieties of stationery. She keeps her very nicest paper, perhaps with its engraved monogram, for that social correspondence which, like evening dress, implies intended courtesy and compliment. To write long discursive letters covering many pages to home people a thousand miles away, as a married daughter may easily do in this country of distances, one requires only a good quality of paper of medium weight. For foreign correspondence a still thinner paper should be chosen, unless one is prepared to pay extra postage. For business purposes, and for those only, the very fastidious woman uses a convenient postal card, although there is much to be said in its favor for the transmission of short messages and brief information about family matters. The postal card has the merit of being extremely convenient and large enough for two or three short paragraphs. My lady should choose white or cream-tinted paper unless she prefers a delicate shade of gray or blue. Violent tints offend good form. Envelopes should be large enough to receive two sheets of folded paper with ease, and should be well gummed. Except in business offices envelopes of a decided sky blue or chrome yellow are highly undesirable. They may have their use in calling attention to bills and advertisements, but beyond this they must be ruled out of court by refined people.

My lady's desk must be furnished with black ink, a supply of pens and lead pencils, both soft and hard, an ink eraser, a number of blotters and a box of postage stamps. One should never have to send out of the house for a stamp any more than one would go to her neighbor for the loan of a match.

A New Departure in Fashion

Men have so long dressed gravely and soberly, and have so rigidly avoided excess in dress, that it is a bit of an astonishment to find them indulging

CONSULTING THE COUNTRY LAWYER

COUNTRY lawyers, like country doctors, have always held an honored place in the town in which they lived. The lawyer, in the early days, was always called "squire" by his neighbors, and instead of being a fomenter of strife, as his detractors would have us believe, he was more often a peacemaker, preventing small disputes from going to court.

in vagaries of color this season. There is certainly an evident tendency to ornament and decoration in the present styles. One observes daring souls who have turned away from the sombre black, grays and browns of the past to adopt brighter tints in that crowning portion of a man's apparel, his hat. Hats red and green have been fearlessly worn in the street, and we may yet see hats with feathers as the headgear of plain civilians. Who can tell? Gold lace, cocked hats, the splendor of uniform worn by military and naval men have never lost their spell to charm feminine eyes. We are glad to perceive a little masculine vanity creeping in with embroidered waistcoats, and other signs of a departure from the austerity of the business suit. In the drawing-rooms of Washington's day men indulged in velvet and lace, embroidered ruffles and jeweled buckles. Possibly before very long they will do this again.

The Gain of Loss

LONGFELLOW'S simple lines have appealed to innumerable homes in the hour of sorrow:

There is no flock, however watched and tended,
But one dead lamb is there;
There is no household, howsoever defended,
But has one vacant chair.

Over and over, as I open the letters of my correspondents, my heart aches for those who have been called upon to mourn for dear ones. The mournful truth is that we never grow used to the coming of the Angel of Death across our threshold. The feeling of strangeness that follows the breaking of the accustomed order is as hard to bear in every case, and there is a jar and wrench before we can begin again. The other day there came a tender letter from a mother who ten years ago lost a little girl, who had been the joy and pride of the home circle for nine brief summers. Nine years of beauty and bloom, nine years of sunshine and song, then silence and sorrow and a little mound in the cemetery. Mothers who have lost dear children often feel that they have nothing left but a grave. They think that the loss is complete, and that there is no gain to be mentioned in the same hour. Yet if our religion means anything worth while it does mean comfort. "Earth has no sorrow that heaven cannot heal." The child who slips away from our home and our training goes without delay, possibly without an interval of unconsciousness, into the Father's house above. In that house she meets at once a great company of people who love her. All the dear kindred who have gone before, many perhaps whom the people on earth have forgotten, are waiting in the immortal land to bid the little one welcome home.

The gain of loss for ourselves is full-est when we realize that heaven is a place and not merely a state, and that the only way to reach it is to be borne thither in the kind arms of God's tenderest angel, that angel of everlasting life to whom we have given the name of Death.

A still greater gain is in the increase of our sympathy. Unless we have known bereavement we are unable to comfort those who are bereaved. A mother sat in frozen apathy in the vacant room that had already been joyous with the laughter of a child. Friends came and went, but their attempts at consolation were as futile as those of the friends of Job. They went by her like the wind and were unheeded. But a little woman opened the door and came softly in. She put her arms around the mother, and drew the bowed head to her breast. "I know all about it," she said. "I, too, have lost my children. I, too, am alone, but I have learned not to be desolate."

Once in a while there is an experience of change of fortune, of perplexity and distress that helps the survivor to be thankful that dear ones have escaped seasons of bitterness which might have been to them unspeakably sad. "I never expected," said a friend to me, "to be grateful that my mother had been taken away, yet I have lived to see how much better it is that she went while everything around us was bright. Going when she did, she has escaped so much sorrow."

Pictures of Rare Beauty

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The photogravures are here. They are pictures of rare beauty, and we certainly appreciate them. MRS. MATTIE C. SYCKS. Delaware, O.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

F. W. M., Rockwood, Pa. Is there any device that successfully tells the speed, in miles per hour, at which a locomotive or electric motor is traveling? If there are such devices, why don't the railroads use them?

Yes; there is such a device, and it is now being tested on one or two roads running into Chicago. Most of the roads as yet depend on the engineer's clock and his knowledge of the distance between places to judge of the speed.

F. J. F., North Carolina. Is there a railroad in Africa being built to connect the North and South by rail?

Yes; the Cape to Cairo railroad. It was the idea of the late Cecil Rhodes that there should be a transcontinental railway which should run as far as possible through British territory and link together the divided sections of British Africa. The distance to be covered is 5,100 miles between Cairo and Cape Town. They are working on the road from both ends. Trains are already running over long sections of the road though parts are yet uncompleted. Where it crosses the falls of the Zambezi there has been built the highest bridge in the world. It is a cantilever and 380 feet above flood tide. It is 650 feet long and weighs 1,600 tons.

J. P. P., Sunside, N. Y. 1. Is it "remembering the Sabbath day to keep it holy" to travel back and forth to places of business or pleasure on the Sabbath day? 2. Is it one's duty to continue to ask the blessing at meals and to keep up family worship if these have become disagreeable to other members of the family?

1. Works of necessity and mercy are justifiable on the Lord's Day and no other. To make it a day of business or mere pleasuring is to desecrate it. 2. The situation you describe is unfortunately too common in many homes. To ask God's blessing on our table and to ask his protection and guidance daily in all things is the duty of every Christian. You may be able, by your patience and godly example, ultimately to influence the others and win them to Christ.

F. W., Worcester, Mass. 1. Why does the Empress Dowager rule China instead of the Emperor? 2. What is the relationship between the royal house of Portugal and the royal house of England? When Queen Victoria was buried, I noticed that the king of Portugal was prominent among the mourners. 3. Why is Johns Hopkins College so designated instead of plain John Hopkins College? 4. How is Des Moines pronounced?

1. The Empress Dowager is a woman of strong will. So far as can be learned, she has controlled the actions of the Emperor from his boyhood. All things are done in the Emperor's name, but the Dowager Empress is the power behind the throne. 2. There is no near relationship, if any. The late King Carlos of Portugal was an intimate friend of King Edward of England, and the relations between the countries have been most cordial for many generations. 3. The university is so named in honor of the founder, Johns Hopkins. 4. It is pronounced de moine.

J. S. W., of Nappanee, Ind., referring to a recent article in this journal dealing with the temperance campaign in his State, writes: "We don't think we got very much when we had a petition signed by over sixteen thousand voters and thousands of telegrams asking for State-wide prohibition, or a chance to vote on it. We feel that we were treated very shabbily. This is still a license law State." From which it is evident that the powerful liquor interest has once more succeeded in defeating the cause of temperance in Indiana. The prohibition resolution which passed the Assembly by 71 to 28 was defeated in the Senate by 35 to 12.

V. H. G., Longport, N. Y. 1. What are the titles of the different officers in our navy from admiral down? What is the pay of the petty officers? 2. Is the Anti-saloon League doing a good work?

1. The officers of the United States navy are: Admiral, vice-admiral, rear-admiral, captain, commanders, lieutenant-commanders, lieutenants, ensigns, midshipmen. The first two are only given as marks of honor. Admiral Dewey holds the first. At present there is no vice-admiral. Often the navy is commanded by the first rear-admiral. Warrant officers are boatswains, gunners, carpenters, sailmakers, pharmacists, warrant machinists. These receive $1,200 to $1,800 a year. Petty officers include officers with same designation as above with many others. Pay from $360 to $840 a year. A first-class seaman receives $24 per month, seamen-gunners $26, firemen (first-class) $35, musicians (first-class) $32. The second-class seamen are divided as follows: Ordinary seamen $19 per month, second-class firemen $30, shipwrights $25, second-class musicians $30. Third-class seamen: Landsmen for training $16, coal passers $22; apprentices, third-class, $9. 2. The Anti-saloon League is doing a great work for temperance. Its best recommendation is the fear of the organization openly expressed by the saloonkeepers.

A. A. P., Epping, N. H. Is it true, as has recently been stated, that in the treaty between Russia and Japan, made at Portsmouth, N. H., the document was written in French? Also, that all important documents at The Hague are written in that language? If so, why?

Yes; French is the court language of Europe and the language of diplomacy. This has not been settled by treaty between nations, but has grown through custom. France for a long while was the centre of European international politics and her methods, manners, etc., were copied by other nations. In Europe,

Only one ship reached India. A mutiny occurred on the successful ship, and the captain, named Lancaster, came home on another vessel. His account led to the formation of the first company, which was chartered in 1600. In 1702 the London company and a new one—the English—combined, and in 1708 the new East India Company was established. It grew until it ruled India and had an army of its own. In 1858, after the mutiny, the government was placed in the hands of the Crown of Great Britain, and the company was dissolved June 1, 1874.

C. S., Finlayson, Minn. 1. If a person dies unconverted, has he a chance in another world? 2. Had the people any government before the Flood?

1. There is nothing in Scripture to warrant such an inference. The Bible says "Where the tree falleth there it shall be" (see Eccles. 11:3). We are not to be the judges, however, in such a case. 2. Doubtless the Antediluvians had rulers and government, but no crease of royal authority and a purpose presumably to enter on wars of conquest. Joat took this view of it when he made his protest. The pestilence which visited the land shortly afterward with such terrible results was regarded by David and the people as a sign of divine displeasure. 2. Theophilus was the person to whom Luke inscribes his Gospel and also the Acts of the Apostles. Whether he was a real person or merely a type of the lovers of divine truth is uncertain. Some writers accept the latter view; others (like Ecumenius) assert he was a Roman governor in Antioch, or a leading convert of that place.

N. J. B., Grundy Centre, Ia. Is there any authentic history of the time and builders of the old stone mill in Truro Park, at Newport, R. I.?

No; the date of the erection of the tower, and who were its builders, have long been a subject of discussion. A great many writers ascribed it to the Norsemen, who undoubtedly visited the North American coast in the eleventh century. It certainly was not constructed by the Indians. Some late writers have said it was constructed by the early colonists, as mills of similar construction exist in England in localities whence the colonists came. The objection to this is that the arches are distinctly Norman and of a type not built in Europe after the twelfth century. There is no mention of its construction by the colonists; most of the mills they put up were wood, and the old tower is much more ornamental than the colonists would be likely to build for mill purposes. Of course, it might have been for some entirely different purpose. It would seem that those who claim for it a pre-colonial date have much in their favor.

J. B. G., Decatur, Ia. I recently saw a statement that emperors, kings and queens had received the representatives of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and thanked them for their help in staying the ravages of hunger and pestilence. Is that statement true, and when did it occur?

Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage was received by Alexander III. during the famine in Russia in 1892, and Dr. Louis Klopsch had audiences with the present Emperor of Russia, the present Queen of England, the King and Queen of Sweden, the King of Denmark and the Dowager Empress of Russia. In recognition of such services as are mentioned in the inquiry, the King of England conferred on him the Kaiser-i-Hind gold medal and the Emperor of Japan the Order of the Rising Sun.

FISHERMEN DRYING THEIR "BARREL NETS"

ALMOST every conceivable form of hook and line and net seem to have been invented by fishermen to aid them in capturing "the bounty of the sea." One of the oddest nets is the "barrel net," pictured above. They may be used alone, or in sets of two or more, trailed over the stern of the boat. The fish work toward the pointed end and seldom try to get out the way they came in. The net is held open by several wooden hoops.

If a person knows one language in addition to his native tongue, that language is usually French. A great deal of French is spoken in official circles in Washington, and most of our Ministers abroad use it fluently.

W. S. M. sends this strong argument in favor of "no barrooms": "Last week was the Centennial week of Grantsboro, N. C., 1808-1908, and also the Carolina Central Fair at this place, with nearly 50,000 people on the grounds. The police reports are that there were but four arrests for drunkenness in the whole seven days. And why? Just because three years ago we voted out all the barrooms we had, and it is now hard to get liquor. This is a wonderful record, compared to twenty-nine arrests the last night before Prohibition went into effect. Prohibition will prohibit."

H. McA., Morrisville, N. Y. I would like some information about the famous East India Company. Is it still in existence?

The events leading up to the formation of the company date back to 1591, when three ships set sail for India to trade and bring back some of the luxuries of that country, which had hitherto found their way to England through the hands of Portuguese traders.

records of that period have been preserved. We may gather from the Bible (see Genesis, chapters 4 and 6), and from Josephus and other historians, who outline the story of the world in Noah's time, that there were probably organized communities before the deluge. They are supposed to have been acquainted with music, architecture, astronomy, agriculture, and certain of the mechanical arts; their government was probably patriarchal.

W. B., Coopersville, Mich. 1. In II. Sam. 21, what is the reason that so many people had to die on account of David's sin? 2. In Acts 1, who is meant by the word Theophilus?

1. Commentators explain that in the translations from the original Scriptures God is frequently represented as doing what he merely permits to be done by withholding his supporting and restraining grace. This is an instance in point; the verb means that David was stimulated or incited, presumably by some minister or other adviser of bad influence, to do what he did and to demonstrate his mighty power as a monarch. The taking of the census was a military act and was regarded with suspicion by the people, as involving an in-

Do You Want a Cash Christmas Gift?

We intend to send a check several days before Christmas to every subscriber who shows his loyalty and interest by securing TWO or MORE NEW Subscribers to

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
Between now and Dec. 10, 1908.

$1.00 to $50.00

will be sent to every kind friend who helps us reach new readers. This is an exceptional opportunity, and you simply cannot afford to miss it. It is impossible for you to realize what a genuinely generous offer this is until you receive full particulars. Write us to-day for more information in regard to our "CASH Christmas Gift Offer." Address: _____

The Christian Herald
99 Bible House, New York

If you enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, your friends may do the same. Please tell them about it.

How a Street Preacher Founded a Mission

Service Afloat on the Demerara River

WHAT God never permits his own work to fail, and that the efforts consecrated men and women, undertaken unselfishly and with a single eye to the glory of God and the good of humanity, are always sure of a blessing has been proved a thousand times in the history of home and foreign missionary work. A remarkable case in illustration of this is that related below, by Superintendent C. O. Moulton, of the unique Christian Mission in the West Indies.

C. O. Moulton

What is now known as the Christian Mission of the West Indies and South America had a few years ago as its only worker and representative a street preacher, who, surrounded by a crowd of natives, sang and preached the Gospel to them that they might know the Saviour. To-day, mission stations—the outgrowth of that lone preacher's work—are located on the islands of St. Thomas, Saba, Antigua, Barbuda, Dominica, St. Lucia, St. Vincent, Trinidad, in British Guiana and Venezuela, and on the Canal Zone, Panama. On the island of Barbados, where the first open-air service was held (and which is now the headquarters of the work), there are thirty-six meeting-houses or chapels, where evangelistic meetings are held every week, conducted by natives of both sexes.

These islands, where snow is unknown and where seldom a day passes that the sun does not shine, have proved very prolific fields for Gospel work. This is especially true of Barbados. No difficulty is ever experienced in getting an audience to which to tell the old story of Jesus and his love.

"A few years ago," writes Mr. Moulton, "a steamer on which I was traveling stopped for the day at Antigua. In company with another minister of the Gospel I went ashore and soon found the house which served as the meeting-house and home of the native worker stationed there. He eagerly asked us to 'keep a service' for him. We consented. What was our surprise, when we returned at the hour appointed, to find the house and stairs crowded and even the street below filled with the natives. The problem has not been to reach the masses, but to seat them.

"The results are very gratifying, and many are the miracles of grace. Before the missionaries came, eighty per cent. of the children were illegitimate; now there are only fifty-five per cent. Coarse songs were the order of the day; now Gospel songs have largely taken their place. We have preached against the use of rum and tobacco, and there has been a decrease in the imports of these articles.

"Perhaps one of the most encouraging features is the aggressive spirit of the native converts. They are taught that the greatest joy is to know the forgiveness of their sins and the next greatest joy to win some one else to the same experience. This accounts for the phenomenal growth of the work. Converts have gone into other villages carrying the Gospel message with Bible and hymn book.

"A number of years ago a barefooted, one-eyed black man was converted. At once he was married to the woman with whom he was living in sin. His joy in his salvation was so great that he tramped fourteen miles, under the hot tropical sun, to tell the folks in his home village what Jesus had done for him. This was the beginning of many a long tramp, with a torch over his shoulder, Bible and song-book under his arm. His first service was in the open air alongside a rum shop. To-day the rum shop is no more; the building is now a meeting-house, and he is the elder in charge, with a flock of over three hundred. Some half-dozen other stations are the outgrowth of this work. It has been computed that this brother has actually walked the distance around the world in his tramps on the island of Barbados, to tell the story of the Cross.

"Another source of encouragement is the love of the people for their Bibles. Thousands of copies are sold and given away every year. Last year, a prominent evangelist spent some time in the work. One Sunday afternoon he was to preach a missionary sermon. As he opened his Bible, he announced chapter and verse and quoted his text. Immediately there was a buzzing in the congregation of over a thousand people. He asked, 'What is the trouble?'

"The answer came, 'You are wrong, sir.'

"He then said, 'I have given this chapter and verse all over the United States and parts of Canada, and this is the first time I have been told of my mistake.'

"Although he had not given the correct reference, yet he had quoted the text correctly. I interrupted him by asking all who had found the text to hold up their open Bibles. Instantly over five hundred Bibles were lifted in the air. It was a sight to gladden the hearts of all who love the precious old Book.

"From its beginning, this work has been one of faith. The workers are taught to rely implicitly upon God as the source of supply of all their needs, and no one receives any salary. Many wonderful incidents might be cited to show how God has honored faith and answered prayer. Only a short time ago one of our native workers told me of the following: Their rent was due; it amounted to seven dollars and twenty cents. At their family worship one morning he told God all about it, and how he was trusting Him to meet the need. When he had finished praying and while his wife was pouring out her heart in petition, a knock was heard at the door. He opened it and a man handed him a small box, saying, 'I have felt impressed to come and give this to you personally.'

"The worker thanked him and went back to his knees until his wife concluded her prayer. Then they found that the box contained shillings, sixpences, pennies to the amount of seven dollars and twenty cents. The need was supplied!

"In July of this year, with only about a hundred dollars in hand, we began the erection of a stone building that will seat about fifteen hundred people. Thus far, in answer to prayer, every need has been met, and we hope to dedicate it at Christmas time free of debt."

The Church Building That Is Going Up Wholly "on Faith"

TIMELY TOPICS AT HOME AND ABROAD

—THE GREAT FLOODS in the Deccan provinces, India, are not yet over. The Bombay Guardian says: "The loss of life has been great. An estimate puts it down as 10,000. Old people and infants in arms have perished, and children whose ornaments indicated that they belonged to families in affluence. There is no end to the piteous stories of panic and flight; and after the worst was over, survivors by the thousand sat or stood about, speechless with grief, bereaved, homeless, and ruined. Hundreds of corpses are being found by the police and municipal authorities."

—AFTER LEAVING Japan, our battleship fleet divided into two squadrons, one, under Rear-Admiral Emory, proceeding to Amoy, China, where a rousing welcome from officials and citizens greeted the Americans. The other squadron, under Rear-Admiral Sperry, proceeded to the Philippines. The two will reunite at Manila, and come home via the Suez Canal.

—THE STORMY DISAPPROVAL by the English people of the attempt to publicly parade the "monstrance" at the recent Catholic Congress is recalled, apropos of the announcement last week that a wealthy Catholic congregation in New York is preparing a "monstrance" which promises to eclipse all others in magnificence. For three years gold and jewels have been accumulating for this purpose. The vessel or chalice will contain 300 ounces of old gold and silver, and will be studded with thousands of dollars worth of diamonds, emeralds, topazes, rubies, amethysts and sapphires. Women have given their personal ornaments for this purpose and even the family plate, and the design is such that any quantity of jewels—sent as gifts, of course—can still be used in the general plan of the decoration.

—EGYPT is already looking forward to President Roosevelt's visit to that country next year and in Khartoum he is talked of to-day as "the great celebrity. He will probably enter Africa by way of Mombasa and travel toward the great lakes by the British railroad. He will then take a caravan across the wilderness to Khartoum, from which point he will make his way down the Nile. He may choose, however, to enter by some other way and make his exit via Mombasa. The Roosevelt expedition is spoken of here as scientific, and not wholly for hunting purposes. A great deal of nonsense has been written and printed about it, and about the fabulous offers that have been made to him by certain publishers. These, we are assured on the very best authority, are almost wholly sensational guesswork.

—FERDINAND, the new "Czar of the Bulgars," is described by a writer in Current Literature as "the intensely aristocratic ruler of a nation of fanatical democrats, who owes his success mainly to his own personal charm of manner. He has a thinly veiled contempt for the mob. He is one of the most cartooned men in all Europe, owing to the facilities afforded by the size and shape of his nose. His enemies and all Socialists denounce his reign in Bulgaria as a carnival of official corruption. About thirty years ago he was a poor princeling of Saxe-Coburg. He is now about fifty. His French tastes and ways were instilled into him by his accomplished mother, the Princess Clementine, who figured so conspicuously years ago at the Tuileries."

Crowned for Time and Eternity*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

YOUTH and Old Age—it is the artists' delight to place them side by side: The old fisherman and his little grandchild in a boat; the picture of General Booth and his daughter, which some months ago appeared on the first page of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD; the old grandmother by the fire and the prattling child at her side; and now we come to the study of the aged King David and his youthful son, King Solomon. We look into the faces of both of them. That of David is written all over with hieroglyphics, which we call wrinkles; but they are the lines of life which correspond with the tracings that experience has made upon the brain; there is then a psychology of the face as well as of the brain. Is the writing on David's face all good? No, not all, said to tell; there are lines that show cunning and sensuality, written there when he sent Uriah to the front in battle that he might be killed. But in general the lines upon David's face are beautiful channels, showing godly meditation, peaceful trust, noble aspirations, generous impulses. Seventy years of life have made those markings.

David and Solomon

The face of Solomon is fresh and beautiful. Twenty years have made some lines upon it, mostly of hope and happiness. His face is set in an aureole of resplendent golden hair. He is every inch the son of a king, and yet not without blemish, for he is the great grandson of Ahithophel, whose wisdom had seemed superhuman, but whose heart was filled with cunning. Solomon is said to have strongly resembled in appearance his half-brother Absalom. He would be all the dearer to David, his father, for this. Certainly there did not enter into the heart of David any distrust on account of it, else he would not have made him his successor in the kingdom.

"And they came before the king." Who? Why? Nathan, the prophet, the one who had been faithful to admonish David in wrong-doing, and ready to co-operate with him in the plan for building the temple. There came also Benaiah, commander of the army. Also came the Cherethites, and the Pelethites. There were bands of foreign soldiers, possibly Philistines, mercenaries, noted for their bravery, who were made the body-guard of King David. These came to King David that he might place in their charge the coronation of Solomon as his successor. It was David's request that they form a part of a grand procession. "Cause Solomon, my son, to ride upon mine own mule." It was death to ride upon the king's mule without his permission, even Absalom had not dared to do it, nor Adonijah, when each of these sons of David had declared himself king.

"Let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him their king over Israel." The anointing is said to have been the most solemn part of installing a new king. It was done by pouring perfumed oil upon the head, out of a horn. A horn was used to signify power, the horn being the chief defense and strength of many beasts. The ceremony was also intended to represent the outpouring of gifts from God above.

"Blow ye with the trumpet, and say, 'God save King Solomon!'" The trumpets were used by the priests alone as signals for national gatherings for feasts or for war. They went up and down throughout the land blowing the trumpets.

*International Sunday School Lesson for November 22, 1908. Solomon Anointed King. I. Kings 1: 32-40; 50-53. GOLDEN TEXT: "Know thou the God of thy father, and serve him with a perfect heart, and with a willing mind." I. Chron. 28: 9.

"The people piped with pipes and rejoiced with great joy." The people were wild with joy to have a youthful king, and one so regal in presence. The old king remained in his chamber too feeble to be a part of the throng, and yet rejoicing in the succession of his son. Possibly the 72d Psalm may have been written by David in his lonely seclusion at that time. Whoever wrote it saw the "greater than Solomon"—the Messiah King.

"And Adonijah feared because of Solomon." There was one among that throng who was not loyal—even the brother of Solomon, who himself aspired to be king.

"Let King Solomon swear to me today that he will not slay his servant with the sword." His disloyal heart made a craven coward out of him, and he had fled to the altar and taken hold of the horns, for there he seemed to claim protection of God, and no one might slay him there, and so pollute the altar. King Solomon sent the generous assurance to him that as long as he should show himself worthy, no harm should come to him, not to a single hair, but otherwise he should surely be put to death.

"So King Solomon sent, and they brought him down from the altar." And Adonijah knelt in obedience before King Solomon. But his loyalty was only feigned; he made further attempts to gain the throne, and was finally put to death by King Solomon (I. Kings 2: 19-24).

At the Gate of Life

That is where young King Solomon stood. Life was all before him, and certainly no young man ever had a brighter prospect. He was beginning just where his noble father had left off, a prosperous kingdom, a united people, and the blessing of God over and about him. It has been said: "How precious a thing is youthful energy, if only it could be preserved, entirely englobed, as it were, within the bosom of the young adventurer till he can come and offer it forth, a sacred emanation in yonder temple of truth and virtue. But alas! all along as he goes toward it, he advances through an avenue formed by a long line of tempters and demons on each side, all prompt to touch him with their conductors and draw away this divine electric element with which he is charged." But it surely is not necessary that youth shall thus yield its energy to temptations; instead, it is possible to go from strength to strength through Christ who strengtheneth us. There is an Oriental story about a hill which had a prize on the top to be given to any young man who should ascend the hill without looking behind him. Those who did look behind were immediately changed into stones. The hill was covered with stones, and the prize remained on the summit unclaimed! The real hill of difficulty which so many young men are climbing to-day has fewer stones than the fabled one, and prize after prize has been taken from the summit. The World's Hall of Fame is full of young men who have been "strong," and some in boyhood. Mozart at four years of age began to be a composer of little pieces of music; at eleven years of age he wrote songs and sonatas; at ten an oratorio. Mendelssohn began to compose at eleven years of age; at twelve he wrote five symphonies for stringed instruments. He had finished "Midsummer Night's Dream" before he was sixteen years of age. Very much the same might be said of other great musicians. John Stuart Mill learned the Greek alphabet at three years of age, and at eleven years of age he was reading Greek and Latin; at twelve he began the study of scholastic philosophy, and at thirteen

Continued on next page

That "Sun-Light" Effect.

Many soaps, made especially for use in shampooing, are positively injurious. They may cleanse the scalp, but they darken the hair.

Ivory Soap is the only soap you should use. It gives blonde hair that peculiar "sun-light" effect, while in the case of dark hair, it intensifies the gloss.

There is no "free" uncombined alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap

99 4/100 Per Cent. Pure

DIRECT from FACTORY at Wholesale Prices, Freight Paid

We sell to you at the same price we would sell to the dealer—pay the freight besides. Stove polished, ready to set up, safe delivery insured. Then, after

ONE YEAR'S TRIAL we refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Gold Coin
Stoves and Ranges
standard for fifty years.
Our Illustrated Stove Book, free, tells all about stoves, drafts, chimneys, etc. Send for it.
Gold Coin Stove Co.
11 Oak St. Troy, N.Y.

You Save from $5.00 to $20.00

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.50

Sent to your home by Express, Prepaid.

Sizes and Prices
9x 6 ft.,	$3.50
9x 7 1/2 ft.,	4.00
9x 9 ft.,	4.50
9x10 1/2 ft.,	5.00
9x12 ft.,	5.50
9x15 ft.,	6.50

Beautiful and attractive patterns. Made in all colors. Easily kept clean and warranted to wear. Woven in one piece. Both sides can be used. Sold direct at one profit. Money refunded if not satisfactory.

New Catalogue showing goods in actual colors, sent free.
ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 918-Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia

Christmas Post Cards

FREE Six finest gold embossed Christmas Post Cards, new and lovely designs, in exquisitely beautiful colors, our big post card Bulletin and trial subscription to popular magazine—all free if you send 10 cents for mailing expense. 18 cards, all different, and one year's subscription, 25 cents. Your own cards and subscription free if you send us orders for 2 friends. HOUSEHOLD, 838 Jackson St., Topeka, Kan.

YOU CAN AFFORD

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100, Words and music, $3 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

THE LAW OF FINANCIAL SUCCESS

This book should be the seed to a fortune to the man or woman with brains and earnestness of purpose. Money is the best partner a man or woman can have. The book tells you in plain language how to develop and utilize the qualities necessary to succeed in accumulating money through personal application or investment. More individuals owe their financial success to the laws contained in this book than to any other known source. You cannot afford to be without it, as it places within your own hands the means of starting you on the road to a broader career and clean prosperity. Regular edition, limp leather bound, silk lined, $1.00 per copy. 6th special paper bound pocket edition, 1 chapters, 104 pages, published in response to popular demand to sell at 10 cents per copy, 70,000 copies sold. Mailed postpaid on receipt of 10 cents (or $1.00 for leather bound copy), stamps or silver. Send for it NOW.

JUSTITIA 496 Lenox Building
Publishing Company Chicago, Ill.

LOOKING AHEAD?

If so, take advantage of to-day's opportunities for the merchant, farmer, fruit grower and business man along the Pacific Coast Extension of the

Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway
Descriptive Books Free. F. A. Miller, G. P. A., Chicago

Occupations for Women

By FRANCES E. WILLARD

500 pages; illustrated. Regular Price, $3.75. SPECIAL PRICE, $1.00, all Charges Prepaid.

P. B. Bromfield & Co., Bible House, New York

Sunday School Lesson—Continued

of political economy. At six years of age Horace Greeley had read the entire Bible.

At the Gate of Death

That is where King David stood. He lived six months after Solomon was proclaimed king. During that time Solomon was co-regent with King David. Old age has its heroes as well as youth. Humboldt at seventy-six years of age wrote his Cosmos. Goethe wrote Faust at eighty years of age. Gladstone was a political force at eighty. Lord Palmerston was Prime Minister of England at eighty-one. At eighty-three Tennyson wrote his famous poem "Crossing the Bar." At eighty-seven John Wesley was preaching almost daily, and at the head of Methodism. At eighty-nine, the year of his death, Michelangelo was painting his canvases and constructing St. Peter's at Rome. At ninety-one the mental ability of John Quincy Adams showed no sign of decay. Titian was ninety-eight when he painted the "Battle of Lepanto." Chevreul, the great scientist, was busy, keen and active at the age of 103. Some one has said: "No strong man will accept sixty as the arbitrary limit of his ambition and working ability." And we may add, neither will a strong woman do so. Dr. Dorland says: "Axiomatically speaking, the determination and the capacity to hold on and to make never ending effort are the main elements in deciding success in self-culture, advancement and growth in every line of work." But for all this the time will come "when the sound of the grinding is low" and "when the grinders cease because they are few," "when the almond tree shall flourish," and "the grasshopper be a burden because man goeth to his long home." "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was, and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it."

As we see the aged David at death's door, we recall Hogarth's picture of death. A few months before that artist was seized with the malady which caused his death, he proposed to his matchless pencil the work he has entitled the Tailpiece. The first idea of this is said to have been started in company at his own table. "My next undertaking," said Hogarth, "shall be the end of all things." "If that is the case," replied one of his friends, "your business will be finished; for there will be an end to the painter." "That will be so," answered Hogarth, sighing heavily, "and, therefore, the sooner my work is done the better." Accordingly, he began the next day and continued his design with a diligence that seemed to indicate an apprehension (as the report goes) that he should not live to complete it. This he did, however, in the most ingenious manner, by grouping everything which could denote the end of all things. In a sort of prophetic fury he drew the similitude of a painter's palette broken. "Finis," exclaimed Hogarth, "the deed is done; all is over!" He died about a year after.

Quite in contrast with this we may see the tailpiece at the end of the volumes of Tissot's wonderfully illustrated Bible. It is a picture of himself standing, full length, with most earnest face, and hand raised as in blessing, a crucifix, mortar and pestle, wreaths and other symbols in the foreground. Underneath the picture is this inscription: "Ye who read these volumes written for your benefit and have perhaps been moved by what they contain, as ye close them say this prayer for their author: 'O God, have mercy on the soul of him who wrote this book; cause thy light to shine upon him and grant to him eternal rest. Amen!'"

"The monuments of the nations are all protests against nothingness after death."—Lew Wallace.

SOLOMON ANOINTED KING

By MRS. M. BAXTER

IT WAS God's choice that Solomon, his son, should succeed David on the throne of Israel. David grew old and feeble, and he had made no public declaration as to who should succeed him. At last his weakness grew so great that vitality burned low. Adonijah, David's son, who was born after Absalom, taking advantage of his father's weak state, formed a party in his own favor, and commenced a revolution, as Absalom had done before. To his last days David experienced the evil which the Lord foretold should arise out of his own house. At first the rebellious son's assumption remained unnoticed, but when Joab, David's commander-in-chief, and Abiathar, the high priest, followed him, and when he invited to a feast, probably intended for his coronation, "all his brethren the king's sons, and all the men of Judah, the king's servants," it became an open revolt against the government.

At this crisis, Nathan, his father's old friend and prophet, who stood in Samuel's place as his faithful adviser, came to Bathsheba, the mother of Solomon, and apprised her of Adonijah's doings. He called her to go in and speak to David of the matter, saying that he himself would follow and confirm her statements. Bathsheba, addressing the king, said: "My lord, thou swarest by the Lord thy God unto thine handmaid, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne. And now, behold, Adonijah reigneth." And then she told him of the assembly at that very moment around Adonijah.

Before Bathsheba had done speaking, Nathan the prophet came, and confirmed her story; David was thoroughly aroused. He swore to Bathsheba that Solomon should sit on his throne that day. Then calling for Zadok the priest, Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the captain, he gave orders that a company of military should be prepared, that Solomon should ride upon his own mule, that they should conduct him to Gihon, and that Zadok and Nathan should there anoint him king, and that then they should blow with the trumpet, and proclaim him, saying, "God save King Solomon."

Jonathan announced the fact to the revolutionists, and gave a full and particular account of the lawful accession of Solomon by the will of David.

Adonijah and his company were afraid, and the would-be king went from his great feast a fugitive, to take hold of the horns of the altar, in fear for his life. When Solomon heard of it, and that his brother was pleading for his life, Solomon sent for him, and he came and did obeisance to his brother the king, who commanded him to go down to his house till he should prove himself a worthy man.

David held a private interview with his son Solomon, "and charged him to build a house for the Lord God of Israel." He saw that his father prized the will and mind of God above all his personal interests. Solomon could easily understand how David only counted upon him as he should count upon his God; how in giving him charge concerning the temple, he saw it necessary that God should give him charge concerning Israel; how it needed the very courage of God to keep the statutes and judgments of the Lord, in face of a worldly people with a tendency to idolatry, set in the midst of nations which were wholly given to idolatry and to sin of the worst kind.

"Where can I invest my money so that it will be safe and where I can have it when I need it, and yet so it will bring me a return when I need it?" This question will be answered to your satisfaction if you will write the Industrial Savings & Loan Co., whose advertisement appears on page 901.

THE SAVORY Seamless Roaster

You can have a fine-tasting roast, without always buying the expensive cuts of meat.

A Savory Seamless Roaster will cook a old fowl, or a tough piece of beef, as tender and juicy and good as more expensive meats roasted the ordinary way.

A Savory is air-tight. Keeps in all the juices, and cooks the rich steam from these fats and juices through and through the meat. That's what gives the fine flavor. That's what makes the meat self-licking. And the meat browns, but can't burn—needs no attention till done.

A Savory is seamless—smooth inside—easily cleaned as a china dish.

Blued steel or enamel. Three sizes. Buy your dealer. If you don't know who keeps the Savory Roasters write us for name of nearest dealer or we'll send one prepaid. Ask also for free booklet, What it means to have a Savory."

REPUBLIC METALWARE CO.
15 Republic Street, BUFFALO, N.Y.

A Fine Lyon & Healy Organ, $1.00 a Week

Think of the pleasure and satisfaction you would get from owning one of these beautiful instruments. Possess a far sweeter tone quality than other makes, countless testimonials received during the past 45 years amply attest. Write for our new illustrated catalog today.

LYON & HEALY,
7 Adams Street, Chicago

PAPA or MAMA

For a copy of LITTLE FOLKS, best magazine for children from 3 to 12. Inside are little stories and poems for the best readers and stories just right to read to tiny listeners. Full of sweet pretty pictures, some colored.

1 stamp for sample and large list of splendid plans for securing new subscriptions. Food and Drink, a magazine devoted to many matters, Pure Food and Practical Recipes—6 months' trial for 10c. CASSINO CO., Dept. A, Salem, Mass.

WE Pay You 6% interest on $100 deposits and 5% on smaller sums.

$2,000,000 Approved First Mortgages, held in trust as your security. 18 years in business—not a dollar loss to depositors. Write for "The Sulky Dollar"—it tells our 6% plan; it's interesting. GEORGIA STATE SAVINGS ASSN., 10 York Street, Savannah, Ga.

ENGRAVED CARDS OF YOUR NAME $1.00 IN CORRECT SCRIPT, INCLUDING PLATE THE QUALITY MUST PLEASE YOU OR YOUR MONEY REFUNDED

HOSKINS PHILA. 905 CHESTNUT ST.

A $10 Holiday Gift from Larkin Without Cost

LARKIN Factory-to-Family dealing saves for you all cost that adds no value; gives you the profits of wholesalers and retailers—greatly reduces the cost of living; affords you $20.00 worth of unquestioned excellence for only $10.00. Your money goes twice as far.

Larkin Products consist of Laundry and fine Toilet Soaps, Toilet and Pharmaceutical Preparations, Coffee, Tea, Spices, Extracts, Baking Powders and other Food Specialties—over 200 home needs of high quality to select from.

You get with each $10.00 order the saved middlemen's expense in a Premium that alone would cost you about $10.00 at retail.

Larkin Premiums are noted for their excellent design, workmanship, finish and durability. Over a million satisfied families, representing every state in the Union, regularly cut much of their living expenses in half by Larkin Factory-to-Family dealing. The Larkin Factories are the largest in the world successfully co-operating with the consumer.

Send No Money

We will ship to any responsible person $10.00 worth of Larkin Products and any $10.00 Premium selected, on 30 days' trial. If customer is not pleased we guarantee to remove goods at our expense, refund freight charges and make no charge for a reasonable amount of products used in trial. Ask any Larkin customer in your vicinity about Larkin quality and square dealing.

FREE Our new enlarged Product and Premium List, also Wearing-Apparel Catalog, mailed, postpaid. Send coupon at once.

Larkin Co.

Established 1875 BUFFALO, N.Y.

—Fill In—Cut Here—Mail Today—
Larkin Co. Mail postpaid, Product and Premium List No. 63 and tell how I can furnish my home out of present cost of living.

Name _____
Street _____
P. O. _____
State _____
G. P. 72

Your Boy's Future

That boy of yours—what are you doing to encourage his desire for good reading? This is a vital question; you must answer it.

THE AMERICAN BOY

is the ideal magazine for any boy, appealing to the best there is in him with its beautiful pictures, its able articles by the nation's famous authors, and its practical regular departments—Photography, Mechanics, Electricity, Collecting, Sports, Athletics—boys' hobbies of every kind. And all for $1 a year—nowhere else can you get such a mass of high-class reading for the money. Send to-day. Sample copy, 10c.

SPRAGUE PUBLISHING CO., 52 Majestic Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

GIPSY SMITH

SPECIAL EDITION OF HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD

By I. ALLAN SANKEY, Son of IRA D. SANKEY
258 Pages Responses JUST PUBLISHED Nearly 125 New Songs
$25 per 100 Returnable samples mailed to "Earnest Inquirers." 35c. each by mail.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., New York or Chicago

Have You Heard
Angel's Lullaby: "Only Asleep"

If not, why not send for a copy NOW? Artistes, get easy. You will like it, your friends will like it. SENT POSTPAID FOR 25 CENTS. Sample by mail.
The Bright-Hayford Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

REMUNERATIVE EMPLOYMENT combined with practical Christian service at home, can be had by commencing the CHURCH CALENDAR COMPANY 154 North Avenue, New York City. No Advance Money Required.

BEAUTIFUL WORDS WITH MUSIC "I Trust Thy Garden Upon the Lord." Mailed flat, 10 cents. Francis Thompson, P.O. Box 5, Station L, Dept. 66, Brooklyn, N.Y.

"ASTRONOMY AND BIBLE CLASS": 1800 HOLLOWAY. Write Pres., C. J. Burton, Ph. B., Oskaloosa, Iowa.

PHARMACIST

Tells Facts About Caffeine in Coffee.

"About twelve years ago I stopped coffee," writes a Colorado man, "and began Postum. As a result, instead of being a confirmed dyspeptic as I was for many years, I enjoy good health and fine digestion."

"I formerly weighed 115 lbs., now 140. My waist measure was 29, now 36 inches. Not only this, but I enjoy Postum and my meals, while for years eating was an annoyance and often a torture."

"Like an old whisky toper I always thought I had to have my coffee and then always felt its ill effects in my stomach and on my nerves."

"Now I have so completely lost my taste for coffee, that recently, when a cup was given me by mistake and I tasted it, I found it nauseated me. On the other hand I not only like the healthful effect of Postum, but the taste is peculiarly agreeable to me."

"I have tried other cereal drinks but always come back to Postum. Realizing as I do, the evil effects from the poisonous alkaloid in coffee, and being a Postum Pioneer, I am a very successful missionary."

"One man, a school superintendent, from my recommendation, has had quite as happy an experience with Postum as I have had. My wife has also found great benefit from Postum, as coffee was the only thing which disagreed with her stomach at table."

"Being a graduate in pharmacy I know the alkaloid-caffeine in coffee is a poisonous drug. As there is no drug in Postum I naturally drink it and recommend it to others."

"There's a reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in page.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used while you sleep."

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough. Ever-dreaded Croup cannot exist where Cresolene is used.

It acts directly on the nose and throat, making breathing easy in the case of colds; soothes the sore throat and stops the cough.

Cresolene is a powerful germicide, acting both as a curative and preventive in contagious diseases.

It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use.

For Sale By All Druggists.

Send Postal for Descriptive Booklet.

THE VAPOR-CRESOLENE CO., 180 Fulton St., New York
Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada.

A jolly game for the home circle or for parties. Any number of players up to ten; the more, the merrier. Two games played with the same cards. Handsomely illustrated pack in "case of 300" 50c. Set of six packs for Progressive Muggs, $2.50. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Chamberlin Bros., Pubs., 437 Missouri Av., East St. Louis, Ill.

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure THIS DOES IT ALL

The money made selling our shares and other useful patented articles assured agents.

1. 100 shares, $100.00
2. 100 shares, $100.00
3. 100 shares, $100.00
4. 100 shares, $100.00
5. 100 shares, $100.00
6. 100 shares, $100.00
7. 100 shares, $100.00
8. 100 shares, $100.00
9. 100 shares, $100.00
10. 100 shares, $100.00
11. 100 shares, $100.00
12. 100 shares, $100.00
13. 100 shares, $100.00
14. 100 shares, $100.00
15. 100 shares, $100.00
16. 100 shares, $100.00
17. 100 shares, $100.00
18. 100 shares, $100.00
19. 100 shares, $100.00
20. 100 shares, $100.00
21. 100 shares, $100.00
22. 100 shares, $100.00
23. 100 shares, $100.00
24. 100 shares, $100.00
25. 100 shares, $100.00
26. 100 shares, $100.00
27. 100 shares, $100.00
28. 100 shares, $100.00
29. 100 shares, $100.00
30. 100 shares, $100.00
31. 100 shares, $100.00
32. 100 shares, $100.00
33. 100 shares, $100.00
34. 100 shares, $100.00
35. 100 shares, $100.00
36. 100 shares, $100.00
37. 100 shares, $100.00
38. 100 shares, $100.00
39. 100 shares, $100.00
40. 100 shares, $100.00
41. 100 shares, $100.00
42. 100 shares, $100.00
43. 100 shares, $100.00
44. 100 shares, $100.00
45. 100 shares, $100.00
46. 100 shares, $100.00
47. 100 shares, $100.00
48. 100 shares, $100.00
49. 100 shares, $100.00
50. 100 shares, $100.00
51. 100 shares, $100.00
52. 100 shares, $100.00
53. 100 shares, $100.00
54. 100 shares, $100.00
55. 100 shares, $100.00
56. 100 shares, $100.00
57. 100 shares, $100.00
58. 100 shares, $100.00
59. 100 shares, $100.00
60. 100 shares, $100.00
61. 100 shares, $100.00
62. 100 shares, $100.00
63. 100 shares, $100.00
64. 100 shares, $100.00
65. 100 shares, $100.00
66. 100 shares, $100.00
67. 100 shares, $100.00
68. 100 shares, $100.00
69. 100 shares, $100.00
70. 100 shares, $100.00
71. 100 shares, $100.00
72. 100 shares, $100.00
73. 100 shares, $100.00
74. 100 shares, $100.00
75. 100 shares, $100.00
76. 100 shares, $100.00
77. 100 shares, $100.00
78. 100 shares, $100.00
79. 100 shares, $100.00
80. 100 shares, $100.00
81. 100 shares, $100.00
82. 100 shares, $100.00
83. 100 shares, $100.00
84. 100 shares, $100.00
85. 100 shares, $100.00
86. 100 shares, $100.00
87. 100 shares, $100.00
88. 100 shares, $100.00
89. 100 shares, $100.00
90. 100 shares, $100.00
91. 100 shares, $100.00
92. 100 shares, $100.00
93. 100 shares, $100.00
94. 100 shares, $100.00
95. 100 shares, $100.00
96. 100 shares, $100.00
97. 100 shares, $100.00
98. 100 shares, $100.00
99. 100 shares, $100.00
100. 100 shares, $100.00

THE "BEST" LIGHT

MAKES it possible for everyone to own their own light works. Better than electricity—less expensive. If you can afford kerosene lamps you can afford the "Best" light. Full guarantee. Guaranteed. Catalog free. Agents wanted. Write: THE BEST LIGHT CO., 3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

WEDDING INVITATIONS

Announcements, etc., printed. Latest styles, best quality, etc. Visiting Cards, 100 for $3.50. The Estabrook Press, 27 Head Bldg., Tremont St., Boston, Mass. High Grade Post Cards, Historic, etc. 100 assorted $1.00.

AGENTS Portraits $3.50, Frames 15c. Short portrait on 10c. 100 on 25c. 25c. 100 on 50c. 50c. 100 on 75c. 75c. 100 on 1.00. 1.00. 100 on 1.25. 1.25. 100 on 1.50. 1.50. 100 on 1.75. 1.75. 100 on 2.00. 2.00. 100 on 2.25. 2.25. 100 on 2.50. 2.50. 100 on 2.75. 2.75. 100 on 3.00. 3.00. 100 on 3.25. 3.25. 100 on 3.50. 3.50. 100 on 3.75. 3.75. 100 on 4.00. 4.00. 100 on 4.25. 4.25. 100 on 4.50. 4.50. 100 on 4.75. 4.75. 100 on 5.00. 5.00. 100 on 5.25. 5.25. 100 on 5.50. 5.50. 100 on 5.75. 5.75. 100 on 6.00. 6.00. 100 on 6.25. 6.25. 100 on 6.50. 6.50. 100 on 6.75. 6.75. 100 on 7.00. 7.00. 100 on 7.25. 7.25. 100 on 7.50. 7.50. 100 on 7.75. 7.75. 100 on 8.00. 8.00. 100 on 8.25. 8.25. 100 on 8.50. 8.50. 100 on 8.75. 8.75. 100 on 9.00. 9.00. 100 on 9.25. 9.25. 100 on 9.50. 9.50. 100 on 9.75. 9.75. 100 on 10.00. 10.00. 100 on 10.25. 10.25. 100 on 10.50. 10.50. 100 on 10.75. 10.75. 100 on 11.00. 11.00. 100 on 11.25. 11.25. 100 on 11.50. 11.50. 100 on 11.75. 11.75. 100 on 12.00. 12.00. 100 on 12.25. 12.25. 100 on 12.50. 12.50. 100 on 12.75. 12.75. 100 on 13.00. 13.00. 100 on 13.25. 13.25. 100 on 13.50. 13.50. 100 on 13.75. 13.75. 100 on 14.00. 14.00. 100 on 14.25. 14.25. 100 on 14.50. 14.50. 100 on 14.75. 14.75. 100 on 15.00. 15.00. 100 on 15.25. 15.25. 100 on 15.50. 15.50. 100 on 15.75. 15.75. 100 on 16.00. 16.00. 100 on 16.25. 16.25. 100 on 16.50. 16.50. 100 on 16.75. 16.75. 100 on 17.00. 17.00. 100 on 17.25. 17.25. 100 on 17.50. 17.50. 100 on 17.75. 17.75. 100 on 18.00. 18.00. 100 on 18.25. 18.25. 100 on 18.50. 18.50. 100 on 18.75. 18.75. 100 on 19.00. 19.00. 100 on 19.25. 19.25. 100 on 19.50. 19.50. 100 on 19.75. 19.75. 100 on 20.00. 20.00. 100 on 20.25. 20.25. 100 on 20.50. 20.50. 100 on 20.75. 20.75. 100 on 21.00. 21.00. 100 on 21.25. 21.25. 100 on 21.50. 21.50. 100 on 21.75. 21.75. 100 on 22.00. 22.00. 100 on 22.25. 22.25. 100 on 22.50. 22.50. 100 on 22.75. 22.75. 100 on 23.00. 23.00. 100 on 23.25. 23.25. 100 on 23.50. 23.50. 100 on 23.75. 23.75. 100 on 24.00. 24.00. 100 on 24.25. 24.25. 100 on 24.50. 24.50. 100 on 24.75. 24.75. 100 on 25.00. 25.00. 100 on 25.25. 25.25. 100 on 25.50. 25.50. 100 on 25.75. 25.75. 100 on 26.00. 26.00. 100 on 26.25. 26.25. 100 on 26.50. 26.50. 100 on 26.75. 26.75. 100 on 27.00. 27.00. 100 on 27.25. 27.25. 100 on 27.50. 27.50. 100 on 27.75. 27.75. 100 on 28.00. 28.00. 100 on 28.25. 28.25. 100 on 28.50. 28.50. 100 on 28.75. 28.75. 100 on 29.00. 29.00. 100 on 29.25. 29.25. 100 on 29.50. 29.50. 100 on 29.75. 29.75. 100 on 30.00. 30.00. 100 on 30.25. 30.25. 100 on 30.50. 30.50. 100 on 30.75. 30.75. 100 on 31.00. 31.00. 100 on 31.25. 31.25. 100 on 31.50. 31.50. 100 on 31.75. 31.75. 100 on 32.00. 32.00. 100 on 32.25. 32.25. 100 on 32.50. 32.50. 100 on 32.75. 32.75. 100 on 33.00. 33.00. 100 on 33.25. 33.25. 100 on 33.50. 33.50. 100 on 33.75. 33.75. 100 on 34.00. 34.00. 100 on 34.25. 34.25. 100 on 34.50. 34.50. 100 on 34.75. 34.75. 100 on 35.00. 35.00. 100 on 35.25. 35.25. 100 on 35.50. 35.50. 100 on 35.75. 35.75. 100 on 36.00. 36.00. 100 on 36.25. 36.25. 100 on 36.50. 36.50. 100 on 36.75. 36.75. 100 on 37.00. 37.00. 100 on 37.25. 37.25. 100 on 37.50. 37.50. 100 on 37.75. 37.75. 100 on 38.00. 38.00. 100 on 38.25. 38.25. 100 on 38.50. 38.50. 100 on 38.75. 38.75. 100 on 39.00. 39.00. 100 on 39.25. 39.25. 100 on 39.50. 39.50. 100 on 39.75. 39.75. 100 on 40.00. 40.00. 100 on 40.25. 40.25. 100 on 40.50. 40.50. 100 on 40.75. 40.75. 100 on 41.00. 41.00. 100 on 41.25. 41.25. 100 on 41.50. 41.50. 100 on 41.75. 41.75. 100 on 42.00. 42.00. 100 on 42.25. 42.25. 100 on 42.50. 42.50. 100 on 42.75. 42.75. 100 on 43.00. 43.00. 100 on 43.25. 43.25. 100 on 43.50. 43.50. 100 on 43.75. 43.75. 100 on 44.00. 44.00. 100 on 44.25. 44.25. 100 on 44.50. 44.50. 100 on 44.75. 44.75. 100 on 45.00. 45.00. 100 on 45.25. 45.25. 100 on 45.50. 45.50. 100 on 45.75. 45.75. 100 on 46.00. 46.00. 100 on 46.25. 46.25. 100 on 46.50. 46.50. 100 on 46.75. 46.75. 100 on 47.00. 47.00. 100 on 47.25. 47.25. 100 on 47.50. 47.50. 100 on 47.75. 47.75. 100 on 48.00. 48.00. 100 on 48.25. 48.25. 100 on 48.50. 48.50. 100 on 48.75. 48.75. 100 on 49.00. 49.00. 100 on 49.25. 49.25. 100 on 49.50. 49.50. 100 on 49.75. 49.75. 100 on 50.00. 50.00. 100 on 50.25. 50.25. 100 on 50.50. 50.50. 100 on 50.75. 50.75. 100 on 51.00. 51.00. 100 on 51.25. 51.25. 100 on 51.50. 51.50. 100 on 51.75. 51.75. 100 on 52.00. 52.00. 100 on 52.25. 52.25. 100 on 52.50. 52.50. 100 on 52.75. 52.75. 100 on 53.00. 53.00. 100 on 53.25. 53.25. 100 on 53.50. 53.50. 100 on 53.75. 53.75. 100 on 54.00. 54.00. 100 on 54.25. 54.25. 100 on 54.50. 54.50. 100 on 54.75. 54.75. 100 on 55.00. 55.00. 100 on 55.25. 55.25. 100 on 55.50. 55.50. 100 on 55.75. 55.75. 100 on 56.00. 56.00. 100 on 56.25. 56.25. 100 on 56.50. 56.50. 100 on 56.75. 56.75. 100 on 57.00. 57.00. 100 on 57.25. 57.25. 100 on 57.50. 57.50. 100 on 57.75. 57.75. 100 on 58.00. 58.00. 100 on 58.25. 58.25. 100 on 58.50. 58.50. 100 on 58.75. 58.75. 100 on 59.00. 59.00. 100 on 59.25. 59.25. 100 on 59.50. 59.50. 100 on 59.75. 59.75. 100 on 60.00. 60.00. 100 on 60.25. 60.25. 100 on 60.50. 60.50. 100 on 60.75. 60.75. 100 on 61.00. 61.00. 100 on 61.25. 61.25. 100 on 61.50. 61.50. 100 on 61.75. 61.75. 100 on 62.00. 62.00. 100 on 62.25. 62.25. 100 on 62.50. 62.50. 100 on 62.75. 62.75. 100 on 63.00. 63.00. 100 on 63.25. 63.25. 100 on 63.50. 63.50. 100 on 63.75. 63.75. 100 on 64.00. 64.00. 100 on 64.25. 64.25. 100 on 64.50. 64.50. 100 on 64.75. 64.75. 100 on 65.00. 65.00. 100 on 65.25. 65.25. 100 on 65.50. 65.50. 100 on 65.75. 65.75. 100 on 66.00. 66.00. 100 on 66.25. 66.25. 100 on 66.50. 66.50. 100 on 66.75. 66.75. 100 on 67.00. 67.00. 100 on 67.25. 67.25. 100 on 67.50. 67.50. 100 on 67.75. 67.75. 100 on 68.00. 68.00. 100 on 68.25. 68.25. 100 on 68.50. 68.50. 100 on 68.75. 68.75. 100 on 69.00. 69.00. 100 on 69.25. 69.25. 100 on 69.50. 69.50. 100 on 69.75. 69.75. 100 on 70.00. 70.00. 100 on 70.25. 70.25. 100 on 70.50. 70.50. 100 on 70.75. 70.75. 100 on 71.00. 71.00. 100 on 71.25. 71.25. 100 on 71.50. 71.50. 100 on 71.75. 71.75. 100 on 72.00. 72.00. 100 on 72.25. 72.25. 100 on 72.50. 72.50. 100 on 72.75. 72.75. 100 on 73.00. 73.00. 100 on 73.25. 73.25. 100 on 73.50. 73.50. 100 on 73.75. 73.75. 100 on 74.00. 74.00. 100 on 74.25. 74.25. 100 on 74.50. 74.50. 100 on 74.75. 74.75. 100 on 75.00. 75.00. 100 on 75.25. 75.25. 100 on 75.50. 75.50. 100 on 75.75. 75.75. 100 on 76.00. 76.00. 100 on 76.25. 76.25. 100 on 76.50. 76.50. 100 on 76.75. 76.75. 100 on 77.00. 77.00. 100 on 77.25. 77.25. 100 on 77.50. 77.50. 100 on 77.75. 77.75. 100 on 78.00. 78.00. 100 on 78.25. 78.25. 100 on 78.50. 78.50. 100 on 78.75. 78.75. 100 on 79.00. 79.00. 100 on 79.25. 79.25. 100 on 79.50. 79.50. 100 on 79.75. 79.75. 100 on 80.00. 80.00. 100 on 80.25. 80.25. 100 on 80.50. 80.50. 100 on 80.75. 80.75. 100 on 81.00. 81.00. 100 on 81.25. 81.25. 100 on 81.50. 81.50. 100 on 81.75. 81.75. 100 on 82.00. 82.00. 100 on 82.25. 82.25. 100 on 82.50. 82.50. 100 on 82.75. 82.75. 100 on 83.00. 83.00. 100 on 83.25. 83.25. 100 on 83.50. 83.50. 100 on 83.75. 83.75. 100 on 84.00. 84.00. 100 on 84.25. 84.25. 100 on 84.50. 84.50. 100 on 84.75. 84.75. 100 on 85.00. 85.00. 100 on 85.25. 85.25. 100 on 85.50. 85.50. 100 on 85.75. 85.75. 100 on 86.00. 86.00. 100 on 86.25. 86.25. 100 on 86.50. 86.50. 100 on 86.75. 86.75. 100 on 87.00. 87.00. 100 on 87.25. 87.25. 100 on 87.50. 87.50. 100 on 87.75. 87.75. 100 on 88.00. 88.00. 100 on 88.25. 88.25. 100 on 88.50. 88.50. 100 on 88.75. 88.75. 100 on 89.00. 89.00. 100 on 89.25. 89.25. 100 on 89.50. 89.50. 100 on 89.75. 89.75. 100 on 90.00. 90.00. 100 on 90.25. 90.25. 100 on 90.50. 90.50. 100 on 90.75. 90.75. 100 on 91.00. 91.00. 100 on 91.25. 91.25. 100 on 91.50. 91.50. 100 on 91.75. 91.75. 100 on 92.00. 92.00. 100 on 92.25. 92.25. 100 on 92.50. 92.50. 100 on 92.75. 92.75. 100 on 93.00. 93.00. 100 on 93.25. 93.25. 100 on 93.50. 93.50. 100 on 93.75. 93.75. 100 on 94.00. 94.00. 100 on 94.25. 94.25. 100 on 94.50. 94.50. 100 on 94.75. 94.75. 100 on 95.00. 95.00. 100 on 95.25. 95.25. 100 on 95.50. 95.50. 100 on 95.75. 95.75. 100 on 96.00. 96.00. 100 on 96.25. 96.25. 100 on 96.50. 96.50. 100 on 96.75. 96.75. 100 on 97.00. 97.00. 100 on 97.25. 97.25. 100 on 97.50. 97.50. 100 on 97.75. 97.75. 100 on 98.00. 98.00. 100 on 98.25. 98.25. 100 on 98.50. 98.50. 100 on 98.75. 98.75. 100 on 99.00. 99.00. 100 on 99.25. 99.25. 100 on 99.50. 99.50. 100 on 99.75. 99.75. 100 on 100.00. 100.00. 100 on 100.25. 100.25. 100 on 100.50. 100.50. 100 on 100.75. 100.75. 100 on 101.00. 101.00. 100 on 101.25. 101.25. 100 on 101.50. 101.50. 100 on 101.75. 101.75. 100 on 102.00. 102.00. 100 on 102.25. 102.25. 100 on 102.50. 102.50. 100 on 102.75. 102.75. 100 on 103.00. 103.00. 100 on 103.25. 103.25. 100 on 103.50. 103.50. 100 on 103.75. 103.75. 100 on 104.00. 104.00. 100 on 104.25. 104.25. 100 on 104.50. 104.50. 100 on 104.75. 104.75. 100 on 105.00. 105.00. 100 on 105.25. 105.25. 100 on 105.50. 105.50. 100 on 105.75. 105.75. 100 on 106.00. 106.00. 100 on 106.25. 106.25. 100 on 106.50. 106.50. 100 on 106.75. 106.75. 100 on 107.00. 107.00. 100 on 107.25. 107.25. 100 on 107.50. 107.50. 100 on 107.75. 107.75. 100 on 108.00. 108.00. 100 on 108.25. 108.25. 100 on 108.50. 108.50. 100 on 108.75. 108.75. 100 on 109.00. 109.00. 100 on 109.25. 109.25. 100 on 109.50. 109.50. 100 on 109.75. 109.75. 100 on 110.00. 110.00. 100 on 110.25. 110.25. 100 on 110.50. 110.50. 100 on 110.75. 110.75. 100 on 111.00. 111.00. 100 on 111.25. 111.25. 1

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES

Gratitude*

MISS GORDON CUMMING tells how she heard in Japan a bird which seemed to have for its sole note, "Me! Me! Me!" She and her party called it "the me-bird."

It sometimes seems as though there were many people who are a species of "me-birds," who seem to feel no obligation to others, and who consider the whole universe as made simply for themselves. Such people scarcely know the divine quality of gratitude, and their prayers to their Maker are composed of petitions, rather than of ascriptions of praise, and of that "thanksgiving which glorifieth God."

In fact, in all of our prayers, there is too little of this element. At the close of the day, we too often count up the crosses which we have had to bear, rather than the blessings which have crowned the hours. When Charles Lamb spoke his famous words about saying grace before Milton, as well as before meat, he struck a widely vibrating chord. Just as we "tip" those who give us food or who otherwise minister to the wants of sense, and yet do not think of tipping the man from whom we get our clothing or from whom we purchase our books; so we are likely to show far less gratitude for the higher things of life in our prayers than for those which affect our temporal welfare.

The causes for thankfulness multiply incredibly when we once direct our thoughts into this channel. Not only food, clothing, shelter, friends, position are to be classed among them, but the great thoughts of the poets, the harmonies and melodies of the composers, the beauties of art, and, best of all, the holy influences which incline the hearts of men toward good and away from evil. Thanks for the details included within these great divisions are enough of themselves to fill all the prayers that we can offer during every day of our lives.

It is related in an artist's biography that he once painted a simple pastoral scene near some English village. When it was finished, he showed it to an old man who had spent his life there.

"That is pretty," he said; "it must be fine to live in a pretty place like that."

"It is in your own town," the painter told him; "not half a mile away from where you are standing this moment."

With too many of us, there are unseen beauties at hand that we could see, if we would only look for them, and which might flood our souls with joy. It is a religious duty to pray, as the apostle bids the Ephesians, "to have the eyes of our heart enlightened"; and it is no less a duty that we pray to have the eyes of our body and of our mind enlightened also, until we can see all of the "riches of the glory of our inheritance," and learn more of what we have to be thankful for, and which we take now as a mere matter of course, and without a thought of thanks. "Ingratitude," says Gipsy Smith, in his emphatic way, "is the damning sin."

Parents are too neglectful of the duty of teaching thankfulness. There is a theory that it should spring up spontaneously in the human heart. All of us know that the high virtues seldom do that. They usually have to be cultivated and fostered with prayers and with tears, by line upon line and precept upon precept, through "days of pain and nights devoid of ease," by devoted parents and teachers. Gratitude is no exception, but the most needless child, if he has any nobility at all to build upon, will respond to instruction and training in this regard, until he will be quick to see and feel a kindness, and equally quick to express his thanks for it. Gratitude to humanity will lead readily to gratitude to that Higher Power which "pitieth us, like as a father pitieth his children."

Controlled by the Spirit*

IF we are filled with the Spirit, as we ought to be, as we are promised that we may be, it will govern us. Some of the newer sects set us older Christians a noble example. They let no day pass without its sacred hour of quiet, secluded study of God's Word and its interpretations. In many cases, more than an hour is required—and it is given. They are told that they cannot keep up to the high spiritual level exacted by their faith unless they fill themselves full with the holy Word.

It is a pity that we are not all of us sterner with ourselves in this matter. Even when we plan to take the time for daily Bible study and for prayer, what trifles make us neglect them! It is a shame and a disgrace to us. Only by using all the powers that God has given us can we be filled and controlled by his Spirit, and "serve his law."

Spurgeon tells a beautiful story of a man who found a foreign flower of great strength of root and stem. His garden was full of weeds, and he felt that he had no time to remove them; but he scattered broadcast among them a handful of the seed of this new plant. It was weeks before he was able to visit the garden again, but when he went he found that the weeds had entirely disappeared. Nothing was to be seen in the whole place except the sweet blossoms of the new plant, whose wonderful vitality had quite driven out the coarse and hateful growths which had so troubled the owner.

Thus if we can but once plant the Holy Spirit in our souls, and give it its own way, it will possess the whole place, and beauty will supplant and overcome ugliness and deformity.

In the life of the sainted John G. Paton he tells of a child who on his dying bed told his mother that he should soon be in heaven, "but, mother," he added, "I'm afraid you will never come there." "Why so, my child?" "Because," he answered, "if you really wished to live with Jesus, you would pray more and sing more about it. My Sabbath School teacher has told me about it, but you have not. If you really loved Jesus and wished to live with him, you would have told me more about him."

If we are filled with God's Spirit, we must show it. We shall talk of holy things, and prayer and song will be often upon our lips.

The government of the Holy Spirit upon us, says Dr. Bonar, is "like an army of liberation to a down-trodden country; like the warm breath of spring to the frost fettered tree. For the entrance of true life, or living truth into man's soul, must be liberty, not bondage. 'The truth shall make you free.'"

Sometimes a whole community seems to come suddenly under the control of the Holy Spirit. It is related of a small town in Western New York that many in different sections of it, without any known reason, were awakened to deep concern for the welfare of their souls. Two men from different directions came to a clergyman there in the morning asking, "What shall we do to be saved?" At about nine o'clock on that same morning one of the members of his church came to the same clergyman and asked him to go and call upon several anxious and troubled ones in his neighborhood. "Before night," says the report of this singular revival, "it was ascertained that almost the whole population were solemnly and with weeping asking the prayers and instructions of the people of God." No doubt this was the result of many earnest petitions offered in lonely closets, but heard of God.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, November 22. Thanksgiving Meeting. Text: Ps. 103.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, November 22. Text: Rom. 8: 5-11; Col. 1: 9.

Paint Your Buggy Now DO IT YOURSELF

The finish of a vehicle is worn and shabby from constant summer use. The rains and mud, snow, ice and frost of winter are the most severe strain on its durability. Now is the time to protect and beautify your vehicles, to prevent rust and decay and prolong their life and usefulness. As a simple matter of economy you should repaint. It costs only a trifle and anyone can do it. The result is a handsome carriage-gloss finish in rich colors or black.

Neal's Carriage Paint

ACME QUALITY

is for buggies, vehicles of all kinds (including baby's carriage) row-boats, flower stands—anything indoors or out requiring a brilliant, durable finish. Wagons, implements, wheelbarrows, lawn-settees—dozens of things about the home and farm should be protected from moisture, rust and decay during the winter months.

There are five strong reasons for fall house painting. Ask us.

The Acme Quality Text Book contains many suggestions for home beautifying and explains fully how to accomplish the best results in all sorts of painting, varnishing, staining and enameling. Write for it. IT'S FREE

Complete Catalog and Details of our Selling Helps for Retail Dealers on Request.

ACME WHITE LEAD AND COLOR WORKS, Dept. O, Detroit, Michigan.

IN DETROIT—Life is Worth Living

All you need to lay

Just a hammer and two hands

That's all you need to lay this roofing. Everything else comes in the roll. Including the New Patent Caps—a big improvement over anything ever used before. Form an absolutely water-tight joint under the nail. Match the roofing perfectly—are inconspicuous—and as durable as the roof itself.

Send for Free Samples of REX Flintkote ROOFING—Test it with a live coal of fire—and under the faucet or pump spout as long as you like—See for yourself that it's fire-resisting, acid-proof and water-proof. Then order the roofing from your dealer or from us.

Ask for our free book on this remarkable roofing

J.A.W. BIRD & CO.
28 India St., Boston, Mass.
Agents Everywhere

REX FLINTKOTE ROOFING

Why we can pay 5% AGAINST THE USUAL 4 PER CENT OR LESS

NO CITY grows and spreads out like New York. Nowhere else does real estate always increase in value. Nowhere else are so many young, ambitious, salaried men borrowing money at liberal interest to build homes and avoid excessive rents. Capital in most localities cannot be loaned so safely and profitably. It cannot earn enough to pay you the dividends that our patrons have received through us for many years. FIVE PER CENT, reckoned for every day we have the funds, principal secured by ASSETS OF $1,400,000, safely assured by our reputation of over fifteen years, and constant supervision of all operations by the New York Banking Department. Write us.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, New York

PIANO Do You Want Greatest Value?

The largest retail piano business in the world has been built up by us in the past 45 years. Let us send you free information and prices of 20 leading makes. Also new pianos of easy payments. Pianos shipped everywhere. We guarantee of highest musical qualities. All prices wonderfully reasonable. SPECIAL BARGAINS: 12 second-hand Steinway Uprights, 3 Webers, 2 Lyon & Heals, 6 Washburns, rebuilt in our factory equal to new, at very low prices. Teachers and students would appreciate these instruments. Write today.

LYON & HEALY
22 Adams Street, CHICAGO

GIVING A START IN LIFE

Caring for the Chickens

others which will enable them to earn an honest living as soon as they leave the sheltering care of the asylum. The girls are trained in all household duties and as seamstresses.

The Howard Asylum is not an experiment. It was started within four years after the close of the Civil War, when large numbers of colored people made their way North in the hope of bettering their condition. A great many of the mothers, unused to the rigors of a Northern climate and to the confinement of cities, died after a hard struggle with the new conditions, leaving their children helpless and dependent on the kindness of strangers. A colored woman, seeing the need for immediate action if these children were to be saved, gathered at least twenty and began to care for them in her home. Then a Presbyterian clergyman of the colored race started a home for these little waifs on Dean Street, in Brooklyn, the little band from New York was brought over, and the negroes gave freely to support the work which has been carried on in Brooklyn since that time. With outside aid they were able to care for an increasing number of children.

In 1903, after reorganization, Rev. James H. Gordon, pastor of the Baptist Temple in Manhattan, was placed in charge. Under his management confidence in the asylum has grown.

The demands made on the institution have increased far beyond its capacity. The buildings are old and they are greatly overcrowded. The Board decided several years ago that it would be better to move the asylum out into the country, where the boys could be trained in agriculture, where there would be room for growth, and the surroundings would be more healthful. A farm was purchased at St. James, Long Island, about forty miles from Brooklyn, and when funds for a suitable building can be secured the asylum will be removed there. It is hoped that a purchaser for the Brooklyn property can be found, as that would supply a part of the necessary funds. When the first party of boys was sent out to the farm it was impressed on them that the neighborhood would get its first and most lasting impression of the Howard Orphan Asylum from their industry and conduct. The little fellows felt the responsibility and lived up to it. The people in the vicinity have had no cause to regret their coming, and are already sending requests for the services of one or more trained boys during the busy farm season. The boys are taught all branches of agriculture, the care of stock and chicken raising.

Twice the boys have been called out to put out fires in the neighborhood. Arriving on the scene at a run, they rendered valuable assistance in getting the flames under control.

Farming is taught by a graduate of Tuskegee, while a woman teacher has all of the primary and grammar grades. One half of the boys work on the farm during the forenoon while the other half is in school; in the afternoon they change places. It is an interesting fact that most of the vegetables needed for the asylum in Brooklyn have been raised by these young farmers. There is one building of twenty-eight rooms on the farm, and as soon as the asylum is moved to St. James the farm building will be made over into a school building. The institution has reached a crisis in its affairs. At present there are over three hundred children in the Brooklyn building, and it will soon be necessary to move them, as the Board of Health has disapproved of the present structure as inadequate and unsanitary. A visit to the asylum will convince the most skeptical of the good that is being done under unfavorable conditions. The rooms, even at eight in the morning, are spotlessly clean and in perfect order, and open to the inspection of visitors. The children show their excellent care, and the kindergarten and primary classes are in charge of teachers who make the work a labor of love though they might do far better for themselves in a worldly sense by accepting offers elsewhere. Mrs. Gordon, the wife of the superintendent, is matron, and acts as superintendent when he is absent to lay the needs of the asylum before various churches.

On the Board of Managers are found the names of prominent pastors of Baptist, Methodist, Presbyterian and other evangelical churches. Inquiries concerning the work may be addressed to the secretary, J. A. Billingsley, D. D., or to Rev. James H. Gordon, of Brooklyn. Donations may be sent to the Treasurer of the Howard Orphan Asylum, Brooklyn, N. Y.

The House at the Farm

A Young Gardener

EAGER TO WORK

Health Regained By Right Food.

The average healthy man or woman is usually eager to be busy at some useful task or employment.

But let dyspepsia or indigestion get hold of one, and all endeavor becomes a burden. "A year ago, after recovering from an operation," writes a Mich. lady, my stomach and nerves began to give me much trouble. "At times my appetite was voracious, but when indulged, indigestion followed. Other times I had no appetite whatever. The food I took did not nourish me and I grew weaker than ever."

"I lost interest in everything and wanted to be alone. I had always had good nerves but now the merest trifle would upset me and bring on a violent headache. Walking across the room was an effort and prescribed exercise was out of the question."

"I had seen Grape-Nuts advertised, but did not believe what I read, at the time. At last when it seemed as if I were literally starving, I began to eat Grape-Nuts."

"I had not been able to work for a year, but now after two months on Grape-Nuts I am eager to be at work again. My stomach gives me no trouble now, my nerves are steady as ever, and interest in life and ambition have come back with the return to health."

"There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

A Household Necessity $2 "ANTI-DOC" Medical Battery

Many years' experience in the manufacture of Electrical and Medical apparatus has acquainted us with what was needed in the form of a Battery for family use. The public demanded a compact, reliable, durable and low-priced apparatus.

ANTI-DOC meets every one of these requirements. By aid of printed instructions the inexperienced get as good results as the skilled operator.

Unfailing Relief for Rheumatism. Send for Free Catalogue—124 pages; 1,000 electrical specialties with net prices.

Manhattan Electrical Supply Co. 188 Fifth Ave., Chicago, Ill. 17 Park Place, New York.

"Get There"

at a price to suit you direct for a

BLACK MOTOR BUGGY

Built for country roads, hills and mud. Engine—10 H. P., 2 cylinders, air cooled, chain drive rear wheels, double brake. Speed 2 to 25 m. per hr.—30 miles on 1 gal. of gasoline. Highest quality finish, workmanship and materials. Absolutely safe and reliable. Write for Book No. A-74. BLACK MFG. CO., 124 E. Ohio St., Chicago, Ill.

Don't Throw it Away

Does Your Granite Dish or Hot Water Bag Leak? USE MENDETS

They mend all leaks in all utensils—tin, brass, copper, granite, hot water bags, etc. No solder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them; fit any surface; two million in use. Send for sample pkg. 10c. Complete pkg. assorted sizes, 25c postpaid. Agents wanted. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 22-B Amsterdam, N. Y.

Called Higher

Mrs. Lydia Turner, of 2513 East Eleventh Street, Kansas City, Mo., died March 25, 1908, aged eighty-seven years. She was born April 26, 1821, and had read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for twenty-five or more years. She always read THE HERALD for her Sunday literature.

Mrs. Charlotte H. Dennis, of Rockport, Mass., entered into rest August 28, 1908, aged seventy-one years. She was a woman of earnest Christian character, a member of the Congregational Church for over fifty years, and long a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Susan Lynch entered into rest July 5, 1908, at Richland Centre, Wis., at the advanced age of ninety-four years. She was for more than eighty years a faithful Christian and member of the United Brethren Church, and for many years a faithful friend of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. Julia Hall was called higher on August 5 at her home in Port Chester, N. Y., at the age of ninety-three years and six months. She was a constant member of the Methodist Episcopal Church for seventy-seven years, having given her heart to God when sixteen years of age. Five children survive her.

Jacob Hole, Salem, O., died September 11, 1908, aged eighty years. A lifelong Friend, a trustful Christian, his end was peaceful. Of six surviving children, two are missionaries to Africa, and one a pastor in the home land. He had been a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a number of years.

Entered into rest, suddenly, at her home in Hartford, Conn., Annah Bancroft Simmons, wife of Henry E. Simmons, late of Summit, N. J., in the seventy-sixth year of her age. Her confession of faith, "I have been in bondage to the fear of death all my days, but he has taken it all away, and I praise him for it!"

Entered into her eternal rest in her sixty-eighth year from her home in Adrian, Mich., Mrs. Mary L. Gregory, wife of Rev. John Gregory. She was a great sufferer here, and a sincere and loving Christian. For many years past it was her delight to enjoy, on Sunday afternoons, the rich repast provided by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Christ the Conqueror

A READER OF THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Miss Lydia C. Wells, of St. Louis, Mo., sends this unique epitome of the Saviour's earthly life:

Born in Canaan; brought up a Carpenter; was Creator, was of Divine Conception, Celestial; our Covenant, Captain, Counselor, Comforter, and Companion; was Compassionate; is Coming; was Contemned, Condemned and Cruelly Captured; bore his Cross; was Crucified on Calvary; is Conqueror and Crowned.

THE BEAUTY of WOOLENS

and Flannels lies in their Softness and Fluffiness, and nothing Washable demands such Careful handling in the Wash. Avoid the Rubbing of Soap and Washboard that Mats the Fibres and makes them Hard and Shrunken before their time. Those who care most for Clean—Soft—Unshrunk Woolens and Flannels are Particular to Use PEARLINE according to directions.

Pearline

Directions for Washing Woolens and Flannels.

Wash Woolens and Flannels by Hand in lukewarm PEARLINE suds. Rinse thoroughly in Warm Water, Wring Dry, Pull and Shake well Dry in warm temperature, and they will Keep Soft Without Shrinking.

WHAT WILL YOU GIVE TO BE WELL

I cannot tell you how happy I am that I have been able to bring health and strength to 30,000 women in the past six years. Just think! this means a whole city. It is to my thorough study of anatomy, physiology and health principles, and to my 12 years' personal experience before I began my instructions by mail, that I attribute my marvelous success. It would do your heart good to read the reports from my pupils—and I have done all this by simply studying Nature's laws adapted to the correction of each individual difficulty.

I want to help every woman to be perfectly, gloriously well, with that sweet, personal loveliness which health and a wholesome, graceful body gives—a cultured, self-reliant woman with a definite purpose, full of the health and vivacity which makes you

A BETTER WIFE
A RESTED MOTHER
A SWEETER SWEETHEART

You can easily remove the fat and it will stay removed.

Too Fleshy? I have reduced 15,000 women. One pupil writes me:

"Miss Cocroft: I have reduced 78 pounds and I look 15 years younger. I feel so well I want to shout! I never get out of breath now."

"When I began I was rheumatic and constipated, my heart was weak and my head dull, and oh dear, I am ashamed when I think how I used to look! I never dreamed it was all so easy. I thought I just had to be fat. I feel like stopping every fat woman I see and telling her of you."

Too Thin? I may need to strengthen your stomach, intestines and nerves first. A pupil who was thin writes me:

"I just can't tell you how happy I am. I am so proud of my neck and arms! My busts are rounded out and I have gained 28 pounds; it has come just where I wanted it and I carry myself like another woman."

"My old dresses look stylish on me now. I have not been constipated since my second lesson and I had taken something for years. My liver seems to be all right and I haven't a bit of indigestion any more, for I sleep like a baby and my nerves are so rested. I feel so well all the time."

INDIVIDUAL INSTRUCTION

I give each pupil the individual, confidential treatment which her case demands. My information and advice are entirely free.

Write me to-day telling me your faults in health or figure, and I will cheerfully tell you whether I can help you. I never treat a patient I cannot help. If I cannot help you I will refer you to the help you need. Send 10 cents for instructive booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly.

A CORSET IS NOT NECESSARY

SUSANNA COCROFT,

Dept. 18, 57 Washington Street, CHICAGO, ILL.

Good Figure
Vibrant Health
Rested Nerves?

To Have

If vital organs or nerve centers are weak, I strengthen them so that each organ does its work.

I bring each pupil to symmetrical proportions and I teach her to stand and to walk in an attitude which bespeaks culture and refinement. A good figure, gracefully carried, means more than a pretty face. Nature's rosy cheeks are more beautiful than paint or powder. I help you to

ARISE TO YOUR BEST!

The day for drugging the system has passed. In the privacy of your own room I strengthen the muscles and nerves of the vital organs, lungs and heart, and start your blood to circulating as it did when you were a child. I teach you to breathe so that the blood is fully purified.

YOU CAN BE WELL WITHOUT DRUGS

And the vital strength gained by a forceful circulation relieves you of such chronic ailments as

Constipation	Rheumatism	Nervousness
Torpid Liver	Weaknesses	Sleeplessness
Indigestion	Dullness	Irritability
Weak Nerves		Catarrh

by strengthening whatever organs or nerves are weak.

I wish I could put sufficient emphasis into these words to make you realize that you do not need to be ill, but that you can be a vivacious, attractive woman in return for just a few minutes' care each day in your own room.

Author of "Growth in Silence," "Character as Expressed in the Body," Etc.

Miss Cocroft's name stands for progress in the scientific care of the health and figure of woman

"I MADE $12 PER DAY

Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set"

From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM.

AGENTS

are coining money. Claude H. Rogers sells 500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $3 to $10 a day. OUT-FIT FREE to workers. THOMAS MFG. CO. 423 Home Bldg. Dayton, Ohio

DEAF 25 YEARS

CAN NOW HEAR WHISPERS

I was deaf for 25 years. I can now hear a whisper with my artificial EAR DRUMS in my ears. You cannot see them in my ears. I CANNOT FEEL THEM, for they are perfectly comfortable. Write and I will tell you a true story—How I Got Deaf—and How I Made Myself Hear. Address C. P. WAY, '2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

WANTED INFORMATION REGARDING A GOOD FARM

for sale. Not particular about location. Wish to hear from owner only who will sell direct to buyer. Give price, description and state when possession can be had. Address.

L. DARBYSHIRE, Box 378 A, Rochester, N.Y.

Wonderfully Elastic!

Page Fences "give and take" but never break. 25 years of practical experience woven into the fabric. No other fence has it! This is the "Jubilee Year" or Quarter-Centennial of Page Fence. "Jubilee" book FREE. The Woven Wire Fence Co., Box 130Y, Adrian, Mich.

The Born Steel Range

lybolk keto as better than other ranges and means cooking easier, but we know by actual tests, will save you fuel. Born Ranges are far better than ordinary stoves in material and workmanship and a good deal better in design—better by 12 exclusive patented features. Yet Born Ranges cost you no more than the ordinary kind.

Write us to-day and we will send you catalog with all information giving you name of our nearest dealer or telling you how you can buy our stoves.

THE BORN STEEL RANGE CO. 2176 E. 9TH STREET, CLEVELAND, OHIO.

Makers of the First Steel Range in the World.

SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH

UNSCRUPULOUS AND INEXPERIENCED MANUFACTURERS make inferior stove polishes which are often inflammable, explosive and dangerous.

FOR FORTY YEARS we have been successfully making stove polish which pleases the housewives. It is natural we should know what they want and how to make it right. No housekeeper can afford to take chances of being horribly burned with inferior stove polishes. Use Sun Paste Stove Polish.

IT MAKES THE STOVE AN ORNAMENT.

Made by MORSE BROS., Props. RISING SUN Stove Polish, Canton, Mass., U. S. A.

It's the "IMPERIAL"

Which has exclusive features not to be had on other ranges, such as:

The STOVE OVEN BOTTOM absorbs and holds the heat in oven, a fuel saver.

The ODOR HOOD carries all steam and odor from cooking up the chimney.

The ASH SIFTER permits sifting the ashes right in the range. No dust.

The OVEN THERMOMETER tells exact temperature of the oven. No guessing.

SEND ON TRIAL. SOLD ON TIME. FREIGHT PREPAID.

And if you do not find it the handsomest looker, best cooker of any range you ever saw, send it right back. Send for catalogue; it tells all about the exclusive features, the liberal terms upon which we sell, and how we save your money.

THE IMPERIAL STEEL RANGE CO., 358 State Street, CLEVELAND, O.

Crooked Backs Made Straight

All Spinal Deformities Corrected or Benefited by the Wonderful Sheldon Appliance.

Authorities on the subject agree that there is no longer any reason why people should go through life suffering with spinal deformities. The Sheldon Spinal Appliance has corrected hundreds of cases of spinal trouble and has been of great and lasting benefit in many thousands of cases.

Children and young people with spinal deformity are permanently restored and saved for long, happy lives of usefulness. Older persons, except those cases in which the trouble is of very long standing and of an extreme nature, find the Sheldon Appliance equally effective. Many can be restored; practically all can be benefited. Physicians endorse and use the

Sheldon Spinal Appliance

It is made to measurement for each individual case and is guaranteed to fit. It weighs only a few ounces, but is strong and durable. It is cool and comfortable, even in hot weather, and never chafes or irritates. It is easy to put on and take off, can be readjusted by anyone whenever necessary (as the deformity is gradually overcome) and cannot be seen through clothing.

We Let You Use It 30 Days and we will take it back if you are not satisfied. Write today for our descriptive book and "Letters in Evidence" from every State.

PHILO BURT MFG. CO.,

207-23rd Street, Jamestown, N. Y.

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed. NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Dis-temper and Indigestion Remedy. A veterinarian's Remedy for wind, throat and stomach troubles. Strongly recommended. $1.00 per can, of dealers, or exp. prepaid. The Newton Remedy Co., Toledo, Ohio.

"Your Wife?"

Is she as fair and fresh as the day you were married? If not, it is probably because she neglected to care for her skin. Household and social cares, and family duties incident to the rearing of children, have left lines on her face and robbed her of the bloom of her youth.

She can regain much of her youthful charm, and your daughters also can discover how to outwit Father Time if you will call their attention to this advertisement and ask them to write for our 16-page illustrated booklet. We send it with our free sample. Either fill out coupon yourself now before you lay this magazine aside, or call it to the attention of the other members of your family.

POMPEIAN MASSAGE CREAM

It Gives a Clear, Fresh, Velvety Skin

Wrinkles and crow's-feet are driven away, sallowness vanishes, angles are rounded out and double chins reduced by its use. Thus the clear, fresh complexion, the smooth skin and the curves of cheek and chin that go with youth, may be retained past middle age by the woman who has found what POMPEIAN MASSAGE CREAM will do.

This is not a "cold" or "grease" cream. Those can never do the work of POMPEIAN MASSAGE CREAM, the largest-selling face cream in the world—10,000 jars being made and sold daily.

FREE—Sample Jar and Book

This Special Sample Jar affords a generous supply, with which you can try out for yourself the wonderful pore-cleansing and beautifying qualities of POMPEIAN MASSAGE CREAM. This Sample Jar is not for sale at the stores. The Illustrated Book is an invaluable guide for the proper care of the skin. Both FREE. Send 10c in silver or stamps (only U. S. stamps accepted) to cover postage and mailing.

If your dealer does not keep it, we will send a 50c or $1.00 jar of the cream, postpaid, to any part of the world on receipt of price

POMPEIAN MFG. COMPANY, 13 Prospect St., Cleveland, Ohio

Pompeian Massage Soap is appreciated by all who are particular in regard to the quality of the soap they use. For sale by all dealers—25c. a cake; box of 3 cakes, 60c.

POMPEIAN
MFG. CO.

13 Prospect St.
Cleveland, Ohio.

Gentlemen: Enclosed find 10c to cover cost of postage and mailing. Please send me one copy of your famous illustrated massage book and a special sample jar of Pompeian Massage Cream.

Name.....

Address.....

CUT OUT ALONG DOTTED LINE, FILL IN AND MAIL TO-DAY

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY LOUIS KLOPSCH

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

New York, November 18, 1908

VOL. 31- NO. 47. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

See Page 911

John Milton, the Blind Poet, Dictating "Paradise Lost" to His Daughters

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

J. L., New York. 1. What are the "Seven wonders of the world"? 2. In what do the Roman and Greek Catholic Churches differ?

1. The pyramids, the hanging gardens of Babylon, the tomb of Mausolus, the temple of Diana, the Colossus of Rhodes, Phidias' statue of Zeus, and the Pharos of Egypt. 2. The Greek Church rejects the Papal claim to supremacy and doctrinal authority; they admit the seven sacraments of the Roman Church; certain priests may marry; no images are used except the Cross; the Bible, the Deutero-Canonical books and the church traditions are accepted as the rule of faith. The Greek Church consists of eleven groups or patriarchates which are practically independent in organization, and each is governed by a patriarch or metropolitan.

Reader, Addison, Me. At what age should children be urged to be Christians?

They should be taught all the fundamental truths of Christianity—the story of the Saviour's birth and its meaning—at their mother's knee. Love of God, and obedience, prayer and faith in the Father above, can be instilled in the heart of a child in infancy.

R. E. L., Washington, D. C. The question has arisen between me and some of my friends, whether betting on the elections is not wrong. Some contend there are no Scriptural grounds to uphold my arguments. Can you answer this through the MAIL-BAG? I brought this up at the close of my Sunday School class yesterday and my teacher said he would discuss it next Sunday. Can not you give me a few points to show that betting is wrong under all circumstances? Personally that is my contention and I believe it is getting money without equity or just service rendered. And Christ, if dealing with the question, would disapprove of it as other worldly acts.

There are various acts which, while not specifically mentioned in Scripture, and while possibly not even wrong in themselves, may yet be regarded as sinful, if we take into consideration the question of influence and example. Betting is gambling and gambling is an admitted cause of much misery and wickedness and a temptation to crime. This being so, it is the duty of professing Christians to avoid even "the appearance of evil" (see I. Thess. 5: 22), and, for the sake of others, to whom their example might prove a stumbling-block (see Rom. 14: 21), to refrain absolutely from gambling in any form whatsoever. The laws, which are enacted for the protection of public morals, deal with betting as a public evil.

J. L. J., Benton Harbor, Mich. 1. Does not the doctrine of justification by faith contradict James 2: 24? 2. Did not Paul look upon the learning of his day as being against the Christian faith?

1. James had a different class than those to whom Paul preached. Paul urged as strongly as James, especially in the later epistles, the need of works as evidences of faith. (See Titus 2: 14 and following chapter.) James, says one commentator, "was combating the Jewish tendency (transplanted into Christianity) to substitute a lifeless acquaintance with the letter of the law for change of heart to holiness." He is really at odds, not with Paul, but with those who abuse Paul's doctrine. 2. He probably regarded it as tending to infidelity. The educated Greek, with a few notable exceptions, looked upon the new religion as fit only for the unlearned.

G. N. H., Fountain City, Ind. I find in I. Sam. 14: 18 that Saul said unto Ahiah, "Bring hither the Ark of God, for the Ark was there at that time with the children of Israel." May we not readily conclude that it was at Gibeon, Saul's home, until near his death, when it was again removed to Kirjath-jearim, where it spent its last twenty years preceding its being carried to Jerusalem?

The conclusion would seem to be a reasonable one; but in the absence of definite, positive data, it is of course impossible to state dates with accuracy.

E. W. K., Egypt, Pa. What is the origin and the original meaning of the word "good-bye"?

It is a contraction of "God-be-with-you," just as "adieu" is the modern form of the French phrase "A Dieu" (commending the departing one to God's care).

H. E. M., Madisonville, Pa. Who made the Ark, mentioned in II. Sam. 6?

See the instructions to Moses about its construction. Ex. 25: 10-15.

W. G. D., Sandy Hill, N. Y. Was it a statue, a monument, or a cross that was erected by the governments of Chili and Argentine Republic on the border line between the countries?

It was a statue, heroic size, of Christ as the Peacemaker. The statue was made of bronze cannon given by the two countries for that purpose.

B. P., Monterey, Minn. What is the size of the Panama canal, and where does it start?

It starts on the Atlantic side from the Bay of Limon, on which the city of Colon is situated, and comes out in the Pacific not far from the city of Panama. It is little over forty-nine miles in length. Its depth and width vary in its several sections. The approaching channel has a minimum depth of forty feet of water, and the bottom width is five hundred feet. As it nears the locks it is much narrower.

one you desire. 2. The Farmer's Almanac is a good one. Write to your Congressman to send you a copy of the Nautical Almanac, prepared and published by the government. It will be sent to you without cost.

SAMUEL PHELPS LELAND.

E. O., Osceola, Neb. When Cleopatra's Needle, which stood about 3,000 years in Egypt, was brought to New York, what was the preservative which they put on it to keep it from weathering away?

The exact formula of the preparation is, we understand, a trade secret of the manufacturer, but it is principally composed of paraffine, which is driven into the surface of the stone by a powerful wind blast. No preservative was applied when the Needle was first set up in Central Park, and the surface began to wear away, affecting the clearness of the inscriptions. The dry air of Egypt apparently had little effect, but the dampness here began to act within a few years.

H. W., Golconda, Ill. Our pastor stated in a sermon that there are more Mohammedans than Christians in the world. Is this so?

Dr. Zwemer, the well-known missionary in Arabia, and an excellent authority, in his book,

One regiment from New York adopted Scotch Highland dress and wore it until it was worn out, when they put on the regulation uniform issued by the government. One of captains, however, had so much fondness what has been called the "handsomest uniform in the world" that he marched in kilt and plaid after his men wore the blue. By the second year of the war all of the fancy uniforms disappeared from the Federal army except Zouaves, a few regiments of which kept the fez and trousers. 2. Most assuredly not. The White House is the President's home, and no kind of any kind has ever been sold there.

R. W., Leroy, N. Y., writes: "In the October issue I noticed Mrs. Castor's motive for reading the Bible through. I have often gratified my curiosity as to the frequency with which certain words occur in the Bible. I find sons, 2,800 times; daughters, 560 times; children more than 1,000 times; God, 4,144; man, 2,800; father, 1,000 women, 450; Lord, 1,855. This suggests the words of the prison convict who amused himself with the Bible, the only book in his cell, and found contained: books, 66; chapters, 1,189; verses, 31,173; words, 773,692; letters, 3,586,489; middle verse, Psalm 8: 118; longest verse, Esther 8: 9; shortest verse, 35th of 11 chapter of John. The word and occurs 46,277 times. The analysis or dissection of words is the most interesting and profitable of all studies. If scholars could settle upon a common translation and definition of words, creeds would dissolve, Christian brotherhood be established, and discord give way to the harmony of peace and love."

G. M. R., Lamar, N. C. 1. What meant by the millennium when will it be? 2. Explain Mark 4: 1 ("Shall leave them neither root nor branch"). 3. Also, Rev. 20: 14 ("This is the second death")

1. The millennium is a term used in prophecy to indicate a thousand years during which Satan will be bound while the saints will rise and live and reign with Christ (see Rev. 20: 1-7). Students of prophecy have striven vainly to answer the latter part of your question. 2. Commentators believe that, primarily, the destruction of Jerusalem was foreshadowed in the prophecy, and again (by the principle of double prophecy), the day of general judgment. Leaving "neither root nor branch" is proverbial for complete destruction. 3. Professor Weiss says of this passage: "The last enemy to be overcome is death as Paul teaches (I. Cor. 15: 26). Henceforth there shall be no bodily death, but only the second death, in which men are eternally overcome by the fire of divine wrath. Of this all will become the victims whose names are not written in the Book of Life." Andrus remarks on the same subject: "The ancient form of death shall not continue, but a death far different: 'everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord.'"

The Electoral Vote

In last week's CHRISTIAN HERALD the electoral vote was published according to the figures given out the morning after election. Late and fuller returns show some slight changes:

TAFT
California	10
Connecticut	7
Delaware	3
Idaho	15
Illinois	27
Indiana	15
Iowa	13
Kansas	10
Maine	6
Maryland	2
Massachusetts	16
Michigan	14
Minnesota	11
Missouri	18
Montana	3
New Hampshire	4
New Jersey	11
New York	31
North Dakota	3
Ohio	23
Oregon	4
Pennsylvania	34
Rhode Island	4
South Dakota	4
Utah	4
Vermont	4
Washington	7
West Virginia	7
Wisconsin	13
Wyoming	3
Total	321

BRYAN
Alabama	11
Arkansas	9
Colorado	5
Florida	5
Georgia	13
Kentucky	13
Louisiana	9
Mississippi	10
Maryland	6
Nebraska	8
Nevada	3
North Carolina	12
Oklahoma	7
South Carolina	9
Tennessee	12
Texas	18
Virginia	12
Total	162

The vote of Maryland is split, as, according to the latest reports, Bryan will get six and Taft two of the State electors.

Berlin's Greeting to Princess Alexandra, the Bride of Prince August Wilhelm

KAISER WILLIAM of Germany has just had the pleasure of seeing his fourth son, Prince August Wilhelm of Prussia, married to one of the most attractive princesses in his empire, the Princess Alexandra of Schleswig-Holstein-Sonderburg-Glücksburg—all of these titles being the names of principalities over which her family held sway. She is a niece of the German Empress. The Prince is the most studious of the Emperor's sons and for the next ten years he will serve in the army. All Berlin was decorated to receive the bride-elect, and she rode to the Palace from the station between solid banks of cheering people. The photograph shows the Princess receiving an address of welcome from the Burgomaster.

E. S. T., McCool, Miss. 1. What is contralto? 2. Is immersion found in Scripture?

1. The part between soprano and tenor; the lowest for the female voice. When sung by a man it is called counter-tenor. In woman, the contralto voice usually reaches two octaves beginning with F below middle C. It is called contralto, as being opposed to alto, the highest male voice in ancient music. 2. The word "immersion" is not used in the Bible, but many commentators find its equivalent in the context.

J. M., Ashtabula, O. At what period of the world's history did the use of metals begin?

They were used in prehistoric ages, the remoteness of which cannot now be estimated. In historic times, copper has been found in the tomb of the first Pharaoh, 4500 B.C., and copper instruments were used by the Babylonians 3500 B.C. Wrought iron found in the pyramid of Gizeh, indicates an age of 3960 B.C. The Canaanites had iron chariots and the Arabs employed that metal also.

A. L. L., Claremont, N. H. 1. What is the bright star which is east of south of the square of Pegasus and about on a line east from Altair? 2. What almanac tells the time of rising of the planets?

1. It is difficult to locate the star by your description, as there are several bright stars of the second magnitude in the immediate line you describe. Take any good map of the sky and trace your lines by comparing the map with the stars, and you can readily locate the

The Moslem World, estimates that according to various reckonings, there are 225,000,000 to 250,000,000 Mohammedans to-day. Of these 62,286,748 are under non-Christian rule, 157,055,232 under Christian rule, 15,528,800 under Turkish rule, 31,375,000 under non-Christian and non-Turkish rule. Christianity, on the other hand, has a total of some 477,080,158 followers throughout the world, according to the estimates of M. Fournier de Flaix, which are regarded as conservative and trustworthy.

Reader, Earlville, N. Y. What does the word hypnotism come from and what is its exact scientific meaning?

It comes from a Greek word pronounced "hipnos," meaning sleep, or rather nervous sleep. It is applied to a sleeplike condition produced by fixing the mind for a long time on a single object. The term was first used in 1843 by a Mr. Braid. It is really artificial catalepsy.

J. W., Hannibal, Mo. 1. Was there a Highland regiment in New York during the Civil War, and did they wear the Highland uniform? 2. Is there a buffet or a saloon connected with the White House where liquor is sold?

1. At the outbreak of the Civil War a great many regiments both North and South adopted distinctive uniforms which they paid for themselves. These uniforms were copied from those of continental nations. Later most of these were abandoned for regulation blue or gray.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Afzalgunj Bridge After the Flood Receded

The Famous Delhi Gate, Hyderabad

The Flooded Residency Grounds

DEADLY FLOODS IN INDIA

FEARS THAT FROM 25,000 to 50,000 WERE DROWNED IN THE DECCAN INUNDATION

HYDERABAD, India, with a population of nearly 350,000, is one of the most cosmopolitan cities in the world. It was lately the scene of a disastrous flood, unprecedented in the recollection of the oldest inhabitants.

Rain had been falling at intervals for a week, but from the night of the 25th of September it set in steadily and the downpour was incessant. Until the night of the 27th of September there was no break, and the fall recorded indicated fourteen inches. This, for forty-eight hours, was not very serious in itself, and beyond breaching some walls, damaging some houses, and swamping gardens and lawns, nothing more was feared. But the city of Hyderabad is situated on the banks of the river Moosi, which has its rise somewhere in the Western Ghats, and, flowing from northwest to southeast, casts itself into the larger and one of the chief rivers of India, named Krishtna. The Moosi, in ordinary times, is not much wider or deeper than a rivulet. It is bridged in four different places, connecting the city with its suburbs. On the right bank is the native city of Hyderabad, and on the left the settlement grown up in later years, known as Chuderghaut. The principal structure on this left side is the British Residency, about a mile and a half from the banks of the Moosi.

On the morning of the 28th the river was considerably swollen. This kept on increasing, and at 8 A.M. it was overflowing its banks. Within the next two hours it was flowing into the main streets, and the whole of the Residency grounds were inundated. Of course, all buildings in the immediate vicinity were in peril. Chief among these was the Afzalgunj Hospital, an institution fitted with modern equipments and manned by a superior medical and nursing staff.

The average native shop or dwelling is not a very solid structure, and only a few of the superior sort withstood the rush of a volume of water, which soon attained a height of twelve feet. Houses collapsed as though built of cards, burying the occupants and their belongings. Most of the in-patients of the Afzalgunj Hospital, by the efforts of the doctors, nurses and attendants, were removed to places of security.

FROM A SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT

Wild rumors were abroad. The people were panic-stricken, and there were no means, amidst extremes of underrating and overestimating I judge it will be safe to assume that about 15,000—certainly no fewer—have perished. The inferences are in favor of a larger number, for no account has yet been made of the numbers of villages and little settlements that lay parallel to the river's course and which have been destroyed.

The streets and localities known as Afzalgunj, Maharajgunj, Mahboobgunj, Gowligooda, Begum Bazaar, etc., present the aspect of an open space with no demarcation of lanes and streets; the whole space, for almost a mile in breadth, being covered with silt and debris. There are probably not more than a score of edifices remaining intact on either side of the Afzalgunj Bazaar, which is over a mile in length. Maharajgunj, which was once the public grain market, is now a clear space except for the ruins of grain sellers' houses and stores. The rice and wheat gathered from the receding flood, and which was by that time in a state of fermentation, had to be destroyed under police supervision, for the people in their desperation were about to use it regardless of the risk to their health. Efforts were made to demolish all ruins of structures that menaced safety. In the hospital, the operation theatre alone remains intact, although the water-mark on the walls inside shows the flood to have been at least ten feet high within the building, not reckoning the basement. The front wall of the building is a pitiable ruin. They told me that on the previous day they tried to get an elephant to pull it down, but the monster's

The Scene Within the City Gates at Hyderabad, After the Flood such confusion and excitement, of ascertaining even approximately the number of lives lost. No official report has yet been published, for the sad work of extricating the dead out of the ruins still proceeds. Some said 25,000 people had been either buried alive or washed away in the flood. On asking a European official, I was told that up to the 30th of September 700 corpses had been found, and that when all was summed up there would probably be 2,000 discovered to have perished. Between the great strength did no avail.

The Afzalgunj Bridge, a solid masonry structure, was breached, and the river, rushing torrentially between the breaches, cut off all communication between the native city on the right bank and the part known as Chuderghaut on the left bank.

Hyderabad, like most Indian cities of any importance, is enclosed by walls. These probably helped to break the force of the water, as it rose above the

Continued on page 909

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY
Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.*

THE RESULTS OF BELIEF

TEXT—Mark 16 : 16

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved."

WE HAVE been talking about some of the things we as Christians believe, and why. We began by stating our belief in Jesus Christ, and said we believed in him because of what he was and said and did. Our faith in him we said is both key-stone and corner-stone of character. We declared our belief in him as the life-giver, the person of reality, the man of remedies for a practically dying humanity. The great basis for our faith in Christ is his divine character, which has been thoroughly tested by countless individuals and by the witness of the world.

We next declared our belief as Christians in Love as the greatest of all forces in the world. We spoke of the love of God for man and the love of man for God as resting on reason and experience. A world made by a God of hate is unthinkable. The full culmination of a loving God's thought of the world is Jesus Christ, who came to save the lost. We mentioned certain avenues through which this belief in Love finds entrance and expression. The love of the church, of country, and of home are the three great and satisfying declarations of this faith which we repose in Love as the final answer to the world's troubles, and the complete solace for its woes.

We then went on to speak of our belief in the Bible, which satisfies us because it emphasizes God on every page and declares that the important thing in all history is not what men make or build or do as money makers, doers of great deeds, or builders of empire, but what they themselves are in their relations to a Divine Being. The Bible emphasizes the humanity of the world in its conduct, basing its rewards and punishments on the acceptance or rejection of God in the daily life. This makes it the greatest of all books, and the one of all others to be read, studied, and put first in our schools, churches, and homes.

The Work of Regeneration

Lately we spoke of our belief in Regeneration as taught in both the Old and New Testaments and especially emphasized by Jesus in his talk with Nicodemus. We said regeneration was brought about by the divine Spirit, something from above, not a thing to be gained by human strength or education or deeds. We said a man could tell if he was regenerated by the test of his affections. If he loves money or power or pleasure more than he loves the kingdom of God he is not a regenerated man. We also declared that for the needs of an age which still retains a large measure of barbarism, as witnessed by the daily scenes of mob violence and race hatred, nothing short of a complete change from the old to a new nature could be effective. Our belief in regeneration rests therefore in our own consciousness of need of divine power and the need of a sinful world to be cleansed through and through before it would walk in God's ways or do his righteous will.

These are only a few of the many things that a Christian believes. The list of his beliefs would be a catalogue of his being, for the Christian walks by faith every step. The beauty of belief appeals to his every motion. Do you know a life that has no vital heart beliefs? It is ugly and repulsive. Pessimism sits on the throne, cynicism holds the sceptre and sour criticism is the leaden crown on Pessimism's head. Jealousy times the heart throb, and bitterness measures the syllables of the tongue. The world turns at the bidding of the devil at the crank, and God, if there be any, is an under servant to luck, which is the only sure thing. There is no goodness in man and no virtue in woman. Daily life is bread and butter, and most of the time the butter is high priced and hard to get at that. The sun rises on the evil and the good, mostly on the evil because there are so many more of them, and sets on a world that is not worth while and which is a very poor job, which any man could improve on with a little practice in world making. Poor little creature, this Pessimist, this starved little soul, that does not believe in anything except its own opinions! But to him who really believes, how beautiful all things in God's universe are! How beautiful the natural world with its miraculous forms of creation in earth, air, water and space! How beautiful human loves and friendships with their mutual de-pendences and forbearances and exaltations! How beautiful the prattle of children and the sacred confidences of the home circle! How beautiful the love of God for his children, so great and strong that he sent his own Son into the world to save it! It is true that across these beautiful things some shadows fall. Sin is here, but its power has been destroyed by the grace of God. Trouble is here, but God's comfort is greater than the trouble. Imperfection is here, but love overlooks it and triumphs over it. Death is here, but this world is simply a training school, and there is a future life where death and sin and trouble and imperfection shall have no place. For all the ills of life there is compensation. If there is a devil, there is also a God, and the two are not equal, for Satan has been trodden under foot. If there is evil, there is also good, and they are not equal in power, for in the end evil shall be overcome with good. So sings the believing heart.

The Oasis of Faith

The beauty of belief blooms like a garden in a desert. Crossing the Arizona sand and rock desolation your train slows up at a little stopping place. There is a small wooden or adobe building, or perhaps nothing but a box car sitting on the ground between the main track and the siding. Far away on all sides the dry and terrible desert shimmers under the sun's eye, and every one of the countless grains of sand is a many-sided mirror to reflect back the palpitating heat. Right up to the very edges of the box car the waves of desert sand from that illimitable ocean that ages have not tamed sweep and sift as if jealous of any other dominion, for lo, the railroad man, or probably his wife who with a little child is standing in the box car doorway, has planted a cottonwood tree and a little patch of grass and watered them from the railroad water tank or perhaps a tiny spring or a reluctant well, and there is a vine struggling over the little window at the end of the car, and a red geranium blossom nods cheerful defiance to the awesome desert. You stand on the end of the observation car as the train pulls out. The woman and the child gaze at you wistfully. The diminutive patch of green rapidly fades out of view. The alkali dust whirls up over the rail of the observation car platform, the desert has the train in its clutch again and its grim silence and burnt solitude are more impressive than all the whirr and rumble of that streak of civilization crawling over it. But the vision of the box car and the green cottonwood and the green grass and the red geranium and the brave vine stay with you until you roll down into the irrigated orange groves and rose palm bordered avenues of the southern paradise of the Golden Gate empire. That was an oasis of faith, all the more beautiful by contrast. It was like your soul, my friend, when calmly and lovingly it plants its living seeds of belief in the midst of sin's great desert of the world and stands beside its verdure cheered and blest, undismayed and unconquered, beautified and glorified.

Strength in Discouragement

But the Christian's belief not only beautifies—it strengthens his soul. When General Grant was appointed to the command of the campaign in the Wilderness he wrote a letter to President Lincoln in which he assumed full responsibility for that campaign. He assured the President that he had ample supplies for his army, that he would not throw any blame or responsibility on the President or on any of his officers for failure, but that he assumed it all and if he failed he alone would be accountable. What a source of strength to the gaunt figure in the White House bearing the burden of a nation's fate, that letter from Grant must have been! Harassed and tortured by a long list of complaining, incapable or jealous commanders who were insufficient for the gigantic task, one can imagine the sob of restful hope that broke from Lincoln's breast as he read that letter and said, "Thank God for a man at last!" Is it any wonder Lincoln loved Grant? He believed in him. He had complete confidence in him, unbroken and undimmed from the time he took command until the end came at Appomattox.

Like that, only infinitely greater in degree, is the effect of belief in God. The soul is worn out with the struggle. It has been tortured and beaten and disappointed by earthly forces. It is wearing itself out in the bitterness of human defeat. Suddenly God's promises come in from the front down where the fighting is hardest. "Cast thy burden upon the Lord and he will sustain thee." "Thou art my servant, I have chosen thee and not cast thee away fear thou not, for I am with thee; be not dismayed for I am thy God. I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness." "The eternal God is thy dwelling place and underneath are the everlasting arms." "Come unto me, all ye who labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest."

These are quotations from the letter God has written his discouraged children. He says, "Don't be anxious. Don't be troubled. Don't despair. I am my world, I am more interested in its welfare than you are. I want you to be a co-worker with me in its redemption. I do not want you to be lazy or shirk your own responsibility. But when you are weary, when you are heartsick, when you are fearful, lean on me, and lean hard, for I am strong." I know that right will prevail in the end. Oh, the strength of that complete abandonment of ourselves to the power of God! If Lincoln's heart bounded with the pulse of a new life for the nation when Grant's letter came, how much more the Christian's soul reposes with exultant faith in the calm assurances of God's untiring, loving strength when his children need him most!

When Trouble Comes

A cloud has come up out of the calm sea on which you set sail a little while ago, glad to live because of life and love. It is the cloud of failing health, or failing possessions. Somewhere out of God's beautiful world beyond the horizon over which we never look, comes up this threatening storm peril to a safe and happy voyage. Reef the sails close, make all taut, stand true at the helm, brave sailor. But the heart sinks as the darkness grows deeper and the terrible roar of the sudden tornado bears down on the frail vessel. Where is the arm that can save? Oh, the pity of it, that it should be so brief in its sunny, hopeful voyage but just begun! Then faith lays hold on God, else the heart would surely break. "In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so, I would have told you. I go to prepare a place for you." Then let the storm beat down out of the whirling blackness and level the mast with the deck and drive upon the breakers a battered hull. He who was master of this craft is unharmed in spirit. He sings as he nears God, "Be not afraid of that which kills the body." "Nay, in all these things I am more than conqueror through him that loved me. For I am persuaded that neither death, nor life, nor angels, nor principalities, nor powers, nor things present, nor things to come, nor height, nor depth, nor any other creature, shall be able to separate me from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus my Lord."

My friend, when trouble comes into your life, how much would you take for this belief? How much do you know of its strengthening power?

There are some events in our human experience where belief is the only thing that can satisfy us. Nothing else will do. There is nothing just as good, as the salesman says to us when we go into a store for a particular article.

The Only Remedy

A distinguished man was dangerously ill. His family physician stood bravely at his bedside watching his symptoms. Suddenly he turned to a nurse and spoke a word. The nurse went out of the room and soon returned with a small black box which she put into the doctor's hands. He carried it over to the window and quickly took everything out of it. But evidently the one thing he wanted was not there. The window seat was littered with small bottles and papers, but the doctor did not select any of them.

"Send my servant back to the house," he said rapidly. "Tell him he has made a serious mistake. Bid him bring the long black box on the table in the hall. And bid him ride, for life and death are waiting."

When the long black box was brought in by the terrified rider the physician snatched it out of his hands, broke open the lid and took out a small bottle containing some curious looking globules holding a

Continued on next page

*Preached in Central Church, Topeka, Kan.

The Afzalgunj Hospital, Destroyed by the Inundation

Ruins of Nawab Salar Jung's Palace, Wrecked by the Flood ght bank and swept down the streets and the azaars. The houses on that side were older and therefore less able to withstand the impact. The work of digging out the dead is still proceeding as fast as the available labor, enforced and voluntary, will allow. The palace of the young Nawab Salar Jung, a grandson of the distinguished nobleman of that name, is practically a ruin, thus indicating the stupendous and irresistible force of the flood which leveled palaces and huts alike. The fate of many a zenana, hedged in by its own peculiar restrictions, can better be imagined than described.

Among some of the most pathetic stories I ever listened to was one told by the chief surgeon of the Afzalgunj Hospital. It seems a man had come all the way from Rutlam, in Central India, to have his eyes operated on for cataract. In his almost total blindness he had no conception of the peril of the situation.

"You cannot walk out of this," said the doctor. The water was then nearly four feet high in the hospital enclosure. "There is none to lead you out; but just step into my carriage and the driver will try to take you to a place of safety."

He had just been helped by the driver into the carriage when the portion of the building near which the conveyance stood collapsed, and carriage, horse, occupant and driver were buried. Some of the hospital wards became veritable "chambers of horror." Patients, already enfeebled by disease, struggling to escape, were dashed by the flood which carried everything before it, and were found pilloried in door and window frames, from which the panes of glass had already been shattered. But these details are too gruesome for description!

As I walked the length of what was Afzalgunj Street—now covered with silt—I saw the shopkeepers trying to recover their property from the ruins. One old couple kept digging in the spot on which they had kept a shop for the sale of Indian bangles (choories) made of all sorts of colored glass. It was pathetic in the extreme to see them carefully dust and put away—as though it was some hidden treasure just discovered—one whole bangle rescued out of a shattered mass of some hundreds of these trinkets. Another had been a shop where country-made lamps had been exposed for sale. Here, too, it was touching to watch the owners now and again pull out a piece of tin that had been part of a lamp from the mass of mud and driftwood, straighten it, and put it away carefully to await the turn in the tide of fortune. Here a furniture shop, here what had been a tailor's establishment, and so on.

Amid the desolation and widespread distress it was gratifying to observe provision being made for substantial relief. Hundreds and thousands of homeless people were being fed and clothed at the expense of the Nizam's treasury. This, I felt, was one of those touches which more than ought else make the whole world kin.

As I close this letter, I learn from a published report that the number of lives lost is estimated at 50,000. Some of the zenana missionaries report that nothing remains but debris of a large portion of the localities where they worked; so many of those who had listened to them and their mission agents having been buried alive in the debris of the great flood.

C. W. ROSS DE SOUZA,
Missionary Methodist Episcopal Mission,
Secunderabad (Deccan), India.

Hyderabad is the premier native State of India, whose Mohammedan ruler is called the Nizam. The State is situated in the northern part of the tableland of the Deccan, its average elevation being 1,200 feet above sea level. It occupies an area of 80,000 square miles. It is widest in area, largest in revenue, and its ruler holds the first place among all the Indian chiefs and nobles.

Missionary de Souza, in a subsequent letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, says that there is great distress among the flood survivors, thousands of whom are absolutely destitute. The missionaries would be glad to be enabled to relieve the prevailing distress. Any contributions for relief work sent to this journal will be acknowledged and cabled to the missionaries at Hyderabad for distribution.

THE RESULTS OF BELIEF ~ A Sermon by Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.—Continued

purple fluid. He administered first one, then another, finally a third to the sick man. The moments passed in that chamber. Life and death fought over the body, and life won after hours of alternating advantage. When his distinguished patient recovered, the doctor told him that at one crisis of his illness there was one and only one remedy known to medical science that could meet an unexpected weakening of a certain vital force. All the other medicines contained in both black boxes would not have met the emergency. The mistake of the servant in bringing the wrong box nearly proved fatal to the patient, although a score of ordinary remedies were close at hand.

My friend, a child has put his little hand in yours and rested his tired head on your breast. He has been playfellow to you when bedtime came, and you have romped with him up to the borderland of sleep. Or he has watched you at your work with gravely curious eyes. One day the little hand lies like wax on its little white garment. The tired head has leaned for the last time on the earthly father's bosom, and the earnest happy eyes have closed to the earth's play and work, and your little companion is gone. Then, here as you stand smitten into darkness by this unexplained and bewildering abduction of a part of yourself, comes the Master of Wealth and says, "Cheer up, man! It is only a child you have lost. Here! Here is gold! Handfuls! The stuff men sell their souls for! The stuff that buys power and comfort! Gold! Gold! Gold! Take it and be comforted!"

And you bid the master of wealth begone to his own place with his gold. "Give me my boy, or else give me assurance of his living happiness somewhere! That is my heart hunger!"

Then cometh the Master of Power and saith, "Cheer up, man! It is only a child you have lost. Get power. Drown this loss in ambition's strenuous programme. Power! Power! Take it and be comforted."

And you bid the Master of Power begone to his own place. "Give me back my child!" you cry. "Or else give me the faith which leaves him whom my soul loved in the arms of a loving God. That is my heart need."

Then also cometh the Master of Pleasure, and he likewise saith, "Cheer up, man! Only a child gone. Seek happiness. Here is comfort for you. Pleasure! Pleasure! Pleasure! Let us eat and drink, for tomorrow we also die."

And him also you bid begone to his own place. "Give me back my playfellow, or give me the peace that flows from an unshaken belief in his happiness in some happy world where death is not. That is what I want."

"What! Only one remedy for this emergency! Yea, verily. Belief in a living God, faith in the resurrection a sure confidence that my little playmate is free from all pain and forever happy playing with the angels and with other children—that is the only remedy for my great heartache, that is the only comfort that can help me any now.

Beauty and strength and comfort lie at the heart of the Christian's belief. "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved," said Jesus Christ. Saved! What is salvation? Not missing hell and getting into heaven! That is not salvation. But salvation is life abundantly. The saved soul is that soul that through belief already has passed out of death into life and already enjoys a foretaste of heaven on earth. He that believeth shall be saved. It is because belief means so much, it embraces all things worth having. Even as Paul said, "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." The Christian belief is good to die by, but it is infinitely better to live by. The things we believe cheer us in the daily fight, guard us in the daily temptation, make us fit to do great things, arm us with the whole armor of God. If I should lose my confidence in my people, that would mark the end of my ministry. I have no doubt I disappoint you often. You do me. Our ideals are not met. But what a terrible thing it would be for us if in an evil and selfish hour we should mutually cease to believe in each other because of human weakness or imperfection which we had discovered after some years' acquaintance. It is nothing but our mutual belief in one another that makes possible any mutual labor of love as pastor and people. That is a terrible moment in the experience of a man and his wife when either ceases to have faith in the other, when confidence is gone because of some imagined or even real weakness of character. How much more terrible when the belief which a human being should repose in his heavenly Father flickers and goes out, leaving the poor soul in darkness, without God and without hope in the world.

Oh, all ye souls that do not know the full joy of an abundant life, whose belief does not soar above the malaria of a sin-choked valley, do you want beauty and strength and comfort in living? Believe on the Lord Jesus Christ and he saved. Believe. Believe in the Way and the Truth and the Life. Believe in God, believe in the triumph of good over evil. Believe in the love of man for man. Believe in the resurrection and the future. Believe in the final victory of right. Believe in God's power and in your own redemption. Believe in the Holy Spirit. Believe in the good and the true, and the pure and the holy as the only eternal things. All these things you will believe if you believe in Jesus. For he believed in them and this belief will mean salvation to you. Oh, taste and see that the Lord is good. Blessed is the man that trusteth in him. Do not wait. Come to-day. Cry out, "Lord, I believe! Help thou mine unbelief!" He is your Father; he has told you so. You are his child; tell him so. That is what he wants. Believe in the Lord Jesus Christ and be saved.

MONARCHS IN THE MAKING

The Crown Prince of Serbia

FOUR princes, by the political events about the northern frontiers of the Turkish Empire, have been brought into the public eye, not so much for what they have done in the past as for what they may do in their future positions, for they are kings in the making. Startling as have been the changes in the last few years, there is still a large field for new lines in the political geography of the Balkans, and though things may have settled themselves for the lifetime of the present rulers there will be more activity when these young men assume crowns and sceptres of their own.

Ferdinand, Archduke of Austria-Hungary, is the heir-apparent of Francis Joseph, Emperor of Austria and King of Hungary. The latter is one of the most popular and kindly monarchs of the Old World, and it is said that it is his popularity alone which has held the Magyars of Hungary from breaking with Austria several times in the friction between the Germanic and non-Germanic elements and the many other races of the dual empire. Francis Joseph has had a reign that has been filled more with shadow than with sunshine. His eldest and favorite son, the Archduke Rudolf, committed suicide in 1889. Later his beautiful wife was killed by an anarchist. Ferdinand, his nephew, is now preparing for his duties as emperor-king. The heir, after the death of Rudolf, was the present Emperor's youngest brother, but he died, and Archduke Ferdinand, a man of forty-two, came next in the line of succession. He is a man of courage and at the same time a diplomatist of the "wire-pulling" type. He believes in going ahead and doing things regardless of tradition when they touch his private inclination. Several years ago he fell in love with the beautiful Countess Chotek, but the law of the House of Hapsburg was that none of its members should marry outside of a royal family. Ferdinand contracted a morganatic marriage, that is, a marriage where the ceremony and relationship is perfectly legal, but the wife may not use the husband's title nor can her children inherit the throne. The law of the Hapsburg House does not hold in Hungary and the Hungarians have declared that they will recognize Ferdinand's wife as the Queen of Hungary and his son as heir to the throne. It is thought probable that when Ferdinand comes to the throne he will trample down all opposition, declare his wife of equal rank and make her Empress of Austria. She has already been granted the title of princess. Recently he showed his bravery by risking his life to save that of a shepherd boy. The boy had fallen into a roaring torrent at the base of a mountain, and was drowning. Archduke Ferdinand plunged in, and being a strong swimmer dragged the boy to land. The shepherd was half dead, but he was revived.

It is said that Ferdinand prompted the movement to take over Bosnia and Herzegovina, and as the Emperor is getting older, he is becoming in truth "the power behind the throne." Austria will undoubtedly be more aggressive if not more warlike in its relation with its neighbors under his leadership. If Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria had not declared himself Czar, the eldest son, Prince Boris, would never have looked forward to a higher title than he now enjoys unless he had decided to declare himself king of the Bulgars when he came to the declared Bulgaria free of all overlordship of the Turks, and himself Czar of Bulgaria. Young Boris has been carefully trained, and as nearly as possible in a military way. He is yet too young to take permanent place in the army, in which he already holds a commission, and is under the instruction of a foreign tutor, who is with him constantly. Boris is quite popular with the people of the capital city Sofia—much more so than his father. His birth was hailed with great rejoicing and when he was given the Bulgarian name of Boris all felt that the dynasty had taken on a national character which had never before possessed. King Ferdinand believes in surrounding the young prince "with much pomp and circumstance" when he goes out for his promenades. He wears the uniform of a Bulgarian officer, the small round cap worn by general and private alike, with his trousers tucked into the tops of knee boots. As he is already a knight the star of one or two orders glitter on his breast. The tutor in citizen's dress walks with him; behind, two or two, march a detachment of the cavalry guard regiment in a hussar uniform of striking pattern.

King Ferdinand, like most of the Austrian nobility, belongs to the Roman Church, but Boris was received into the Greek Church in 1896. A clause in the constitution declares that the heir to the throne must be of the latter faith. Prince Boris has a brother, Prince Cyril of Bulgaria, who was born in 1895. He also holds a commission in the army, and is destined probably for a military career, as his brother will occupy the throne. There are two little sisters, both beautiful children, the Princess Eudoxia, born in 1898, and the Princess Nedejda, born in 1899. They often wear the national dress, one of the most becoming feminine costumes of the Near East.

The Crown Prince of Serbia lived in exile in his early days with his father, the present King Peter, in several places in Europe. When he became Crown Prince he entered the Serbian army, and recently has caused his father much anxiety by his fiery speeches and desire to go to war with Austria before Serbia is ready for it. At present he is on a secret mission to the Emperor of Russia. His youthful enthusiasm may develop into the energy of a ruler of a Balkan State, but at present Europe has not quite made up its mind about him.

Montenegro's young prince is little known to the outside world. He is about twenty and warlike as are all Montenegrins. He has urged an attack on Austria during the recent crisis, and his father's subjects evidently believe in him. From the very position of Montenegro he will play an important part as its ruler in the politics of the Near East.

The Prince of Montenegro

Archduke Ferdinand

Prince Boris

throne. As it is now, young Boris will inherit a kingdom instead of a principality. His father, King Ferdinand, was at the time of his election to the throne of Bulgaria a half-pay lieutenant in the Austrian army. His first wife, the mother of Boris, was Marie Louise, eldest daughter of Robert, Duke of Parma. Boris was born fourteen years ago and it is said that in his paternal pride and affection, he was thinking more of Boris than of himself when he

A Novel Idea for Prayer-Meetings

THE unique "thermometer" shown in the photograph is used for the purpose of indicating how many persons attend the mid-week prayer-meeting at Centenary Methodist

The Prayer-Meeting Thermometer

Church, Chattanooga, Tenn. It is the idea of the pastor, Rev. J. A. Baylor, who believes that the prayer-meeting is the true index or thermometer of the church's spiritual condition. The thermometer is made from a piece of wood about twelve feet long and over a foot wide. It is painted white, and the figures are made with black paint. Instead of mercury a red ribbon is used, and this is fastened to a white ribbon at either end. The ribbon is about an inch wide, and passes through a hole at the top and another at the bottom of the thermometer, the ends being joined at the back of the instrument. The seam where the red ribbon is sewed to the white, in front of the thermometer, is moved up and down to indicate the exact number of persons who attended the prayer-meeting. The thermometer is hung on the church wall, where it confronts the entire congregation on Sundays. It is artistic, inexpensive, and easily made; and it is said to be a great inducement to people to attend the prayer-meeting. Centenary Church has one of the largest and most flourishing prayer-meetings in Chattanooga. It increased its membership by 250 persons during the conference year which closed in October. The men's Bible Class is one of the largest in the country, as many as seven hundred members frequently attending it at the early hour of 9 o'clock on Sunday mornings.

A New Missionary Society President

AN EVENT of national importance to women interested in missions is the election of Mrs. George O. Robinson, of Detroit, Mich., as President of the Woman's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church. She has been an active promoter of Deaconess work in the society since 1888. Mrs. Robinson is a fine platform speaker and for several years before her marriage (when Miss Jane Bancroft) was engaged as traveling secretary for the society, giving especial attention to the founding of Deaconess Homes and Institutions.

The George O. Robinson Orphanage in Porto Rico, with the land on which it stands, was largely the gift of Mr. Robinson to the Woman's Home Missionary Society.

Mrs. Clinton B. Fisk, of New York, who retires from office, has served as president for fifteen years. During her presidency, Mrs. Fisk has traveled over one hundred thousand miles in the interests of the society, and has raised large sums of money for the cause. The society has made large advances in its work, greatly helped on by the strong personality of its leader. Mrs. Fisk is now seventy-six years of age and insists that she must relinquish the heavy responsibilities of her office. In acknowledgment of her long term of devoted service, the Executive Committee recently surprised Mrs. Fisk with the gift of a mahogany rocking-chair, a duplicate in style of one of seventy-five years ago.

Mrs. George O. Robinson

THE TERCENTENARY OF MILTON

A View of Milton's House

THROUGHOUT England, and especially in the ancient university city of Cambridge, and in institutions of learning in the United States, preparations have been made fittingly to commemorate on December 9 the three hundredth anniversary of the birth of one of the world's greatest poets—John Milton, whose minor productions would have given him a prominent place among the writers of his day and generation, but whose masterpiece, Paradise Lost, assured his fame as long as the English tongue endures and the works of its great minds are read. His career was striking for its brilliancy, pathetic for its misfortunes and remarkable for the influence it exerted politically during the period of the Commonwealth, and for the lasting spell he cast not only over the writers of prose and poetry of his own day, but also over subsequent literary lights even to our own times.

Milton came naturally by his strong early leanings toward Puritanism, a term which later came to have a strong political as well as religious significance. His Puritanism, in fact, during his active manhood, was more of the latter stamp. His father was a scrivener by profession, whose home at the time of the poet's birth was in Bread Lane in Cheapside, London. In belief, the father was a strong Puritan, but nevertheless he was interested in literature, especially poetry, and in art, and in all, in fact, that made life more beautiful and the world a pleasanter place in which to live. These characteristics bore fruit in the life of his son, the poet who could write the great religious poems of Paradise Lost and Paradise Regained, which have never lost their power over the minds of thinking men, and who could also pen those delightful sonnets which seem to sing themselves and which express delight with the world itself and the very joy of existence.

Before Milton was twelve his father thought that his son displayed indications of genius, and instead of discouraging the career of a writer and student, as has so unfortunately been the custom with some practical fathers for centuries, he did all he could to encourage the son's literary tastes. First, he was put under the private instruction of Thomas Young, a private tutor. The tasks Milton set for himself were far more severe than Young demanded, and the only anxiety he caused him was that he was bent on studying too much instead of having the chronic habit of most of his pupils of studying too little. Of this early learning-hunger period of his life, Milton wrote later: "My father destined me, while yet a child, to the study of polite literature, which I embraced with such avidity that from the twelfth year of my age I hardly ever retired to my rest from my studies till midnight, which was the first source of injury to my eyes." He attended St. Paul's School, London, and then passed on to Cambridge University, where he matriculated at Christ's College. Here he gave most of his time to poetry and the classics, which he almost idolized. The other studies he was required to take he heartily detested. Some of Milton's shorter poems were produced at Cambridge as class exercises. His beautiful Hymn on the Nativity was one of these. He passed his examinations successfully within the usual time, and retired in 1632 to his father's country seat. There was no necessity for the young poet to engage in a profession; and he devoted his time to study and to music. This last was a delight to him to the end of his life, and one of his greatest comforts when his sight had gone, and his daughters and friends sang or played to him softly after the work of dictating had been put aside, and they rested in the twilight of the day which to him had become night.

At Horton were written the touching poem of Lycidas, to commemorate a friend drowned at sea, and the light and sprightly Allegro, and the Masque of Comus. Then the desire for foreign travel became too strong to be denied, and he wandered leisurely over France and Italy, and was for some time in Switzerland. The Great Civil War brought him back to England, where he set aside poetry and engaged as a writer of political pamphlets.

It is interesting to note that whereas his fame at the present day rests solely on his poetry, his fame in his own time rested on his prose works. In fact, he stated that Paradise Lost was written to perpetuate his name to future generations. His pamphlets, of course, dealt with events of the day, and were of great effect, even bringing forth commendation from the Puritan government. These prose writings appear rather difficult reading now. They are filled with learned allusions and display a fondness for long sentences—all in a stately and rather magnificent style. He was, it should not be forgotten, a great advocate of the freedom of the press at a time when its freedom was greatly restricted and was often in jeopardy.

It was after the cloud had settled over his eyes, his fortune gone, and the subject of persecution, that he found time to take up Paradise Lost and Paradise Regained, the plans for which had been running in his mind for many years. Seven years were required for the composition of Paradise Lost, and it was published in 1667. All the money Milton and his family ever received for this poem was not more than eighty dollars in our money.

Everything considered, John Milton is one of the superb figures in English history. As a poet he ranks with Homer, Virgil and Dante, and as a controversialist with Salmasius, his great antagonist; and as a Puritan influence he represented the culture and the nobility of soul of the milder and more advanced type of thought that set the face of England towards a later and better time. R. S. B.

Room in Milton's House at Chalfont, St. Giles

THE SONG THAT IS BUILDING A CHURCH

ONE of the best known hymns in the whole range of Gospel song is the famous rescue hymn, "Throw Out the Life-Line," which was composed by the preacher-evangelist Edward S. Ufford. He is a native of Newark, N. J., where he was born in 1851. For many years his father was a chorister in the city churches there, and from him his son inherited musical tastes. The young lad, while living in Stratford, Conn., grew wayward, and, at the age of nineteen, gave himself up to dissipation. At twenty-one, however, after he had attended a dance one night, where he had assisted at the piano, he went home to the old house where his grandmother kept the lamp burning for his return, and threw himself in bed. But it was not to sleep.

Next day a horror of darkness seemed to overspread his soul. Two weeks of mental agony passed. He was seized with conviction of sin. At last Joseph Vinton, the evangelist, led him to the foot of the Cross, where he lost his burden and went on his way rejoicing. A new world was now open to the young convert. He was filled with the desire to work for Christ. He held meetings in an unused clubhouse down by the wharf at the Housatonic River. With the aid of a few singers and exhorters, the first meeting proved a success.

A "Life-Line Sermon"

Mr. Ufford went to Lewiston, Me., where he took a course in theological study. He was called to the East Auburn Baptist Church and ordained there in 1879, in that his first pastorate. He removed to Massachusetts in 1882, settling at Canton, then in Denham, and afterwards in Hingham. It was while settled at the rural hamlet of West Dedham, thirteen miles out of Boston, that the celebrated hymn, "Throw Out the Life-Line," was composed. Mr. Ufford had been preaching to his usual morning congregation of about one hundred. He was aiding a Boston pastor in revival work, in which the phrase "Throw the line" occurred. Later, while he was at Nantasket Beach, the whole idea burst upon him, as if by a revelation. Returning home, he began to write the hymn, seemingly as if some other help than his own was directing him:

Throw out the life-line across the dark wave,
There is a brother whom some one should save;
Somebody's brother, oh, who then will dare
To rescue this lost one, his peril to share?

The other verses followed, slightly changed now, and when completed, the writer sat down to his instrument and began to compose a melody to suit them. It is a singular fact that without the slightest use of music-paper or mental effort, the present air as it is sung to-day came to him, which, after singing over a few times, was then recorded for future use. The spiritual results of this famous song will not be known until all the sheaves are gathered home.

Rev. Edward S. Ufford

Mr. Ufford is now well advanced in years, but he is still laboring in the Gospel field, winning souls as an evangelist. He has preached throughout a large part of this country and has traveled in other lands and told the Gospel story by word and song to hundreds of audiences. He now writes to the editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD stating that after eight years of continuous travel and work he desires to devote the remainder of his life to active effort among a class of people whom he might reach by the aid of a "Life-Line Church." He has purchased land in the seaport of Rockland, Me., where he is preparing to build a church in the vicinity of the busy shipyards, which will be easy of access to sailors and sea captains, etc. He proposes to have the pulpit made in the form of a small boat, behind which there will be a wall painting depicting a storm at sea. From this unique pulpit the evangelist will throw out the Gospel life-line to sinking souls, as long as he has strength to stand and to speak.

There may be among the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some who would be glad to have a share in this soul-winning enterprise. Any contributions sent to this journal will be forwarded to him to assist in erecting the "Life-Line Church."

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York.

Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Mr. Taft and the Law

WILLIAM HOWARD TAFT, the President-elect, is now receiving congratulations from political friends all over the country. To this we can add the hearty good-will of the American people as a whole, and their best wishes for a successful administration.

In his first public address after the election, Mr. Taft sounds the keynote of the incoming administration. Speaking at Cincinnati, he said:

The laws will be enforced. Every business man who is obeying the law may go ahead with all the energy in his possession; every enterprise which is within the statutes may proceed without fear of interference from the administration, when acting legally; but all interests within the jurisdiction of the Federal government may expect a rigid enforcement of the laws against dishonest methods. Men who conduct legitimate business may understand that the government is back of them, and that they will not be prevented from enjoying fair profits. It is a question of clear understanding with reference to the law. Those who do not conduct their business within the law will get their just deserts.

The time was propitious for Mr. Taft to announce his adherence to the principle of legal equality for all. In many different ways, he has shown himself capable of conducting great enterprises to a successful issue. He will shortly undertake the far greater task of administering the affairs of a nation of 80,000,000, who will look to him in the confident expectation that he will be President not of a part, or of a class, but of the whole American people. Great courage, added to a wise and generous discretion in interpreting the laws; and the strength to resist the tremendous pressure of undue influence—these are among the qualities that mark the ideal President. Such a man stands for the whole people.

Mr. Taft will take up his official duties with the inspiring assurance that he has the cordial support of the entire country. He has a most enviable opportunity, not only to serve the nation acceptably, but to win for himself an enduring name as the People's President. He will make mistakes, as all men do at times; but if he sticks to his declaration to enforce the laws impartially, and to hold the people's interests as paramount, he will not fail of that universal appreciation which is due to him who serves his country well.

Overdoing Athletics

FROM several readers in different parts of the country THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has received reports of accidents incurred in football. In a few cases, death had resulted more or less directly from injuries received in the game. Interest in the physical development of the American schoolboy has progressed rapidly in the last twenty years, as well as a healthy desire on the part of students to indulge in athletic contests. In this particular game, however, the chances for rough play are so numerous as to defeat the purpose for which such sports have been introduced into our schools. The game of football is the most violent indulged in at the present time, and the rules should be so modified as to prevent the dangerous clashes that now occur in the excitement of the game. Some of the students who have been maimed for life were among the most promising in the schools they attended—young men, whose standing in their classes was of the highest and who had careers of great promise before them. Probably many of the accidents recorded would not have occurred, if all school sports were as much under the control of the school faculties as any of the educational classes. If athletics have been accepted as part of the education of our American boys, they should be under the supervision of some member of the school faculty, who should attend all games in which the students are allowed to take part. Most of the young men injured this year belonged to institutions of the high school grade, where such supervision would be more feasible than where the men are of college age. In this way, students who showed an inclination to brutal play could be suspended, and manly and fair conduct in all games could be insisted on as a necessary qualification for all who wished to take part in them.

Most parents feel something should be done to stop the present brutal forms of playing. Of course, it has been much modified in recent years; but there is vast room for improvement. No one thinks of abolishing athletics; they have proved their value; but when they are made the main end of any school course, they defeat the very purpose for which they were introduced into American school life.

Mr. Roosevelt as an Editor

OUR esteemed contemporary, The Outlook, is to be congratulated on the addition to its staff of so distinguished an editorial contributor as Theodore Roosevelt, who, it is announced in the current issue, will assume his editorial duties on March 5 next, the day after he vacates the Presidential office. As a journal that is at once a moulder and leader of public opinion, The Outlook has done wisely to attach to itself the one man above all others who, for several years past, has been in the very forefront of the nation's life and progress, and whose strong individuality has counted for more, perhaps, than that of any other American since Lincoln, not even excepting Cleveland and McKinley.

Mr. Roosevelt is yet in the heyday of a very vigorous and useful life, and at the maximum of his activities, physical and intellectual. He has had a wide literary and political experience. His ardent temperament, mellowed and ripened by such a career as has fallen to the lot of few Americans of our day, is still sufficiently pronounced to impel him to carry forward successfully, with the concentrated zeal and vigor of a crusader, any project he may undertake. His entrance in the journalistic field means that he does not propose to be shelved, like so many ex-Presidents after retirement from official life. He cannot lie idle, and for him the otium cum dignitate of the superannuated statesman has no allurements. He will continue to be a leader, if not of a political party, yet of a large and influential following who have observed with approval his course in public affairs. He will be an advisory, patriotic and moral force, a powerful political and social personality, in a field which commands a wider audience than the statesman's forum or the Presidency, and with the great advantage of having fewer limitations than either.

Theodore Roosevelt, as an editor, will be assured of a most cordial reception by the American public, who, wholly aside from all other considerations, have the warmest admiration and respect for his great talents, his incorruptibility, his rare courage and his high ideals.

A Congratulatory Message

NEW YORK, November 3, 1908.

Hon. Wm. H. Taft, President-Elect, Cincinnati, O.:
Representing the largest Christian constituency in America, I heartily congratulate you on the magnificent and well-deserved success of your candidacy for the Presidency. May divine guidance direct your administration so that you may acquit yourself of the great responsibilities entrusted to your care in a manner that shall redound to the honor and glory of God and of our country, as also to the man providentially called to the highest honor its people can bestow.

LOUIS KLOPSCH,

Editor THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE ANSWER

CINCINNATI, O., November 6.

Dr. Louis Klopsch,

Editor CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York:

I greatly appreciate your cordial message of congratulation and thank you for it.

W. H. TAFT.

Young America

IF THE newspapers are to be trusted Young America has recently been asserting itself in a fashion that should give Middle-aged America and Elderly America food for thought. The other day, in a Western town, the president of a certain college, with the concurrence of the faculty, suspended a number of young men for hazing. His action was no doubt prompted by a real desire for the good of the college and the ultimate good of the offenders. What does the entire college from freshman class to senior do but show itself utterly absurd by going a strike. The issue, we are told, was fairly placed before the faculty. "Restore the suspended student and we will go on with our work. Refuse to restore them and we will attend no classes and go on with no work." How the matter was adjusted we do not know. Let us hope that the faculty stood firm, and that the folly and recklessness of the body of young men were rebuked by their parents and guardians. These sporadic tokens of a spirit of rebellion necessitate a much greater care in the average household to bring children up in old-fashioned obedience and deference. It will be better for America whatever its age when experience and authority retain their seats, and immaturity is left for a while in the period of pupillage where it knows restraint and yields to authority.

THE NATIONAL HEARTHSTONE

DEAR as is the Capitol to every patriotic American, the casual visitor looks upon it with a sort of profound awe, but the White House makes a warmer appeal to one and all—the White House, rich in its priceless associations and dear for a thousand sacred memories of its distinguished tenants—the loves and laughter, tears and heartaches that moulded their daily lives. The White House is the National Hearthstone, the most hospitable building in the country; its joys are the joys of the people, its sorrows the sorrows of the nation; within its historic walls all stand equal, save on State occasions (when the etiquette of official precedence prevails). Its guests have numbered men and women of royal birth and of low degree, from the Prince of Wales to the cowboy friend of President Roosevelt.

As we read The Inside Story of the White House our eyes are now dazzled with the brilliancy of State functions and again dimmed by an unexpected bit of pathos as, pushing aside the curtain of pomp and ceremony, we enter the private lives of the great men and good women who have, each for a brief period, made the stately White House their home.

For the Presidential Year

Could there be a more timely book for the presidential year—a book more alive with deep human interest for every true American—than The Inside Story of the White House?

Many full-page illustrations add to the beauty and charm of its 500 generous pages. The volume is handsomely bound in an exceptionally rich, olive-green, silk-finished art cloth, and stamped back and side with genuine gold leaf that will never tarnish.

Sent charges prepaid, together with our incomparable Art Gallery De Luxe and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one whole year, on receipt of only $2.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, November 18, 1908

	PAGE
John Milton Dictating Paradise Lost	Cover
OUR MAIL-BAG	906
Berlin's Greeting to Princess Alexandra (Illustrated)	906
Deadly Floods in India (Illustrated)	907, 909
The Results of Belief. Sermon	908, 909
By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.
Monarchs in the Making (Portraits)	910
A Novel Idea for Prayer-Meetings (Illustrated)	910
A New Missionary Society President (Portrait)	910
The Tercentenary of Milton (Illustrated)	911
The Song that Is Building a Church (Illustrated)	911
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	912
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER	913
Little Singers in the White House (Illustrated)	914
Good Causes Helped	914
By the Glowing Fireside (Illustrated)	915
By Margaret E. Sangster
"Baltimore" (Illustrated)	916, 917
Serial. By Merritt Crawford
A Young Canadian Evangelist (Portrait)	917
The First Student Bible Conference	917
Nations Destroyed by Drink	918, 919
World's Temperance Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts	920
Our Foreign Immigration. Christian Endeavor Topic	920
Mockery of Strong Drink. Epworth League Topic	920
Esperanto Lesson No. 23	921
Good Night! Music	922
The Drunkard's Hope. By Mrs. M. Baxter	922

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

THE PUBLIC PROCLAMATION OF FERDINAND AS "CZAR OF BULGARIA," AT TIRNOVA

The New Czar of the Bulgars

ON OCTOBER 5, Prince Ferdinand of Bulgaria proclaimed the independence of his nation from the rule of Turkey, and was publicly proclaimed "Czar of Bulgaria," at Tirnova, first in the old "Church of the Forty Martyrs," and then on the Hissar, on the site of the ancient castle which for two hundred years was the residence of the Bulgarian Czars.

When Alexander of Bulgaria was dethroned twenty years ago, a committee of Bulgarian statesmen went to Vienna in search of a suitable prince to succeed him. They were seated at a table in a garden café in Vienna when an Austrian friend of the committee pointed to a young officer in a white tunic and the gold-laced képi of the Austrian Hussars who was sitting at a table near by. "There is just the man you want," he said. "He is Ferdinand of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha, the grandson of Louis Philippe of France and a cousin of every crowned head of Europe, and he is moreover a man of great wealth." The committee conferred with the prime minister of Austria, and the next morning telegraphed to Stambuloff at Sofia, and within twenty-four hours had offered the throne of their country to the young prince, only twenty-five years of age. This is the prince who, the other day, threw off the Turkish yoke and proclaimed himself Ferdinand I., Czar of the Bulgars. The title he assumed seems to be very ambitious; yet, five centuries before Russia had a czar, the ruler of Bulgaria was called czar.

In many qualities Ferdinand suffers by comparison with some of the kings of the neighboring Balkan States. Ferdinand does not lack ability nor scientific or literary taste and culture; but he is recklessly extravagant in money, fond of pomp and show, putting on the airs and equipages of great nations. His marriage expenses cost the nation half a million dollars. Those who are closest to him do not think that he has the sterling qualities of steadiness in friendship or reliability in administration that some of his brother rulers have; but in spite of his weaknesses and trivialities, he is the most commanding figure in the Balkans, and is now ruler of a State containing four millions of people, and can put into the field 400,000 trained warriors. It is likely that his power will increase and that other States will be joined with him under his rule; and it may be possible that he may yet be the czar of a much wider territory than the one over which he now rules, for the Turks sooner or later must leave Europe, and some other hand than that of the Sultan will have to rule the territory which he vacates.

And they made him king, and anointed him; and they clapped their hands and said, God save the king! (II. Kings 11:12.)

The Mayflower a Derelict

It has not been many years since the Mayflower was the pride of the nation for having defended America's cup in the world's races. She dropped out of competition with her rivals and became largely a creature of the past. She was chartered by a party of Yale and Harvard students on September 19 last, and left Gravesend Bay on a treasure-hunting expedition. It is reported that they were in search of some gold that was said to have been submerged. A few days after sailing, the yacht was struck by a hurricane and was abandoned by the men and left to drift, a menace to navigation. She was reported as a derelict by Captain Jacobson, of the Norwegian steamship Vincenzo di Giorgi, which reached her dock in the East River a few days ago. The fact that the Norwegian steamer was under contract to land its cargo of bananas without delay prevented Captain Jacobson from taking the old cup defender in tow. The Mayflower was sighted on October 15, about 180 miles southeast of Cape Hatteras, and was drifting toward the south, in the direction of the zone known to sailors as the "doldrums."

The sad fate of the Mayflower has its illustration in many pathetic stories of human life. There have been many fine characters who have won in the races of life, who have excited the admiration of others and illustrated splendid qualities themselves, who have been caught by the storms and carried out, aimless and useless, on the sea of life, pitiable derelicts, of no use to themselves and of gravest danger to others. The Holy Book constantly warns those of strictest integrity and strongest faith against the dangers of life's temptations, reminding them that even those that preach the truth to others may themselves become castaways.

But I keep under my body, and bring it unto subjection; lest that by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway. (I. Cor. 9:27.)

Drowned in Wine

There was a wine grower on the Pacific slope who had a wine factory on his premises. His wife, adorned in richest apparel and bespangled with jewels, went down to the winery to visit a little while with her husband. She stepped up on the edge of a large wine vat, and either the fumes stupefied her or her foot slipped and she fell into the liquid and was drowned. Such a fate, horrible as it was, is only a type of the terrific destruction of so many in our land by strong drink. There are many in the higher circles of society, with costly raiment and brilliant jewels and gorgeous equipages, who are overcome by the fumes and whose feet trip and they fall into the wine vat and are drowned. There are many homes of wealth and luxury that are not polluted by intemperance; yet the dining-rooms of many palaces, the fine restaurants in many cities, and even the reception-rooms of the department stores, attest the fact that there are many women who are given to much wine. It is bad enough for men to be subjects of strong drink; but it is a pity and a shame for women, the fountain of life and virtue in our land, to drown themselves in the vat of wine.

Woe unto them that rise up early in the morning, that they may follow strong drink; that continue until night, till wine inflame them! (Isa. 5:11.)

Eccentric Klondike Millionaire

After fifteen years' absence, during which time he had been mourned for dead, Edward McAdams returned to Philadelphia from the Klondike, wealthy and determined to share his money with others. The two children of the miner's brother John are wealthier by $2,000 each by the uncle's visit. To his brother's wife he gave a handsome gold cross made of many bits of gold melted and shaped into one piece, valued at $1,400. He also gave her $5,000 in one-hundred-dollar bills. He then hunted his brother Barney and duplicated his generosity to his other brother's family. One boy was given $50 to buy a postal card, and at one little dry-goods store he bought two five-cent handkerchiefs for which he paid $20. He took his brother John, who is a bartender, down to the Normandie, a fashionable apartment house in Philadelphia, and offered to buy it for him. The brother balked at it and McAdams bought him a $40,000 saloon instead.

This man was kind-hearted and generous with his relatives and friends and the public in general. The money for the saloon was worse than wasted. It was converted into an instrument of untold destruction, but the intention of the man was to help his brother. In most of the other instances his benefactions were not unwisely dispensed, but the real lesson of this man's conduct is the pride of wealth and vulgar display of its possession. He has, only in a little ruder form, the same spirit which prompts the thousand needless vanities of wealth and the excessive and wicked display of the same. Those who have wealth have a perfect right to have every comfort and every luxury; but when the purse-proud spirit prompts the possessor of a fortune to loud exhibitions of reckless expenditure an injustice is done to those who have a harder lot in life and are none too patient under social inequalities. But they do themselves the greatest injury by throwing away, in an ostentatious manner, money which could be put to such good account for the material, moral and spiritual welfare of mankind.

They that trust in their wealth, and boast themselves in the multitude of their riches; none of them can by any means redeem his brother. (Ps. 49:6, 7.)

Roosevelt on His Hunting Trip

President Roosevelt has arranged definitely his plans for his hunting trip for great game and will leave the middle of next March for Alexandria, Egypt, whence he will sail through the Suez Canal and the Red Sea to Mombasa, the chief coast town of British East Africa. He will begin his hunting trip about 250 miles out from this place, along the line of the railroad which runs 650 miles into the interior. He will work his way in the general direction of Lake Victoria Nyanza and thence into the great plateau region of Uganda, where large game is said to be abundant. He will strike the headwaters of the Nile about Lake Albert Nyanza, which he will follow northward to Khartoum, where Mrs. Roosevelt and friends will probably be waiting for him.

President Roosevelt was officially offered the freedom of the East Africa British hunting-grounds, but declined the offer, stating that he only desired the attentions of a private citizen. On this trip mapped out, the wild animals which he will hunt will include lions, elephants, buffalo, baboons, white-tailed gnus, wart-hogs, ostriches, etc. He expects to have his greatest sport north of Lake Victoria Nyanza and on the Uganda plateau. The President, beside hunting big game, will study the geography of the country, the flowers, rocks and birds, and the social and religious conditions of the territory. It is the hope of his many friends throughout the world, that he will escape disease and accident, and return, with a wealth of information, to his native land.

He began to be a mighty one in the earth. He was a mighty hunter before the Lord. (Gen. 10:8, 9.)

Little Singers in the White House

EIGHT pretty Chinese children were the leading attraction of the Convention of the Women's Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Episcopal Church, which recently opened in Philadelphia. Miss Carrie G. Davis, of the Chinese Rescue Home of San Francisco, brought the interesting children with her in illustration of the work that is being done in rescuing little Orientals from the evils of San Francisco's Chinatown.

The little Chinese divided interest with two Eskimo girls, who, when in their native land, are residents of the Jessie Lee Home, on the Unalaska Islands. These Eskimo girls, Sophia Swenson, thirteen, and Ala Luma, nine, narrowly escaped missing the convention owing to the perils of the long trip. The journey from Alaska to Seattle is particularly dangerous at this time of year, and before the captain of the W. S. Babcock, the whaler in which they made the trip, would consent to their coming on board, they were required to sign articles as part of the crew.

In making the trip, it was necessary for the vessel to work its way through the numberless islands of the Aleutian archipelago. The most thrilling part of the trip occurred when the Babcock reached the Alaskan Pass, on the final stage of the journey. It was found that a strong tide, flowing from the rocky coast on one side to the reef on the other, had changed the pass, which is dangerous under ordinary circumstances, into a veritable whirlpool. A dense fog increased the difficulties of navigation. Just when it was thought that the danger was past, the ship went heavily aground on a sunken reef.

With the vessel pounding and the crew at the davits ready to lower the lifeboats, Miss Mabel Benedict, who had the little Eskimo girls in charge, called upon the captain and crew to pray with her for the safety of the ship. Hardly had the "Amen" been said when the ship swung clear, the fog lifted and the danger passed.

The Chinese children were the life of the convention. They are bright-eyed, intelligent youngsters, and nothing that occurs around them fails to arouse their active interest. One clever little Oriental was so much interested in the picture-taking that he asked to be allowed to make a photograph of one of the little girls, which was granted, to his great delight.

P. JONES.

Recently the children were taken to Washington and brought to the White House, where the President's family gave them a cordial welcome. The whole group of eight children sang the national hymn, "America," for Mr. and Mrs. Roosevelt, and sang it so well that they were rewarded with thanks and smiles and each little Celestial received a photograph of the White House, signed with the President's own hand. Lum Wong, the oldest boy, wielded the baton while they sang, and the others kept time in unison. They were greatly amused with their visit and kept up an incessant chatter of small talk.

Answered Prayers

M. S., Massachusetts. "I wish to thank God for many answered prayers and one particular one recently."

A. S., Boston, Mass. "I feel it my duty to acknowledge a direct answer to prayer. I hope many others will be encouraged."

Mrs. C. F., California. "I promised God if he would give me strength and wisdom to overcome an evil for which I have been praying for years I would acknowledge it to your paper. The answer came."

Mrs. C. B., Alabama. "God has brought my husband back to health and strength when he was so ill no power on earth could save him. Truly it seemed a miracle, and I want to praise God for it."

A. B., New York. "I promised our heavenly Father that if he would answer my prayer and spare my mother's life, I would acknowledge it in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. He answered my prayer."

Two Eskimo Maids

Wee Orientals at Play

GOOD CAUSES HELPED

The following sums have been contributed by our readers for the support of the worthy causes mentioned below:

Armenia		Foreign Missions
Mrs. E. F. Kuno...	2.00	A. Friend, Van Wert, Ohio...	5.00
Mrs. A. M. Whitehead...	3.00	Watertown, N. Y.	5.00
Ventura, Cal.	3.00	A. Lelandite, Leland, Ill.	1.00
Armenia Orphanage		W. W. H. North	1.00
A. Friend, Hickman, Neb.	2.50	Mrs. M. Bayne	1.00
Am. Ch. Library, Berlin		B. H. Rolph	1.50
Amy F. Blume	3.00	Mrs. Eliza A. Craig	.50
		Mc & Mrs. F. P. Lesing	2.50
Bethesda Home		(FOR AFRICA)
Miss Ida & Augusta Lawrence	10.00	M. J. Wiley	4.50
Hattie M. Twiss	10.00	(FOR BISHOP DASHFORD)
		Alma Price	3.00
Blind Babies' Home		(FOR REV. A. P. BARRETT)
Unamed, Wash.	1.00	Xenia, Ohio	1.00
La. H. Bott	1.00	(FOR CHINA)
Babies Friend, Goshen, N. Y.	5.00	Bostie, N. C.	1.00
Mrs. L. H. Emmett	1.00	Buffalo, Wyo.	1.00
P. N. Kraybill	3.00	M. J. Wiley	4.50
Mrs. M. A. Averitt	1.00	Mrs. E. Steward	2.00
Mrs. A. W. Jenks	1.00	Mrs. H. M. Andrews	1.00
Mrs. A. Waddington	1.00	(FOR INDIA)
H. Bott	4.00	Mrs. E. E. M. Allen	4.50
Julia R. Shorey	1.00	(FOR REV. C. SCHMIDT)
Mr. & Mrs. F. P. Lesing	2.50	Xenia, Ohio	1.00
H. Farnsworth	1.00	C. L. S. Cincinnati, Ohio	2.00
Child Labor in New York		(FOR DR. F. E. PETER)
F. C. Threlfall	2.00	Unamed, Monroe, La.	5.00
Door of Hope		Alma Reice	3.00
Mrs. A. W. Jenks	1.00	H. N. Copola, Pa.	2.00
Cremore Mission		FOR EMILY S. HARTWELL
A. Mottaz	5.00	Minnie M. Meiner	30.00
China Inland Mission		Mrs. C. S. Watson	2.00
L. Emrich family	25.00	J. Y. Bettys	10.00
Dr. W. T. Grenfell		Beacon Light, Troy, N. Y.	5.00
Augusta Perkins	1.00	John A. Parker	20.00
A. A. E. Rochester, N. H.	5.00	William Kraemer	2.00
Interested, Carthage, Ill.	5.00	Samuel Jones	10.00
Christian Mission to Jews		Mrs. H. Gundersen	3.00
Hancock, Md.	1.00	A. Friend of Missions, Meshoppen, Pa.	5.00
Daisy Field's Home for Crippled Children		(FOR W. M. BUCK)
In memory of daughter, Hazleton, Pa.	5.00	Furlow Anderson	2.50
Dr. Dickie, Educate Girl		(FOR KOREA)
Harriette S. Campbell	2.00	Xenia, Ohio	1.00
Miss Clara Jacobson	1.00	(FOR CHINA PRESBYTERIAN MISSION)
M. A. Brinton	1.00	H. Farnsworth	1.00
Mary Van de Griff	.50	H. Farnsworth	1.00
Mrs. P. C. Hosen	2.00	(FOR SOUTH AMERICA)
Mrs. R. Worcester	2.00	Mrs. S. Smyser	20.00
John M. Bender	1.50	(FOR MR. WOODHOUSE)
Mrs. E. A. Milligan	4.00	Xenia, Ohio	2.00
Miss Ida & Augusta Lawrence	5.00	(MISS CHARLOTTE ELY)
Naples, Me.	1.00	Xenia, Ohio	1.00
Mrs. M. C. Madison	2.00	(FOR MRS. J. R. DENTEN)
Jane G. Walker	5.00	Miss Alma Reice	3.00
A. Friend, Grafton, Ill.	10.00	Mrs. L. H. Emmett	1.00
E. W. Lester	2.00	Sam'l Clelland & wife	5.00
Mrs. L. E. Carpenter	2.50	A. Van Selver	1.00
Mrs. Maggie Yule	1.00	M. K. N. Y. City, N. Y.	1.00
M. J. Wiley	8.00	Honny West	1.00
Miss F. Shiedler	1.00	Xenia, Ohio	1.00
Mrs. S. E. McElree	1.00	Mr. & Mrs. L. C. Ely	1.00
Mrs. C. Thompson	2.00	(FOR W. P. ELWOOD)
Gilbert Robertson Home		Miss M. F. W. & Miss F. W.	350.00
Mrs. E. A. Cyrus	10.00	(FOR CHAS. E. HURLBUT EAST AFRICA)
Mrs. R. B. Parker	10.00	Xenia, Ohio	1.00
Mrs. Booth's Prison Fund		(FOR T. J. BACH)
Ethel Feil	1.00	Beacon Light, Troy, N. Y.	5.00
Miss S. E. McElree	1.00	Alcide Reichenbach	1.00
Home Missions		One of the family, Lesueur, Center, Minn.	1.00
Reeds, Mo.	2.00	Xenia, Ohio	1.00
A. Lelandite, Leland, Ill.	1.00	George Hard	15.00
Aug. H. Merchant	4.80	(FOR CHINA SCHOOLS)
Chas. Catlin	5.00	A. Mottaz	5.00
Internat. Reform Bureau		(FOR DR. J. G. PATON)
F. C. Threlfall	2.00	Wm. J. Taylor	5.00
Invalid Children's Home		Dr. E. T. Sanford
W. W. H.	1.00	W. P. Elkins	1.10
Mrs. A. W. Jenks	1.00	The Gospel Settlement
Unamed, Wash.	1.00	Monroe Small	1.00
Pundita Ramabai		C. W. Tinker	10.00
N. E. Barrett	10.00	FOR 2 POOREST CHILDREN
F. Betts	5.00	Mrs. Grace Miller	2.00
Mrs. J. M. Lane	8.00
G. L. Cook	15.00
L. M. Hubbard	5.00

Lepers in India		India Famine
L. E. S. Indianapolis, Ind.	2.00	Mrs. B. B. Liles	1.00
Esther W. Wall	2.00	M. S. Mendelson	1.00
Mrs. R. J. Caskey	3.00	—, New Brighton, S. I.	1.00
—, Powell, Pa.	2.00	I. H. N. Baldwin	1.00
Laura Johnson	2.50	Kan. Geo. P. Ahlf	1.00
Leper Colony Stove		—, New Brighton, S. I.	1.00
Miss M. T. Rogers	1.00	Jane Bailey	1.00
Mrs. Ada S. Havelly	.50	I. H. N. Platts	1.00
A. Friend, Euclid, Pa.	1.00	month, Neb.	2.00
Friend W. Los Angeles, Cal.	5.00	W. R. Southern Alheta, Can.	1.00
A. Friend, Kalama-zoo, Mich.	.50	Edward D. Warner	1.00
H. A. McQuiston	1.00	A. Mottaz	1.00
A. Friend, Winter-set, Iowa	1.00	In Jesus Name	1.00
A. Subr. Tabus, L. o. v. e, Brookville, Pa.	2.00	Minong, Wis.	1.00
Miss M. E. Carson	.50	A. Friend, Grafton, Ill.	1.00
Lepers, Dutch Guiana		—, N. Brighton, S. I.	1.00
A. Friend, Hickman, Neb.	5.00	W. C. T. U. Dickinson Centre, N. Y.	1.00
A. Friend, K. E. Batavia, N. Y.	2.00	Mrs. E. F. Kuno	1.00
Missionary Substitute		A. Friend, Hickman, Neb.	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. R. G. Prindle	50.00	Rev. M. Borge	1.00
Mrs. M. M. Tafford	22.50	James Eaton	1.00
Rev. Zed H. Copp & family	12.50	Mrs. H. C. Carmichael	1.00
Mr. & Mrs. E. C. Dodson	10.10	Rev. M. Borge	1.00
Mrs. J. B. MacDon-ald	30.00	In Memory of Mother, Mrs. A. L. Bryant	2.00
Nathan Thompson	55.00	Subr. Saunemin, Ill.	1.00
Beatrice Baker	52.00	Mr. & Mrs. J. P. Judson	5.00
M. M. Smith	25.00	Mrs. E. E. W. Allen	4.00
E. C. Dodson & wife	10.00	(FOR BENJ. ATKINS)
Mrs. W. H. Simmons	7.50	Rev. M. Borge	.215
Anna C. Scholley	5.00	Rev. B. M. Raffes	.12
E. T. Pugh	25.00	—, aeth. hachie, Tex.	1.00
Lulu W. Kanoy	10.00	Mrs. S. Stickney	.5
Zed & Copp & fam-ily	12.50	(MR. F. HAHN)
H. Correll	10.00	H. Kindermann	10.00
Birthday Mission		(REV. F. BENJAMIN)
Band, 1st Mennonite S. Sch. Bluffton, Ohio	21.00	Friends	20.00
Miss Lillian Collins	15.00	Any Good Cause
Mr. & Mrs. J. Douris	25.00	Mrs. W. H. Richards	2.00
Okayama Orphanage		Mrs. W. Cummings	1.00
Miss F. L. Carter	10.00	Mary O. Chandler	1.00
W. Concord Union Ch. S. Sch. Concord, Mass.	5.00	A. C. H. reader	1.00
Mrs. H. A. Jugham	5.00	Delphos, Kan.	2.00
Chapt. "A" of the P. E. O. Soc. High-land, N. Y.	10.00	Margaret S. Barbour	1.00
Madge Spangler	3.00	Mr. E. A. Stacey	1.00
Mrs. Wm. McCarthy	10.00	Mrs. W. C. Beck	1.00
Soc. of Soul-Winners		Mrs. F. Monroe	6.00
F. P. Frisbee	5.00	John Spence	8.00
K. E. Drummond	1.00	Mrs. Ida Andrews	1.00
Watts De Peyster Home		A. Friend, Moro	1.00
T. E. Webb, Jr.	2.00	E. A. Hardy	2.00
L. Emrich family	10.00	Unamed, Monroe, La.	5.00
Prohibition in Oklahoma		La. G. E. March	5.00
Mrs. L. C. Nicholas	10.00	Mrs. A. G. Butler	1.00
Mrs. L. C. Nicholas	10.00	Mrs. S. G. Jenkins	1.00
Mrs. L. C. Nicholas	10.00	X. Madison, Md.	1.00
Lepers' Children's Home		Minnie S. Smith	1.00
Mrs. E. McElree	1.00	Charles R. Swan	1.00
Relief Work Among Poor		Charlotte E. Weiss	1.00
Mrs. E. E. Cummings	1.00	Rev. F. Jansen
Mary E. Moffitt	.35	Grace S. Dempster	10.00
For Dr. Fox		C. G. Kaufman	1.00
Mrs. G. B. Temple	3.00	Geo. B. Ferguson	1.00
Mr. DeMar	5.00	A. Friend, Kalama-zoo, Mich.	1.00
Theo. T. Crane	10.00	Sorena Turner	3.00
Robert H. Bender		Sam Mathews	1.00
—, Hacketts-town, N. J.	2.00	A. Friend, Winter-set, Iowa	1.00
C. E. Weimer	10.00	John A. Parker	2.00
Xenia, Ohio	1.00	Mrs. E. K. Hawes	2.00
Steel Orphanage		Mary W. Jones	1.00
Mrs. R. B. Parker	10.00	Mrs. C. W. Bylmer	2.00
Mr. DeMar	5.00	Mrs. S. E. McElree	1.00
Theo. T. Crane	10.00	Unamed, Monroe, La.	3.00
I. Emrich & family	15.00	Mrs. G. H. Delp	1.00
Salvation Army		Miss Mabel Hull	1.00
Amy F. Blume	3.00	E. Swanzy, N. H.	7.00
Spanish-American Gospel Fund		Mrs. A. M. Durham	1.00
D. C. Churchman	5.00	—, Powell, Pa.	2.00
Sunday Morning Break-fast Assn. Phila.		Horace Martin	1.00
Theo. T. Crane	10.00	Mrs. H. Robinson	1.00
The White Door		Miss H. R. Fickes	5.00
Mrs. R. B. Parker	10.00	Mr. & Mrs. Samuel Clelland	5.00
L. Emrich & family	15.00	—, Arnold	1.00
Mrs. A. W. Jenks	1.00	F. A. Curtis	5.00
Jerry McAuley Mission		Mrs. M. B. Pittsburg	1.00
—, Ventura, Cal.	2.00	John Taylor	2.00
Sarah Jenkins	2.00	J. Y. Bettys	5.00
		Julia R. Shorey	7.00
		A. reader of C. H.	1.00
		Agosta, Ohio	1.00
		A. Friend, Los Angeles, Cal.	1.00
		John Beadle	1.25
		I. C. Bauschbach	5.00
		John H. Nussbaum	5.00
		L. N. Williamson	5.00
		Mrs. S. M. Boothby	10.00
		W. W. Young	2.50
		—, Canute Kau	1.00
		—, Parkville, Mo.	1.00
		F. A. Griffith	10.00
		L. D. Rutty	5.00
		I. H. N. Copola, Pa.	2.00
		Mrs. R. A. Allen	2.50
		E. D. Howell	1.00
		Samuel Berry	2.00
		Lucey B. DeMeritt	2.00
		R. T. Williams	1.00
		Mrs. L. C. Nicholas	2.00
		I. P. Miller	1.00
		Mrs. Frank Griffithing	5.00
		Montgomery Sisters	10.00
		A. J. Spencer	1.00
		C. R. Babbitt	5.00
		Mrs. J. M. Tenney	10.00
		—, Xenia, Ohio	1.00
		C. V. Kintner	2.00

BY THE GLOWING FIRESIDE

Two Peeps at Home Life

OPENING the morning mail, two peeps were given me into two households, each of which may be taken as a specimen of many. The first letter, from a young woman, revealed a sweet picture of domestic comfort and peace. This household consisted of father, mother, stepmother, daughter and grandmother. The daughter was nearly grown when the second mother took the helm. The grandmother, though past life's meridian, was bright and sympathetic, was left out of nothing, and was eagerly interested in all that went on around her.

The circle of kindred surrounding this pleasant group was composed of diverse elements, but no matter how often they visited and intermingled in social functions there was complete harmony. The daughter wondered a little whether she was right in being so contented with her state in life, and had at times a question as to the propriety of settling down so happily in the serene atmosphere around her. Every one seemed to need her, father and mother and grandmother, and her days were slipping on in sweetness and calm, so that she had no wish or thought about any change, no restlessness in the present and no forebodings for the future. It was the ideal life of a daughter at home, the fairer that it included old age and portrayed the possibilities that sometimes fall into the usually uncomfortable relation of stepmother and stepdaughter. So much for this peep.

Glimpse number two was given into a home where father and brothers were dependent for their daily comforts on the good housekeeping and unselfish care of an unmarried daughter. The place of the daughter at home, who has gone beyond her twenties into the early thirties, is often a trying one.

This girl had lost her mother and had for ten years done everything in the home life that she possibly could to fill her mother's vacant place. She had baked, washed, ironed, made and mended, had done without youthful friends in the absorbing routine of her life, and was not so well off as a general servant, because she received no wages and little more than her board and lodging. Her father seemed never to know that she needed money, and disliked extremely to let her have anything to spend for clothing. She was naturally unhappy, and the years were stretching away before her, dreary and desert-like, when a gleam of relief appeared. A man whom she had known and highly esteemed as a neighbor and friend, asked her to marry him. She felt that she could be happy as his wife. Her environment had grown nearly insupportable. A married sister offered to come home with her husband and assume the care of her father and the household burdens. The situation would thus be relieved, and the spinster daughter set free to enter on her new happiness. Here the father interposed, refusing the proffered aid of his elder daughter and declining to allow the younger one to leave him. What was she to do? The peep into the second home was as gloomy as the peep into the first was rose-colored.

An immense amount of injustice is done by selfish people who see no point of view but their own. Parents apparently forget at times that a woman of thirty has ceased to be a child, and that she has a right to a separate life of her own and to her own individuality. Clearly, in the second instance, the daughter would be justified in marrying, leaving to her father and brothers the management of their housekeeping in any way they might find convenient.

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—A POSITION AS COMPANION. This position is not easy, as many suppose, but bristles with difficulty. It is best procured by advertising, by the medium of a business woman's exchange, or by the recommendation of friends.

An Extra Plate

IS old-fashioned hospitality passing away? Are we less ready than we should be to give a welcome to friends and neighbors, to clasp hands with the unexpected guest and to make room at the table just as it happens to be for some one who chances in at meal-time? Suppose we interrogate ourselves as to our feeling in the matter. Is it a trouble to us to entertain friends in a simple, homely manner? Do we count the cost not so much to the purse as to the time we must spare, or are we the least bit in the world afraid of the maid in the kitchen? This haughty personage frowns severely upon company. She permits her employers the privilege of an occasional luncheon or dinner, for which preparations are made, requiring expense and labor, and which is distinctly a function. But if John brings a friend home from the office without warning, or a cousin from the country takes it into her dear head to surprise her city relatives, or the children have a playmate who stays to supper, the kitchen incumbent shows her displeasure. Every employer, we hesitate to say mistress, the word being misapplied so often, knows perfectly the shade of coldness and aloofness that darkens Nora's brow when company comes, and she must put on an extra plate. That is, every employer knows this who has not herself settled the situation and made herself queen of her household. In a home where the spirit of the house is hospitable, the maid of all work soon learns that she must bend to the general rule, and, if the home atmosphere be what it should, she soon begins to reflect the spirit of the family. She, too, is glad when a friend comes, bringing with her a breezy reminder of the outside world, stimulating the children to their best behavior, and brightening up the father and mother by her cheery presence. To so arrange a simple menu that there may be enough for one more, to so set the table that an extra plate may be added without causing confusion, goes far toward keeping hospitable the spirit of the home.

We might, to our advantage, exercise an unobtrusive hospitality by inviting friends from time to time to dine or spend an evening with us without making an effort to give a formal dinner. Every matron has two or three dishes in which she excels. She might choose to have those, as a rule, on a Wednesday or Saturday evening, and, then taking turns, sometimes she might invite an old friend and his wife; again, her daughter might ask two or three girl-friends; her husband or her son, at another time, bringing home their particular chums, the understanding being that Wednesday or Saturday should be hospitality day. The bill of fare need be little varied. Two or three courses, well cooked and nicely served, with the sauce of a genial welcome and the cordial air of friendship, would make such days real festivals in family life.

The passing of the guest chamber has, we fear, become an accomplished fact in our crowded city life. Families live in straitened quarters, rents soar upward until people pay for space, air and light what seems like a king's ransom. To pay for four walls and a ceiling in a city apartment house is no small tax on a limited income. The guest chamber perhaps must go, but we need not give up the pleasure of an extra plate at the table, an extra cup and saucer, and the delight of entertaining one that we love.

Drawn by Richard C. Culter

CHILDHOOD'S TWILIGHT PRAYER

BY W. LIVINGSTON LARNED

THE little head bows at the bed,
Two little feet are side by side;
And mother strokes the baby head
That never fear nor woe betide.
All day two tiny shoes have gone
At random almost everywhere;
Their childhood happy paths upon
To lead at last to twilight prayer.

When mother's arms are fast about,
And "Mister Night" is on the stair,
When shadows gather and a doubt
Is brought by darkness everywhere,
The snow-white nightie comes to view
And bare feet twinkle in the glow.
It's "Tiss me, Mamma—hug me, too,"
And then the prayer that angels know.

Mayhap some dolly, shorn of hair
And muddled with a pastime's part,
Rests in a chubby hand so fair
It must have known all Nature's art.

These two—and Mother, in the dark
Pour forth their offering to Him
Whose love grants each eternal spark,
While tears make eyes, in closing, dim.

And "Now I lay me down to sleep,"
The baby lips form all the words,—
"I pray the Lord my soul to keep,"
Like twilight call of evening birds.
"If I should die before I wake,"—
All tremulous with eventide;
"I pray the Lord my soul to take."
And in His arms our babes abide.

Fond Motherhood knows of a joy
No other state could hope to feel;
It means that for each girl and boy
A double prayer the while they kneel.
And, through the casement of the Night,
God's spirit looks—and his the hand
That makes the whole still evening light,
The whole Creation Love's dear land.

"BALTIMORE"

A TALE OF METROPOLITAN LIFE

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

John Barkwell, though a member of a highly respected family, has fallen through drink and is leading the life of a homeless tramp. He is known as "Baltimore" to his associates. For the second time in two months he is brought before the same judge, who lets him have another chance, on "Baltimore" asserting that the world was against him. The judge sends him with a card to the head of the Bowery Mission. "Baltimore" promises the judge he will not drink, but finding a dime, he cannot resist and turns into a saloon. Baltimore goes to the Mission the next night as he felt he owed it to the judge. The text given out touches his heart. He goes to the after meeting. He rises: tells the pathetic story of his life, and the superintendent sees he is sincere, and takes him by the hand, assuring him he will be forgiven. The tramp says "He hopes to see his wife and children up there."

IV.

IN the months that followed that memorable evening at the Mission the transformation of "Baltimore"—John Barkwell, they called him now—was as remarkable as his reformation had been. From a disreputable, hoarse-voiced vagrant, he had become a quiet-mannered man, scrupulously neat in his personal habits, who rarely spoke to anyone unless first addressed. Few would have recognized in this courteous, thoughtful man the sodden outcast who had faced Judge D— less than half a year before. The bloated look had disappeared from his features, and little of their former congestion remained, but in their place had come deep wrinkles and dark hollows beneath the eyes. One may draw the nail, but the hole must remain.

It was his eyes that had changed most. No longer were they blood-shot, animal-like, apprehensive. Within them was an unutterable sadness; but they looked the world straight in the face, fearlessly, and without shame.

For a time the superintendent had been uneasy lest the craving for alcohol might sap "Baltimore's" resolution. Only too well he knew its terrible temptation to the weakened will power of one who had been so long accustomed to its excessive use. But the days had grown to weeks, and the weeks to months, yet he gave no sign of wavering in his determination, and unfalteringly remained steadfast to his new-found belief. The man's simple faith and the sincerity, as well as the wonderful example of his conversion, made him a factor in the life and work of the Mission, and did much to soften many a hardened heart.

Soon after he had entered upon his new life "Baltimore" had written to his mother, with whom he had not communicated in almost five years, and that good lady had showered the superintendent with expressions of her gratitude and begged her son to return home.

"I'm going home," he had one day confided to Mr. H—, his eyes shining in anticipation, "but not until my work here has progressed farther. Judge D— told me that he would cancel the balance of my probation if I wished to go now, but I told him I should stay until the end. It is part of the penance I must undergo," he added sadly, "for mother is all I have left now."

As the days and weeks went by, "going home" filled a large part of "Baltimore's" thoughts. Often, when talking with the judge or Mr. H—, the two friends in whom he confided his hopes and plans for the future, he would unconsciously lead the subject of their conversation around to his approaching visit to the old, familiar scenes he had loved long ago.

"When I come back," he told them, "I am going to take up the work among my old companions. I want to tell them of the blessed peace—the happiness—I have found."

By MERRITT CRAWFORD

So the time had passed and at last the week came when "Baltimore" was to pay his last visit to the judge. On the previous afternoon, Mr. H— had received a letter from the magistrate, saying that he, with his wife and daughter, would pay a visit to the Mission on that evening and that "Baltimore" need not report to him on the following day.

"For a long time," part of the letter read, "I have been promising my wife and daughter a visit to the Bowery Mission, so that they can meet you, and see for themselves the splendid work you are doing there. Not least of all, they are anxious to meet John Barkwell, as I have, of course, told them his story. When he reported to me last week, I was more impressed than ever by his wonderful improvement."

"Who, seeing him six months ago, would have believed that he ever could have become the sincere Christian man you have made of him? It is really a miracle. There, I know if you were here you'd disclaim the credit, but then to whom does it belong, if not to you? If there had been no Bowery Mission how could poor 'Baltimore,' as we used to call him then, have been saved?

"With a cry of warning, 'Baltimore' sprang to the child's side, just in time."

"He spoke to me again about 'going home.' It seems to be his one thought. Poor fellow! There were tears in his eyes as he spoke of his aged mother, but I think it was the vision of those three graves in the churchyard that brought them. If it were not for his intended work among those poor outcasts who used to be his companions there would not be much left in this world for him, would there?"

"Judge D— will be here to-night," the superintendent told "Baltimore," when he had read the letter, "and he is going to bring his wife and little daughter. You will not have to report to him tomorrow, and can take the early train for home, if you wish, instead of waiting until afternoon."

"Baltimore" smiled his pleasure at the news, and when evening came, as the men began to file into the meeting, he awaited the judge and his party at the entrance. He had often asked the judge to visit them, but until now the pressure of his many engagements had prevented the magistrate from doing so. "Baltimore" hoped that they might not be late.

It was nearly eight o'clock now—the time for the meeting to commence.

Suddenly he saw the men on the street running. He glanced down the avenue. A black below, dense cloud of black, threatening smoke was pouring from one of the cheap hotels that line the Bowery. Now and then, as the wind cleared away some of the enshrouding smoke, a tongue of flame darted from the windows of the third floor. Evidently the fire had made much progress, although apparently just discovered. Above the hoarse shouts of the crowd he heard the rattle and clatter of the engines, and the shrieking of the sirens, they responded to the alarm. A lieutenant of one of the companies that first arrived rushed to the signal-box on the corner to send in a second alarm.

Below him, the police were hurriedly but effectively forming fire-lines, while up the avenue as fast as the eye could reach, the surface cars stood motionless. All this "Baltimore" noticed, and then he saw the judge alight from one of the cars near the corner and assist a lady and a slight, golden-haired girl of nine or ten years to the ground. Evidently he believed it safe now to cross with his charges to the curb, and in the confusion did not hear the noise of the apparatus responding to the second alarm.

"Baltimore" ran forward to welcome them, but his cry of pleasure was changed to horror as he saw the child, running ahead of her parents, rush directly in the path of an approaching truck. Paralyzed with fright, the little one stood motionless almost under the feet of the plunging horses.

With a cry of warning that died ere it reached his lips, "Baltimore" sprang to the child's side and half-dragged, half hurled her from beneath the cruel hoofs of the maddened team, just in time. The driver sought frantically to swerve his still more frantic animals against an iron pillar of the elevated road, but too late. For the gallant rescuer, struck by the pole between the frenzied beasts, was tumbled, stunned and bleeding, under their feet and the grinding wheels behind.

They lifted him tenderly and carried him into the Mission, and laid his torn, inanimate body, bruised and ground into the dust of the roadway until almost unrecognizable, upon a hastily improvised couch.

Strange that it was almost on the spot where, six months before, he had waited to deliver the judge's note to Mr. H—, and had received such a glorious message of hope himself.

There were tears in the eyes of the judge and the superintendent as they bent over him. There were tears in the eyes of the crowd who had seen his noble act. From the ante-room, where Mrs. D— and her little one had been taken, came the sound of hysterical weeping.

Then, to the surprise of all, the dying man regained consciousness. His brown eyes lingered affectionately over the two men standing at his side. "Did I save her?" he whispered.

They nodded affirmatively, not daring to speak. "Baltimore's" eyes expressed his thankfulness. His hand, cruelly mangled, sought the hand of the superintendent. He muttered softly to himself. Mr. H—, kneeling beside his dying friend, bent closer to hear.

"It is—better—so," came the faint murmur. "Lord—receive my soul!"

Continued on page 917

A Young Canadian Evangelist

ANNIE AGNES SMITH, a tried and proven laborer for souls in the evangelistic field, was born in Ontario, Canada, twenty-five years ago, and came to this country with her parents when nine years of age. The family are members of Kingsley Methodist Church, Stapleton, Staten Island, of which the Rev. J. B. J. Rhodes is pastor.

The Rev. J. C. Howard, of Newark, who was her faithful pastor for eleven years, says: "I watched her growing from the Sunday School into a marvelously gifted Christian worker. Her call to the work of an evangelist was quite definite and providential."

One Sunday evening, when she was eighteen, she was leading her first Epworth League meeting. A visiting pastor at Kingsley Church was so impressed with the young girl's earnestness that he invited her to visit his church to assist him in special services. She went, feeling keenly her weakness and inexperience, but also feeling that God was opening a door to greater fields of usefulness. This was the beginning of her successful career.

Evangelist Annie Agnes Smith

Pastors and churches began to call for her services, and hundreds have been converted under her ministry in all parts of the country. Miss Smith is a remarkably powerful preacher of righteousness, with a sweet, clear, persuasive voice, which lends an added charm to her well-chosen and effective language. Her knowledge of the Bible is extensive, and her sermons appeal to the noblest and best in the human heart. With it all there is a great simplicity and an entire consecration to Christ and the cause to which she has devoted her life.

Miss Smith is a licensed exhorter in her home church, and has the endorsement of presiding elders, pastors and people wherever she labors. She has won many souls to the Kingdom.

The First Student Bible Conference

THE first International Bible Conference held under the auspices of the Student Department of the International Committee of Young Men's Christian Associations to consider the extension of Bible study in colleges, met in Columbus, O., October 22-26. There were present 1,022 students, professors and instructors from 250 institutions of the United States and Canada. Mr. J. R. Mott, of the World's Christian Student Federation, presided. The Conference was held in Columbus upon the invitation of the United Brotherhood of that city.

The forenoons were devoted to addresses and discussions bearing directly on the development of the Student Bible Study movement. In the afternoons the Conference was divided into groups according to classes of institutions, and plans for promoting efficiency in Bible teaching and for reaching a far larger proportion of college students than ever before were presented. The evening sessions were devoted to inspiring addresses on the influence of the Bible on individual and national life.

The two morning sessions, open only to delegates, were devoted to consideration of the problem of promoting Bible study. On Saturday morning, representatives of a number of institutions told of the scenes in their institutions in the enlistment of college men in Bible study. Col. Larned of West Point showed how Bible study had gone forward in the Military Academy, in spite of the limited time at the disposal of the cadets. President Falconer of the University of Toronto set forth the "Contribution of Scholarship to the Understanding of the Bible," and Mr. Luther D. Wishard, of New York, one of the founders of Association work in colleges, spoke of the "Opportunities of the College Graduate in the Promotion of Bible Study."

On Friday and Saturday afternoon the Conference was broken up into sectional gatherings in order to consider the special problems of the different classes of institutions. At one conference the problem of promoting Bible study in colleges in which the Associations have general secretaries, was considered; in another, the problems of those institutions having no general secretaries. Also there were conferences for those interested in Bible Study work in preparatory schools and military academies. The members of faculties present met in conference to consider the relation of professors and instructors to the Bible Study movement.

Evening meetings were held in Memorial Hall. The speakers included Mr. Victor G. Beebe, the chairman of the United Church Brotherhoods of Columbus; Rev. Washington Gladden, Mr. John R.

Mott, General O. O. Howard, President King of Oberlin, E. Speer of New York, Hon. H. B. F. Macfarland, president of the Commissioners of the District of Columbia; Editor James A. Macdonald of the Toronto Globe, and others.

The Conference went from strength to strength and the last meetings were intensely spiritual. The farewell meeting was held on Sunday evening. Addresses were given by Dr. W. W. White, of New York, and Bishop William F. McDowell, of Chicago.

A Conscientious Horse-Trader

A reader of this paper (A. C. H., Lancaster, Pa.) sends this incident:

Ellen S.'s pretty little story in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of April 22 reminds me of another. In my early life I dwelt upon a farm and was surrounded by excellent neighbors, many of them of the Mennonite faith. One of these had a colt a year old and I had several young cattle. He asked me to trade two of my young cattle for his colt, as he had no good place to keep it. I thought the matter over and told him I would make the trade and thought my two young cattle were worth about as much as his colt. "Oh, no!" he answered, "I will not trade that way." I was shocked, for I had great respect for this man, and I feared I had asked too much. "Well," I said, "what do you think?" "Why," he replied, "I should give you ten dollars besides." "Oh, well," I answered, "if that is the case we can trade, for I am willing to trade even." But he would not have it that way. Every time I met him he coaxed me to trade, said his colt was not comfortable where he had him and should have better quarters. At last I had to give in and take the ten dollars "to boot," as they call it in trading. We had at least half a dozen meetings before the trade was completed.

"BALTIMORE" Continued from Page 916

Then came a silence, broken only by the hoarse, irregular breathing of the watchers, and the faint and steadily fainter moaning of the injured man. His sands of life were falling fast.

Suddenly, as if possessed with some new strength "Baltimore" sought to rise. A wonderful light shone from his glazing eyes.

"I'm comin', Emily—I'm comin' home," he called, his voice ringing clear and bell-like so that all could hear. Then he sank back, overcome by weakness, as he went on whisperingly, "never—to—go away—any more. Come nearer—with th' babies—dearie. It's gettin'—so dark—I—can't see."

There was a moment of suspense. "There you are—an' th' young 'uns too—comin' toward me—all a-shinin'—an' someone—darling—Lord—forgive—me—"

Old "Baltimore" had gone home.

THE END.

Our $3.00 Gift

We have six silver butter-spreaders waiting for you.

They are the famous Lily Pattern made by Wm. Rogers & Sons, made in their Extra Plate.

You will find similar spreaders in all stores, priced at $3 or more for the six.

These are the fads now. The most popular silver piece is a butter-spreader, and this is the popular style.

They are free to our customers so don't go without them.

Send us one metal top from a jar of Armour's Extract of Beef. Else send the paper certificate under the top.

Send with it ten cents—the cost of carriage and packing. We will then send you one of the spreaders.

Send more tops as you get them, and send ten cents with each—either in silver or stamps.

For each top or certificate we will send you a spreader until you get enough for a set.

Six Silver Butter-Spreaders—Just Like This—Sent to the Users of Armour's Extract of Beef.

Armour's EXTRACT OF BEEF

Thus we return to you, for a little time, more than you pay for the Extract of Beef.

But we know that six jars will make you a convert. Then you'll never keep house without it.

We are giving you this $3 gift, therefore, to make you a lifetime customer—for your good and ours.

You don't know what it means—the use of extract of beef. The Germans and the French use fifty times as much as Americans.

Their fame as good cooks comes, in rather large part, from their methods of using beef extract.

They use it to utilize left-overs. They add it to any meat dish which needs additional flavor.

They make their wonderful soups with it. They color their gravies, and flavor them, with it. They use it in chafing dishes.

There is scarcely a meal to which extract of beef would not add richness and flavor.

We wish to prove these facts to you for your good and ours. That is why we are making this remarkable offer.

Use one-fourth as much of Armour's Extract of Beef as you use of any other. Armour's is concentrated. It is rich and economical. Don't judge it by extracts which cannot compare with it.

The extracts which cost you but a trifle less only go one-fourth so far. That is another fact which we want to prove.

Learn how you need it—learn the myriad uses to which you can put it.

Learn how it betters your cooking. Learn what it saves you on left-overs.

Our Extract of Beef will teach you these facts better than we can in print.

So we ask you to buy one jar and send us the top. Send with it ten cents—the cost of carriage and packing—and we will send you a spreader worth more than the extract costs.

Do this again and again, if you are satisfied. If you begin at once you can get a full set.

Then you will know Armour's Extract of Beef. And you will have a set of silver pieces which will last you a lifetime.

Order one jar now—from your druggist or grocer. Send us the top or certificate at once. Then judge by the spreader we send you if you want the rest.

Address Armour & Company, Chicago, Department AB.

ARMOUR AND COMPANY

I lessen the kitchen work by making it easy to care for lamps.

I make lamp-chimneys that fit, that compel proper combustion—good light—without smoke, smudge or smell.

MACBETH lamp-chimneys are made of glass that won't break from heat. My name is on every one.

My guide, sent free, shows which is the right chimney for each of your lamps.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh

USE
BORDEN'S
PEERLESS BRAND
EVAPORATED MILK
(UNSWEETENED)
In All Recipes Calling for MILK OR CREAM

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package

SPECIAL DIETETIC FOOD

A Food for marked cases of
KIDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES
REQUIRING RATHER STRICT DIET

Unlike other foods. Ask grocers. For book or sample, write

FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

GOVERNMENT POSITIONS

46,712 Appointments were made to Civil Service positions during the past year. Good life positions at $840 to $1,500 per year. Excellent opportunities for young people. Thorough instruction by mail. Write for our Civil Service Announcement, containing full information about all government examinations and questions recently used by the Civil Service Commission.

COLUMBIAN CORRESP. COLLEGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 for one invention. Book, "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in fourteen Manufacturers' Journal. Patent Obtained or Fee Returned.

CHANDLEE & CHANDLEE, Patent Attorneys
Established in 1878
1003 F Street, Washington, D. C.

THE HOME NIGHT LIGHT

Gives soft mellow light. Absolutely safe, non-explosive. Odorless. Especially desirable in homes where there are children or cases of illness. Recommended by physicians and nurses. Box of lights sufficient for two months lighting 10c. 3 boxes 25c. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Any change for agents. Send for outfit and terms.

HOME SPECIALTY CO., Dept. C, Newark, N. J.

LADIES ARE MAKING $3 TO $10 A DAY

Selling made-to-order C.Y.C. Corsets for stout women. You need only to show it to your friends. Also includes Bust Forms and other corsets. More ladies wanted than these goods. Write today.

WRIGHT FORMETTE CO.
134-J West 14th St., New York City

Occupations for Women
By FRANCES E. WILLARD

500 pages; illustrated. Regular Price, $3.75. SPECIAL PRICE, $1.00, all Charges Prepaid.

P. B. Bromfield & Co., Bible House, New York

NO BURN" WIRE KETTLE BOTTOM
Rapid Sifter. Agents make $2 to $5 per day. Write for large catalogue and free sample set.

Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. C, Bath, N. Y.

Nations Destroyed by Drink*

World's Temperance Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

"WOE to the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim, and to the fading flower of his glorious beauty!" Isaiah here calls the whole kingdom of Israel "Ephraim," after the name of its chief tribe. Samaria, the capital city of Israel, was built on the summit of a verdant, isolated, cone-shaped hill, where the marble palaces, glistening in the sun, seemed from a distance like the crown of silver olive leaves with which its revelers were crowned at their feasts. Because its people were so given to wine, this "glorious beauty" was to become a lost crown, "a fading flower." When Isaiah spoke, the Assyrians were already sweeping down, like a "scourge of God," upon the upper kingdom, whose sin and fall Isaiah held up as a mirror of Judah's present sin and future fall, which occurred about a hundred years later. Samaria is to-day a ruin, whose broken marble pillars on the hill-top suggest a crushed wreath or a trampled crown, an eloquent warning against the vices that blight nations and individuals. The word Sychar (John 4:5), afterwards given to a village close at hand, is supposed to come from shikkora, meaning drunkards, a monument of the shame described in the text. "Look," says Isaiah, in substance, "to the ruin which intemperance is bringing to our sister State, and behold the same symptoms of approaching national death here in Judah."

Why Nations Die

Samaria and Judah were never conquered except when corrupted. The bottles on the inside were the battering rams they had most to fear. Seldom has even a small nation been conquered when robust in virtue. The American colonies in 1776 showed this. It is an historical fact that few nations have died from economic causes, but many have died of immorality. We of the rank and file should demand of political leaders that moral questions shall be recognized as the chief questions in politics.

The figure of a "crown" lost through drink, a laurel wreath blighted by dissipation, has a personal as well as national significance, and recalls many a king besides Belshazzar whose doom came as he drank, and many a genius, like Poe and Burns, whose glorious beauty was a fading flower, because the blight of appetite was upon his laurels.

"Overcome with wine." The original word means one smitten, beaten, knocked down with wine, as with a hammer; laid prostrate, unable to rise. It is the fashion to lay such deadly blows of drink mostly to whisky and other distilled liquors, but it is wine which carries the bludgeon in this text. It is even worse to-day, when wine not only does its own mischief but leads its victim on to the thrall of the spirituous liquors. For example, in France, where the people drink on the average more wine than any other people, and the purest wine, for they make it themselves, the wine does not lessen the consumption of stronger drinks, as is shown by a table of liquor revenue statistics, gathered by American consuls from many nations in 1904. The French people drink more distilled liquor per capita than those of any other land, much of it the worst kind, absinthe, to which their doctors and statesmen alike attribute, more than to anything else except impurity, which is largely prompted by drink, the fact that in France alone of all civilized nations, the birth rate has fallen below the death rate. In Switzerland, another wine country, the absinthe habit became so serious that it was prohibited in 1908 by a referendum. The Emperor of Germany, having investigated the increasing consumption of intoxicating beverages among his subjects in 1904, was quoted as saying, "This tremendous guzzling must be stopped somehow." These facts make sad havoc of the old fallacy about beer and wine being cures for drunkenness. "Light wines—nothing so treacherous!" said Sir Edward Bulwer-Lytton; "they inflame the brain like fire, while melting on the palate like ice. All inhabitants of light wine countries are quarrelsome."

"Overcome with wine!" That has been written of many who started life as confidently as the bright boys and girls in our Sunday Schools. Shall it be written of any to whom this lesson comes with timely warning? It cannot be true of any person whose practice is abstinence. When "overcome of wine" a man becomes a wild beast, and even a beast it makes more beastly. A Chicago dispatch said, "A big herd of cattle, maddened and half intoxicated from alcohol used in distillery 'slop' fed to them, stampeded in the stockyards. More than a score of the animals met death in the rush. Scenes were enacted that for terror and blood made old stockmen and cowboys turn their backs. One man nearly lost his life. The herd stampeded numbered more than six hundred of the kind that are known as the 'distillery cattle,' because they are fattened on the refuse from liquor mills."

"Overcome of wine"—shall it be written of you? Shall it be written of our country? Shall we not rather ourselves "overcome" this personal and national foe by total abstinence and prohibition, the only weapons with which it has been overcome anywhere? In this matter, the Orient has been wiser than the Occident. Ancient India and Arabia were greatly cursed by drunkenness, but the religious leaders did not make the deadly blunder made by Europe and America for ages, of relying upon "moderation" and "license" as cures for this curse.

Continued on next page

A FAT BABY

Usually Evidence of Proper Feeding.

Babies grow very rapidly and if they do not get the right kind of food they grow backwards instead of forwards; that is, when their food is not nourishing they grow thin and cross and some of them die from the lack of the right kind of food. A girl writes: "My aunt's baby was very delicate and was always ill. She was not able to nurse it and took it to one doctor after another, but none of them did the child any good."

"One day mother told my aunt to try Grape-Nuts for the baby, but she laughed and said if the doctors couldn't do the baby any good, how could Grape-Nuts? But mother said 'try it anyway.'"

"So my aunt put one tablespoonful of Grape-Nuts in a quarter cup of hot water and when the food was soft she added as much milk as water and gave that to the baby."

"In a month and a half you would hardly have known that baby, it was so fat and thrived so fast. A neighbor asked my aunt what made the baby so healthy and fat when only six weeks before it was so thin. She said 'Grape-Nuts.' The neighbor got Grape-Nuts for her baby and it was soon as fat as my aunt's child."

"There's a Reason." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

BELLAS HESS & CO.
BROADWAY PRINCE & CROSBY STS.
NEW YORK CITY N.Y.

FREE

Write at for this hands illustrated York catalog illustrate describes the Fifth Avenue of New York including a hundreds of the Sensati

"DIRECT COSTUM

the talk of E and America

contains 144 pages of wearing apparel exclusively tells you how you can dress in the latest advanced without having to pay retail prices. It is the exclusive wearing apparel catalogue issued in New City. Sent absolutely FREE to any address application. Write for it to-day.

BELLAS HESS & CO.
BROADWAY PRINCE & CROSBY STS.
NEW YORK CITY N.Y.

Don't spend one cen for Xmas gifts, until you have investigated our plan. Get them free. Don't send money—just your name and address on a postal to Farm and Home, Department 21, Springfield, Mass.

$3.25

Post-paid in U. S.

Ease Your Feet

"THE PILLOW" SHOE

For Woman's Wear; absolute comfort for TIRED, TENDER FEET. A beautiful hand turned shoe, no binding-in required; relief from pet Corns, Bunions; soft, flexible, durable, dressy and stylish. The sole oak leather. The top genuine Vici Kid, soft, pliable. RUBBER HEELS. No other shoe like it made. We guarantee to fit you perfectly. Absolute comfort and satisfaction or money cheerfully refunded. Oxf Style $3.00. Write to-day for our Free Illustration Catalogue and special self-measure blank and join Grand Army of delighted customers. Address

SUFFOLK SHOE COMPANY
184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"

Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set

From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM

AGENTS

are coining money (Claude H. Rogers set 500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and we will prove it. Experience unnecessary. I show you how to make $3 to $10 a day. OUT FIT FREE to work.

THOMAS MFG. CO.
423 Home Bldg.
Dayton, Ohio

CANARIES

Two THOUSAND beautiful, hard Canaries, with wonderfully sweet, clear, musical voices. Imported from the best breeders in Germany, and every one is a gem. Tested, guaranteed songsters in shipping cages only $3.00 each. Females $1.00 each. Handsome brass cages, $1.00, $1.50 and $2.00 each.

PARROTS—Guaranteed talkers $5.00 each and upwards. We ship every where. Largest mail order bird dealers in the world.

Free Largest and handsomest catalogue of birds, fancy gold fish etc., ever issued, mailed free if you mention this paper. Bird book, 25 cents.

IOWA BIRD CO., Des Moines, Iowa

THE GIANT HEATER

Will Heat Any Ordinary Room in Zero Weather at Almost No Cost

Applied to central draught lamp or gas (naked flame or mantle burner).

Heat and Light AT ONE COST

Col. Y. A. Woodward, New Orleans, La., writes: "Giant Heater received. Am very much pleased with it."

Price Complete, Charges Prepaid

Brass, $1.50; Nickel Plated, $2.00

Attractive Illustrated Booklet Mailed Free

GIANT HEATER CO., 363 Monmouth St., Springfield, Mass.

SILK EMBOSSED POST CARDS

Floral, Birthday and Christmas; lovely designs; beautiful colors; 10 cards with 3 mos. trial subscription to our popular magazine, 10c; 30 cards and 1 yr. sub. 25c.

HOUSEHOLD CARD CO., Dept. 30, Topeka, Kan.

YOUNG PEOPLE'S SOCIETIES

Our Foreign Immigration*

THERE is no more interesting subject for discussion than the restriction of our immigration. It forms a stock question for our debating societies, and so closely balanced are the arguments for and against it that the judges sometimes decide for one side, sometimes for the other. This means that a good case can be made out for either. It goes without saying that the term "restriction" is used in the broadest sense. Of course, both sides agree in the wisdom of excluding idiots, paupers, the diseased, the insane and the criminal.

One strong argument for unrestricted immigration is that we are spending hundreds of thousands of dollars every year for foreign missions; which means that we expose the hordes of the heathen, a group at a time, to the civilizing influence, as it were, of but a single man. Instead, is it not likely to be infinitely more effective to expose a comparatively small group of the heathen to the civilizing influences of eighty millions of nominally Christian people?

To this argument it is replied that the few men sent out as foreign missionaries are usually of the finest and highest Christian types, while those who are too often associated with the newly-arrived immigrants in this country are of the lowest among us.

The natural human aversion to the foreigner is everywhere admitted. But it is at its minimum, it is said, in America, and there are perhaps at this moment more immigrants, or children of immigrants, than native Americans occupying positions of trust in this country.

A writer in the New York Evening Post some years ago took up this subject, and proved, by naming the principal criminals just then in the public eye, that quite as many native Americans as foreigners, if not more, were, at least at that time, on our roll of shame. Prison statistics reveal at any period startling facts regarding the vice among our native stock.

Gipsy Smith, in one of his most powerful passages, tells how the Lord called Matthew. People looked at him and said, "He is a sinner." "Yes," said Jesus, "but he will write my first Gospel." Only give a man a chance. Nobody wanted a certain drunken sailor, but God looked at him and saved him, and he became the great poet and preacher, John Newton. Nobody else saw anything in John Bunyan but a vile and swearing tinker; but God saw in him an immortal dreamer, whose vision was to save many souls from perishing.

And so from among these foreigners who seek our shores, generally fleeing from oppression and tyranny in the Old World, and often poor, unlettered and unkempt, may come those, and have come those, who are to mightily help on the progress of our country.

Too much importance cannot be attached to the way in which we meet and try to aid these people. The societies which have been formed for this purpose deserve our heartiest support, and should be officered by our best men and women.

There is no more touching story than that of the poor immigrant Swede who was handed a Testament in his own language by a faithful colporteur, as he came, fresh from the ship that brought him over, and who, through the agency of that Testament, became a preacher of the Gospel in the West. Twenty-seven years afterward, he visited the pier on which he had landed and found there the same colporteur.

He threw his arms around him and told his story, and they wept together for joy.

*Christian Endeavor for Sunday, November 10. Home Missions, Text: Isa. 4:1-22.

Mockery of Strong Drink*

FORTY years ago, in a certain college, six young men formed themselves into a society, partly literary and partly for "good fellowship." They were all good writers, and at their weekly meeting each had a composition of his own. Then they all drank together, until they were hardly able to find their way to their rooms.

One of those men has recently told a friend that, after three or four months of this association, he discovered that from a condition in which he had had to force himself to drink, having no natural taste for liquor, he found that he was getting to like it, and to long for it, and he had common sense enough to cut himself loose at once from his "club" membership. The others went on, and the annals of our colleges contain no sadder story than theirs. One of them died in New York a few years ago, noted for his wit and his learning, but a slave to his appetite. It was said that every night he retired to his library and, with a bottle beside him, drank himself into unconsciousness. At the early age of thirty-eight he was found there one morning dead.

Another one walks the streets of the metropolis, picking up an uncertain living with his once brilliant pen. His face and person are revolting to behold, his clothes are in tatters, he has lost all self-respect and honor—a shame and a disgrace to his college and his country.

Two of the others lived in obscurity until they were past thirty, when they dropped into drunkards' graves. The one who broke off was the only one who has ever arrived at distinction or has been of any service to the world.

Dr. Samuel Johnson, one of the wisest men that ever lived, though his writings (except his dictionary) were so unimportant, never uttered a more universal truth than when he affirmed of himself, "I can refrain entirely, but I cannot be moderate." It is probably at least ten times as hard to be a "moderate drinker" as to maintain total abstinence.

We are wont to lament the awful prevalence of intemperance, and it is indeed appalling; but it is not as bad now as when presidents and cabinet members habitually drank to excess, as some of them did even no further back than in the sixties of the last century. Within the memory of men and women now living, ministers of the Gospel were sometimes seen abroad in a state of intoxication, and were thought no worse of for it. That could not be to-day.

Still, it is a melancholy state of things when in our foremost clubs, in whose membership are included professional men of high standing, even clergymen, spirituous liquors figure prominently on the table. Apparently there is a widespread feeling among an excellent class of our citizens that it is "narrow" and "bigoted" to refrain entirely from wine and whisky. But it is hard for some of us to understand how such men can free themselves from a feeling of awful guilt when they see the drunkard reeling through the street and hear the agonized cries of his wife and children. Most men cannot go forth and give temperance lectures. Usually the most that they can do is to set a strenuous example—which should be one of total abstinence. God help us all to stamp out from our beloved land this awful curse of rum!

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, November 29. Text: Prov. 20:1; 23:29-35; Eph. 5:18.

"Where can I invest my money so that it will be safe, and where I can have it when I want it, and yet so it will bring me a reasonable return when invested?" This question will be answered to your satisfaction if you will write the Industrial Savings & Loan Co., whose advertisement appears on page 919.

Bathe in Comfort

A warm bath in a cold room is a "shivery" operation and is extremely liable to cause colds. The bathroom above all should be kept warm. This is easy and the bath is a comfort if you have a

PERFECTION Oil Heater

(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

It may be carried from any other room to the bath room, which it will heat while you are preparing for the bath. Impossible to turn it too high or too low. The most economical heater you can buy—intense heat for 9 hours with one filling. Every heater warranted.

The Rayo Lamp is the best lamp for all-round household purposes. Gives a clear, steady light. Made of brass throughout and nickel plated. Equipped with the latest improved central draft burner. Handsome—simple—satisfactory. Every lamp guaranteed.

If you cannot get heater and lamp at your dealer's, write to our nearest agency.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY (Incorporated)

Don't Buy a Stove or Range Until You First See How Much You Save By Getting

"A Kalamazoo Direct to You"

TRADE MARK REGISTERED

YOU want to make every cent you spend this year, count for quality and economy.

If you need a stove or range, don't buy until you get our factory prices. I promise you that I will save you $5, $6 or $10 on our smallest stoves, and as high as $18, $20 and even $30 on our largest. And I promise you that you cannot get anywhere at any price, a better stove or range than the Kalamazoo.

Just let me quote you prices. Take our catalogue and compare the Kalamazoo quality and prices, with the best line of stoves and ranges you can find sold at retail. That will tell the story. You can see for yourself. You want to save money and you want to get high quality. Why not investigate our plan, then? Why not let me show you the difference between manufacturers' prices and retail prices on stoves or ranges?

We sell to you, direct from the factory, at actual factory prices.

On 360 Days Approval Test—We Pay the Freight

I promise, in black and white, to refund your money—every cent of it—if you do not find your purchase in every way exactly as represented.

Remember, every Kalamazoo is of the highest possible grade, made of the best materials and in the best manner. You deal directly with the manufacturers—a company that has a larger number of individual customers than any other stove company in existence.

We have sold thousands of stoves and ranges to readers of this journal, and no doubt can refer you to near neighbors who have saved money by buying a Kalamazoo. Many customers write that they have saved enough on a single Kalamazoo to pay for a whole season's fuel. You can save enough to buy a new suit, a new dress, an article of furniture, or perhaps to pay your taxes. Is it not to your interest to get our prices?

Send Postal for Catalogue No. 103

describing more than 300 sizes and styles of Coal and Wood Ranges, Coal and Wood Heaters, Hotel Ranges, Base Burners, Laundry Stoves, Etc.

I know that if you get our prices—and see our quality you will not even think of buying any other make. Let me show you how much you can save.

William Thompson, Vice-Pres. & Gen. Mgr. KALAMAZOO STOVE CO., Mfrs. Kalamazoo, Mich.

All Kalamazoo cook stoves and ranges have patent thermometers which make baking and roasting easy.

Automobile Jackets, Blizzard Proof
Outside texture so closely woven it resists wind and wear alike. Lined with wool fleece that defies the cold. Snap fasteners, riveted pockets.

PARKER'S Arctic Jacket
Registered in U. S. Patent Office. Better than an overcoat for facing cold and work together. Warm, durable, comfortable. Ask your dealer, or sent postpaid on receipt of $2.35.

JOHN H. PARKER CO., Dept. K
25 James St., Malden, Mass.

Deafness
"The Morley 'Phone'"

A miniature Telephone for the Ear, invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Makes low sounds and whispers plain heard. Over fifty thousand giving instant relief from deafness head noises. There are but few of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY (Dept. E, Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia)

A COURSE IN ESPERANTO

LESSON No. 23—By Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

Letter Writing (Korespondado)

THE date: Nov-Jorko, 18an de Aprilo, 1908. The an after 18 is th. Nov-Jorko, New York. Other an a list of cities given below, it is bet- r to use the English form.

The months of the year: Januaro, January; Februaro, February; Marto, March; Aprilo, April; Majo, May; Junio, June; Julio, July; Aŭgusto, August; Septembro, September; Oktobro, October; Novembro, November; Decembro, December. If desired, the day of the week may be placed before the date: Dimanĉo, Sunday; Lundo, Monday; Marto, Tuesday; Merkredo, Wednesday; Ĵaŭdo, Thursday; Vendredo, Friday; Sabato, Saturday.

List of cities: Amsterdamo, Amsterdam; Berlino, Berlin; Edinburgo, Edinburgh; Londono, London; Madrido, Madrid; Neapolo, Naples; Parizo, Paris; Pekingo, Peking; Romo, Rome; Sankta Petersburgo, St. Petersburg; Vieno, Vienna.

Commencement of Letters

The form varies according to whether relatives, friends or strangers are addressed. Relatives: Mia kara, my dear; Mia kara, dearest; mia karegulo, or karelinino, my darling; amata, beloved; karemata, dearly beloved. Friends: Kara amiko, dear friend; mia kara amiko, my dear friend; mia estimata amiko, my esteemed friend. Formal address: Samiamano, fellow thinker (if an Esperantist); Ĝenerala, partisan of the same idea; sinjoro, sir; sinjorino, madam; fraŭlino, miss; estimata sinjoro, esteemed sir; kara sinjoro, dear sir.

Official or Commercial: Sinjoro, sir; sinjoroj, gentlemen. If desired, these forms may be preceded by estimata, estimataj, kara or karaj.

Some Appropriate Expressions to be Used in Friendly Letters

Mi ricevis vian leteron de —, I received your letter of —. Mi rapidas respondi al leteron or al via letero, I hasten to reply to your letter. Ni estas honorataj per via letero, We are honored by your letter. Vian ŝatatan leteron de — mi ricevis, kaj —, Your highly prized (or much appreciated) letter of — I have received, and —.

Expressions to be Used in Commercial Letters

Ni havas la plezuron anonci al vi, ke —, We have the pleasure to announce to you, that —. Mi dankas vin pro via propono, kaj —, I thank you for your offer, and —. Mi havas la honoron proponi al la jenajn komercaĵojn, I have the honor to offer to you the following goods.

Closing of Letters

To relatives and dear friends: Kun multe da amo por ĉiuj, With much love all. Via tre amanta, Your very affectionate. Via ameganta patro, Your loving father. Via tre amanta filino, Your very affectionate daughter. Via fidela amiko, Your faithful friend. Via sinjoro, Yours very sincerely. Tre kore via, Very heartily yours. To strangers: Via re, Yours truly. Sincere via, Sincerely yours. Official or Commercial: Altesime, With high esteem. Tre fidele via, Very faithfully yours. Kun saluto, With salutation. Postskribaĵo, if it is desired add a postscript. Until Esperanto has come to be more widely known, it is best to address envelopes either in English or in the language of the country to which the letter is sent.

Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah!" Tune—Zion.

Gvidu min, Jehovo granda, Pilgrimanton tra la dezerto; Tenu min per Ciamano, Al mi mankas fort' kaj spert': Ĉielpano, Ĉielpano, Laiŭ bezono nutru min.

El la font' kristala akvoj
Por la viv' elverŝu sin;
La kolono fajra, nuba,
Sur la voj' konduku min;
Ho, Savinto! Ho, Savinto!
Estu mia fort' kaj ŝild'.

For de mi la timon prenu
Ĉe la bordo de l' Jordan';
Tra la fluo de l' torento
Portu min al Kanaan':
Laŭkantadojn, Laŭkantadojn,
Ĉiam donos mi al Ci.

Translated by Miss Margaret W. Lewis, of Brooklyn, N. Y., who began the study of Esperanto with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD course.

Books Received

Scioto, an Indian Romance in verse. By Frederick Walter. Pp. 112. Price $1. The Macneal Printing Co., Baltimore, Md.

The Crisis in Church Work. By Henry Ostrom. Sermon-essays. Cloth covers, Pp. 118. Price 60 cents. Eaton & Mains, New York.

Japanese Folk Stories and Fairy Tales, by Mary F. Nixon-Roulet. Cloth covers; copiously illustrated. Pp. 191. Price 40 cents. American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati and Chicago.

The Queens of Avillon; or, Ladies of the Court of King Arthur. By William Byron Forbush and Frank Lincoln Masseck. Paper covers. Pp. 47. Price 25 cents. Frank Lincoln Masseck, Potsdam, New York.

Lewis Rand, by Mary Johnston. A novel of the period of Jefferson and Burr. Beautifully illustrated in color by F. C. Yohn. Cloth covers. Pp. 510. Price $1.50. Houghton Mifflin Company, Boston and New York.

The Lure of the Book. By Metta Frazee Miller. "A short and concise view of the main features of the Old Testament." Cloth covers. Pp. 414. Price $1. The Winona Publishing Company, Chicago.

Medievalism, a Reply to Cardinal Mercier. By George Tyrrell. Cloth covers. Pp. 210. Price $1.25. Longmans, Green & Co., 39 Paternoster Row, London, and New York, Bombay, and Calcutta.

Flower of the Dusk, a charming book, by Myrtle Reed. Cloth covers; with a color illustration from a painting by Clinton Balmer. Pp. 341. Price $1.50. A physician to the Soul, by Horatio W. Dresser, Ph. D. Cloth covers. Pp. 171. Price $1.00. The above two books are published by G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

Hawaiian Idylls of Love and Death. By the Rev. Herbert H. Gowen, F.R.G.S., M.R.S.A. (London), author of "The Paradise of the Pacific," etc. Cochran Publishing Co., New York. Price $1. These are not technically poems as some might infer from their title, but are interesting prose versions of the folk-tales and historical myths of the Sandwich Islands and their great "overlord" Kamehameha.

UPWARD START

After Changing from Coffee to Postum.

Many a talented person is kept back because of the interference of coffee with the nourishment of the body.

This is especially so with those whose nerves are very sensitive, as is often the case with talented persons. There is a simple, easy way to get rid of coffee evils, and a Tenn. lady's experience along these lines is worth considering. She says:

"Almost from the beginning of the use of coffee it hurt my stomach. By the time I was fifteen I was almost a nervous wreck, nerves all unstrung, no strength to endure the most trivial thing, either work or fun.

"There was scarcely anything I could eat that would agree with me. The little I did eat seemed to give me more trouble than it was worth. I finally quit coffee and drank hot water, but there was so little food I could digest I was literally starving; was so weak I could not sit up long at a time.

"It was then a friend brought me a hot cup of Postum. I drank part of it and after an hour I felt as though I had had something to eat—felt strengthened. That was about five years ago, and after continuing Postum in place of coffee and gradually getting stronger, to-day I can eat and digest anything I want, walk as much as I want. My nerves are steady.

"I believe the first thing that did me any good and gave me an upward start was Postum, and I use it altogether now instead of coffee." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

For CHAPPED FACE and HANDS

Hinds' Honey and Almond Cream

Quickly Soothes and Heals the Tender, Cracked Sore Skin

To keep the skin soft, smooth, clear and healthy, there is nothing quite so good, so delightful to use, and so sure in accomplishing all that it claims, as Hinds' Honey and Almond Cream.

When the skin is tender, irritated and inflamed from any cause, this pure, snow-white lotion will instantly cool and soothe it. And for dry, hard, rough skin at all seasons, it will produce a natural softness, without being greasy or sticky. It can be depended upon to relieve and heal eruptive conditions.—Is best for baby's delicate skin and for men who shave. Guaranteed pure, and free from bleach and chemicals. It cannot possibly cause a growth of hair. 50c. at all dealers, or if not obtainable, sent postpaid by us.—Sample and Booklet free.

$2,000 In Cash Prizes

Given absolutely free to winners in the Hinds' Honey and Almond Cream NAME CONTEST, as advertised and explained in the following November Magazines:—Munsey, Everybody's, Cosmopolitan, American Magazine, Good Housekeeping, Harper's Bazar, Delineator, Woman's Home Companion, Ladies' World, American Boy, Uncle Remus's Home Magazine, Red Book, Housekeeper, Pictorial Review Fashion Book, Quarterly Style Book; and in these Weeklies as dated:—Saturday Evening Post, Oct. 24; Collier's, Oct. 24; Youth's Companion, Oct. 29; Christian Herald, Oct. 21; Associated Sunday Magazines, Oct. 25. If you wish to enter this easy contest, look for our ad. in any of above magazines, or write us at once for details of explanation. Contest closes Dec. 31, 1908, at 5 P. M.

A. S. HINDS, 190 West Street, PORTLAND, MAINE

CORNISH Sent To You For A Year's Free Trial

Name Your Own Price and Terms.

Why Shouldn't You Buy As Low As Any Dealer?

More than 265,000 people have saved from $25 to $150 in purchasing a high grade organ or piano by the Cornish plan. Here is our offer. You select any of the latest, choicest Cornish styles of instruments,—we place it in your home for a year's free use before you need make up your mind to keep it. You state your own terms, taking two years to pay if needed. That's the Cornish plan in brief. You save one-third to one-half what any other maker of high grade instruments must charge you—you buy as low as any dealer.

The New Cornish Book shows the choicest of 50 latest beautiful and artistic Cornish styles and explains everything you should know before buying any instrument. It shows why you cannot buy any other fine organ anywhere. Let us send it to you free.

Save one-third—buy on the Cornish plan. ESTABLISHED OVER 56 YEARS

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure THIS DOES IT ALL

The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles astonishes agents. V.C. Gleason, Colo., U.S., sold 22 pairs of Positive Tension Shears in 3 hours, made $13.50. We guarantee TO SHOW ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $5 to $10 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents than are not found in stores, than any other house in the U. S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address Thomas Mfg. Co., 168 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.

Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

YOU CAN AFFORD

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

"Don't hide your light under a bushel." That's just why we talk about

SAPOLIO

EXTRA BUILDING MATERIAL BARGAINS.

Readers, Why Don't You Write Gordon-Van Tine Company and Get Their Catalog?

Do you know that you can get good pine doors for 77c up; good windows 66c up; hotbed sash, all ready with glass, for $1.69; six-year guaranteed, waterproof, fire-resisting roofing $1.25 per square; building paper, 500 square feet, 37c up; storm doors, $1.29 up; and 5,000 similar bargains in building material at half price of Gordon-Van Tine Company, Davenport, Iowa?

This is the famous concern owning the largest plant in the world selling all building material direct to user—farmer, contractor or carpenter.

No matter what state or town you live in, Gordon-Van Tine Company guarantee you half dealers' price, safe delivery and entire satisfaction! You can build your house or barn or church or store cheaper than you could by buying the old way ten years ago.

Why not have new doors, new hardwood floors, a better stairway, pretty windows, new porch, new roof? Why not fix up and get all the material at Gordon-Van Tine Company's low wholesale to user's prices?

Write for their free catalog. Get their figures free on your bill of material. Get their book of plans of houses, barns and all building for stock or poultry for 10 cents to pay the postage. Gordon-Van Tine Company want your name and address. Write and mention this paper. Their address is: Gordon-Van Tine Company, 1214 Case Street, Davenport, Iowa.

X-RAY Stove Polish

Trade Mark
Free Sample. Write Dept. B-11
Lamont, Corliss & Co. Agts. 75 Hudson St. N.Y.

LASTS LONGEST

Christmas Post Cards

FREE Six finest gold embossed Christmas Post Cards, new and lovely designs, in exquisitely beautiful colors, our big post card Bulletin and trial subscription to popular magazine, all free if you send 10 cents for mailing expense. 18 cards, all different, and one year's subscription, 25 cents. Your own cards and subscription free if you send us orders for 2 friends. HOUSEHOLD, 838 Jackson St., Topeka, Kan.

SPRAY It will pay you to spray your fruit trees and vines for protection from scale and all insect pests and fruit diseases. FREE Instruction Book shows the famous Garfield, Empire King, Orchard, Monarch, Leader and other sprayers; also gives a lot of formulas and other valuable information. Field Force Pump Co., No. 75-11th St., Elmira, N.Y.

CORNS Do you know what a relief it is to be free from corns? A-CORN SALVE removes corns and all, quickly and painlessly, without danger of poison. 15 cents at druggists or by mail. Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia

RARE OLD PRINTS add beauty and dignity to the home. We want American art. Enrich your home with the Italian, French, English, German and Japanese Prints. As an introduction, we will send for $5.00, express prepaid, an exquisite 16th Century Italian Print, Bible subjects, framed in perfect taste. MARSALA COMPANY, 225 Fifth Avenue, NEW YORK

PULPITS, Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only: C112 Church Furniture, School Desks $112; L112 Lodge Furniture, Opera Chairs $112; B112 Bank Furniture, Office Desks $112. E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

LAWN FENCE Many designs. Cheap as wood. 32 page Catalogue free. Special Prices to Churches and Cemeteries. Coiled Spring Fence Co., Box D Winchester Ind.

15 CENTS A ROD For a 42-inch Hot Fence; 27c for 47-inch Farm Fence; 37c for 50-inch Poultry Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. 68 styles and heights. Catalog free. Write for it today. KITSELMAN BROS., Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

PATENTS that PROTECT Our 33 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 6 cts. stamp. P. S. & A. B. LACEY, Rooms 20-30 Pacific Bldg., Wash., D.C.

PATENTS SECURED OR FREE RETURNED. Free report as to Patentability. EVANS, WILKINS & CO., WASHINGTON, D.C.

AGENTS Portraits $35, Frames 15c. Short notices in the columns. Consolidated Portrait Co., 290-145 West Adams St., Chicago

Good Night!

Written specially by Mr. Sankey as a memorial to Dwight L. Moody.

Words by SARA DOUDNEY

Music by IRA D. SANKEY

1. Sleep on, be - lov - ed, sleep, and take thy rest; Lay
2. Calm is thy slum - ber as an in - fant's sleep; But
3. Un - til the shad - ows from this earth are cast, Un - down thy head up - on thy Saviour's breast; We love thee well, but thou shalt wake no more to toil and weep: Thine is a per - fect til He gath - ers in His sheaves at last; Un - til the twi - light

Je - sus loves thee best—Good-night! Good-night! Good-night!
rest, se - cure and deep—Good-night! Good-night! Good-night!
gloom be o - ver - past—Good-night! Good-night! Good-night!

Copyright, 1884, by IRA D. SANKEY.

Until the Easter glory lights the skies,
Until the dead in Jesus shall arise,
And He shall come, but not in lowly guise,
Good night!

Until, made beautiful by Love Divine,
Thou in the likeness of thy Lord shalt shine,
And He shall bring that golden crown of thine,
Good-night!

From HALLOWED HYMNS NEW AND OLD. By pet.

THE DRUNKARD'S HOPE

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

MORE than two thousand five hundred years ago, we have the witness of Isaiah that pride and drunkenness can co-exist: "Woe to the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim!" (R.V.) How many a man has become a drunkard through his sinful, foolish pride that he was able to take without harm to himself more stimulant than others could bear! How many an author, poet, professional man, vain of his talent, has taken stimulants with the idea of excelling himself by overdriving his brain and nerves, and so has become its slave!

Few humble men are drunkards. Men think lightly of fleshly sins. How many a manslaughter or murder has been leniently dealt with because the murderer was beside himself with drink! But God, the righteous Judge, excuses drunkenness no more than any other sin. "Woe," he says, "to the crown of pride of the drunkards of Ephraim, and to the fading flower of his glorious beauty, which is on the head of the fat valley of them that are overcome with wine!" (or margin, "smitten down with wine.") "Be not deceived," writes the apostle Paul, "neither fornicators, nor idolaters, nor adulterers, nor effeminate, nor abusers of themselves with mankind, nor thieves, nor covetous, nor drunkards, shall inherit the kingdom of God" (I. Cor. 6: 9, 10). Fleshly sins are as really sins in God's sight as those which men are most hard upon, such as thieving, extortion, or anything which touches the rights of property. In the sight of God, the bodies of his people are the temples of the Holy Ghost, and it is the utmost desecration to give them consciously over to a foreign power, which plays with and dominates the will. "The body is . . . for the Lord; and the Lord for the body" (I. Cor. 6: 13). And surely the woe of God follows the drunkard. His clothing, if he is poor, his house and furniture if he is in better circumstances—in every case his wife and children—tell a tale of woe. Whenever he is sufficiently free from his tyrannical master to have any expression upon his face, it is generally an expression of sorrow or of disappointment. It speaks of the Lord's "woe." The overstrained nervous system, the disorganization of the digestion—oh, how they speak of the Lord's "woe"! His difficulty to get employment, the way in which he is shunned in respectable society, all speak of the Lord's "Woe to the drunkards."

It is blessed to turn for a moment to another picture. "In that day shall the Lord of hosts be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, unto the residue of his people." If the Lord is our crown, that is not "the crown of pride." If he is the "diadem of beauty," it is the reverse of the "fading flower of the glorious beauty which is at the head of them that are overcome with wine," which shall be as "the hasty fruit before the summer, which, when he that looketh upon it seeth, while it is yet in his hands, he eateth it up." The drunkard thinks to make a useful servant of the dangerous beverage which masters him; but the true child of God lets himself be mastered by a rightful Lord who becomes for him "a spirit of judgment to him that sitteth in judgment, and for strength to them that turn back the battle to the gate."

In Josiah's time, as in the present day, there were those who had been a residue of God's own, but they "also have erred through wine, and through strong drink are out of the way; the priest and the prophet have erred through strong drink. They are swallowed up of wine, they are out of the way through strong drink; they err in wisdom." It is a terrible picture, and yet, alas! not an untrue one.

Pleased with the Red-Letter Bible

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have received the Red-Letter Bible—the four-dollar one—and am very much pleased. It is even better than I expected, and I thank you very much for it. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is also at hand, and when the first copy came it was like meeting an old friend.

JOS. E. EACH.

Atlanta Theo. Seminary.

Music Lessons Free

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A wonderful offer to every lover of music, whether a beginner or an advanced player.

Ninety-six lessons (or a less number if you desire for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Banjo, Cornet, Sight Singing or Mandolin) will be given free to make our home study courses for these instruments known in your locality. You will get one lesson weekly, and your only expense during the time you take the lessons will be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small. Write at once. It will mean much to you to get our free booklet. It will place you under no obligation whatever to us if you never write again. You and your friends should know of this work. Hundred of our pupils write: "Wish I had known of you school before." "Have learned more in one term in my home with your weekly lessons than in three terms with private teachers, and at a great deal less expense." "Everything is so thorough and complete." "The lessons are marvels of simplicity, and my 11-year-old boy has not had the least trouble to learn." One minister writes: "As each succeeding lesson comes I am more and more fully persuaded I made no mistake in becoming your pupil."

Established 1898—have thousands of pupils from eight years of age to seventy.

Don't say you cannot learn music till you send for our free booklet and tuition offer. It will be sent by return mail free. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City

WANTED

To Hear From Owner Having a Good Farm

For sale. Not particular about location. Give price and description and reason for selling. State when possession can be had. Will deal with owners only. By my unique plan of selling properties you pay not a cent of commission to any one. Write to-day for full particulars. Right now I have more customers for farms than I have farms for sale. If you want a quick sale, let me hear from you immediately and I know you will be pleased and surprised with my new methods of bringing buyer and seller together.

L. DARBYSHIRE, Box 378B. Rochester, N. Y.

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS

RUNS EASY No Backache SAWS DOWN TREES

weighs only 41 lbs. EASILY CARRIED

BY ONE MAN, with the FOLDING SAWING MACHINE. It saws down trees. Folds like a pocket knife. Saws any kind of timber on any kind of ground. One man can saw more timber with it than 2 men in any other way, and do it easier. Send for FREE illustrated catalog, showing latest IMPROVEMENTS and testimonials from thousands. First order secures agency. Address FOLDING SAWING MACHINE CO., 163-164 E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

$2.45 for THIS WASHER

Guaranteed equal to $5.00 and $6.00 machines sold by dealers and agents. Made full size. Will last for years. We sell Washers and Wringers to users at manufacturers' prices. Save you $2.00 to $3.00 on washer and $1.00 to $2.00 on wringer. Write today for Catalogue. It will save you money.

FAVORITE WASHER CO., BOX 42, MUNCIE, INDIANA.

THREE MONTHS' FREE TRIAL

on every sewing machine we sell. We ship on Approval and trial to anyone and Prepay Freight. If not satisfied after using it three months don't pay a cent. Factory Prices Do not anyone at any price until you receive our latest Art Catalog and learn our unheard of prices and marvelous new offers. Write us a postal and everything will be sent FREE by return mail. You will get much valuable information. Do Not Wait; write it Now! MEAD CYCLE CO., Dept. 701 Chicago

Arcadia, the Farmer's Paradise

Pay One-tenth Down, Balance Small Monthly Payments, for orchard tracts in Arcadia, 22 miles by rail from Spokane. Four transcontinental R.R. We plant the trees, prune, spray and cultivate them for four years free of charge. Irrigation system installed. Ideal climate. Should pay $1,000 a year per acre. Write for further particulars. Grant & Dye, Inc., 832 American Bank Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure, sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for 50c. size, postpaid. DR. LYONS, 180 Day St., Pekin, Ill.

FENCE

STRONGEST MADE. Built strong chicken-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue free. COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47 Winchester, Indiana.

AGENTS

NINE IN ONE $75 monthly. Combination Rolling Pin. Nine articles combined. Lightning Seller. Sample free. FORSHEE MFG. CO., Box 206 Dayton, O.

The Fashion Authority of the World

In Paris the FRENCH EDITION of THE DELINEATOR has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind. This is the tribute of Paris to BUTTERICK FASHIONS.

In America THE DELINEATOR is the one style authority. It is made so by its association with the great fashion autocrats of Paris and the creators of style in this country, and by its own unsurpassed staff of fashion artists.

Special Features in the December Delineator

Back to the Bible:—Can we do the things that Christ did? Have we failed to interpret the message of the Messiah?

The Lord's Prayer by Sigismond de Ivanowski, is the most striking art feature of the Holiday Season. Reproduced in six full-page color plates.

Why a Hundred Sunday-Schools Have Succeeded:—A study of the methods of Sunday-School work, which should be read by every Sabbath-School teacher and Church worker. A series beginning January.

$1.00 per year

Subscribe now with any merchant selling Butterick Patterns or any newsdealer, or send direct to

15 cts. a copy

THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING CO.

Butterick Building,

New York

How can you better invest $1.75 a year for your family than by subscribing
now for

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

THE NATIONAL FAMILY PAPER

The Companion introduces into a home the company which is not only good, but wise; not only wise, but entertaining. It is adapted to safe fellowship with young people, the agreeable society of men and women, and cheerful, optimistic comradeship with the aged. The contents for 1909 will include

50

Star Articles

—Contributions to Useful Knowledge by Famous Men and Women.

250

Good Stories

—Serial Stories, Stories of Character, Adventure and Heroism.

1000

Up-to-Date Notes

on Current Events and Discoveries in Nature and Science.

2000

One-Minute Stories

—Anecdotes and Miscellany. Editorials, Children's Page, etc.

As much reading in the year as would fill twenty 400-page novels or books of history, travel or biography ordinarily costing $1.50 each. Send for Free Sample Copies of the Paper and Illustrated Announcement for 1909.

FREE to JANUARY, 1909

AC114

Every New Subscriber who at once cuts out and sends this slip (or the name of this publication) with $1.75 will receive All the remaining issues for 1908, including the Thanksgiving and Christmas Holiday Numbers, FREE The 1909 Calendar, "In Grandmother's Garden," FREE lithographed in thirteen colors, size 8 x 24 inches, Then The Youth's Companion for the 52 weeks of 1909—a library of the best reading for every member of the family.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

$1.50 a Year—5c. a Copy
Published 52 Times a Year

New York — Thanksgiving Issue — Nov. 25, 1908

Vol. 31—No. 48
Offices: Bible House, N. Y.

Copyright, 1908, by Louis Klopsch

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Drawn for The Christian Herald by F. J. Boston

AT THANKSGIVING TIME

An Income for Your Wife

Whole Life
Plan

Payable to her Monthly for twenty years or for life, if you should be taken from her; or

Endowment
Plan

An Income payable to Yourself Monthly for twenty years or for life, to support you in your declining years, if you live—are the great features of the

New Monthly Income Policy

issued by

The Prudential

A Monthly Income coming with absolute certainty will enable the mother to keep the family together and the children at school—

The Income cannot be encumbered or depreciated. All worry about safe investment is eliminated.

COST OF "WHOLE LIFE PLAN"

At age 30, for $167.35 a year, during your life (a saving of $13.95 a month) your Family Will Receive after your death $50.00 Every Month for 20 years, or $12,000 in all!

At slightly higher cost, the income would continue for life!

THE COST IS LOW

Write for Rates at Your Age and Learn How You can Provide an Absolute, Guaranteed Income for Your Family, or for Yourself after 20 Years. State Plan Preferred.

Address Dept. 70.

The Prudential Insurance Co.
OF AMERICA

Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey

JOHN F. DRYDEN, President.

Home Office: Newark, N. J.

Receiving her Monthly Income Check from the Prudential Insurance Co.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

A Native Convert and His Family

Baskets Used by the Missionaries in Moving their Homes

Buddhist Head Priest and Novice

PRIESTS AND PRINCES HEAR THE GOSPEL

TWO missionary families in Nan (Siam), returned to America lately on account of failing health, leaving Dr. Peoples and myself alone. Our nearest neighbors are more than 200 miles away. There has been much sickness. A Siamese official—a Catholic—died recently in the hospital after weeks of suffering. He was most grateful for our ministrations. As there are no Catholics in Laos, he was buried from our chapel, a large number of Siamese officials being present. He was laid to rest in our little Protestant cemetery.

A Buddhist abbot entertained us at his temple several months ago, when we arrived from the mountain in a pouring rain. We photographed the kindly old man as he sat with a Buddhist novice reading the palm-leaf sacred books of his religion. Until Dr. Peoples had Laos type cut, these were all the books the Laos had. Some of our missionaries go up the river as far as five hundred miles north of Bangkok, to give the Gospel to these dear people, among whom we have labored for twenty-five years.

Lately, I visited a place ten miles north of the city of Nan, where I held daily meetings with many who show a desire to accept Christ as their Saviour. One old man of seventy-two years, after an earnest talk, said, "I have worshiped Buddha all my life, and I love him; but I love Jesus, for he fulfils all the truth of Buddha." I wish you could have seen the light of joy in his face!

Saturday night, a head priest from far north came at sundown and became deeply interested in the new truth, staying until near midnight. Last night he came again, and Nai Tun, who was nineteen years in the priesthood, and has a wonderful knowledge of the Pali scriptures, held him entranced until after midnight by his comparison of the two religions, when a thunder storm broke up the conference.

The wife of a Burman lost her little child lately by an accidental fire. The last conscious act of the little one was to take a cup of milk from my hand. Yesterday, the sorrowing mother came to me for comfort, and I told her how tenderly the Saviour loved little children; that heaven was full of child angels.

"Oh," she exclaimed, "I dreamed I saw my baby, with such a company of little children! And as I ran after, crying and holding out my arms, my little girl turned back and threw cool water over my hot, tired body. Do you think she meant to baptize me?"

It was easy to show this poor mother her duty, if she hoped to join her child in heaven.

By MRS. SARAH WIRT PEOPLES

We sincerely hope that your readers will help our Boys' School, as it is doing a splendid work and is badly crippled for lack of funds.

Mrs. Barrett, one of our missionaries, was taken very ill and has gone to the coast with her husband for recuperation. We hope our Heavenly Father will soon restore them to us and the work, as we are alone in the station now. Some of our native help are very good. Elder Noi-Chai ("Little-heart"), who is great-hearted, is our first dispensary assistant. He speaks English well, and is remarkably efficient, and his beautiful Christian character is a power in Nan. Princes and officials honor him. Many cases who come to us for medical treatment are cured, and have the Gospel preached to them. They go away rejoicing in body and in spirit.

We have received several letters, asking how many native evangelists we could send out effectively. Mr. Barrett has replied that he would be glad to keep eight men out in such work, while I, in full confidence that you would support our efforts, have sent out three men, and they have done splendid work. I hope your readers will support us in this greatly needed work.

Dr. Peoples and I are now alone, with no helpers nearer than Lakawn, 200 miles away. Ten days is the quickest time it can be made in. We expect to stay in Nan until help comes, or we die. We could not do otherwise. Twenty-six years of caring for these dear people has created a bond not easily broken. You and your readers have been most generous in aiding our chapel work. We need helpers now.

The Presbyterian Mission at Nan, in the Laos country of Siam, from which Mrs. Peoples writes, has been doing an excellent work for many years past. The climate is one that is very trying to the health of the workers. Native evangelists are greatly needed to assist the white missionaries. They have been compelled to move from their first location on account of the unhealthiness of the situation. One of the photographs sent by Mrs. Peoples shows the odd-looking woven baskets in which the missionary household effects were carried across country. Another shows a group of native converts. A very interesting photograph is the portrait of a young Laos princess—a friend of the good missionaries. Her sweet kindly face and simple dress will appeal to those who usually associate royalty—and especially Oriental royalty—with a great display of wealth and ornaments in attire and surroundings. Mr. and Mrs. Peoples have appealed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to interest its readers in supporting in their field a number of native substitutes, at $100 a year each. Several are already engaged, but the need is urgent. Any reader of this journal desiring to have a share in this deserving foreign missionary work among the heathen tribes of Laos can have a native missionary substitute individually assigned to him by arrangement with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Photographed specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A Little Princess of the Laos, Siam

JUDGE TAFT ON FOREIGN MISSIONS

JUDGE TAFT'S first appearance before any body representing all parts of the country was before the General Executive Committee of the Women's Foreign Missionary Society on November 6. His address delivered on that occasion was one of the most eloquent pleas for work in heathen lands ever delivered by an American statesman, and its effect was very strong both on the people gathered at the meeting and the general public who read the brief sketch of his speech in the papers throughout the country.

The meeting was held in Trinity Methodist Episcopal Church. It was filled with women of the society and a large number of prominent pastors and missionaries from foreign fields. Bishop Hartzell presided, and introduced the President-elect. Judge Taft was greatly surprised and pleased at the greeting accorded him when he stepped forward. Every woman in the church had been provided with a small American flag. These were waved above their heads, while hearty applause made the Judge feel that he was among friends. His speech traced the wonderful influence exerted by our missionaries abroad—an influence which Judge Taft has had an opportunity to study at first hand in his residence in the Philippines and in trips to China, Japan, India and other countries. For the speech given below we are indebted for the most part to the Cincinnati Enquirer, in which a very full account appeared. The President-elect said in part:

"I have been making speeches," said the Judge smiling, "upwards of six weeks and whether I talked in the wilderness or not the strain on my voice was just as bad. I have a troublesome frog in my throat that I cannot get rid of, and I hope that this will be sufficient excuse for any shortcomings this morning.

"I am deeply interested in missionary work, especially in the foreign fields. I am able to speak of it as one who has observed the effect of the work of the missionaries upon the people of the dependencies and in other lands, and as one who considers missionary work absolutely indispensable to civilization. The influence of the church and the work of the missionary are the most effective agencies in making useful and strong the kind of responsibility which is absolutely necessary to the extension of popular government for which we stand among other peoples. One of the effects of the work of Christian missionaries is the respect in which women are held in countries which are Christian and the absence of that respect in non-Christian countries. This respect is pronounced in the Philippines.

"I was delighted by one reference made by Bishop Hartzell in introducing me. That was that Methodism is expansion. I always knew that. The argument that we have enough to do at home without doing work for humanity abroad does not meet the situation. Suppose that you give up your work in foreign lands. Do you suppose that the money now given for the work would be given to home missions? It would not. It is only an argument of laziness to say that we have enough to do at home."

Judge Taft said that he knew we had many problems at home and that they all had need of attention. "But," he asked, "can we afford to wait until all of these reforms are accomplished before turning our attention to others?" He said that the best plan was to try and solve the problem at home and abroad at the same time. In considering the subject of the Philippines he said that the islands had been thrust upon us by fate, and that we should not count the cost in improving their condition. Our relations with them were rather sentimental than commercial.

Turning his attention to China, he said its development was the greatest world movement now going on, and that the outposts of civilization in China were held by Christian missionaries. The reason they were attacked in the Boxer rebellion was because they had gone further than any one else. He took occasion to refute the charge that missionaries were a cause of worry to our diplomats; on the contrary, they made our country respected abroad.

At the close of the address Mrs. J. H. Knowles, of New York, responded and pledged the prayers of the society that Judge Taft "may have the wisdom that comes from above," and stated the society's appreciation of the honor done them by Judge Taft. As he left the building they sang "America."

Photo Underwood and Underwood

President-Elect Taft Addressing the Meeting of Missionary Societies

New York's Postmaster Shot

POSTMASTER MORGAN, of New York, who has charge of one of the world's greatest postoffices, was recently the object of a murderous attack made by a madman. The assailant fancied he had a grievance against would know him. Twice he went to his house, but was not able to see him. He haunted the vicinity of the postmaster's summer home during the vacation, but for some cause his murderous purpose was not then carried out, and Mr. Morgan did not even know he was being followed.

On November 9 Mr. Morgan, accompanied by his daughter, a girl of fifteen, was on the way to the office. He had just reached Broadway from Riverside Drive, when the maniac confronted him. "Are you Postmaster Morgan?" he demanded. "Yes," was the reply.

Without another word the assassin drew a revolver and fired. The postmaster sank to the sidewalk, while his daughter tried to assist him. The maniac then turned his pistol on himself and died a short distance from his intended victim. Mr. Morgan, bravely helped by his daughter, returned to his home a short distance away. Physicians found that the bullet had passed through the abdomen, but had severed no intestine—a most miraculous escape. As this paper is going to press it seems probable that Mr. Morgan will recover and be able to once more resume the public duties for which he has shown so much fitness. Mr. Morgan won his way to the top by sheer ability, starting as a postman. He has been postmaster about two years.

Postmaster Morgan

the postal authorities in New York, and had evidently planned to murder Mr. Morgan to revenge himself. The man last July conceived the idea that the postmaster, whom he had never seen, was persecuting him, and wrote a public letter saying it was necessary for him to be removed. He studied a picture of his intended victim so he

High Grade Pictures

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The pictures are received and I thank you for your kindness in sending them. They are just the high-grade pictures I need for decorating my newly furnished room. Wicklife. O. E. A. PHILLIPS.

Germany's New Ambassador

COUNT JOHANN HEINRICH VON Bernstorff, the new Ambassador of the German Empire to the United States, is a member of a most distinguished family. He is the fourth son of the late Count Albrecht von Bernstorff, a contemporary of Bismarck, and was born in London on November 14, 1862, while his father was German Ambassador to Great Britain. He was educated at Dresden and entered the army in 1881, serving in the First Regiment of Artillery Guards. His diplomatic career was begun in 1899, when he was made attaché at Constantinople. From Turkey he was transferred to the Foreign Office in Berlin, after which he advanced from one post to another, serving at Belgrade, St. Petersburg and Munich. He was made counselor and first secretary of the German Embassy in London in 1902. Last year he was sent to Cairo as diplomatic agent and consul-general, but early this year he was made minister plenipotentiary.

While in England Count von Bernstorff came especially under the favorable notice of Emperor William owing to his efforts toward ameliorating the strained relations between Britain and Germany. He drew up a series of comprehensive dispatches on the situation.

Count von Bernstorff wedded Miss Jeanne Luckemeyer, of this city, in 1887. They have two children. The daughter, Alexandra, is twenty years old and came out socially in Cairo two seasons ago. The son, Christian, is seventeen years old and is at school.

Count Ernst von Bernstorff, founder of the collateral branch of the family, also had an American wife. He was married in 1801 to Amerika Riedesel, Baroness zu Eisenbach, who was born in this city in 1780.

The new ambassador to the United States is above middle height, of slight figure. His knowledge of English is well-nigh perfect, and he is known as a successful after-dinner speaker and to be a witty conversationalist. In recent years he has spent his annual vacations in Germany. He attended the wedding of Prince August William in Berlin on October 22, and joined his family in Paris the following day. It is not probable that the new Ambassador will be able to come to Washington before the end of the year.

Count and Countess von Bernstorff

Successful Exploration in Greenland

GREENLAND, though it has been known to the hardy mariners of Scandinavia for a thousand years, has remained for the most part the "land unknown," with the exception of a thin fringe of coast. The lure of the North Pole has allured our present century explorers further on after a fleeting visit to its icy and rock-strewn shore.

In 1903, Mylius Erichsen, while wintering at Cape York among the Eskimos, conceived the idea of exploring the island thoroughly. After elaborate preparations, the expedition set out in 1906, and has returned with the scientific information it sought. But again the advance of geographical knowledge demanded its victims. The daring leader, one of his men and an Eskimo died of starvation while on an exploring journey from their general rendezvous.

No man was ever better fitted to lead such an expedition than Mylius Erichsen. He had previously passed much time on the shores of Greenland, and could drive the Eskimo dogs and sledges like a native. He drove his sledge from camp to camp, and became convinced that when he made his journey of exploration across the northeast coast much of the traveling would have to be done by sledges. His ship, the Danmark, sailed from Iceland on the 23d of July, 1906. On board were three Greenland drivers and over one hundred dogs. From his own country had come to take part in the expedition, Mr. Achton Friis, the well-known painter, who had an official appointment to paint pictures of scenes in Greenland. He is also a writer, and the best account of the exploring party's adventures has come from his pen. There was also a cartographer and his assistants, a zoologist, an ornithologist, a botanist, a hydrographer, a meteorologist and an additional artist. Nothing was lacking in trained men or in scientific equipment to make the expedition a success. Erichsen was himself a student of ethnography and attended personally to all researches in that department. His records were preserved though he himself perished.

The artist Friis, in giving an account of the party and the spirit in which they started, says: "The traveling was to us from beginning to end a great, splendid undertaking, with the mystical gleam of glorious adventures before us, and with sober-earnest of other adventures in the background. How I remember the first impression of the ice, when we, in dense fog over an icy sea, saw the white masses nearing us, and in dead silence gliding away! It was the first shadowing of death. We had imagined this ice to be quite different from what we found it to be. It was not the height of the ice mountains which impressed us. Here, so far towards the North, are not found the great freshwater mountains known on the coasts of West Greenland, where the huge glaciers fall down into the open sea. The glaciers we saw were smaller, and it was seldom that they came out into the sea to a great distance. Here, for nearly all the year round, the ice lies in an unbreakable wall along the coast, 150 miles to the sea. We did not meet this form of ice till we, with our boats and sledges, reached the extremities of the fjord."

The stanch planks of the Danmark had a hard battle with the sea and with the drift ice before it reached the ice boundary. This was in the harbor back of Cape Bismarck. This cape had been reached once before in 1871 by an exploring expedition led by Koldeweg. Since then it has probably seen no living creature unless some Eskimo hunters have strayed so far north. Here the intrepid adventurers remained through the fall and winter. Here the ship became firmly fixed in the ice and the fall and winter were spent in active preparatory work for the great expedition by sledge to take place in the following spring. There were a number of trips made along the coast to get acquainted with the best ways of travel, when the important trip was made. Caches, or depots, were established at various points, a most important precaution against starvation on the trip. A quantity of frozen meat and canned goods was put by in each. On several occasions explorers on the verge of starvation have managed to reach one of their caches, while otherwise they would probably have had a journey of weeks to reach their ship.

The last week in March, ten men with sledges, drawn by ninety dogs, set out on the final northern dition, which he had carefully guarded until the breath left his body. They had reached farther north than any other previous expedition. This party was delayed by the ice, and had to spend part of the summer in the Fjord of Danmark. The explorers found many animals living on the Greenland coasts even well to the north. The musk ox was frequently seen and foxes and hares seemed to thrive in that cold climate. Bears were found in great numbers. In summer walrus appeared. Seals were perched about the rocks, while the swarms of birds both of swimming and wading varieties were beyond computation. Ravens, white grouse and hawks appeared for a while during the summer months. On the narrow strips of coast between the ice of the sea and the ice of the land, was found a poor and shriveled herbage, the low Arctic willow, mosses, lichens, and a few wild flowers.

The rock was for the most part gneiss. The mountains in the part of Greenland charted by this expedition do not rise to the heights seen in Franz Joseph's Land, where they attain an altitude of ten thousand feet. They found that at some earlier day the Eskimos had lived in this part of Greenland.

They found ruins of the stone houses built by Eskimo hunters, and utensils and weapons were found along the coast from Cape Bismarck where they left the ship to Independence Bay. Nothing, however, was discovered to show that any one had made a permanent habitation in Pearyland. It is what Friis referred to as "a poor and deserted land, but a magnificent land; the sun flinging its beams upon the ice in splendid colors—a rainbow come down to earth." As a result of this expedition practically all of Greenland has now been charted.

The Entrance to the Great Ice Cavern expedition. They were divided into four parties—two main parties to carry out the work of exploration and two subordinate parties which were to return to the ship as soon as the two main parties could carry their supplies of food for the northern trip.

One of the main parties went north to Pearyland to make maps of the country around Peary's Cache. The division was led by Koch, and after successfully accomplishing their task, reached the ship on June 23 of last year. Mylius Erichsen's party went straight west through Independence Bay and Peary Channel to Cape Glacier. The leader and a Dane and an Eskimo left the party for a more extended trip. First the Dane died, then Erichsen himself. The Eskimo, more inured to hardship though far spent, managed to reach a little cave in the rocks on Lambertland, where the rest of the party found his body. By his side were the records of the expe-

The coming of winter always brings to the door of the missionary in Turkey a great many cases of deserving poor, who need to be relieved in order that they may pass the winter without actual suffering; and in some cases, such relief is necessary in order to save life. In many parts of the interior the crops have not been remunerative, and in all parts, the promulgation of the new constitution has brought in a large number of exiles just at the beginning of winter, many of whom come with little means for providing themselves with the necessities of life, or of making a modest beginning in the way of obtaining a livelihood. We have decided to send out this appeal to our kind friends, hoping that a small sum may be realized for use during the coming winter, both in the city of Constantinople and in the interior of the country. The funds realized will be allotted by our missionary body in Constantinople. (Signed) W. W. PEET.

The Suffering in Armenia

REV. W. W. PEET of the Bible House, Constantinople, whose cable message to Dr. Klopsch appealing in behalf of 20,000 starving Armenians in Mardin, we published lately, sends this letter explanatory of the situation:

"CONSTANTINOPLE, October 16.

"Dear Dr. Klopsch: Our missionaries in the interior have been accustomed to meet and relieve, to the extent of their ability, such cases of extreme want as come under their notice in their several localities.

THE WINGS OF THANKSGIVING

A THANKSGIVING SERMON BY REV. J. M. FARRAR, BROOKLYN, N. Y.*

IN A VISION Isaiah saw the seraphim. This is the only passage of Scripture in which they are mentioned. The prophet was specially impressed with their wings, and makes no other reference to their appearance. Each seraph had six wings, four used for covering, two for flying. "With twain he covered his face, and with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly." Covering the face indicated humility, and covering the feet indicated reverence. Humility and reverence represented by folded wings that otherwise could be used for flight.

Every life has at least six wings. The majority of Christians try to use all of them in flight. With six wings they would fly. In the exercise of thanksgiving we are specially ambitious in the use of all our wings for flight. A thanksgiving sermon usually soars as high as a Fourth of July oration. With twain, twain, twain, thanksgiving would fly. There are thousands of Christians who will not assemble in their several places of worship to render thanksgiving to Almighty God. Why? Because they cannot use all their thanksgiving wings in flight. If by sorrow or disappointment they have been made to fold four of their wings in humility they will not attempt flight with the other two.

Christians should know that thanksgiving is not dependent upon happiness and success. There are certain functions of the heart that fortunately are independent of happiness. Faith, hope and love are often brighter when happiness is obscured. Faith rises above obstacles. Faith has wings. Hope lifts us from the condition of a worm to the poise of a butterfly. Hope has wings. If we ceased to love when we ceased to be happy, our homes would be as desolate as Blind Tom on the desert of Sahara without a piano. Imagine a mother unable because of her unhappiness to give out love to her sick child. Love rises above obstacles. Love has wings. To faith, hope and love we can add thanksgiving.

Our attempt at thanksgiving is an expression of limitation. It is the only avenue along which we can make returns to God for his manifold blessings. Thanks are the only coin we can lay before the great white throne.

The celebrated theologian, Charles Hodge, at his fiftieth anniversary received a gift of fifty thousand dollars. Trembling with emotion, and covering himself with the wings of humility, the doctor said: "I thank the servant for a glass of water, I thank God for the gift of his Son, and thanks is all I can give you in return for his great gift. I thank you." He was rich in learning and eloquent in speech, but the nature of the gift precluded all return coin save that of thanks. Humbled by his limitations he rose higher with two wings than he could possibly have risen with six.

In my first pastorate I was taught a lesson that will remain with me during my pilgrimage. One of my parishioners was dying from the effects of a cancer that was eating away her face. Seated by her bedside I was asking myself what possible comfort this woman could find in life. Seeming to divine my thoughts she began to tell me the things for which she was thankful, and especially was she thankful that the disease was not affecting her mind. With twain she covered her face and with twain she did fly. She rose above her sorrow, and poured forth her thanksgiving as a lark rises from the meadows, ascends above the fog, and pours forth her praise half for angels, half for men.

*Pastor of the Dutch Reformed Church, Brooklyn, N. Y. TEXT: Isa. 6:2. "Each one had six wings, with twain he covered his face, with twain he covered his feet, and with twain he did fly."

Having six wings but not using them all for flight is self-restraint in terms of humility. Peter had a sword and having it would have increased his glory had he refrained from using it. Power in abeyance, ambition, not talents wrapped up in a napkin, two-thirds of our wings folded, one-third spread for flight, is a mark of greatness, not of weakness. Has sickness or trouble taken away any reasons for thanksgiving, has poverty or distress humbled us, then let us fold four of our wings in humble submission, and fly with two. When God for some wise purpose folds four of our wings, we may fly higher with the two and sing sweeter while we fly. Let all who are weighed down by some great sorrow try the two-winged thanksgiving. With four wings folded the seraph ascended to the throne, and in like manner we can approach God with our thanks, as he is not far from any one of us.

Speak to him, then, for he hears, and spirit with spirit meet, Closer is he than thy breathing, nearer than hands and feet.

There are many reasons for thanksgiving. The one for which we are now to give thanks is not where Church and State meet to acknowledge God as the Ruler of our country and to thank him for his blessings.

The President in his proclamation for this year says: "Once again the season is at hand when according to the ancient custom of our people, becomes the duty of the President to appoint a day of prayer and of thanksgiving to God." After recounting our national blessings "during the century and a quarter that has elapsed since our entrance into the circle of independent peoples," he makes the following stirring appeal: "For the very reason that in material well-being we have abounded we owe to the Almighty to show equal progress in moral and spiritual things. With a nation as with individuals who make up a nation, material well-being is an indispensable foundation. But this foundation avails nothing by itself. That life wasted and worse than wasted, which is spent in piling heap upon heap, those things which minister merely to the pleasure of the body and to the power that rests only on wealth. Upon material well-being as a foundation must be raised the structure of the lofty life of the spirit if this nation is properly to fulfill its great mission and to accomplish that which we so ardently hope and desire. The things of the body are good; the things of the intellect better; but best of all are the things of the soul; for in the nation, as in the individual, in the long run it is character that counts." If our thanksgiving were specially for "things of the body," we would be called to meet in our gymnasiums. If for "the things of the intellect," the doors of our schools and colleges would be open for our thanksgiving. The President, however, asks us to meet in our churches as the nation desires to give thanks for the "things of the soul." Why? "In the long run it is character that counts." Our President might have added, unless a nation has soul character it will not have the long run.

Listen, therefore, to our President's clarion call upon the church. "Now therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do set apart Thursday, the 26th day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and on that day I recommend that the people shall cease from their daily work, and, in their homes or in their churches, meet devoutly to thank the Almighty for the many great blessings they have received in the past, and to pray that they may be given strength so to order their lives as to deserve a continuation of these blessings in the future."

The church is specially equipped for this purpose and is therefore wisely chosen by the President for an expression of national thanksgiving. On Thanksgiving Day the church is the capitol of the United States, the sermon is the President's proclamation, and the congregation should be composed largely of those who, having served the nation at the polls, are now serving their nation at the altar.

As Christians, we have never and will never stand for a vicious union of church and State, but for this vital union expressed in a national holiday, for a thanksgiving holiday, we rejoice and are glad. "Render, therefore, unto Caesar the things which are Caesar's; and unto God the things that are God's." On Thanksgiving Day we render both at the altar rail of our nation in the church of God. "The day of thanks is more typically a national holiday than is any other. It is American and unique. Every country has one or more days set apart to commemorate independence or the granting of some great boon to its people that may be

Continued on next page

IN EVERYTHING GIVE THANKS

By MRS. MARY B. WINGATE

WE thank thee, O our Father,
For all thy tender care,
And ask that we may ever
Thy gifts with others share.
We thank thee for the comforts,
The common joys of life;
For health and strength to labor,
Freedom from want and strife.

Thanks for our common blessings,
The friends that cheer our way.
'Tis joy for them to labor,
'Tis sweet for them to pray.

Thanks for the highest blessings
Thy matchless love has given,
Faith in the world's Redeemer,
Hope of a home in heaven.

Thanks for the disappointments
That oft our hopes assail;
They teach us to look forward
To joys that cannot fail.
And so, though tears are falling
O'er joys forever flown,
We thank thee for the sorrows
Our human hearts have known.

personal, social nor really ecclesiastical, but national. We are called upon by the President of the United States to assemble in our places of worship to give thanks on behalf of our nation. It is a national thanksgiving.

When a great question of state is in the mind of our President he refers it to Hon. Elihu Root, our Secretary of State. When there is a money stringency and plans must be devised for the relief of the people, he refers the question to his Secretary of the Treasury, Hon. George B. Cortelyou. When occasions call forth military decision on land or sea he refers to Hon. Luke Wright, Secretary of War, and to Hon. Victor H. Metcalf, Secretary of the Navy. These men and their departments are specially equipped for these several duties. When the question of a national thanksgiving comes before our President it is referred to the silent member of his cabinet, the Church. On Thanksgiving Day our churches are therefore national altars

N CHURCH FEDERATIONISTS TO MEET

Bishop Doane

Rev. Russell H. Conwell

Bishop Luther B. Wilson

Rev. Dr. James L. Barton

Rev. Dr. W. H. Roberts

ONE week hence, the assembly of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America meets in Philadelphia. This notable religious event is on the calendar for the week of December 1 to 8, and the Academy of Music and Witherspoon Hall, the two largest central auditoriums, will be the meeting places. It is expected by Rev. Dr. Wm. H. Roberts, Moderator of the Presbyterian General Assembly, and Chairman of the Executive Committee for the Council, that thirty leading Protestant denominations with a constituency of fifteen million communicants, will be represented by about 450 delegates.

"The day of alienation and hostility between the different Christian denominations appears to be past," declared Dr. Roberts to the writer. "The unity of spirit of the Christian churches of to-day will be strikingly exhibited at the Council." He outlined the programme, which does not expect to produce any results in the way of organic union between the different churches, but which is expected to bring to line the various divisions of the great army of the Lord for a definite shoulder-to-shoulder advance in the interest of the moral and spiritual welfare of the country.

Each body affiliating is entitled to a representation of four delegates, and one additional delegate for every 50,000 communicants. The Council thus is given definite official relations to the constituent churches, but it has no legislative powers. Neither will it have any authority to draw up a common creed or form of worship. The matters with which it will be concerned include Sabbath desecration, marriage and divorce, child labor, the social evil, temperance, work for foreigners, for the laborers, the moral and religious training of the young, the immigrant problem, etc. Its entire membership has been divided into sixteen committees, each with a chairman. Among these chairmen are Rev. Dr. James L. Barton, Congregationalist (A.B.C.F.M.), Foreign Missions; Bishop Wm. C. Doane, of the Episcopal Church, Family Life; Bishop Luther B. Wilson, Methodist, Temperance; Rev. Dr. E. P. Gifford, Baptist, State Federations; Rev. Dr. Edgar P. Hall, Superintendent of Church Extension in the Presbytery of Chicago, Co-operation in Home Missions; Bishop E. R. Hendrix, Methodist Episcopal Church, South, Development of the Federation Movement. Rev. Dr. George U. Wenner, Lutheran; Rev. Dr. E. M. North, Methodist; the Rev. Dr. O. S. Davis, Congregationalist, and Rev. W. N. Harts-horn, are also on the list of chairmen.

An evening will be devoted to the subject of "Civic Righteousness," with Governor Hughes, of New York, as the principal speaker; there will be a missionary evening with addresses by Rev. Dr. S. P. Cadman, Rev. Dr. Arthur S. Lloyd, and Robert Speer; and an evangelistic evening, in which Rev. Dr. Charles L. Goodell, Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Bishop W. M. Bell will take part. Senator Dolliver, of Iowa; Judge Peter Grosscup, of Chicago, and Governor Ansel, of South Carolina, are listed among the speakers during the Council week.

The meeting in Philadelphia will be the first regularly organized assembly of the Christian Protestant evangelical churches of the country and marks an important milestone in the progress and development of Christian unity not only in the United States but around the globe.

J. A. S.

THE WINGS OF THANKSGIVING

A Thanksgiving Sermon CONTINUED FROM PRECEDING PAGE

considered a step on the stairway to liberty, but the Thanksgiving Day of the United States is without a close comparison in any land."

As a country many things have occurred during the last year to humble us. Wealth has taken wing, many of the industrial wheels have ceased to turn, men high in power have fallen low in disgrace. Our national growth in the "things of the soul" has not reached the level of our expectations. Fortunately it is that there are two wings with which to cover the face and two wings to cover the feet. But let us not as a nation forget that there are two wings for flight. Thanksgiving has wings.

The presence in our country of the discontented and mutinous has folded the wings of many good citizens. They think the former days were better than these. Facts are stranger than fiction, and it is a fact that in proportion to our numbers there was a larger disturbing element in the country when the first Thanksgiving was observed than there is at the present time. This first Thanksgiving was in Provincetown Harbor on November 21, 1620. There were a number of men who did not join in the Thanksgiving service and who were indulging in treasonous speech. They were not members of the Pilgrim body proper, but were sailors and adventurers who were tolerated and allowed to make the voyage because of their value as strong, able-bodied men. The weary but strong-hearted little band of Pilgrims were accordingly embarrassed and humbled, and two-thirds of their wings were folded. With twain they covered their feet, with twain they covered their faces, but with twain they flew into the presence of God with praise and thanksgiving. When one month later, December 21, 1620, the Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock, there was the same disturbing influence with which to contend. One year later the Pilgrims celebrated Thanksgiving at Plymouth Rock. After months of toil and prayer, planting and building, their first harvest was gathered. Only "twenty acres of Indian corn and six acres of barley and peas, and when the harvest was gathered they kept their New England thanksgiving. As one reason for thanksgiving we read that they assembled around "a fire of sassafras, juniper and pine, which smelled both sweet and strong." Their thanksgiving had wings.

A sad mistake came near being made when this Thanksgiving Day was appointed, but providentially the mistake was avoided.

Sad and downcast and discouraged were the hearts of those first New England settlers, in the midst of their difficulties, and they therefore proposed to set apart a day for fasting and prayer. This was suggested at one of their public assemblies, but a venerable man, having learned wisdom by age and experience, arose and spoke to them of the danger of provoking heaven with their complaints. Reviewing their mercies, he showed that they had much to be thankful for, and moved that instead of appointing a day of fasting, they should appoint a day of thanksgiving. This was done and the good custom has been continued to the present time. The venerable man's heart had wings.

Following this day of Thanksgiving, there were days and months when with twain they covered their feet, with twain they covered their faces in distress and humility. The year's meagre harvest was soon exhausted, and the historian tells us, "Strong men staggered for want of food." The Indians taking advantage of their poverty and weakness threatened their destruction. Wreckage floating near the shore was mistaken as evidence that the overdue supply-ships were wrecked. Later, showers began to fall and the ships bringing relief were sighted. One pair of wings was kept ready for flight. Another solemn day was set apart, wherein they returned glory and honor and praise with all thankfulness to God who had dealt so graciously with them.

One hundred years later, "Old Boston town" celebrated what in history is called the "Gloomy Thanksgiving." The governor of the province of Massachusetts had broken up a profitable commerce in lumber, claiming that all the fine trees must be saved for the king's navy. To-day in some of the older woods of Massachusetts, trees can be found marked with the broad arrow that denoted royal ownership. With two wings the citizens of "Old Boston town" covered their faces, and with two wings covered their feet in humility and sorrow, but with two wings they rose before the throne of God and there gave thanks. "Say not thou, What is the cause that the former days were better than these?"

Shame upon the American citizen who has the privilege of reading history and yet does not hopefully, courageously and triumphantly enter into the national Thanksgiving service.

Isaiah saw the Lord sitting upon a throne, high and lifted up; and his train filled the temple. Above the throne he saw the seraphim, but they were not speaking of the throne or of the train that filled the temple. They spake of the earth that was full of his glory. The seraphim were in heaven, but were there to give thanks for earthly blessings. The seraphim represented the highest intelligence of God's created creatures standing in his presence with thanksgiving for his glory that filled the earth. What a thanksgiving song was that! Let us catch the refrain and sing it in every home and church, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: the whole earth is full of his glory."

Some in sorrow and pain may say, "How can we sing the Lord's song?" Have they heard the music of obstacles? Obstacles ought to set us singing. "The wind finds voice, not when rushing across the open sea, but when hindered by the outstretched arms of the pine trees, or broken by the fine wires of an æolian harp. Then it has songs of power and beauty. Set your freed soul sweeping across the obstacles of life, through grim forests of pain, against even the tiny hindrances and frets that love uses, and it, too, will find its singing voice."

From our humble and reverent thanksgiving we may expect great results. After the seraphim had sung their song, prolonging the refrain, "the whole earth is full of his glory," we read, "The posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke." Through the shaking we are receiving blessings, and beyond the smoke is the fire. Our nation is being purified as with fire. President Eliot says: "During the past fifty years the world has been made over." This is certainly true of this nation. Of our country we can repeat what a Japanese says of his native land: "Nothing remains the same except the natural scenery." Every time we assemble for thanksgiving the doors are shaken and when the smoke clears away we behold the transformation. "America," said Emerson, "is only another name for opportunity."

America has wings.

Governors Chosen at the Last Election

Copyright, Pach Bros.

Chas. E. Hughes, New York, R. (Re-elected)

George Lillie, Connecticut, R.

M. R. Patterson, Tennessee, D. (Re-elected)

J. A. Johnson, Minnesota, D. (Re-elected)

Martin F. Ansel, South Carolina, D.

Chas. S. Deneen, Illinois, R. (Re-elected)

Bert M. Fernald, Maine, R.

Governor Stubbs, Kansas, R.

J. O. Davidson, Wisconsin, R. (Re-elected)

Eben S. Draper, Massachusetts, R.

Governor Quinby, New Hampshire, R.

Aram Potier, Rhode Island, R.

Thomas M. Campbell, Texas, D. (Re-elected)

Herbert S. Hadley, Missouri, R.

Wm. Spry, Utah, R.

Judson Harmon, Ohio, D.

HER HEART'S DESIRE

By VIRGINIA CHURCH

AUNT BETSY put her head out of the side door, her gray curls bobbing with excitement. "Isaac," she called to her husband, who stood leaning against the side of the barn, his head tilted to one side in an attitude indicative of listening, "you hear that cannon booming? What do you make her out to be?"

Isaac Watts remained immovable for a second, then straightened up. "It be a whaler, Betsy, and I kalkerate you be pretty safe in telling Eunice that Asa will be in to-morrow."

Aunt Betsy's head disappeared from the doorway, and when it reappeared it was dressed in a little black bonnet, and its owner was tripping out of the front gate and down the lane to Eunice Tobey's.

She found Eunice in the sitting-room, gazing out of the bay window towards the green waters, which glistened silver in the afternoon's sunlight. The wool that she had been carding was scattered about her chair, and some fleecy particles clung to her blue gown. She turned her pale, sweet face to the door as the old lady entered, and the blue eyes were wide with hope and longing. "You heard the cannon, Aunt Betsy?" she asked, her voice faltering even as she spoke.

"Bless thee, child," the elder woman said, going towards her and taking the slender form in her arms, "'twas that brought me here! Your Uncle Isaac thinks it is the Logoda."

Eunice hid her face on the kindly shoulder, and a prayer of thanksgiving rose to her lips as naturally as a song to the throat of a bird. But she drew herself up and began to gather the loose wool; the instinct of tidiness, natural to the New England woman, predominating even in moments of excitement.

"Sit a bit, Aunt Betsy," she said, her words tumbling over one another in their joyous haste, "until I tidy up, and I'll go with you to hear what Uncle Isaac says."

As they went up the street they met other hurrying figures, who stopped to shake their hands or waved congratulations from front doorsteps. At the Watts cottage were several men leaning over the fence, for, on the voice of the cannon, Isaac Watts was an authority not to be disputed; he knew them as the voices of his own children. Several whalers might be expected home within the month, and without his decree, it might be any of these.

When his decision was announced, some there were who turned away heavy at heart, longing for that particular boat which should bring home their loved ones; but the hearts of others came near bursting with joy at the news; small boys shouted at the tops of their lungs that father was coming home; small girls gurgled with joy at the thought of the familiar face and the new stories, and perhaps beads and strange toys from afar which would fall to their lot. Older girls blushed as they fingered halves of love-tokens hung on blue ribbons around their necks, and wondered if the sailor lads had kept their halves in as safe a place.

The mothers and wives it was, whose faces showed anxiety mixed with joy, for whaling was a dangerous business, and of all that went forth, hopeful, adventuresome, many returned no more; only their mates told how they had been lost, and brought messages or belongings to the bereaved family. Asa Tobey, master of the Logoda, had the name of "lucky captain" as well as of good seaman. His previous trips had been attended with remarkable success, and he had amassed a fortune of some ten thousand dollars, which for that time and people was considerable wealth. He was now past middle age, and had promised his young wife that this voyage should be his last; that he would stay at home and enjoy with her the fruits of his labors. So, of all the faces in that expectant throng, none shone with more joyous expectation than that of Eunice Tobey. Her neighbors, accustomed to the fragile beauty of her features, had never seen them village, and waving their caps in hearty signal of their joy. Strong arms crushed unrebuked the newly ironed kerchiefs, rough brown hands pressed little fingers in theirs, brown beards rubbed the fair pink cheeks of their loved ones, and many hearts throbbed against the echoing throbs of their mates. Once the noisy throng parted; it was to make way for a tall, gaunt man, who walked silent in their midst. Asa Tobey was respected by his townsmen, but too cold and stern he seemed to be welcomed as the others. One heart there was, however, that feared him not; and when he pressed her to him, and bent his dark head over her fair one, the love and joy which beamed from Eunice's eyes was proof of welcome most sincere. Across in New Bedford, also, there was rejoicing among the shipowners, for thank God for!" She arose and fastened a light hat on her head. So often had they discussed this same point that she knew it would be of no avail to urge him further. She reached the gate as the bell ceased its sounding, but looking back and seeing her husband standing in the doorway, she ran back, threw her arm about his neck, and held him close for one long embrace. The congregation saw her enter the church alone, and they shook their heads: "Surely God will visit this man with some great misfortune, he that never returns thanks for his successes, nor bows his head at the Holy Name."

But God in his great mercy seemed to have resolved on other means of bringing this wayward sheep back to the flock; for, though long known as a profane man and an unbeliever, his luck had never deserted him. Save for this one cause, Eunice was perfectly happy in those days, for Asa remained at home as he had promised, and turned his attention to market-gardening, spending much time with her. They rode and drove together, went fishing in his little dory, and when she saw a certain look well up in his eyes, like mighty springs rushing to their brim, she knew that he was thinking of the sea, and she would sit quietly by his side, slipping one of her small hands in his and stroking it with the other. At this, he would grow calm, and, gathering her into his arms, he would smile into her face and be sad no more.

Three years passed thus, dark, stormy years, when our country's quiet was broken by the noise of many cannon, and the land was as red with blood as hills dyed by flushing sunsets. At Cottage City, on the little island of Martha's Vineyard, there met together the pious, God-fearing people of the country round, who prayed for peace and prosperity to take the place of the present destruction. The people of Farmouth went in great numbers to the revivals and brought home long stories of the meetings and of the experiences that had there befallen them. Eunice's soul fired with an intense longing, but she dared not ask Asa to take her there, and even for this she would not leave him. Perhaps he divined this, or perhaps he read it in her face as she sat listening to Aunt Betsy, who had just returned from one of the meetings. However it was, he came in one day and told Eunice that he was going to the Vineyard on business, and that if she wanted to go with him she might do so. He left the room before she had time to thank him, but not before he saw the glad light in her eyes.

The whole village was astir that day, for Jonathan Briggs, the most noted preacher of the age, had evinced an interest in their work, and was to give the sermon of the evening. They spoke much of his eloquence, his great powers of persuasion, and yet withal his simple goodness. Aunt Betsy took Eunice in charge when they reached the meeting grounds, for Asa Tobey strode away, and Uncle Isaac, going from tent to tent to greet his friends, was soon lost in the crowd. At six o'clock supper was spread on snowy cloths,

Continued on page 938

"There came the noisy crowd of cheering seamen"

so transfigured and radiant as now.

That evening was spent in great preparations for the morrow, for the Logoda was to land at New Bedford, across the bay, and it would be ten o'clock before the men reached West Farmouth. The houses were swept from the spare bed-rooms upstairs to the neat cellars below, fresh curtains were taken from oaken chests, and the four-poster beds were clothed in the newest quilts. From the kitchen came the odor of pies and cake, breads, meats, and puddings; and such an ironing as there was of snowy kerchiefs and linen gowns! The morning dawned fair and clear, the town flags were hoisted on rough-hewn poles. Faces appeared at windows and doorways, looking down the street, long before the time for the hoped-for arrival.

But even the best watched pot must boil some time, and ten o'clock came in obedience to the dictates of the climbing sun and the anxious hearts, and with it came the noisy crowd of seamen, cheering to the cheering of the the trip had been a prosperous one, and many barrels of sperm oil were unloaded to be sold in the city markets, where the demand was now vastly exceeding the supply.

At eleven o'clock the church bells of Farmouth rang merrily, and the people began to pour out of their houses and down the street to the little wooden kirk at its foot. Husbands came surrounded by their happy children and side by side with the loving wife; young men with their proud families or beaming sweethearts. Eunice sat close by her husband watching jealously his every movement, lest one escape her, noting watchfully the added gray hairs, anxiously the tired eyes, and holding his hand so fast in hers that his heart-beats throbbed up through her palm into her very being. As the bells began to ring, a touch of sadness came into her eyes: "You will not go with me, Asa, this once?"

"No, foolish heart; and will you leave me so soon?"

"I must, Asa; we have so much to

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter. Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa.

Why Thankful

WE ARE accustomed to lift up thankful hearts at this season of the year for shelter, for food, for friends, for a free government—for a thousand obvious benefits which the dullest soul can comprehend. If the day which our forefathers religiously set apart for the expression of gratitude to God should have no further effect than this, it would be worth while, in that it bids us count up our mercies and for awhile forget our troubles.

For our peaceful and friendly relations with the whole world; for national exemption from plague, epidemic and disaster throughout the year; for the passing of "hard times" and the bright promise of prosperity; for the triumph of civic righteousness in many States; for the great voyage of our fleet now almost safely accomplished, and for the closer and friendlier ties created between other nations and ourselves by that voyage; for these and the unnumbered material blessings of the year, we are thankful as a people to the Bestower of all good gifts.

But it is doubtful whether many of us have thought to be thankful for what is really our greatest blessing. To our own favored land, perhaps to a greater degree than to any other, has come a heaven which is working to uplift and to bind together all classes. Even those who do not openly acknowledge the claims of the Christian religion feel its power and rise with the rest. It is the motive of universal love—the foundation of Christ's religion, and the controlling influence in His merciful life.

We can see in many ways how it is affecting the nations. It is shown in the great international gatherings, religious, scientific, professional, commercial, acquainting men of different lands with each other and thus diminishing jealousy and suspicion. It is especially manifested in the great peace movement, with its magnificent palace for meeting, and its periodical assemblies. It includes everything that is noble and godlike.

We are not far advanced as yet in the upward path—but the signs are at hand of the daybreak—of the time when perfect love shall cast out all of the old barbaric fear—the love of God and the love of man—the great ideas of fatherhood and brotherhood.

For all our blessings may we be thankful; but most of all for this, which truly crowns them all.

Lincoln's Way

FEW Presidents have had a clearer vision of their duty and responsibilities than Abraham Lincoln. One characteristic incident of his career, but little known, is especially worth recalling at the present time.

Shortly after his election, an important committee of influential business men waited upon him. "Mr. President," began the spokesman, "you know the needs of business. It rests with you to say whether or not the grass shall grow on the middle of the streets of our cities." Mr. Lincoln smiled thoughtfully as he replied to the committee, speaking slowly and with deliberation. "Gentlemen," he said, "the proper place for the grass to grow is in the fields and the meadows, and I would prefer personally to see it grow there." There was a pause and the suspicion of a twinkle in the President's eyes. "But," he continued, "I have been elected to serve the whole people and not part of the people; and, God helping me, I will do so to the best of my ability, in accordance with the constitution—let the grass grow where it will!"

The Pistol-Carrying Habit

WHETHER the contention of scientists that crime-waves are produced by certain electrical and atmospheric conditions be true or not, it would seem to be the fact that there is a very perceptible increase in crime after periods of great public excitement. Thus we have recent and almost simultaneous instances in the shooting of Postmaster Morgan, of New York, by a maniac, the shooting of ex-Senator Carmack in Nashville, Tenn., and the attempted killing of Mrs. Phipps in Denver by a mad woman with a stick of dynamite. These three startling crimes, accompanied by a number of minor cases of violence in different parts of the country, may in some degree be attributable to the influence upon weak minds of the excitement through which the country has just passed. They have also demonstrated the fact that no section of the country has a monopoly of crime, and that wherever the pistol-carrying habit prevails, deeds of violence abound.

We should like to see the passage of rigid laws, State and local, against the carrying of pistols. There are already in many places laws prohibiting the carrying of concealed weapons; but they are for the most part ineffective. So long as the sale of deadly weapons is permitted to go on unrestrictedly, just so long will they be carried privately and, in the hands of persons of quarrelsome and vindictive dispositions, they will continue to be a prolific cause of assassination, murder and homicide. All the forces of our civilization should be arrayed against this barbarous custom, which is so fruitful of tragedies that disgrace the nation, and bring sorrow and suffering to the innocent.

Make Your Life Count

WHEN a sweet and helpful life suddenly goes out and a gentle voice is hushed in death, the world is both a gainer and a loser—richer because of such a life having been spent in it, and poorer now that it has gone.

An elderly woman died in New York a few days ago, who for many years had been known to the poor of the East Side through her beautiful ministry of love and charity. To the immigrant Hebrews, Mrs. Rose Lesser was a messenger of mercy and goodness. Thousands of them mourn her departure. Like Bella Cooke, that other sainted woman whose long and beneficent life is now almost ended, Mrs. Lesser was the chosen almoner of many sympathetic people, Jews as well as Gentiles. Her charities were manifold; her whole life was a fragrant offering of love for humanity and a splendid example of the sort of service the world needs most.

These two women—queens of their sex—made the highest use of their opportunities. They made their lives count. No service was too small, no effort too trivial, if only they might help and cheer some poor, discouraged heart. Surrendering themselves wholly to this great, dominating love for others, they sacrificed themselves gladly and found their highest joy in doing good. Such love is transcendent. It soars above all earthly honors, titles and distinctions and touches the very foot of the throne itself.

So all of us in our own spheres, be they large or small, may make our lives count for something. If we live for ourselves and not for others, we miss the highest joys that can come to us this side of heaven.

Our New Serial Story

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will print, beginning with its issue of December 9, 1908, a serial story, full of human interest and delightful incident, from the pen of Agnes Lowe Ellis. It is entitled, The Little Doctor, and its hero is a devoted young physician, whose circumstances permit him to work much among the poor, without money and without price. Unlike many men of wealth, he does not settle back into a life of aimless enjoyment or desultory travel. He masters a difficult profession and practises it arduously for the good of his fellow-men.

The heroine is a bright and beautiful young girl, whose father's affairs oblige him often to visit foreign countries. She accompanies him, and her lively and vivid descriptions of strange places and people form an interesting feature of the story.

Several dramatic scenes occur in the progress of The Little Doctor. Every chapter will leave the reader pleasantly eager to get the next one. A baffling mystery is introduced into its early chapters, and it is not cleared up until the very end.

The trend of the story is optimistic. Throughout its course no encouragement is shown to the theory that men are growing worse and that life is growing harder. Everyone who rises from reading it will take hold of his own affairs with a firmer grip and a larger hope.

Superb Christmas Gift FREE

A Golden Solution to the Christmas Quandary

THE holiday spirit is abroad, the soft hum of busy plans and preparations is in the air and the mystery of delicious secrets bound up with holly and red ribbon makes us hungry for sugar plums and pudding plums, Thanksgiving turkeys, and the crackling Yule logs of Christmas Eve.

Perhaps, dear reader, there is some one to whom your heart goes out at this glad season, but for whom you cannot find just the right gift;—something, perhaps, for one of the bothersome men folk—or it may be that after a particularly hard year you feel you must curtail expenses and strike from your list the names of one or more loved ones you are accustomed to remember. Listen! Did you ever hear of the man who searched the world over to find a certain herb that after all grew right in his own door yard? The solution of the problem that troubles your heart now is quite as simple and just as near at hand.

There is not a man or woman, old or young, who would not be delighted to find by his or her Christmas stocking our wonderful Art Gallery De Luxe, or any one of the six superb masterpieces that comprise the set, already framed. Yet this magnificent collection of large and exquisite reproductions of world-famed paintings is now sent absolutely free, without money and without price, to every subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD—whether old or new subscriptions and no matter when your present subscription expires. Every picture is reproduced in fourteen colors, and measures 12 x 15 inches. For full description of this incomparable premium see page 891, issue of November 11.

To all of our readers in a Christmas quandary this means an unprecedented opportunity not only to enrich their own homes, but to make one or more handsome Christmas gifts without spending a single cent extra—or a really elaborate gift for the nominal price of a picture frame. Better still, have us send a year's subscription to the Brightest and Best Family Paper in the World to some loved one and the accompanying Art Gallery De Luxe to your own address, that you may make further distributions from it—all for only $1.50.

Should your subscription reach us too late to entitle you to this unparalleled gift, your money will be immediately refunded in full.

Address, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91 Bible House, New York City.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, November 25, 1908

	PAGE
"At Thanksgiving Time"	Cover
Burma's Princes and Priests (Illustrated)	927
Mr. Taft on Missions (Illustrated)	928
Germany's New Ambassador (Portrait)	928
Successful Exploration in Greenland (Illustrated)	929
Wings of Thanksgiving. Sermon by Rev. J. M. Farrar	930, 931
Church Federationists Meet (Portraits)	931
Governors Chosen at the Late Election (Portraits)	932
"Her Heart's Desire." Story by Virginia Church (Ill.)	933, 938
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	934
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER	935
Manchuria's Great Revival (Illustrated)	936
Nancy Beales' Thanksgiving. By Mrs. Sangster (Ill.)	937, 942
The Cedars of Lebanon (Illustrated)	938
Hints for the Holiday Time (Illustrated)	939
In a Japanese Night School (Illustrated)	940
Thanksgiving Music	941
Cuba's First President Dead (Portrait)	943
OUR MAIL-BAG	944, 945
Germany's Hall of Fame (Illustrated)	945
A Southern Florence Nightingale (Illustrated)	947
The New Battleship Dakota (Illustrated)	947
God-Given Wisdom. Sunday School Lesson	948, 949
Christian Endeavor and Epworth League Topics	950

THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER

Photographs copyright by Walden Fawcett

View of the New War College, from the Terrace

Gen. Wotherspoon, College President

The Great Library of the New War College

The New Army War College

THE Army War College of the United States was formally opened in Washington on November 9. General W. W. Wotherspoon, U.S.A., the President of the College, presided, and Secretary Root, who is called the "father" of the institution, made an address to the student class, which numbers twenty-two members. For some time the United States Navy has enjoyed the benefit of an ideal Naval War College at Newport, R. I., and now the other arm of the service has been provided with an equally admirable institution, where officers of the regular army and the National Guard will get a post-graduate course in military science. The Army War College has been in operation for several years, but has occupied its present quarters only since June, 1907. The magnificent building in which it is now housed was begun February 21, 1903, when the cornerstone was laid by President Roosevelt. It was finished and ready for occupancy in the summer of 1907. A class of students was graduated within the structure the following fall, but without any formal ceremony. The official opening of the building was delayed until November 9. This new institution is to be known officially at "The War College and Engineer School of Application," and the buildings which have been provided, numbering about fifty in all, comprise not only halls of instruction, etc., for the seat of learning, but also proper accommodations for the officers and troops stationed there. The site on the banks of the Potomac has been wisely selected and has afforded the architect ample opportunity to provide for one of the most beautiful landscape settings in the country. The War College is under the control of the General Staff of the Army. Its purpose is the direction and co-ordination of military education in the Army in civil schools and colleges, at which officers of the Army are detailed, and it supplements the military education received by officers at West Point and the service schools. This War College, in its material dimensions and architectural construction and in the general plan of its curriculum, is by far the most important institution of the kind in the world. The American soldier, a splendid specimen of man, is more and more furnished with opportunities for mental and moral development.

He teacheth my hands to war. (Ps. 13: 34.)

The Bible in Five Hundred Languages

A hundred years ago, the Bible existed in only fifty different tongues; now it has been translated into 500 languages. In some cases, the Bible is the means of creating the first written form of a language for a people, and in others, it is the only method of preserving it. The natives of the island of Guam got, as their first printed book, the Bible in Chamorro, the chief language of the island. Last year, the Bible Society printed a Bible for Pleasant Island, a little spot in the South Pacific. For ten years, one missionary and his wife had been living there. He learned the language by ear and set it on paper phonetically; then he translated the New Testament into it and next the whole Bible. The translation of the Bible was paid for by the natives, who used a printing-press which the Bible Society sent to them. The book was then sent to San Francisco for binding, and the natives paid the price of the work. Some of the Indian tribes of America have had their languages put into print the first time in the Bible translation, and several tribes, almost extinct, cling to their Bibles in the native tongue as the best means of preserving their language.

The spread of the Master's kingdom has had no more faithful ally than the Bible, put into the native tongues of the nations, and the true men and women who, under the power of the Holy Spirit, interpret its teaching.

And that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father. (Phil. 2: 11.)

A World-Famed Boy Violinist

Young musical prodigies from time to time have astonished and entranced the world. Mischa Elman, the Russian Jewish boy violinist of seventeen, is attracting the attention of the musical world. Mischa was the son of a poor father, who worked very hard to maintain him while providing his musical education. When only five years of age the boy became a student in the Imperial School of Music at Odessa. His teacher of the violin was Prof. Alexander Fiedelmann, a distinguished pupil of Dr. Brodsky. He had never seen a piano before in his life, and he was so nervous as he walked over the slippery floor, that he tumbled down, fiddle and all. He was so flustered that on being asked his age, he replied, "Three months," and to the question, "How long have you learned the violin?" "Five years." Six years after, in 1902, Professor Leopold Auer, head of the violin department in the St. Petersburg Conservatory, then on a professional tour of southern Russia, heard the lad of eleven play, and was so greatly impressed with his talent that he asked the privilege of taking him to St. Petersburg to perfect his education. As the law does not allow a Jew, born outside of the city, to live either in the Russian capital or in Moscow, special permission had to be obtained from the Czar. The boy appeared at the Deutscher Liedertafel, the most important musical society in St. Petersburg. Auer always played at the opening of the season. On this occasion he was too ill to appear. Great was the astonishment, not to say amusement, of the audience, when Elman, the boy of thirteen, appeared as a substitute. He played the Mendelssohn Concerto, one of Chopin's nocturnes, and Paganini's Moto Perpetuo, with such success that the little violinist was engaged to play in concert at Berlin. Soon after he captured England with his faultless technique and his poetic insight, and then Paris with St. Petersburg, Berlin and London in its appreciation of and enthusiasm over him. The music lovers of America will have an opportunity this season of hearing this singularly brilliant boy violinist.

God is absolute melody and the taste and faculty for music in man are among the divine endowments. There is much of happiness and genuine inspiration in the melody of the human voice and in instruments made by man's hands. It has been arranged, in the providence of God, in all dispensations of his kingdom, to employ music as an important part of the worship of his house.

Praise him with stringed instruments and organs. (Ps. 150: 4)

Largest Diamond in the World

The Excelsior was the largest diamond in the world until the discovery of the Cullinan stone, a few years ago, which weighed one and a half pounds and was worth one million dollars in the rough. When the Cullinan was found, about three years ago, it was a problem with the Premier Company as to what disposition could be made of it. Its mammoth size made it unmarketable, and to cut it up into small pieces would not only destroy its intrinsic but its sentimental value; so it was determined to polish and fit it for the market. With great mechanical skill it was cut and two bad flaws were removed, leaving a stone which, when polished, will weigh between five and six hundred carats, being several times larger than the largest diamond hitherto known. To give an idea of the hardness of the diamond, it may be interesting to state that the disk on which this diamond is being polished revolves at the rate of 2,400 revolutions per minute. The stone is pressed down on this disk, which is supplied with a mixture of diamond dust and oil, by weights of fifteen to twenty pounds, and the disk will constantly turn from 7 A. M. to 9 P. M., including Sundays, for ten or eleven months before the polishing operation will be completed. The stone is being made pear shape. The commercial value of the completed stone will be about $2,500,000, but its singular character will perhaps put it at many times that price.

What values and beauties our Heavenly Father puts among even the dull, lifeless stones! How much of human handiwork also is required to finish the beauties and the treasures of earth! In olden time, there was an exceedingly precious stone which required all of a man's treasure to buy; but he secured it, and we are told that that jewel only illustrated the religion of Jesus Christ, which is a pearl of greater price than any other in the world.

When he had found one pearl of great price, he went and sold all that he had, and bought it. (Matt. 13: 46.)

Religion Very Expensive

Mr. Richard O'Bree of London has lost a fortune by becoming a Methodist. His brother, a wealthy shipping agent, left an estate worth $300,000, most of which he originally bequeathed to his brother and family, consisting of a wife and daughter. When the will, which has just been probated, was opened, it was discovered that by a codicil he revoked the bequest, on the ground that his brother and family "had become Revivalists" and that they "should not have any of his money to promote such a fanatical semblance of religion." The money goes to charity. What a perverted conscience and wicked heart this man must have had to create in him such a hatred against the religion of Jesus Christ, and the most intensely spiritual and desirable form of Christianity—that of evangelism. His brother Richard and family may or may not attempt to break the will; but if they should fail to get the money, they would not be the first persons in the world to suffer material loss for devotion to religious duty.

For I am come to set a man at variance against his father, and the daughter against her mother, and the daughter-in-law against her mother-in-law. And a man's foes shall be they of his own household. (Matt. 10: 35, 36.)

Cure for Tuberculosis of the Bones

Dr. Emil Beck, of Chicago, has discovered a cure for tuberculosis of the bones. The treatment consists in filling the cavity caused by the disease with a metallic salt and thirty grains of bismuth-subnitrate, combined with sixty grains of vaseline. The discovery was incidental to an X-ray photograph of a little invalid in the Home For Destitute Crippled Children in Chicago. The solution was applied to fix the outline of a tubercular abscess and, being left in the cavity, proved a healing agent. In a five weeks' trial, twenty out of forty crippled children in the home were cured. Medical men estimate that fully fifty per cent. of all crippled children suffer from tubercular trouble of one kind or another. What a hopeful advance science is making in the cure of human disease!

He healeth all thy diseases. (Ps. 103: 3)

MANCHURIA SWEEPED BY REVIVAL

A GREAT AND WHOLLY UNEXPECTED SPIRITUAL DEVELOPMENT IN CHINESE MISSION

MANCHURIA has been the scene of a great revival which has been felt in Liaoyang, Mukden, Newchwang, Kwangning, Chinchow, Hsinmintun, and other large cities. Thousands have been swept into the kingdom. Rev. Dr. Walter Phillips, a well-known Presbyterian missionary, writing of this extraordinary development, says: "It is probably the greatest spiritual movement yet recorded in the history of missions in China. . . . The Manchurian church was, to outward seeming, growing fair and prosperous, but the watchers could see that something was lacking. The church had had its baptism of persecution; it had its roll of martyrs; but even like the Corinthian church, the sense of sin had no grip on its members as a whole. The revival has come; and the men and women who for days wept and sobbed and debased themselves in utter contrition and agony of spirit have got a knowledge of sin, its blackness and its power, which nothing hereafter can take away. The revival has created a conscience in the church.

"It had long been the custom at most centres to have special meetings for the deepening of spiritual life at the Chinese New Year. For such meetings at Liaoyang and Mukden, the services of Mr. Goforth of the Canadian Mission in Honan had been secured. At the same time two evangelists were sent to Korea to inquire into the revival there. Of this movement we in Manchuria had, of course, heard, but most of us put it down largely to the alleged instability of the Korean character, or to the political struggles of the country. The deputation returned, and it was shortly evident that a new energy and vigor was with them. The usual meeting commenced, and soon, before the astonished eyes of the people, there began to be reproduced those outbursts of prayer and confession which had drawn the eyes of the Christian world to Korea. Mr. Goforth himself had visited Korea, and so, in a sense, the revival in Manchuria came across the border from the despised land. The Liaoyang meetings continued with increasing power, but it was at Mukden, the capital, where the Scotch Mission has a large congregation, that the revival first took shape. We outside began to hear the marvelous things of crowded meetings, of public confessions, that were soul-shaking in their intensity, of five hundred people weeping and praying with one voice till the great church shook, of requests for prayer, so numerous that they had to be reduced to writing and read out by a clerk, of restitutions made for offenses long forgotten, of offerings of money, of ornaments, of voluntary service; and of a new zeal that went everywhere preaching this new Gospel of confession and dedication. And at first these were to us but tales that grow in the telling.

"But soon the movement spread. At Kwangning, Chinchow, Hsinmintun, the same outbursts followed the preaching of the evangelist; north and south it went, till in every corner of the province the fire of Christian life blazed up with a fierceness as unparalleled as it was unexpected; till the very wayfarers on the road began to talk of the new stir in the 'Jesus Church,' till it became a byword in the villages—'Avoid these Christians; their God is a spirit of confessing who will force you to tell what no yamen torture could wring from you.'

"In each fresh centre the type of meeting was very similar. Two delegates from elsewhere would tell of the experiences of their own church, with more than the dramatic force natural to most Chinese preachers. Mr. Goforth would speak on such topics as Prayer, Sin, the Power of the Spirit—topics old enough, nor dealt with in any novel way. A period of prayer usually followed, during which the pent-up feeling of the meeting rose slowly to bursting point. Then all at once a wave seemed to stir and break on the rapt audience; with sobs, shrieks, and groans men fell on their faces or stood up and told of their sins—a very catalogue of crime—till their cries were drowned in the united weeping of the whole congregation, that gradually grew, and culminated in a great shout which startled the merchants in their shops and often brought the people to their streaming eyes could not believe. So for hour after hour it went on, till the strain was almost more than the onlooker could bear. Now was a strong big farmer groveling on the floor, smiting his head on the bare boards while he wailed unceasingly. Now a shrinking woman, in a voice scarce above a whisper; now a wee laddie from school, with tears streaking his piteous, grimy little face, as he sobbed out, 'I cannot love my enemies.' 'I am always fighting and cursing. I beseech the pastor, elders, and people to pray for me!' The again would swell that wonderful volume of united prayer, and ever as the praying sank, again the evangelist caught the dull undertone of quiet sobbing, of desperate entreaty from men and women who apparently wholly lost to their surroundings, were wrestling for peace. The meeting began at four o'clock and it was near eight o'clock when, almost by sheer force, it was brought to a close.

"Such meetings as I have described took place almost in every centre, most under the leadership of Mr. Goforth—some, and these not the least remarkable, in his absence. After each series, eager bands went out to the surrounding villages, where the like result attended the preaching of this new thing. Everywhere men gave freely of their goods as thank-offerings; many dedicated a tenth of their income or their capital in money or in kind, from the large sums of the merchants down to the poor man who craved acceptance of a brindled calf or a sack of grain, and the widow who had but two copper cash and gave her all to the church. Others vowed their time wholly or in part to evangelize their districts. A young Chinese doctor with his case of medicines went out into the wild East, and in a few days was the centre of a wonderful arising, seeing a hundred patients a day and at night preaching to great throngs. One might fill pages with a mere recital of the wonderful experiences of the volunteers who went forth to tell of the blessings they had received.

"The revival still goes on, and whereunto it will grow no man can yet tell.

"The whole Manchurian church seems stirred to its depths. The leading men are transfigured, and their ideals of sin and prayer have moved as from pole to pole; the members are one and all filled with a new zeal to go forth and tell their friends and neighbors. The very schoolboys are in the streets preaching and selling books. The girls under charge of some matron spend their half-holiday in tramps to outlying villages, when they gather the women together and preach and pray half the night. In hospitals and public institutions old jealousies and frictions are swept away, and the workers meet daily to pray for their own weak hearts and the coming of the Kingdom. Enemies have been reconciled; old feuds healed up; gamblers have been restored; opium-smokers reclaimed, and men made new.

"Of permanent results it is too early yet to speak. So far the movement has been mainly within the church, but it is already spreading, and naturally must spread to those without; so that next year should see a vast ingathering."

A Group of Chinese Converts

ple in the streets hurrying to the church doors. And out of this lamentation and bitter cry was born a sound new in Manchuria—the strong voice of united prayer that surged upward like a mighty roaring wind. This happened not once or twice; but for days and weeks such scenes were repeated.

"Words of mine will fail to convey the awe, the terror, and the pity, of these confessions. It was not so much the enormity of the sins disclosed, or the depths of iniquity sounded, that shocked one. Some of the faults confessed were venial enough. Yet these newly tender consciences were torn with as keen remorse as the greater offenders. It was the agony of the penitent, his groans and cries, and voice shaken with sobs. It was the sight of men forced to their feet, and in spite of their struggles impelled, as it seemed, to lay bare their hearts, that thrilled one, and brought the smarting tears to one's own eyes. Never have I experienced anything more heart-shaking, more nerve-racking, than the spectacle of those souls stripped naked before their fellows. It seemed to violate the privacy of the being, to outrage every instinct of the individual. And yet those most racked and torn by their emotions, once they had made a clean breast of their sin, seemed to find peace, and their faces shone with an

THE ONLY INDIA PAPER RED-LETTER BIBLE IN THE WORLD

OUR RED LETTER BIBLE marked a new era in Bible making; our India Paper Red Letter Bible has established an ideal, a standard of perfection that will probably never be surpassed—the only India Paper Red Letter Bible in the World. When our first Red Letter Bible was introduced, large Bibles were more in favor than small ones, but now the demand is for small Bibles printed from clear and easily legible type on thin paper of light weight. This demand is met in our new India Paper Red Letter Bible printed from bold face minion type.

WEIGHS ONLY TWENTY OUNCES

This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and very durable, weighs only one pound and four ounces, though the contents are exactly the same as in the former Red Letter Bible. The text is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. Then there are 268 pages of Helps (or Concordance) and 17 superb maps. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market.

OTHER SUPERIOR FEATURES

For a Teacher's Bible and for quick reference this edition of the Holy Scriptures has no equal in any Bible at any price. In addition to the Helps (or Concordance) and Maps, our Red Letter Bible contains Full References, Subject Index and Dictionary—all under One Alphabetical Arrangement—and numerous Illustrations.

We send this superb book, together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one whole year and our incomparable Art Gallery De Luxe, for only $3.

GENUINE MOROCCO BINDING

If you can afford to pay one dollar more for a much superior binding, ask for the same Bible bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leather Lining, Silk Sewed, which will wear a lifetime.

If you wish to make an elaborate and truly perfect Christmas gift that will prove a permanent source of pleasure and satisfaction, you will make a wise choice in selecting this incomparable edition of the Red Letter Bible, which is equal to any other edition at $10 or more.

We will send it with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for one year, together with our great Art Gallery De Luxe, for only $4. Address THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91 Bible House, New York City.

NANCY BEALES' THANKSGIVING

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

NANCY BEALES looked at herself in the glass. The little mirror showed her a young face, round and rosy, with dancing lights in the brown eyes and dimples in the cheeks. Nancy was twenty and had the beauty of her years. "How I wish," she said to herself, "that anywhere in this house we had a long glass, one that would let me see how my dress hangs. Never mind, I am going to the city and there I shall have a chance to see the fashions." She glanced with satisfaction at her trunk, already locked and strapped, and packed with the results of her summer's sewing. Nancy had lived in the country all her life. She was going to town to take a business position. The money she would earn as a clerk in a department store seemed very large to her, and she had visions of delight as she thought of the change that would presently come to her fortunes. Her father called from the foot of the stairs that he was going over to the village with a load from the mill, and said he might as well carry the trunk over then, buy her ticket and get her check, as to wait until the afternoon train, which Nancy was to take.

"All right, daddy," she answered him. "The trunk is waiting for you, and I'll help you carry it down."

Mr. Beales was a man in middle life, a little bent with toil, a little gray, but with keen eyes and a firm mouth, a man of even temper and strong will. It was not his wish that his only daughter should leave her home to stand behind a counter and sell goods to strangers. He would have preferred her staying with her mother, helping in the daily round, going about with the young people in the village, and after a while settling down and marrying, as his wife and he had done when they were at Nancy's age. But the girl had her share of the modern restlessness, and had visions of a career wider and fuller of opportunities than any afforded in her rural home. She wanted to get away. It was the longing of the young bird to fly from the home nest and try the strength of pinion somewhere else. Nancy's father had written to an old friend and schoolmate, who was pastor of a city church, asking him and his wife for the sake of old times to extend a friendly greeting to his daughter. "She will bring you a line from me, and I want her to be in your church and Sunday School," the good man had said. "Everything in your big city will be new to Nancy, and I expect she will lose some illusions, but it is best for us to let her go."

The mother was very silent when the family sat down to their midday meal. It would be lonesome for her when her daughter was gone. She would not have minded sending Nancy away on a visit to a relative or a classmate. When the girl had gone for a year to the academy in the neighboring county her mother had borne the separation with courage and cheerfulness. This parting of the ways was different. Nancy in her complete absorption in her own affairs had not noticed that her mother was less well than usual this autumn. Indeed, Mrs. Beales was so patient and so seldom alluded to pain or fatigue that even her husband had not observed her increasing thinness and her pallor. She was losing ground week by week, as women do who draw too freely on their capital of health in reserve. The only person who had noticed that Mrs. Beales was not well was Dr. Irving, who was acquainted with the health of the countryside as nobody but a country doctor of long experience ever is. Half-way to the station with Nancy's trunk, Mr. Beales encountered Dr. Irving driving, as he generally did, at a rather rapid pace. He pulled up when he saw the miller, with a cordial "Hello, Beales! What's this I hear about Nancy? It isn't true, is it, that you are letting her go to New York to be a saleswoman on Sixth Avenue?"

"Why, yes, doctor," Mr. Beales answered. "Mother and I have talked it over, and we thought the only thing to do was to let Nancy have her head. She has been straining at the halter for the last twelve months, and she will never be satisfied until she discovers for herself what business life means Nancy to share a room with a young woman who had been a former neighbor. It was she who had written Nancy of a vacancy in the R. & T. Department Store, and had made the engagement for her. She met Nancy at the Grand Central, and as they wended their way through the station and the crowd of eager men gesticulating and shouting, "Keb, Keb," at the top of their lungs, finally reaching a crowded street-car, the tired girl thought that arriving in town was not much like stepping off in the peaceful station up-country. "I'll take you to supper," said her friend, "in the restaurant where I usually get my breakfast and lunch. Now that there will be two of us to share light housekeep-out enthusiasm. Miss Fosdick saw the disappointment in her face, but said nothing. She had gone through the same phase of feeling in her time, and had often before witnessed it in country girls. When dreams are rudely dissipated by harsh realities there is a mental shock.

"We are in great luck to have this room, Nancy," said Miss Fosdick with decision. "The house is clean and the landlady accommodating. She does not mind our washing little things out in our own room, and she often lets us iron small pieces in her kitchen in the evening. The expenses of laundry in town are simply appalling. Then we are only five minutes from the store and that is a thing to be thankful for. Here comes your trunk. Goodness, child, what made you bring so large a one!"

"I needed things to wear," said Nancy.

"Yes, but you didn't need a trousseau. I wrote you about the black dress and collar and cuffs, didn't I? The uniform is compulsory in the store."

"I understood that," said Nancy, "but won't there be evenings and Saturday afternoons and Sundays?"

"Yes," said Emily Fosdick, "there will, and we girls often contrive pleasant little trips for the half holiday, but at night you'll be too tired after standing on your feet all day to care about making a dainty toilet. Probably you will change your dress. I always do, because it rests me to get out of the shop uniform and put on a fresh waist and skirt, but you'll want to go to bed very early for the first three months, and on Sundays you may be too tired to go to church. I don't go very regularly. It takes a lot of time to forage for meals. It won't be necessary for you to unpack all your clothes; most of them you would better keep in your trunk."

Nancy went to bed very thoughtful. As she knelt to say her good-night prayer there was a sigh in her heart that might easily have been a sob, but she controlled herself bravely. The next few weeks were hard ones for her. She found it difficult to learn the routine and to bear with the impatience and unreason of customers. It annoyed her to be obliged to consult the floor-walker on occasions when she thought she could manage an affair for herself. The long standing made her feet ache and her head throb. She missed her mother's cooking and sorely missed the merry twinkle in her father's eye and the sweetness of her mother's companionship.

She realized at the end of a week that the money in her envelope was much less than she had anticipated, because very nearly all of it was consumed in expenses. On Sunday Nancy went to church, and lingered after the service to meet the minister, who had been her father's friend. His wife and he were very cordial and the latter urged her to become a member of the Sunday School and the Christian Endeavor. The lady was turning away when an afterthought struck her, and she said, "Come home with us to dinner, my dear." The homesick Nancy accepted the invitation with genuine gratitude. It was by this time a treat to be a guest at a home table, and the minister's daughter, a girl of her own age, asked her to her special den when dinner was over. This pretty room, with its white bed and curtains, its books and pictures, was what Nancy had thought of when she had imagined herself in New York. Anything like this was an impossibility to a new

Continued on page 942

"I didn't look for you, dear, until to-night," he said to Nancy to a clever young girl, who thinks she is setting her foot on the lowest round of the ladder. Nancy has brains and she means to rise."

"Amos Beales," said the doctor seriously, "you and Hannah are making the biggest mistake of your lives. Nancy is needed this minute in your own home as she never was before. Your wife is far from well, man, and I am afraid she is going to break down. Her daughter ought to stay beside her. If Hannah and Nancy could have gone together for an outing I would not have said a word, but I don't like this. I don't like this." So saying, the doctor drove on, and Mr. Beales proceeded soberly to the station.

Arrangements had been made for ing, it will probably be cheaper for us to get our own breakfast. I know all the best places to go to, and I will soon show you how we business girls contrive to live in this big city." The meal was good of its kind and not very expensive, but the crowd, the clatter of knives and forks, the hurry and confusion and above all, the air of aloofness and indifference in the faces around her gave Nancy a sinking of the heart. Everything, even at first, was a contrast to what she had painted it in her mind. Miss Fosdick piloted her to the room that was to be her lodging and would be their united lodging. It was a fairly good-sized room, furnished with two iron beds, a bureau, a small table and two chairs, one a rocker. Nancy gazed at it with-

UNDER THE CEDARS OF LEBANON

Tallest of the Lebanon Monarchs

Young Cedars of a Few Years' Growth

Cedars at Beschereh

By PROF. R. J. ROBINSON, Assiut, Egypt
(Photos by the Author)

THREE small groups of widely scattered cedars form all that is left of the vast and apparently limitless number of trees that once covered the hills and slopes of Lebanon. The best known and best preserved are those at Beschereh. They are situated among surroundings romantic in the extreme. The platform upon which they stand lies at the foot of a precipitous and bald peak, which pushes its summit, crowned with snow even in the midst of summer, to a height of 10,000 feet. The cedars are 6,315 feet above the sea. In no other part of Syria are the mountains so Alpine-like, the proportions so huge, the setting of hills and valleys so profound and lonely. The forest is not large; it covers scarce a half dozen acres. They number 400—the tallest and grayest heads of Lebanon. Reliable authorities have placed the birth of the oldest back to a distance of 2,000 or 3,000 years. The tallest are one hundred feet in height, with a circumference of forty-five or fifty feet. Between these aged giants of the primeval forest and the young plants of a few years' growth, there are to be found trees of almost every age. [These cedars belong to the Conifers, and are distinguished by their evergreen leaves, by the horizontal roof-like spreading of their branches, by their superior size in every part, and especially by the unusual size of their cones.] Every part of them, wood, bark, limbs, cones, are saturated with resin. In the heart of the tree is found the red cedar color, but the remainder is whitish. The wood is very durable, but of rather coarse grain. On account of its brittleness it refuses to take a high polish, but for building purposes it is, perhaps, the best in the country.

We are all familiar with the regard in which the ancient Israelites held these cedars. They regarded them as the noblest of trees, as the ornament of Lebanon. The prophet Ezekiel, in searching for an object with which to compare the glory of Assyria, found nothing more appropriate than "a cedar in Lebanon, with fair branches." Again David sang "The righteous shall flourish like the palm tree, he shall grow like a cedar in Lebanon." And again "The trees of the Lord are full of sap; the cedars of Lebanon which he hath planted, where the birds make their nests." No such trees grew in the land of Israel, so that Solomon caused cedars to be brought from Lebanon for the building of the temple, and a supply from the same source was obtained for the second temple. Then, too, they were highly valued as masts for ships.

Cedars from 2,000 to 3,000 Years Old

These cedars form, as we have already said, about all that is left us of the great forests which once resisted the daily attacks of 10,000 workmen. Even these are in danger of coming to an untimely end. Their number lessens year by year. Some perish by wind and storm, others fall under the weight of great masses of snow, while innumerable limbs and branches are sacrificed to the tourist. On the other hand, young trees are constantly springing up from the roots of the old ones. Yet, being much frequented by men and even animals and insufficiently guarded, these shoots are quickly destroyed. This, however, proves that their number might be increased to any extent were the proper efforts made, and that they might again, as of old, "grow like the cedars of Lebanon."

HER HEART'S DESIRE

CONTINUED FROM PAGE 933

chickens baked to a tempting brown were passed from hand to hand, flaky bread was discussed and recipes exchanged, and pyramids of cake dismissed under sharp knives.

After the meal the people streamed in from the surrounding tents, crowding the great tent to its fullest capacity. The preacher, following, walked through their midst like some spirit of another world.

No one noticed the tall form that stepped in after him and stood in the shadow of one of the posts that supported the tent. The man's glance traveled over the kneeling figures until it reached a slender form wrapped in a clinging shawl of gray, and there rested; but presently, as the sermon progressed, his eyes turned to the face of the preacher; and something held them there. It was not indeed until the excitement of the meeting was at its height, the sermon ended, the exhortation in full swing, the amens loudest, the mourners' bench full, that they were startled by the appearance of a figure familiar to them all, yet in this holy place strangely unfamiliar, walking up the aisle with the line of the converted. When they were assured of his identity their lips moved in astonished whispers of "Asa Tobey," but as he knelt at the platform, the amens were loud and fervent.

Asa Tobey's conversion was as complete as it was sudden, and as thorough as either; his time and work were given to the church and laying aside a portion of his fortune sufficient for the comfort of Eunice, the remainder was given to charitable institutions. In 1864, two years after this, the new church was started in West Farmouth; Asa Tobey became prime leader in its progression. He gave what still remained of his once large fortune, but times were hard, the cannon of war still booming, and he obtained little aid from others. It was during this period that people remarked that Asa Tobey was breaking fast.

One evening in April, as he walked slowly toward the old church where the evening prayer meeting was to be held, he passed two small boys playing on the sidewalk. One of them whispered to the other in the very audible tones of childhood: "That be Asa Tobey agoing to get money for his church; he'd better go a-fishing."

The man, hearing them, walked on towards the church, but when it was reached, there was a great light in his face. The church members observed this, and when he arose to lead the meeting, gave interested attention. He spoke of his love for the little church and of the failure so far to get the required amount for its erection; but, he said, God was good and had suggested to him a way.

"I have been such an old sea-dog all my life," he said, smiling affectionately into the sympathetic faces turned to him, "and I know not the tricks of the land for acquiring money, but the ways of the whale I do know. This, then, is my purpose: once more will I set to sea; once more as master of a whaler will I guide my schooner to Northern waters. All the profits of the trip, be they great or small, shall be given for the erection of this church for the Master. God grant it be a prosperous one."

"Amen!" sounded an earnest chorus. The Fates conspired to the furthering of the scheme. In the week following Tobey was offered the command of a new whaling schooner, The Hunter, which one of the large shipping firms of Boston had had built for the trade. After The Hunter had sailed, amid the booming of cannon, the waving of flags, and the cheering from a thousand lusty throats, the little town, practically widowed and orphaned by this one ship's departure, settled down to the dull task of awaiting her return.

As the weary months dragged by and no word came from their loved ones, sore hearts beat within the little cottage walls, and anxiety was heavily writ on pale faces. Then dawned a morning, the sunniest in the memory of the villagers, and The Hunter returned—returned with such a record as had never been made in the annals of trade—returned with never the loss of one man.

When Asa Tobey appeared on deck the cheers were deafening, but as he stepped from the gang-plank, a kind of awe fell on the people, and they knelt before him as a god. With one strong arm around his wife, the other stretched out in blessing, he gave praise for his miraculous success, and thanked God for his gracious favor.

Called Higher

Entered into rest, John D. Kizer, of Kizer, Pa. He was born in 1827 in Sussex County, N. J., and married in 1853 Miss Beemer, of Sussex. He was a member of the Methodist Church for over sixty-five years. He was a pioneer settler and mill owner of the place which bore his name. Besides his wife, he is survived by nine children, twenty-four grandchildren and two great-grandchildren.

In his eighty-fourth year Deacon Joseph Settle, of the Baptist Church of Jefferson, Va., was called to his eternal home. He had been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD over twenty years, and with his Bible it was his favorite reading. He had been a church member for sixty years, and neither business nor pleasure ever kept him from attending its services. As a farmer he was most successful and he was highly esteemed in the community in which he lived.

HINTS FOR THE HOLIDAY TIME

The Crown of the Year

FOR several weeks before they actually arrive, coming events cast their shadows before, so far as the holidays are concerned. We often express ourselves to the effect that after the holidays the worst stress of the winter will be over. Yet everyone knows that the period between Christmas and Easter is by no means brief, either as measured by the calendar or by the number of inclement days that are as much to be anticipated in winter as fruit and flowers in summer. The holidays come as the coronation of the entire year. About this time we may expect sudden cold snaps, when the pipes burst and the plumbers try our patience. About this time, too, we ascertain that last year's overcoat, which we had fondly hoped might do for another year, is much too shabby to be worn, if a new one can replace it. The children, bless them, have been growing like weeds, and their winter wardrobes require renovation. Looking forward to the holidays and to the increased expenditure that must be ours if we make many presents, some of us are a little daunted by the stern array of necessities that confront us, saying, "Attend to us first." We are in no little danger of losing much of the sweetness of the holiday spirit if we regard these calls of the home for its actual needs as occasions to be deplored.

Said a mother the other day, "I had planned for months to send as a wedding gift to the daughter of a friend a beautiful set of furs. I had put the money away little by little for this purpose. Years ago when my friend and I were at school she did me a service that I have never been able properly to thank her for. I thought this would be my opportunity; but with the cost of living, with the expense of an unlooked-for illness in the family, and with Mary's music lessons, I simply cannot spare the money. I must content myself with sending a little gift and doing all that I can for my own loved ones at home."

This is precisely the condition in which many readers find themselves when the air is full of inspiration to holiday spending. The shops blossom out with the most alluring and exquisite fabrics, and every window has its invitation to come in and choose a pretty gift for kindred and friends. We are not churlish if we decide to repress the desire to be generous at the expense of justice. On the other hand, if candor compels us to see that, like old Scrooge, we are a bit miserly and stingy, then let us avail ourselves of the holiday privilege and take a lesson in the self-denial that makes us liberal instead of close-fisted.

Here and there a husband needs this hint. Thousands of men are open-handed, and are happiest when they are doing most for the pleasure of wives and children. Now and then one meets a specimen of the opposite variety rare among Americans, but existent. The man who denies wife and children the benefit of a margin for holiday spending when he can afford it is a churl indeed.

Concerning Dessert

"My husband," remarked a matron, "is perfectly satisfied with the plainest dinner, if there is something nice for dessert. No matter how good the dinner is he leaves the table disappointed if there is not a pie or pudding with which to finish off." The good man's feeling is not merely natural, but is founded on a sound hygienic principle. Dinner should be a social meal and there should be about it features that are not strictly utilitarian. Americans are said to be especially fond of pies, and this may possibly account for the national tendency to dyspepsia. Apple, mince and pumpkin pies are not to be disdained in their place, but it is wisest not to eat them after a hearty evening dinner. They should be limited to the luncheon table. Fruit cooked or not forms an excellent dessert. We might carry the idea, if we chose, beyond the realm of eating. The dessert that closes a meal with a dainty touch is not unlike the delicate compliment that a few people understand how to impart to ordinary conversation.

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Drawn by Richard Culter

"FORGOTTEN GRIST"

By W. LIVINGSTON LARNED

THE Old Mill Wheel of the long past years
Turns never a span to-day,
And all of the phantoms of smiles and tears
Spin not in their wonted way.
The dead leaves drift from the shelt'ring bough,
And across the field lies a rusted plow,
But never a song of the Miller now
And never a roundelay.

It seems but an hour, since through the wood
The hum of the wheel was heard.
The white meal spilled from its scented hood
As the Miller gave the word.
And into the mouths of the countryside
The sweet bread ran in a wholesome tide,
And the great wheel turned with a rhythmic slide
To the tune of a wayward bird.

The Miller, they say, is asleep down there
In the bend of the old mill road;
And the sparkling stream with its jewels fair
Shows only the bed it flowed.
But, ever at dawn with the larks asong
You may hear the stream as it flows along;
And the mystic wheel, in a cadence strong,
Is bearing its wonted load.

The weeds spring up in a garland wild
And the autumn winds give call,
But where is the laugh of the Miller's child
As the red leaves slowly fall?
The Old Mill sleeps in a Nature breast,
Then, after the years of its toil, came rest;
And Nature is wise and has known the best
For man's work, after all.

Books for the Young Girl

BOOKS of advice for the young girl are as plentiful at all times as apple blossoms in May. Books of strong and vigorous fiction that interest at the hour "when the brook and river meet" are never too abundant. For the growing boy and the youth in his teens there are books in plenty. Boys are supposed to enjoy stories of adventure and narratives that illustrate historical periods. The ordinary healthy active lad has a fine contempt for books that are intended for his sister, while the sister, on her side, reads with enthusiasm the pages that delight her brother. This explains why books for boys may be depended upon to have a wide sale, while those for girls may or may not be fortunate enough to awaken popularity.

A little book drifted into my hands the other day, entitled, King Arthur Stories From the Malory Legends. It is the joint work of two authors or compilers, who have wrought with success in their field. The little book opens and lies flat without a warp in the binding, and the type is clear enough not to try childish eyes. In these stories, familiar to us all in the rich embroidery of Tennyson's Idyls of the King, there is romance and noble sentiment and all that should stimulate the best in girl and boy alike. This little book should be slipped into many a Christmas stocking.

A perennial favorite with young girls is Louisa M. Alcott. Than hers no braver soul ever entered the lists, and no purer hand ever held a pen. Those who have read her life and letters remember how gallantly she faced poverty, and how splendidly she carried the burdens of her singularly inefficient family. Miss Alcott tried in several ways to earn money for the requirements of her home before it occurred to her that she could write stories. Almost from the outset she won recognition as a bright and charming writer. But when Little Women appeared it at once swept into notice and became a household word from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Jo, the undaunted little heroine, who led her sisters in every endeavor, fairly captivated the girls of the country. Little Women is a book that every girl should not only read, but own, and in choosing something inspiring, profitable and pleasurable for a daughter a mother cannot go wrong if she procure this gem among stories for girls. I have felt impelled to say this because a peculiarly beautiful edition of Little Women has been recently issued by Little, Brown & Company, of Boston. It is sumptuous in appearance and is superbly illustrated with pictures that really belong to the text. As a companion to this there is a series of Spinning-wheel Stories by Miss Alcott, also charming to the eye, and sure to please every young girl. I ought to have said that the King Arthur Stories also come from Boston, and are published by Houghton, Mifflin & Company. The authors are Lillian Stevens and Edward F. Allen.

Parents should try so far as they can to furnish children with books which will give them a taste for real literature. The schools try to do this, but they cannot succeed in their purpose unless the home gives them substantial aid. There is much in the daily press that tends to vulgarize children and which, while not directly impure, is lacking in refinement. Supply the home with books, and the "comics" will cease to attract.

IN A JAPANESE NIGHT SCHOOL

Mrs. Ella C. Veeder

"WE HAD a good meeting. Our Father God so glad," said one of my Japanese pupils, after a special meeting in which the Japanese had taken a responsible part.

Another pupil told me he had left his business in the care of his brother, while he came here to learn the language and methods of America. He said: "We think of the United States as very great nation—very wonderful, great hiro handed me the following note which he had written: "I was very glad to hear what our teacher read to us last night, from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, about some of the friends, pupils and many others learning the Bible in Sunday School at my province in Japan. And then I was greatly surprised that so many are becoming Christians in my province. When I intended to come to this country, about two years ago, I had never heard of so many pupils learning about Jesus. I am thankful that I can learn much about the glorious God by being acquainted with the American people. I wish that my friends and many more living in Japan may learn more and more of Jesus. And as many as become Christians I ask God to help us that we may learn easily and as much as we can. I am sure that anyone in this world ought to be a follower of Jesus."

Although this pupil was working in one of the leading hotels in the city, he translated the entire article in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and at my request read it at our public Japanese meeting the next night.

A few weeks after this, during the devotion exercises at the close of our night school, his son found peace, and afterward he handed me a paper on which he had written: "I have found the one thing to give pleasure to the heart. It is God Saviour."

I asked, "When did you receive this blessing? His answer was, "While you prayed."

Wonderful things are transpiring while we pray. We ought "always to pray and not to faint."

Some of my Japanese pupils are fine scholars in their own language. Their eagerness to learn amounts to a positive thirst. They work hard a day, and come to the night school neat and well-dressed, cheerful, polite and courteous. This night school was opened by the Endeavor Society of the Friends' Church in June, 1906. I took charge of the work from the beginning.

Christian nation; and we come here to learn. We are turning a little—and a little—and I think—and think—and somehow I don't know how to know God." Then he added very earnestly, "We want to know God."

One evening I wrote, for my pupils to copy, the sentence: "Jesus Christ is our best friend." A new pupil listened eagerly to my explanations. Then, pointing to the sacred name, he said: "Do you mean to say that these words are the name of this Son of God you are telling us about?"

"Yes."

"I hear some men swear," said he. "They say these words. I thought they were bad words."

Another night, I read to my Japanese pupils from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Mrs. Crafts' account of her visit to Tokyo. Accompanying the article is a group picture of Japanese girls going out with their children from the streets to teach them the Sabbath School Lesson which they had themselves learned in the morning. My pupils recognized the face of an acquaintance in the picture. Next night, Mr. Nishi-

A Class of Japanese With Their White Teacher in Centre

We use the common school readers, histories and geographies. We give pronouncing drills, and teach something of grammar, civil government, current events, etc. I tell them the story of Jesus and his love for all people, teaching them portions of the Bible, gospel songs, and the privilege of prayer. I have enrolled fifty pupils. Some attend for more than a year; some for a short time only. Many have accepted Christ as their Saviour, and have already written the story of salvation to their friends in Japan. Last summer, we began evangelistic meetings. The results were good.

To Christianize Japan is, it seems to me, the greatest opportunity presented to the world to-day. Through Christian Japan, China and India could be most effectually reached. Japan is the gateway to the Orient. Surely God made the Pacific Ocean wide enough to accommodate the friendly commerce of the world. How delightful it will be when the nations of this earth learn to live as friendly neighbors, helping one another, and "learning war no more!"

ELLA C. VEEDER.
Long Beach, Calif.

THE MOST TIMELY BOOK OF THE SEASON

AN IDEAL gift book for 1908! The book of all books for inauguration year and the most timely book of the season! Finally, a book brimful of keenest interest for every true American, man or woman, boy or girl, is our Great Patriotic Premium book, The Inside Story of the White House, by Gilson Willets. Read what an eminent critic to whom we submitted the story in manuscript writes us:

"Indeed, in all the five hundred large pages there is not a single paragraph that lags or a single chapter that is not intensely interesting—yes, absorbing—from first to last, and the illustrations are exquisite. The best part of it is that the dramas it unfolds are all the more dramatic, the romances all the more romantic, because it is all so gloriously true and real. The side lights that it throws on the lives of men and women whom we have known so well by fame and name, the charming bits of humor and the many touching incidents of tender pathos that give light and shade to this incomparable picture of presidential home life—all these and many other features make The Inside Story of the White House a notable addition to American literature.

"One can begin at the end or in the middle as well as at the first chapter, but it is impossible to think that once having opened the covers of this rich book anyone could lay it down until every page had been eagerly absorbed—for every page is a mirror that reflects some charming scene or striking incident in the long thrilling history of the most hospitable home in America.

Continued on last column

A Remarkable Family Reunion in Rhode Island

MR. SAMUEL OSBORNE TABOR, of Slatersville, R. I., sends us an interesting account of a recent family reunion at his home. He writes: "I have been a constant subscriber and diligent reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for many years. I have all my copies on file, having lent them often to be returned when read; and I also have given many subscriptions to my friends as birthday presents. I notice with pleasure the constant improvement from year to year in the magazine. Long may it live to enlighten and bless the world!"

"In the issue of October 21, 1908, I noticed the interesting picture of Mr. Hyde's family, which reminds me that you might be interested in our family group which I enclose herewith. There are fifty-two persons in the group. My wife is not represented, having been in the spirit land for nearly seventeen years past. Of eleven children—one died in infancy and one thirty-four years old, lost at sea—nine are seen in the group, six sons and three daughters. My oldest son is in his sixty-second year. There are five daughters-in-law and three sons-in-law, twenty-six grandchildren, one grandson-in-law, three granddaughters-in-law and four great-grandchildren. They came from various localities to the gathering, which lasted three days at the old homestead in North Smithfield, R. I., near Slatersville. Of the whole number, there is not a feeble one among them all. One came from Honolulu—a grandson, who is a teacher in a college there; four came from Denver, Colo.; four from Chicago; one from New Hampshire; twelve from Massachusetts towns; nine from Providence, R. I., and others from nearby Rhode Island localities. Lately two more great-grandchildren have been born and two grandsons have been married, so at this date there are fifty-seven (57) in my large family. Although now in my eighty-sixth year, I do a little work on the farm every fair day and am seldom absent from my place in church and Sunday School. My ancestors came from England early in the seventeenth century."

The Tabor Family Reunion, with Four Generations Present

The Most Timely Book of the Season

Continued

Whether the picture before us sparkles with the wit and brilliancy of a state banquet or the dazzling splendor of a formal reception, or whether the scene presents a simple fireside gathering in the private life of some one of our Presidents, and the beautiful and gracious women who have made the stately mansion a home, it is all fascinating—fascinating—and again fascinating!"

We Will Send this Superbly Illustrated INSIDE STORY OF THE WHITE HOUSE, 500 pages, Bound in Olive Green and Gold; Our incomparable Art Gallery de Luxe, and The Christian Herald for One Whole Year (ALL THREE), for TWO DOLLARS. Address to-day: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91 Bible House, New York City.

Ranchers Helped Mont-Lawn

I ENCLOSE $20 to be used as you think best in Fresh-Air Fund. We would like to send as many children as possible to Mont-Lawn. The people named below all live on ranches. If it were possible for the little boy sent to Mont-Lawn with this $20 to write a little note to my son, James Mitchell Clarke, it would encourage him greatly to save his pennies for another season. The contributors are:

Miss Gertrude Herman and Frank Herman, Miles City, Mont.; Master Archie Hutchinson, Miles City, Mont.; Master Gerald Kirwan, Miles City, Mont.; Master Paul Blum, care of Albert Blum, Miles City, Mont.; Miss Bertha Dam, Miles City, Mont.; Master Rudolph Sumner, Jr., Etna, Mont.; Miss Archibald Hume, Garland, Mont.; Miss Evaline Baker, Garland, Mont.; Master John Huxtable, Etna, Mont.

LAURA M. CLARKE.
S. J. Ranch, Garland, Mont.

A Hymn for Thanksgiving

Happy Days When Kindred Ties

Fanny J. Crosby

(DUET and CHORUS)

Hubert P. Main

1. Hap - py day, when kindred ties Make our dwell - ing glad and bright;
 2. Hap - py day, that brings a - gain Those we love our joy to share;
 3. Hap - py day, O hap - py day, Tho' thy gold - en sun will set;

And the smiles of youth - ful eyes Fill the heart of age with light.
 While sweet mu - sic's wel - come strain Drives a far the clouds of care.
 Tho' thy hours will glide a - way, Still thy voice will lin - ger yet.

CHORUS.

Day of thanks to God a - bove, Day of thanks for all His love;

Day of thanks to God a - bove, Day of thanks for all His love;

When a - round the friend - ly board, Sire and chil - dren bless the Lord.

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.

A Negro Plantation Fair

A VERY picturesque occasion was the negro fair that was held recently on "Rose Hill" plantation, the home of Mr. and Mrs. Eugene B. Heard, near Middleton, Ga. Its object was two-fold: To display an exhibit of the hand-work of the negroes who compose the settlement at Rose Hill and the plantations thereabouts; and to raise funds for the building of a new schoolhouse, with a workshop for manual training, and a handicraft department.

There are more than one hundred negro tenants on the Rose Hill plantation, many of whom are descendants of former slaves who were taught trades in their youth. Mrs. Heard has made a part of her life-work the uplifting of these people.

The fair was held in the schoolhouse. Nearly a thousand negroes came from all parts of the county. An admission fee of ten cents was charged, and five cents for each exhibit. National and Georgia flags were conspicuous among the decorations, and the booths were decorated with pine boughs, bunting and flowers.

The cooks presided over their own products. There were tables laden with fried chicken, roast hog, beaten biscuits, cakes and confectionery. Hundreds of jars of pickles and preserves, and canned fruits and vegetables were exhibited. There was a big display of aprons and vari-colored quilts, knitted socks and mittens, crochet work and macrame work. The display of baskets was very creditable. The whittling exhibit showed miniature plows, wagons and pocket-knives. There were articles of furniture, tables, stools and chairs.

A two-horse wagon-load of beautiful clean corn-shucks arrived one morning at the schoolhouse door, and from these the children and their parents wove door mats, hats, horse collars, chair bottoms, ornamented baskets, etc. The doll display, made from materials provided by nature, was good; conspicuous were the corn-shuck dollies. Nearly seventy premiums were awarded. The chief crop products were cotton and peaches. At the school exercises prizes were given for the best composition on these subjects. Games were enjoyed, and there were charades and a singing contest and lots of other fun. The festival terminated in a cake walk, in which participated old and young, from grandparents down to wee pickaninnies.

HELEN GRAY.

Twenty-One

MY BOY, you're twenty-one to-day,
 To manhood you have grown,
 And from this day you'll face the fray
 With courage all your own.
 The world will try you out, my boy,
 Each fibre it will test;
 And you must no bad habits form
 If you would do your best.

If you'd have wealth and glowing health,
 A brain that's always clear,
 Refrain from using cigarettes,
 Strong liquor, wine and beer.
 The gambling table you must shun,
 And bad companions, too;
 For these are webs by Satan spun
 For just such lads as you.

We've done the very best we could,
 Your mother dear and I;
 We've tried to raise you as we should,
 This truth you can't deny.
 And as you leave our humble home
 This wondrous sphere to scan,
 On land or sea may your pattern be
 The world's First Gentleman.

Chicago, Ill. DR. W. A. BLACKWELL.

A Skin as Smooth as Velvet.

Thousands of men who spend most of their time "on the road" carry a cake of Ivory Soap with them.

They use it for bathing,—it floats; for the toilet,—it is 99⁴/₁₀₀ per cent. pure; and for shaving,—it leaves the skin as smooth as velvet. If necessity arises, they can even use it to clean their teeth. Many people prefer it to pastes and powders.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
It Floats

We want You to have the Greatest of Rose Books

We are just completing a grand new book in which there has been condensed the experience of three-score years with Roses for home culture. It tells all you need to know about selecting the best Roses for your locality, how to make them grow and bloom, and fully describes more than six hundred leading kinds. 116 large pages, beautifully illustrated from photographs—including four full-page pictures in natural colors. By far the most complete and valuable of books on Roses, and the most beautiful. Every picture shows a Rose just as it has bloomed, and the color pages are not cheap daubs of paint, but real, rich and charming photographic reproductions in all the soft and delicate tints of nature. With this book you can know Roses and learn to grow them, no matter where you live. Our firm was established in 1850, so we call this book.

"Sixty Years Among the Roses"—

The Dingee Guide to Rose Culture. In 1850 the great war between the States was in the future; Lincoln and Douglas and Webster and Breckinridge and Sumner and Stephens were at the height of their fame; the possibilities of electricity but a dream of Morse and his associates; transcontinental railroads only an idea in the mind of Commodore Vanderbilt, and the great West still in primeval wildness. That year Charles Dingee—now 84, still vitally interested in our business, though not active in its management—conceived the great thought of growing Roses on their own roots and sending them by mail, and from his modest start has developed one of America's big industries. During all these years Dingee Roses have been known as the best; today they are better and more favorably known than ever. All the knowledge of Roses gathered in these sixty years may now be yours.

We'll Pay You to Send for and Read this Book

Send us a dime—silver or stamps—and you will get a copy of "Sixty Years Among the Roses" as soon as ready, with due bill good for 20 cents on the first order you forward us. That is, you deposit the 10 cents with us, as an evidence that you love Roses and want to know about them, but we rebate it to you, and as much more. That's paying you to read the book, isn't it? Write today; we have only a limited edition.

Charles Dingee, founder
 The Dingee & Conard Co
 from a recent photograph
 and new Rose named for him.

The Dingee & Conard Company
 The Leading Rose Growers of America
 Box 8, WEST GROVE, PA.

Your Boy's Reading

Give him reading that not only interests but develops him. Fiction, History, Biography by master writers. Photography, Mechanics, Electricity, Collecting, Sports and Athletics all combine wholesome entertainment with beneficial moral influence when read in

The American Boy

Every issue is filled with beautiful illustrations and timely articles, every page presenting the finest kind of reading for your boy. $1 yearly—an investment that will yield bigger returns than any other outlay you could make. Subscribe to-day. Sample copy, 10c.

SPRAGUE PUBLISHING CO., 52 MAJESTIC BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.

$100 EACH EARN
$1,000 6%
$10,000 GUARANTEED

Payable Every Six Months

Ask for Booklet 14, to-day

New York Realty Owners Company

489 Fifth Avenue, New York City

ASSETS OVER $2,500,000.00

You have read for years the stories of babies who were brought from a puny, sickly condition to robust health, developing into sturdy children, by the use of

ESKAY'S FOOD

Has it ever occurred to you that possibly Eskay's is just the food that your baby (or your friend's baby) needs? If you believe he could be sturdier or better nourished, you owe it to him to at least try the one food that has agreed with thousands of babies when nothing else would.

The trial costs you nothing—simply sign and mail this coupon and we will send 10 feedings of Eskay's Food and our helpful book, "How to Care for the Baby."

CUT HERE

SMITH, KLINE & FRENCH CO., 427 Arch St., Phila.
Gentlemen:—Please mail, without charge, 10 feedings of Eskay's Food, and your book.

Name.....
Street.....City and State.....

FREE

Fairy Shoes The "Dearest," "Sweetest," "Cutest" Gift for a Baby. Made from the softest, whitest kid imaginable, lined with silken flannel and ornamented with a fairy in motion of fluffy silk on the vamp. These shoes are exactly like the above cut (which was made from a photograph) and sell everywhere at from 75c to $1.

Given Absolutely FREE ONE PAIR OF FAIRY SHOES HANDSOME BABY BOOKLET to every woman who sends 25c for our Mailing Box containing samples of "Fluff-O-Down" (the new baby clothing fabric), Longcloth, Nainsook, Baby Cloth, sanitary Sheetings, etc., and a copy of our handsomely illustrated 50-page Catalog of bargains for babies, children and mothers.

The Baby Booklet is just the thing for mothers and expectant mothers. It was written by a practicing medical specialist and tells all about caring for a baby from the moment of its birth. Tells all about bathing, feeding, etc. How to sterilize milk—and how to make baby's "first clothes"—and all about "Fluff-O-Down," the daintiest, softest and most healthful material for baby's clothes. "Fluff-O-Down" will not irritate the most sensitive, delicate skin; it soothes and gives protection from the most severe cold.

Send 25c today for the Samples and Catalog and we will send you ABSOLUTELY FREE one copy of the Baby Booklet and one pair of FAIRY SHOES.

Elder & Johnston Co., Dept. X, Dayton, O.

Made to Your Measure
by hand from choice new skins
which wear old stock in a store.

Cummings Glove Guaranteed
Pre $1 and paid $1 up

Cape, Glove, Chambray, Silk—tandlar colors, all lengths, at factory prices. Want gloves, children's gloves, etc. Write for our Free Book.
Cummings Glove Co., 16 Forest St. Gloversville, N.Y.

50 ENGRAVED CARDS OF YOUR NAME $1.00

IN CORRECT SCRIPT, INCLUDING PLACE

THE QUALITY MUST PLEASE YOU OR YOUR MONEY REFUND

SOCIAL STATIONERS HOSKINS PHILA.

905 CHESTNUT ST.

Nancy Beales' Thanksgiving

Continued from page 937

girl at the ribbon counter, as Nancy had speedily found out.

"You would have done better," said her new friend after a little conversation, "if you had studied stenography and typewriting. Father spoke of it when your father's letter came. He felt some surprise that you had not thought of that. You could have done so much better financially and, pardon me for saying it, but father thinks you did not have to come and take just this situation. I am afraid it will wear you completely out." By a freemasonry that exists between girls of similar age and taste who have congenial sympathies, these two had become familiar in a very short time. Nancy smiled as she said, frankly, "If I had been willing to listen to the dear home people I need not have come away at all. I fancy my father did not want it to be too easy for me; but I'm not going to give up at once on account of a few obstacles. I felt as if I wanted independence."

"Well," said Ruth, "lots of girls feel just that way, but to me it seems as if there is nothing so sweet as being a home daughter."

The days went by one by one through October and November, and Nancy watched for the home letters almost as one in the desert looks across wide spaces for an oasis. She divined her mother's endeavor to write cheerfully. One day there came a letter from her father, brief and to the point. "Nancy, you must drop everything and come home at once. I enclose money for your ticket in case your purse is low. Do not delay an instant. Your mother is very ill and Dr. Irving is anxious." Nancy Beales never forgot the morning of her return. Not to waste time she had traveled by night. The stage had been at the station and she had stepped into it, the only passenger. "I'm heartily glad to see you back, Nancy," the driver had said as he took her hand into his rough palm. "Your mother's pretty sick, but my wife says she's been pining for you, and I guess she'll turn the corner soon as you're back where you belong."

"Back where you belong!" That's what Nancy said to herself as the stage rattled on. Old Jabez Brown was a great talker, but she heard scarcely a word and said yes and no at random. When she reached her own house she ran in and ran, as it happened, straight into her father's arms. "I didn't look for you, dear, until tonight," he said in a low voice. "Mrs. Hill has been sitting up with your mother and she was just going to carry in her breakfast. Suppose you take it in instead."

"Is mother so weak?" inquired Nancy. "She is pretty weak, but seeing you will make her stronger. Darling, had you thought that this is Thanksgiving Day?"

Nancy had quite forgotten it, but it proved to be the best Thanksgiving she had ever known. With her return, with her young arm to relieve her mother and with her happiness in taking up simple duty once more, joy came to her and health to her mother. Nancy Beales remembered it always as a perfect Thanksgiving Day, though they put off the Thanksgiving dinner for a whole fortnight.

TRUTHS OF VITAL INTEREST

ON THE LIFE BEYOND

ALREADY we have filled hundreds upon hundreds of orders for Madison C. Peters' great book, "AFTER DEATH—WHAT?" Is it the former great works of the author that is lending such tremendous impetus to his new and greatest masterpiece, or is it because when an inspired book comes to fill a vital need and a real want of the people it is bound to be literally devoured by a hungry humanity? Whatever the secret of its instant success, we are filling orders for this great work almost as fast as the books are off the press. And not a single volume has been returned, though the terms of our Premium Guarantee make it indisputably clear that we are always glad to refund the full price without questions if a purchaser is not wholly satisfied with any one of our books.

But should we sell a million copies of this remarkable volume not one would be returned, for here is a book that has come to live; a book that penetrates into the farthest recesses of the soul and answers the hard problems that are smoldering there; that searches our heart of hearts and soothes old heartaches and new; that touches the vital questions of our being and quickens a holy ambition to live not for the things temporal, but for the things eternal.

In addition to Dr. Peters' enlightening and uplifting talks on such vital subjects as the titles of his chapters indicate (for example, "What Is Heaven and How to Reach It"; "What the Heavenly Rest Means"; "The Soul Between Death and the Resurrection"; "Occupations in Heaven"), this rich volume also contains exquisite Poems of Comfort that are each and every one jewels from the world's best literature. Priceless gems from the master minds of all ages and countries—imperishable truths from the world's greatest philosophers, historians and preachers—illumine the pages. "Our Children in Heaven" is a chapter that once read can never be effaced from the memory of every father or mother whose heart goes out to some little one who has passed before.

We will send this great Book, "AFTER DEATH—WHAT?" 400 pages, bound in Purple and Gold; our Art Gallery De Luxe, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Year (all three) for only $2.00. Address To-day: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91 Bible House, New York City.

Imprisoned

Suggested by a lark flying into the room, and dashing itself against the windows in its efforts to escape.

By REV. JOSEPH HAMILTON,
Author of Our Own and Other Worlds, etc.

BIRD from the blue,
This is no home for you.
In spacious fields of air,
Beneath a boundless sky,
Without a fear or care,
You sang and soared so high—
I wonder much what brought you here
To this dark room's contracted sphere.

O birdie dear, beware!
Poor fluttering thing, take care!
I fear you'll hurt your pretty wings
Against these hard, material things.
Would you were free to rise,
And seek your native skies,
And from those heights no more to roam,
Or seek a lower, earthy home.
And see! I open your prison door!
Escape, and sing, and heavenward soar!

O spirit from the blue,
This is no home for you.
In fleshly walls confined
Frets the aspiring mind;
Imprisoned here in human clay,
You pine and long to soar away.
The soul would burst these prison bars,
And find its home beyond the stars.

O heaven-born soul, beware!
Poor fluttering thing, take care!
Oh, do not hurt your spirit wings
Against earth's hard, material things.
A Hand some day will open your prison door!
O glad escape, to sing, and heavenward soar!

Let me teach YOU - Beauty Culture

MY FREE BOOK TELLS HOW

hundreds of women who wrote for this free book are now earning from $15 to $35 Weekly

in a refined profession.

You can do the same.

This free book tells all about Beauty Culture and how I teach women in their own home—by mail—to become expert operators in

MANICURING
HAIR DRESSING
MARCEL WAVES
SCALP TREATMENT
FACIAL MASSAGE
SHAMPOOING

I also furnish valuable formulas for making Flesh Food, Massage Cream, Hair Tonics, Depilatories, Cosmetics, Etc.

You can start a visiting practice—working by appointment in your patrons' homes, or you can establish a Beauty Parlor in your own home.

This profession offers unlimited opportunity for ambitious women to earn money. The demand for expert operators is growing every day. My students are able to quickly establish a lucrative practice—many of them earn money before they have graduated.

SEND TO-DAY FOR MY FREE BOOK.

Don't struggle along in uncongenial employment with long hours and small pay. Educate yourself in this profitable profession learn to do work that has little competition. Isn't it better to spend a few hours a day for a few weeks and qualify yourself to do what everyone else cannot do? The field for Beauty Culture is large. You will be surprised when you see what a great demand there is for this work in even the very small places.

Write to-day for this Free Book—a penny postal will do.
ELIZABETH KING SYSTEM, Dept., A.H. No. 117 E. 23d St., N.Y.

The Foster HOSE SUPPORTER

Patented Dec. 5, 1899

Praised by More than a Million Women

A WOMAN'S INVENTION TO MEET WOMAN'S NEEDS

"The Name is on the Buckles"

Helps Secure the Perfect Figure. Gives Greatest Comfort. Holds the hose taut without tear or tension.

For Women who want Perfection

Price from 50c. up—at all reliable dealers or
ARTHUR FRANKENSTEIN & CO.
Agents for United States

514-516 Broadway, New York

A. & S. Frankenstein Co. Toronto, Canada (See Agents in Canada)

OSTRICH PLUME

SENT ANYWHERE POSTAGE PAID

This Plume is a Wonderful Value. It is a Genuine African Ostrich Plume, excellently curled & long fibre, all colors, including black and white. We are offering the plume to the readers of this paper, as an advertisement. We want you to see how grand this value is. Buying in large quantities direct, enables us to offer values that have been hitherto unheard of. Write today SEND US AN ORDER

Money Back
If You Are Not Pleased.

A BIG CATALOG FREE!

WRITE TODAY and it will be sent to you POSTAGE PAID.

The Mabley & Carew Co.
Dept. 72 CINCINNATI, OHIO

Why Pay $18? a Dealer

We ship in "sections" ready to put together and stain. Send money with order or get our free catalogue of "Come-Back" Furniture. Appropriate presents for the home. IMMEDIATE SHIPMENTS.
International Mfg. Co.
1116 Edwin St., Ann Arbor, Mich.

Direct to You

No. 306 Library Table
Top 22x36 in.

Cuba's First President Dead

TOMAS ESTRADA PALMA, the first President of free Cuba, died in Santiago province, November 4, of pneumonia, after a short illness. He was born July 9, 1835, on the largest of his father's estates, at Bayamo, Eastern Cuba. His father was one of the wealthiest and most respected land owners in Cuba. Tomas was sent to Seville, Spain, to be educated as a lawyer, but on his return to Cuba he never practised law to any great extent. The struggling condition of the school for young Cubans and Spanish-Americans.

He kept in close touch, however, with the affairs of the unhappy island of his birth, and he instilled into the minds of his pupils principles of patriotism and duty.

In 1895 the schoolmaster was summoned to take the post of delegate for the Cuban revolutionary clubs, a place which carried with it the leadership of the Cuban junta in New York. Palma plunged again into the vortex, devoting all his energies to the furtherance of the cause of "Cuba Libre."

When at last the struggle was ended, and the victory won, through American intervention, his grateful countrymen selected him to be the first President of the free republic.

He found it no easy task to govern the turbulent element, however, and had to face a revolution in the little republic. The United States was under moral and treaty obligation to preserve the peace. Palma realized that his abdication was the best course. He thereupon stepped out of the chief magistracy, giving place to an American governor, and the second American occupation was begun. Palma retired to his old estate on the Cauto River, and took up again the life of a planter. He said, explaining his resignation:

"With the millions in the treasury I could unquestionably have suppressed the revolution; but in doing this I could not have prevented the destruction of property or the shedding of Cuban blood by Cubans. It was to avert those calamities that I stood aside to permit the United States to exercise the right and duty it had assumed of preserving Cuban independence and protecting life, property and individual liberty."

The Cuban people in the island republic, in the United States and throughout the world entertain a warm admiration for Palma, whose checkered career as land owner, soldier, exile, prisoner, teacher, diplomat and President, is now brought to a close by death. He lived long enough, however, to see his beloved country free, united and prosperous.

The Late President Palma

After the capture of Bayamo, Palma was elected a member of the Cuban Assembly, and in 1876 he was elected by the Assembly as the "President" of the struggling republic. While holding that nominal office he was betrayed, through the treachery of a subordinate, into the hands of a Spanish column and thrown into the Morro as a prisoner of war.

Palma was sent to Spain and imprisoned for a year in the Castle of Fleuras. With the surrender of the Cuban insurgents he was liberated. He refused tempting offers of preferment in exchange for his oath of allegiance. He came to New York by way of Paris, and found his way into Honduras, an exile. There his ability soon brought preferment and he married the daughter of Guardiola, President of the republic of Honduras, who became the mother of his six children. He brought her to the United States and made their home in Central Valley, N. Y., where Palma opened a

BISHOP VINCENT IN DELAWARE

REV. BISHOP JOHN H. VINCENT has lately been conducting a series of meetings at Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, Wilmington, Del. He called them "Seven Days' Study in Church Life." Every day "A Service of Surrender" was held and a question box opened. Bishop Vincent aimed at spiritual results in this series of meetings—the increase of personal faith, the deepening of the sense of personal responsibility, a steady and habitual surrender of the life to God and to the service of man, and the acceptance of God's grace. He showed the importance of studying the Word of God, and helping any who are in temporal or spiritual need. He advised a year's course of brief daily Bible readings and active Christian effort in some simple form.

The secret of education is in classifying, and in this Bishop Vincent excels, as well as in suggestions which have changed dull lives from apathy to enthusiasm, from ignorance to intellectual inspiration. Bishop Vincent is the founder of all the Chautauqua life, and is full of reverent religious spirit. One of his sayings is "Dream yourself into an ideal world. Invite to yourself all the good things that God has made possible for you—thus you will glorify your life." M. B. C.

My Shepherd

A new poetical version of the 23d Psalm.

The Lord my Shepherd is,
No want I e'er shall know;
He makes my bed in pastures green,
Where noiseless waters flow.

My soul he doth restore,
My drooping heart doth bless;
He leads me, for his own name's sake,
In paths of righteousness.

Though dark may be the way,
I know my Shepherd's near;
His rod and staff they comfort me;
Of evil I've no fear.

A table is prepared
Before mine enemies spread;
With his own oil of love and truth
He doth anoint my head.

The blessings I receive
Are more than I can know;
With joy I'm lavishly supplied;
My cup doth overflow.

Goodness and mercy, Lord,
Shall ever follow me,
And in thy house I'll dwell content
Through all eternity. H. H. B.

A Christmas Box of Shawknit Socks

Just the Correct Christmas Present for Father, Husband, or Son

"SHAWKNIT Socks" have been known to you a great many years. They are sold almost everywhere.

When you present "SHAWKNIT Socks" you are making a gift of the best that are made, plus the assurance that they will please the man who gets them, and a realization that your present will last for a long time and give great comfort and pleasure.

"SHAWKNIT Socks" are the best wearing socks. Every pair guaranteed by us. Our Shawknit trademark is plainly stamped on the toes.

For more than 30 years "SHAWKNIT Socks" have been the most popular American-made goods. They are free from seams—properly shaped in the process of knitting—fit comfortably—colors absolutely fast and pure.

This Beautiful Christmas Box contains six pairs of "SHAWKNIT" Cotton Socks—two of black, two of tan, and two of navy—all the same popular medium light weight for only $1.50.

Ask your dealer for style 19-938 the style number of this special assortment.

Try Your Dealer First

If he does not have them in stock his jobber will supply him. Otherwise please mail $1.50 to us and we will send this beautiful Christmas Box of socks to you, transportation charges prepaid by us, to any address in the United States.

These "SHAWKNIT Socks" are made in sizes 9 to 11, inclusive. Please mention size wanted when ordering.

Our Beautiful Colored Catalog will be sent free to any address. Write for it.

SHAW STOCKING CO.
35 Shaw Street, Lowell, Mass.

HER GIFT A Bissell "Cyclo" Bearing Carpet Sweeper

If you are in doubt what to buy for mother, wife, sister or friend, remember that a Bissell "Cyclo" Bearing Sweeper never fails to please, and it is a constant reminder of the giver for ten years. It reduces the labor about 95%, confines all the dust, brightens and preserves the carpets and will outlast forty brooms. Prices, $2.50, $3.00, $3.25, $3.50, $4.00, $4.50, $5.00, $5.50, $6.00, $6.50.

A FREE CHRISTMAS GIFT

Buy a Bissell Sweeper between now and January 1st, 1909, from your dealer, send us the purchase slip and receive FREE a good quality Morocco leather card case without any printing on it. Something any lady or gentleman would appreciate.

Bissell Carpet Sweeper Co.
Dept. 47A, Grand Rapids, Mich.
(Largest and Only Exclusive Carpet Sweeper Makers in the World.)

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOVELTIES

GREAT INTRODUCTORY PACKAGE ONLY 10c

We want you to get acquainted with our new and helpful things and so we make this generous offer. Send TODAY. For TEN CENTS we will send postpaid this remarkable package.

1 beautifully illuminated cards, 5x7 inches, one each of Lord's Prayer, 10 Commandments, Beatitudes, 23d Psalm, 1 Christ-Head Calendar, 1909, very dainty. 1 1904 Golden Text Book, with full schedule of Int. S. S. Lessons, Daily Bible Readings, etc. 1 Embossed Bible Book Mark, telling where to find principal things in the Bible. One of Celebrated Wilde's Bible Pictures. One of Famous Tissot Colored Bible Pictures. 1 set of 5 Life of Christ illuminated Christmas Post Cards. 1 new Universal Birthday Card in blue, red and gold. 1 copy The Business End of a Sunday School, 72 pages with illustrated Holiday Catalogue of Sunday School Novelties.

HAMMOND PUB. CO., Dept. F, Milwaukee, Wis.

Not 4% Part Time, but

5% FULL TIME.

ANY day in any month you can place small or large sums in our care, and whenever you choose to withdraw the money you receive earnings up to date of withdrawal. How we invest the funds, how they are secured, how we have dealt with patrons for over fifteen years and how they recommend others to us can be learned by writing for full information.

We operate under the strict Banking Laws of New York State, subject to the Banking Department supervision.

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, New York

THE FAMOUS EVANGELIST'S NEW HYMN BOOK

GIPSY SMITH

Ed. of HALLOWED HYMNS
NEW AND OLD
By I. ALLAN SANKEY

35c. a copy, postpaid. $25 per 100

Returnable Sample mailed to Pastors, etc.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., CHICAGO NEW YORK

WEDDING INVITATIONS

Announcements, etc. engraved & printed in best styles, best quality, sent prepaid anywhere. 100 for $3.50 (100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.)

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

100.00c with case 50c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.

OUR MAIL-BAG

Continued from preceding page

G. T., Troy, N. Y. Please explain to me the following: Luke 13: 19.

The purpose was to show the growth of the kingdom from small beginnings to ultimate universality. The smallness of the seed is contrasted with the amplitude of the tree. The seed gives out its best virtues when bruised. The tree is both food and shelter, in other words, repose and blessing.

Ms. M. A., North Branch, Md. Do the Jews, as a people, expect Christ as their Saviour, or are their eyes closed, or "withheld" from this belief?

We have referred this letter to the Rev. Leonard Cohn, superintendent of the Williamsburg and Brownsville Missions to the Jews, Brooklyn, N. Y. Mr. Cohn is an ex-rabbi and can speak with some degree of authority on the subject. He writes: "Certainly, the Jews are included in the purpose of the Gospel, as are all other people and nations. Salvation is for all men, no matter what their moral or spiritual condition might be. Many Jews have already responded to the Gospel and believe in Christ as their Saviour. When the church fulfils its obligation to preach the Gospel to the Jews, they profit of an evil business and therefore undesirable for the Lord's work. The opinion was expressed, however, that it might legitimately be applied toward the relief of the poor, which would be a certain measure of restoration.

E. G. S., Philadelphia. What is the origin of the word "Mormon" and its meaning?

It is presumed by some to be derived from a Greek word signifying a lamia, maniola or female spectre, but the Mormons themselves claim that it is from the Egyptian mon, signifying good, and that they added the contraction mor (or "more"), making the whole word mean "more good."

Miscellaneous

Reader, Alberta, Can. Write to Biglow & Main, publishers, New York, about the hymn you want.

Miss L. M. L., New Orleans, and others. The correspondence classes of Standard Shorthand are still open at the dollar enrolment fee.

Reader, Dayton, O. The Transformation of Margaret is published under the title The Turn of the Tide, by the Wilder Publishing Co., Boston, Mass.

H. R., Albany, N. Y. The discussion you suggest would take more space than we can give to

Germany's "Hall of Fame"

GERMANY has an equivalent to our "Hall of Fame" in the "Temple of Fame" built by King Ludwig of Bavaria. It is erected to perpetuate the names and works of Germans who have won distinction in war, literature, art, statesmanship and science. While the Hall of Fame at New York University holds but inscribed tablets, the Temple has busts and statues of the men commemorated. Some of these statues are of heroic size. The setting of these marble figures is very elaborate, with marble pillars and harmoniously colored walls. All of the light comes from above.

all come in larger numbers, and then will Paul's prophecy be fulfilled, 'When the fulness of the Gentiles be come in. And so all Israel shall be saved.' Read Rom. 11."

W. E., Halifax, N. S. 1. What is meant by the time of restitution (or restoration) of all things, spoken by the holy prophets since the world began? Acts 3: 19-21. 2. What is meant by "When thy sisters Sodom and her daughters shall return to their former estate, and Samaria and her daughters shall return to their former estate, then thou and thy daughters shall return to their former estate"? Eze. 16: 53-55. 3. See Gen. 19: 24, 25: Where have the Sodomites been in the interim and when would you say they are to be returned to their former estate?

1. This expression is probably meant to comprehend the rectification of all the disorders arising from man's fall, and the interval which must elapse before that consummation, that is, between the Ascension and the Second Coming. It probably means never. Such is the construction on the best commentators place on these two passages. 3. The explanation of the passage in Ezekiel answers this question.

Ms. M. T., Port Huron, Mich. Why is a certain street in London called "Rotten Row"? One derivation is said to be "Route en Roi," i.e. "King's Road" or "Highway," but by gradual corruption of terms, the name was changed to Rotten Row. Another suggestion is that it is derived from the Norman words "Ratten Row" "Roundabout Way" through which the dead were carried to cemeteries.

L., Royersford, Pa. 1. Can a saloonkeeper be a member of a church? 2. Should a church expect and receive weekly contributions from him?

1. There are churches that draw the line at saloonkeepers and others that accept them. 2. His whole subject was thoroughly discussed in THE MAIL-BAG several years ago and the consensus of opinion was that the saloonkeeper's money, though accepted by many churches, was the profit of an evil business and therefore undesirable for the Lord's work. The opinion was expressed, however, that it might legitimately be applied toward the relief of the poor, which would be a certain measure of restoration.

Subscriber, Springfield, Ill. If you write to Rev. M. M. Cooper, Knoxville, Tenn., he will give you full information in regard to the cost of supporting an orphan in the Blossom Home at Sao Paulo, Brazil.

G., Mount Forest. Anything that may prove a stumbling block to others, or that is liable to lead them in the way of temptation, we should carefully avoid. We believe there is a danger which can only be averted by using nothing that will tempt growing boys to drink.

Reader, Iowa. The Bible teaches that we must not only be ready to forgive, but that we should make the first advances; in other words, make it clear to the offender that we are willing to forgive. In the case mentioned, the friendly overtures should not have been repulsed.

Reader, Norfolk, Va. The boy who knew the wrongdoer was plucky in declining to tell; but nevertheless, as a party to the wrong, he deserved punishment for screening the real offender. By so doing, he prevented justice being done, which the neighbor, whose property was injured, had the right to demand.

Reader, Harrison, O. 1. The passage in Rom. 14: 14 cannot be applied in the way you indicate. Paul was speaking of ritual distinctions. Read verses 15, 16, 17, and observe the modification. 2. No, it is not wrong for a Christian to study the affairs of his country. On the contrary he should do all that lies in his power to help it to clean, moral government by his voice and vote. The other questions are trivial.

A. A. A., Los Angeles, Calif. 1. God rules the universe and it moves according to his laws; but if we insist that every occurrence, even the most trifling, is divinely directed, we make it a fatalistic world, without human free agency or responsibility. 2. Even a pagan may be broad-minded; but to one who has been enlightened concerning the Gospel, spiritual conviction changes the whole situation and takes away what Paul calls the "veil" from our hearts and our understanding.

Victor-Victrola

A new style Victor

All the beautiful Victor music and entertainment, played in the richest, sweetest, most mellow tone ever heard—as pure and true as life itself.

The horn and all moving parts are entirely concealed in a handsome mahogany cabinet, and the music is made loud or soft by opening or closing the small doors.

The cabinet contains albums for 150 records and drawer for accessories. All metal parts heavily gold-plated.

The most complete of all musical instruments.

Victor-Victrola XVI, Mahogany, $200
Quartered Oak, $200
Victor-Victrola XX, Mahogany, embellished with Gold, $300

Hear the Victor-Victrola at any music-house or talking-machine merchant's. Write to us for descriptive catalogue.

Victor Talking Machine Co.
Camden, N. J., U. S. A.

A complete list of new Victor Records for December will be found in the December number of Munsey's, Scribner's, McClure's, Century, Everybody's; and January Cosmopolitan.

Two Great Library Gift Books

Treasured In Thousands of American Homes
100,000 ALREADY SOLD

THE HAPPY HABIT

There is no other book like "Happy Habit."

A rare book of good fellowship, full of friendly, chatty reminiscence that "talks things over" and tells of happy living—not all rollicking, but dignified and cheery. It's so human that it readily adapts itself to the personality of the reader, giving delight and pleasure by its charming conversational tone—like one friend visiting with another. In this it is a worthy companion to "Heart Throbs" and makes a most acceptable gift to man or woman. Over 500 pages, handsomely bound gold and illuminated cover. Price, $1.50.

Either Book Edition de Luxe, Full Morocco and Gold Binding, $3.00 Net.

At All Book Stores or Direct from Chapple Publishing Co., Boston

Publishers' Early Christmas Offer

Either book combined with one year's subscription to The National Magazine, the favorite magazine in a quarter million homes, $2.00 $3.00 value for Both books combined with one year's subscription to The National Magazine, $3.00 $4.50 value for

HEART THROBS

Fifty thousand people in all walks of life made this book their own—their very own—by contributing gems of sentiment in wit, humor, pathos, together with the masterpieces of all the authors of note, that have appealed to them in their own lives. Nearly one thousand "favorites" gleaned from all literature down to the present day, to lie on the library table for little "peeps" of inspiration and comfort. In uniqueness and worth "Heart Throbs" fills a special "want" among the givers of books. Nearly 500 pages, handsomely bound gold and illuminated cover. Price, $1.50.

If books are not satisfactory, money refunded

CHAPPLE PUBLISHING CO., BOSTON, M.

GENTLEMEN: Please send me

Please send me "Heart Throbs" for one year's subscription to The National Magazine

Name

Address

"THE TRIAL OF JESUS"*

PASTORS, Sunday School teachers, Bible students and lovers of the Word everywhere will welcome the remarkable book, The Trial of Jesus, by the Hon. Walter M. Chandler, a member of the New York bar. It deals with the greatest topic the human mind has ever considered, yet one concerning which too little is known by the average reader. It puts at our disposal a mass of most valuable information, carefully and systematically arranged, enabling us to form accurate and intelligent conclusions relative to an event of which the minutest circumstance is of importance to the student of the Scriptures.

In these two comprehensive volumes, the author reviews, with the skill and precision of a practiced lawyer, yet in terms suited to the comprehension of the lay reader, all the facts and circumstances antecedent to, during and after the trial of the world's Saviour before the Hebrew tribunal. The first volume is devoted to a judicial review of the record of fact, as it appears in the Gospel narrative, and an exposition of the Hebrew criminal law, the powers of courts and judges, the methods of examining witnesses and sifting evidence and the character of the executions in capital cases. Then comes the problem whether the trial before the Sanhedrin was a legal one, involving questions of jurisdiction, of the legality of the arrest, the doubtful character of the indictment, the irregular night examination, the confining of the trial to a single day, the conviction upon the uncorroborated confession of the accused, the disqualification of certain Sanhedrists, the refusal to consider the defense, and other grave irregularities.

Volume II. reviews the Roman trial

"The Trial of Jesus: From a Lawyer's Standpoint," by Walter M. Chandler of the New York Bar. Two volumes; 772 pages; half morocco, gilt top; price, $5. The Empire Publishing Co., New York City.

and explains the twofold jurisdiction, the powers and duties of Pilate, the Roman procedure in capital cases, and the Roman law, as applicable to the case of Jesus. There is an enlightening legal analysis and summary of this Roman trial. The official powers of Pilate and Herod are carefully set forth, and the characters of the Sanhedrists, who tried Jesus, are disclosed from the record.

Concerning the Sanhedrin trial, the author shows that the testimony upon which Jesus was convicted was absolutely false, from the judicial standpoint; that he was never legally tried or convicted, and that his condemnation was "not based upon a legal procedure in harmony with either the Mosaic Code or the Mishna." "The pages of human history," he declares, "present no stronger case of judicial murder than the trial and conviction of Jesus of Nazareth, for the simple reason that all forms of law were outraged and trampled under foot in the proceedings instituted against him. The errors were so numerous and the proceedings so flagrant that many have even doubted the existence of a trial."

Mr. Chandler's two volumes constitute the strongest, the fullest and the most satisfactory presentation of the whole subject. His work is a condensed library of accurate information concerning the laws and procedure of that period. His elaborate review of the "double trial" is a masterly one, leaving no detail unconsidered, and his conclusions as to its illegality and utter injustice are convincing and apparently unanswerable. Throughout the entire discussion, his attitude is that of a calm, impartial judge, who reaches his decision through the inexorable logic of law and justice, and in accordance with the facts and the evidence. His book deserves to be ranked among the notable contributions to historical and legal literature.

Books Received

Humorous Hits and How to Hold an Audience, by Grenville Kleiser. A new and comprehensive book of recitations—humorous and serious. Price $1. Pp. 326. Funk & Wagnalls, New York, publishers.

Betty Pembroke. By Elizabeth Hazlewood Hancock. A story of love and patriotism a hundred years ago. Pp. 309; cloth covers; price $1.50. The Neale Publishing Co., New York and Washington, publishers.

Heredity and Morals. A book which deals with the essentials that relate to the "welfare of the individual and the future of the race." Pp. 473; illustrated; price $2. E. B. Treat & Co., New York, publishers.

The Next Step in Evolution, by I. K. Funk, D.D., LL.D. "A study of the probability, significance and character of the second coming of Christ." Pp. 107, with frontispiece; price 50 cents. Funk & Wagnalls, New York and London, publishers.

Optimism—A Real Remedy, by Horace Fletcher, author of the system known as Fletcherism, which has been termed "the doctrine of excessive chewing." The author, in a most attractive way, shows the advantage of modern melioristic optimism in adding to the felicity of the human race and overcoming all ordinary obstacles. Pp. 79. A. C. McClurg & Co., Chicago, publishers.

Buck Jones at Annapolis, by Richard Pearson Hobson. D. Appleton & Company. Life at the Naval Academy is here strongly depicted by one who not only knows all about it, but whose name is connected with heroism during the Spanish-American war. Notwithstanding the strict regulations and austere discipline of the Naval School, the undergraduates appear to have very good times. There is enough here that is startling and exciting to delight the average boy, and the book is sure to be a permanent favorite.

Poland: a Knight Among the Nations. By Louis E. Van Norman, with an introduction by Helena Modjeska. These are the impressions of an American journalist who spent a year in the old Polish Commonwealth, visited all the historically important points, and met people of every social grade, making the whole an interesting and instructive study. A most interesting work. Illustrated; pp. 359; price $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Co., New York, London and Chicago, publishers.

Reminiscences of Senator William M. Stewart of Nevada. Edited by George Rothwell Brown. Senator Stewart's eighty-three years cover a very large part of the important history of our country, and his memoirs deal with developments and events that will interest almost every reader. His has been a life of big enterprises, by land and sea, as hunter, miner, justice and United States Senator. Especially will his recollections of Lincoln, Johnson, Sumner, Lee, Grant, Hamlin, Sherman, Greeley, Farragut and others, be read with keen appreciation. Pp. 358; with frontispiece; cloth binding; price $3. The Neale Publishing Co., New York and Washington, publishers.

The Neale Publishing Company has also issued the following books: A Long Time Ago in Virginia and Maryland, with a Glimpse of Old England, by Alice Maud Ewell; illustrated; pp. 246; price $1.50. The Law and the Gospel of Labor, by Luther Hess Waring. A manual of legal information concerning unions, strikes, boycotts, injunctions, etc.; pp. 140; price $1. Princess Pocahontas, by Mittie Owen McDavid. A simple story of the life of one of the most romantic characters in American history; pp. 125; cloth covers; price $1.25. When Hearts Were True, by Willoughby Reade. Four capital stories; pp. 140; price $1; cloth covers. Kentuckians in History and Literature, by John W. Townsend; pp. 189; cloth; price $2. A History of Virginia Banks and Bankers Prior to the Civil War, with an essay on the banking system needed, by Wm. L. Royall; pp. 73; cloth covers; price $1.25. Haiti, Her History and Her Detractors, by Hon. J. N. Leger. Probably the most explicit and comprehensive book on Haiti that has yet appeared, valuable alike as a work of reference and as a means of giving the reader an impartial opinion of Haiti and its people; illustrated; cloth covers; price $3. The Story of Christina, by Mary Harriet Norris. A novel of American life to-day; pp. 438; cloth covers; price $1.50. Stella Hope, by Emily Woodson Barksdale. A fascinating romance of modern life; pp. 364; cloth; price $1.50. Selected Poems, by William J. Grayson, student, patriot, statesman, poet. Grayson was the forerunner of that period in Southern literature which produced Timrod, Hayne, Hope and Lanier. His work is of a very high order; pp. 148; cloth; price $1.25. Lee and His Cause, by John R. Deering.

How to Bake Beans

This is how you, if you had the facilities, could bake pork and beans exactly as good as Van Camp's.

Get the choicest Michigan beans, picked over by hand. Get only the whitest, the plumpest, the fullest-grown.

They will cost you six or eight times what other beans would cost, but they're worth it.

Get a tomato sauce made from vine-ripened tomatoes. Not from tomatoes picked green, not of scraps from a canning factory.

It will cost five times what common sauce costs, but it will be a superlative zest.

Bake the tomato sauce with the beans—bake it into them. That is the reason for our delicious blend.

Bake in live steam heated to 250 degrees. Dry heat won't do.

Bake in small parcels, so the heat of the oven attacks every atom. Otherwise the beans will be hard to digest. They will ferment and form gas.

Burst none of the skins. Crack none of the beans. People like their beans nutty, mealy and who-

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

You say that's impossible because you lack the facilities. That is true.

Then why do you bother? It is a pity to spoil such a delicious dish.

Beans are 84% nutriment. They have more food value than meat.

They are cheap and yet all people like them.

Let us bake your beans—bake them as people like them.

Let us supply them to you fresh and savory, always ready to serve.

Three sizes: 10, 15 and 20 cents per can.

The Van Camp Packing Company, Indianapolis, Inc.

What Will You Give To Be Well

I CANNOT tell you how happy I am that I have been able to bring health and strength to 30,000 women in the past six years. Just think! this means a whole city. It is to my thorough study of anatomy, physiology and health principles, and to my 12 years' personal experience before I began my instructions by mail, that I attribute my marvelous success. It would do your heart good to read the reports from my pupils—and I have done all this by simply studying Nature's laws adapted to the correction of each individual difficulty. If vital organs or nerve centers are weak, I strengthen them so that each organ does its work.

I want to help every woman to be perfectly, gloriously well, with that sweet, personal loveliness which health and a wholesome, graceful body gives—a cultured, self-reliant woman with a definite purpose, full of the health and vivacity which makes you

A Better Wife
A Rested Mother
A Sweeter Sweetheart

You can easily remove the fat and it will stay removed. I have reduced 15,000 women.

Too Fleeshy? One pupil writes me:

"Miss Cocroft, I have reduced 75 pounds and I look 15 years younger. I feel so well I want to shout! I never get out of breath now."

"When I began I was rheumatic and constipated, my heart was weak and my head dull, and oh dear, I am ashamed when I think how I used to look! I never dreamed it was all so easy. I thought I just had to be fat. I feel like stopping every fat woman I see and telling her of you."

Too Thin? I may need to strengthen your stomach, intestines and nerves first. A pupil who was thin, writes me:

"I just can't tell you how happy I am. I am so proud of my neck and arms! My bust is rounded out and I have gained 28 pounds; it has come just where I wanted it and I carry myself like another woman."

"My old dresses look stylish on me now. I have not been constipated since my second lesson and I had taken something for years. My liver seems to be all right and I haven't a bit of indigestion any more, for I sleep like a baby and my nerves are so rested. I feel so well all the time."

Write me today telling me your faults in health or figure, and I will cheerfully tell you whether I can help you. I never treat a patient I cannot help. If I cannot help you I will refer you to the help you need.

Send me 10 cents for instructive booklet showing how to stand and walk correctly.

SUSANNA COCROFT, Dept. 18,

Author of "Growth in Silence," "Character as Expressed in the Body," Etc.

To Have Good Figure
Vibrant Health,
Rested Nerves

I bring each pupil to symmetrical proportions and I teach her to stand and to walk in an attitude which bespeaks culture and refinement. A good figure, gracefully carried, means more than a pretty face. Nature's roses cheeks are more beautiful than paint or powder. I help you

Arise to Your Best

The day for drugging the system has passed. In the privacy of your own room, I strengthen the muscles and nerves of the vital organs, lungs and heart and starve your blood to circulating as it did when you were a child. I teach you to breathe so that the blood is fully purified.

You Can Be Well Without Drugs

And the vital strength gained by a forceful circulation relieves you of such chronic ailments as:

Constipation, Indigestion, Rheumatism, Weaknesses, Catarrh, by strengthening whatever organs or nerves are weak.

I wish I could put sufficient emphasis into these words to make you realize that you do not need to be ill, but that you can be a buoyant, vivacious, attractive woman in return for just a few minutes' care each day in your own home.

Individual Instruction—I give each pupil the individual, confidential treatment which her case demands. My information and advice are entirely free.

A CORSET IS NOT NEEDED FOR A GOOD FIGURE

Miss Cocroft's name stands for progress in the scientific care of the health and figure of woman.

A Southern Florence Nightingale

HUNDREDS of the heroes and heroines of the Civil War have passed to their heavenly reward unhonored and unsung. Their great deeds have been done in secret; or those who were benefited by them may have been ungrateful; or the rush of the events may have caused their achievements to be forgotten.

But that they who labored and suffered for their country should fail of the love and gratitude of those they served, is always an unjust and cruel thing. We believe that God always rewards his people, but it is fitting that from their fellow citizens also should come tokens of appreciation which heroism deserves.

One of these unknown benefactors, who suffered as did few others during the Civil War, will with us in the pages, poor and almost forgotten. She is Mrs. E. K. Trader, now a resident of Washington, D. C., a native of Brandon, Miss.

Mrs. Trader was in 1861 the widow of Dr. Frank Newsom, who died leaving her a large fortune. When the war broke out, Mrs. Newsom espoused with her whole heart the cause of the Confederacy. Taking several of her own servants and collecting a quantity of the necessary supplies, she went to the City Hospital in Memphis, Tenn., and offered her services and those of her corps of helpers.

From Memphis she went to Bowling Green, Ky., taking with her again her servants and a carload of supplies. She was in December, 1861. The weather was cold, there were no proper buildings, and everything was in chaos. Battles and skirmishes were constantly occurring in the neighborhood; the sick and wounded were being brought in in large numbers, and this noble woman, from four o'clock every morning until twelve at night, was a ministering angel at the bedside of the stricken Confederate soldiers.

Until the fall of Forts Donaldson and Henry, she remained in Bowling Green. From that place she went to Nashville, Tenn., staying there until that also fell into the hands of the enemy. Then she retreated to Atlanta, Ga., and later to Corinth, Miss., taking everywhere with her her servants and supplies.

She was with the Western army until the close of the war, "working ever," says the Washington Herald, "for the good of the cause."

Her unceasing labors and frequent exposure told upon her health, until she broke down, shortly after peace had been declared. She married, but her husband, Dr. Trader, had, like herself, spent all his fortune for the South, and she has lived in poverty and obscurity ever since.

At the meeting of the Association of the Medical Officers of the Army and Navy of the Confederacy, at Birmingham, Ala., in June, 1908, resolutions of praise and gratitude were passed to Mrs. Trader for her "distinguished ministrations and services to the sick, wounded and dying soldiers of the Confederate army throughout the entire period of the war, which at that time won for her the great love of its officers, soldiers and physicians."

Mrs. E. K. Trader

OUR NEW "DREADNOUGHT"

AMERICA'S new "Dreadnought," the battleship North Dakota, was launched recently from the Fore River Shipyards at Quincy, Mass. While it is of the Dreadnought type, it is much larger. The enormous hull, 510 feet in length, was completed in less than three hundred days after the keel was laid, and work is now being commenced on her superstructure. A large party of distinguished guests of North Dakota, including the Governor and military and naval officials, came on to the launching. The ship was named by Miss Mary Benton as it came down the ways. It moved so easily that four tugs had all they could do to bring her back to her moorings as she drifted toward the open sea. Her armor belt is eleven inches. She will carry thirty-six guns of various sizes and two torpedo tubes. When fitted, she is expected to steam twenty-one knots an hour. Her crew will number forty-five officers and eight hundred and twenty-eight men.

AMONG THE WORKERS AT HOME AND ABROAD

THE ANNUAL MEETING of the Young Men's Business League was held in Columbus, O., October 8-11. It is interdenominational and the meetings were evangelistic in character. The President is Rev. Thomas Henderson, Columbus, O.

EVANGELIST WM. H. FRIDAY, JR., of Brooklyn, N. Y., has been holding some very successful missions in New York and vicinity. He has just concluded a two weeks' campaign at the Sixteenth Baptist Church in Manhattan.

On the 8th of November he began a two weeks' mission at the Union Evangelical Church, Corona, N. Y.

—THE EVANGELISTIC COMMITTEE of New York City this year has eleven tent centres, eleven open air centres and meetings in thirteen shops and factories. During the season there were held: 842 adult meetings with 211,400 attendants; 320 children's meetings with 60,100 attendants. Total number of meetings 1,162, with a total attendance of 271,500.

THE HARTFORD FIRE INSURANCE COMPANY

For ninety-nine years the Hartford has insured against loss by fire and in that time has built up the largest fire insurance business in America. It has not only promptly paid every individual loss, but has given safety and satisfaction to its policy holders in all the conflagrations of American history.

The Hartford stands to-day with large assets and ample financial resources the leader among fire companies. But its proudest asset is its reputation for commercial honor and good faith. It will sell you honest and safe insurance. Losses paid "Cash Without Discount." Is not this the Company you want?

INSURE IN THE HARTFORD

AGENTS EVERYWHERE

DIRECT from FACTORY to YOU at WHOLESALE PRICES, FREIGHT PAID
For 50 years the standard highest grade stove, made complete in our own factory, and ready to set up in your home, at dealers' prices, freight paid, safe delivery guaranteed. $5 to $20 SAVED

GOLD COIN STOVES and RANGES

are wonderful fuel savers, economical, and handsome heaters. You may give one of them

One Whole Year's Trial and receive your money back guaranteed in writing if not satisfied with it. Send for Our Illustrated Book. You will want it before you buy any stove. It gives valuable information. Just write a postal to-day. GOLD COIN STOVE COMPANY, 11 Oak Street, TROY, NEW YORK Successors to Bussey & McLeod, Established 1860.

Print Your Own

Cards, circulars, book, newspaper. Press $5. Larger $18. Save money. Print for others, big profit. All easy, rules sent. Write factory for press catalog, type, paper, etc. THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Connecticut.

BIBLE STUDY BOOK—FREE

A Complete Synopsis of Bible Study of great value to all students of the Word. Send postal-card request to SCOFIELD BIBLE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL, Room 926, 150 Nassau Street, New York

YOU CAN AFFORD

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100. Words and music, $3 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

ALEXANDER'S GOSPEL SONGS

Used in the Chapman-Alexander Evangelistic Campaigns. Compiled by Charles M. Alexander. First Class From Cover to Cover. PRICES: Manila, 15c. a copy; $12.50 per 100. Cloth, 30c. a copy; $25.00 per 100. Address PARLEY E. ZARTMANN, Winona Lake, Indiana

GOD-GIVEN WISDOM*

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

SOLOMON was the youngest and ablest of David's sons, and was from eighteen to twenty years of age at the time of his coronation. The law that "He lives most who thinks most," achieved the place of the eldest in his father's affections, and a kingly succession.

All to whom the Bible comes are charmed by the choice of Solomon hardly less than by the choice of Moses. Moses was reared in the luxury of palace life, so was Solomon. Solomon repeats the fidelity of Moses in resisting the temptations to sin offered by a prince's youth. Solomon obeyed God in accepting a crown with the same humility and fidelity that Moses showed in refusing one.

The Personality of Solomon

A young man of commanding presence as he stood in the sacred Tabernacle at Gibeon, "excellent as the cedars"; his face "bright and ruddy" like his father's in youth; his locks "bushy and black as a raven"; his eyes as "the eyes of doves"; his lips full of grace, and his soul "of gladness"; his whole person "altogether lovely as the standard bearer among a thousand" (Canticles).

At Gibeon, the chief high place, six miles north of Jerusalem, there was a national gathering, as there had been at the coronation of King Solomon. Since then, King Solomon had been co-regent with his father, but now that King David was dead, it was fitting that King Solomon should be acknowledged as the sole ruler. It was a great occasion. A thousand burnt offerings were placed upon the altar by King Solomon to worship God, and to feed the people, for only "the fat of the inwards" was burned, and the rest was used for food, the shoulders being reserved for the priests. It was a glad, but a wearisome day, and King Solomon must have been glad of night coming on when he could rest.

We are distinctly told that "God appeared to Solomon in a dream by night." Solomon himself realized that it was no fantasy. Like Samuel of old, when God spoke to him, he was in the attitude of desiring to know what the Lord had to say to him. Wonderfully gracious were the words: "Ask what I shall give thee." And Solomon chose and chose quickly: "A wise and understanding heart to discern between the good and the bad, and to judge the people righteously." If his eyelids were closed, and his body asleep, his soul was wonderfully alert and wide-awake. And God was pleased with his choice, and promised that he should not only have wisdom, but riches, and power, and honor in measure never before nor since realized. And Solomon awoke, and it was not all a dream. The reality of it was so impressed upon Solomon that he went directly and offered up burnt offerings that he might be cleansed from sin, and peace offerings of thanksgiving.

The Song of Solomon

It is not enough to be able intellectually to "discern between good and evil." We need disposition, as well as discernment, lest we shall "condemn the wrong, and yet the wrong pursue." The choice made by Solomon indicated a soul as pure in its purposes as that of a little child. This Edenic period of Solomon's young life is mirrored in what is known as "The Song of Solomon," written doubtless when his affections were so undefiled and single in their object that they were to him a mystic parable of the soul's love for the heavenly Bridegroom, and affording to many devout worshippers, whose whole body and soul and spirit are given in consecration to God, a holy of holies of deepest communion with him whom the soul loveth. This song of Paradise regained by holiness bids us put aside the error of supposing that the "flesh" is the seat of sin, and exhorts us to present our bodies as living, holy and reasonable sacrifices to God, pure in all parts and in all functions.

Some one has said it would have been better if Solomon had chosen "godliness" instead of wisdom. Evidently God was satisfied with his choice, and therefore we should be.

"I called upon God, and the Spirit of Wisdom came to me! I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Neither compared I unto her any precious stone, because all gold in respect to her is as a little sand; and silver shall be counted as clay to her. I loved her above health and beauty, and chose to have her instead of light; for the light that cometh from her never goeth out. All good things together come to me with her, and innumerable riches in her hands. And I rejoiced in them all, because wisdom goeth before them."

The practical output of wisdom is to be able to say and do the right thing at the right time and in the right place. There are many legends told to show the wisdom of Solomon—one of which is that two wreaths of flowers were brought in before him—one natural and the other artificial—and he was asked to designate them. His only reply was a request that bees should be brought in. This was done, when they at once lighted upon the real flowers to get the honey, not touching the others. Solomon was wise enough to know that the bees could not be deceived. Another story, but a true one, is that told about the two women who both claimed the same living child, each refusing to acknowledge the dead child as hers. Solomon ordered his soldiers to cut the living child in two, and give half to each woman. How dreadful if it had been done! But instead, Solomon intended to seize upon that moment of anguish which the true mother would show, and countermand his order in time to save the life of the child. One woman was satisfied with the order, but the other would rather yield her claim than have the child killed; that revealed the true mother, and Solomon restored the child to her.

The enemies who were plotting against his kingdom were disposed of; even his own brother, Adonijah, was slain. Abiathar, the high priest, was deposed, and another put in his place. Shimei, who had been false to King David, was executed because, being on parole, he went out again among his nation's enemies, stirring up strife.

And King Solomon married the daughter of Pharaoh. Solomon secured a commercial alliance with Tyre, making Israel a commercial people, and obtaining materials for the temple.

A still greater conquest was that he was able to make the Land of Promise the land of possession. The whole Land of Promise deeded by God to Abraham, Moses and Joshua, which was only half possessed by Joshua, was possessed fully by Solomon for the first time in Israel's history, Hamath being the northern border; Euphrates, east; the river of Egypt, south, and the Great Sea, or Mediterranean, west, making an empire ranking in power and wealth with Babylon and Egypt.

Continued on next page

* The International Sunday School Lesson for December 6, 1908. Solomon Chooses Wisdom. 1. Kings 3: 1-15. GOLDEN TEXT: "The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom." Prov. 9: 10.

"Where can I invest my money so that it will be safe and where I can have it when wanted, and yet so it will bring me reasonable earnings when invested?" This question will be answered to your satisfaction if you will write the Industrial Savings & Loan Co., whose advertisement appears on page 948.

How to Enamel a Bedroom

It's the simplest thing in the world to enamel a bedroom—woodwork, furniture or bed if you have the right enamel and know how to use it.

You can put it on smoothly, evenly, without a brush mark, and have a glossy or dull finish, whichever you prefer, if you use

Neal's Enamel

ACME QUALITY

The label gives all the necessary directions for a successful and satisfactory job.

Neal's Enamel, Acme Quality, comes in all colors, shades and tints, from snow white to deep reds, blues and greens, so you can make your room conform to any color scheme you desire.

The Acme Quality Text-book on Paints and Finishes is a valuable book for every householder. It tells what finish to use for every purpose in and about the house and how to use it successfully.

Send for it—it's free.

Ask the practical painter about Acme Quality New Era Paints for the outside of your house.

Complete catalog and details of our selling helps for retail dealers on request.

For sale by leading dealers.

ACME WHITE LEAD & COLOR WORKS, Dept. 0, Detroit, Mich.
IN DETROIT—Life is Worth Living

USEFUL CHRISTMAS GIFTS

By Mail

25c

Coin or 2c stamps

STITCH RIPPER

Don't Fuss, Don't Fret. Rip Seams with a Stitch Ripper. Saves hard work and annoyance. It's a Picker and Puller. Picks up and pulls out machine stitching, bastings, draws threads for hem-stitching, easily, quickly. Favorite No. 3, French Enamel Handle, 35c. Silver Mounted Handle, 50c. Money back. Agents wanted. A. C. DEMERRITT, 179 Portland St., BOSTON, MASS.

BERNARD MEYER,
151 Chambers Street, N. Y.

MANUFACTURER OF

Candy Boxes for Sunday Schools.

SEND FOR CATALOGUE.

DEPT. S

AMUSING and INSTRUCTIVE

Run Toys, Fun for Boys. Three sizes, prices, 31 and 41.25. Any good Dry Battery will run them for days. Send for FREE Catalogue T 24; 168 pages, 1,000 electrical specialties with net prices. Manhattan Electrical Supply Co. 170 Fifth Avenue, Chicago; 17 Park Place, New York City.

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure

THIS DOES IT ALL. The money made selling our Shear and other useful patented articles astonishes agents. V.C. Glebe, Colo., O., sold 22 pairs of Positive Tension Shears in 3 hours, made $1,650. We guarantee TO SHOW ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $3 to $10 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents, that are not found in stores, than any other house in the U. S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address Thomas Mfg. Co., 168 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

8 HOLIDAY POST CARDS 10c

Send us 10c and we will send you 8 Beautiful Colored Christmas and New Years Post Cards. 24 cards for only 25 cents. The best value ever offered. KANSAS POST CARD CO., 449 W. 7th Ave., Topeka, Kan.

SEYBOLD REED-PIP ORGAN

Style No. 120, 5 Octaves. Do Golden Oak. Seybold Patent Reed-Pipe Action. Pipes in harmonious colors and go bronze. Height, 90-in.; Width, 55-in.; Depth, 28-in. Blown hand or feet. Catalog of 25 manual and pedal organs and single-manual Chapel and Parlor organs FREE. Send for it now.

Seybold Piano and Organ Company,
213 River Street, Elgin, Ill.

WHY NOT BE AN ARTIST

Our graduates are filling High Salary Positions. Good artists EARN $25 TO $100 PER WEEK and upwards, in easy fascinating work. Courses of Personal Home Instruction by correspondence, are complete, practical. Eleven years successful teaching. Expert instructors. Possibility guaranteed competent workers. Write for Handbook, Free.

SCHOOL OF APPLIED ART (Founded 1898)
N 58, Gallery Fine Arts, Battle Creek, Mich.

LEARN PLUMBING

A trade that will make you independent for life. Hours Shorter—Pay Bigger—Demand Greater than any other trade. You need no previous experience. Our practical methods enable you in a few months to hold position as skilled plumber or conduct your own business. Catalog sent free.

St. Louis Trades School
4455 Olive St. St. Louis, Mo.

BEGIN NOW

TO INCREASE YOUR INCOME by corresponding for newspapers in spare time. Any intelligent person anywhere may learn the fascinating vocation. Red stamp brings interesting particulars. Write today to

Sec'y UNITED NEWS SYSTEM
Dept. 111, Buffalo, N. Y.

15 CENTS A ROW

For a 22-inch Hog Fence; 27c for 47-in. Farm Fence; 87c for 60-inch Poultry Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. 68 styles and heights. Catalog free. Write for it today.

KITSELMAN BROS. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIAN

Sunday School Lesson—Continued

He established lines of caravan and marine trade far and near, by which the treasures and dainties of the whole world were laid at his feet.

In literary lines his success was marvellous. Kings, queens and travelers came from the uttermost parts of the earth to the palace of Solomon, who as a "preacher" gathered these people at stated times and places, and uttered his songs and proverbs, and answered their questions. He was a great botanist, and knew about vegetation from the lofty cedars of Lebanon to the lowly hyssop, which springeth out of the wall. He was a master of zoology, ornithology, entomology, and ichthyology, which he more simply calls "a knowledge of beasts and fowl, and of creeping things and fishes."

As to his success as a great builder, we will study that in our next lesson.

Behold Solomon in the dangerous Monday of his worldly prosperity, riding in the snow-white and sun-bright ornament of royalty in the house of the forest of Lebanon, whose pillars were of cedar, sitting in the court of judgment on his throne of ivory and gold; on either side six carved lions standing on the steps, and supporting the royal chair. He rises and goes forth in a stately chariot of cedar, decorated with silver and gold, and carried with most costly tapestry, riding between two lines of soldiers, each carrying a shield of gold—valiant men, the tallest and handsomest of the sons of Israel. And thus he journeys to his summer palace in Lebanon, and his gardens or paradises at Etham, or to his ivory towers and mansions. All of his drinking vessels are of gold, for silver was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

An Illustration from Nature

Jesus, when he was in this world, could say as he looked at the beautiful lilies of the field: "Even Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these." This makes us think perhaps we have never really seen a lily! Let us examine one through a microscope that we may see it in all its beauty, and we shall then feel the force of the words of Jesus.

Two brothers and their families lived together. Each of the wives had an infant born within a day or two of the other. The child of the older woman was accidentally crushed to death; and in the younger woman's absence the bereaved mother changed the children. The sister-in-law soon found out the fraud. The older woman would not give up the living child, and the mother appealed to Yang, the district magistrate. Unable to make out which woman was telling the truth, he at last said, "As you both claim the living child, I shall settle the dispute by claiming it myself. But, he added, 'to-morrow I shall carry it to the sea and drown it.' On the morrow a crowd of people assembled outside the yamen to see the issue of this strange judgment. The central gate was thrown open, and the procession set out; the heralds announcing the approach of the hsien with nine strokes of the gong, and their cry of Oh! Oh! Oh! the yamen runners bearing rusty iron chains, the symbols of retributive justice, placards inscribed with the magistrate's official titles; then his umbrella and his great fan; and, last of all, the mandarin himself, carried by four bearers, his chair open in front according to law. His precious charge was protected from the air by its cape and wrappings. When they reached the sea, the mandarin stepped from his chair to the waterside, and with a swing threw his burden into the waves. It struggled in the water until the younger woman, unable to bear the sight, rushed in and clasped in her arms a great fish, on which were tied the baby's cap and swaddling clothes. The true mother's heart had been discovered, and she found her baby alive and well in the magistrate's yamen.

The Ancient Blanket of Uganda

By REV. ERWIN H. RICHARDS

HERE is no doubt at all that Moses was in Egypt, or that the Egyptians were well acquainted with all sorts of papyrus, or preparations of bark, or the pith of plants, which would adhere to each other in the order of a blanket. If we are not mistaken, we have seen Egyptian mummies which were wrapped in a cloth which to all appearances was a preparation of the same material which is now known as the bark blanket of Uganda."

The people of Uganda are different from any of the nations which surround them. They have a large city of 8000 souls, and possessions not equalled by any natives on the continent. They have a civil government, courts, and public highways, and the people are scrupulously clad in white rags. Bishop Hartzell says they are black Jews, originally from the North. These people were the manufacturers of the Uganda bark blanket, an art brought down from Egypt. It is supposed that this modern bark blanket of Uganda is really of ancient origin, and it is not at all unlikely that the same population of Rameses II., the pharaoh of the Exodus, was often clad in its homely folds. Since the coming of the man with a Bible under his arm, cheap cottons from Europe and America have begun to supplant this useful native texture, until in central and east Africa to-day only the cheapest of people now wear it.

The blanket is prepared from a variety of the rubber tree, which grows in considerable abundance in many sections of East Africa. Only the tender young tree is available for blankets. A native takes his short axe and a mere chisel set in a handle—and cuts a miputo (rubber) tree, about a foot high. He cuts the tree down, and strips off some nine or ten feet of the trunk, and removing the bark entire, separates the smooth inner surface from the coarse external, which gives him a clean mat of freshest pulp. He then lays this on a log and with a mallet, the end of which is cut in corrugations like those of an ice hatchet, he hammers till the whole is reduced to a pasty consistency. He takes this soft, dripping material and wringing out the moisture stretches the blanket into shape, striving to make it as wide as possible. As it came from the tree it was some ten feet long and two feet wide. Under his treatment it becomes about six feet long and five feet wide. He spreads it on the sand in the sun and in half an hour it is folded and ready for the market. It does not take him an hour to make it, and it will wear well for a year or two as a blanket, or in other service. It is used by the women in carrying corn from the fields or peanuts to market, and for gowning of all sorts from sack-cloth to wedding day.

On our return home, we brought with us about a thousand of these blankets, believing that Christian people might be glad to have them as a memento from Africa. These blankets would be of special interest in every Sunday School in the home-land, teaching the children in so many ways how people live in a land without a Bible. They can be used for souvenirs, for postal cards, for book covers, for pillow slips, for slippers, or for book shelves. They will be sent anywhere, post paid, for two dollars sent to the writer. The entire proceeds of the sale of these blankets will go directly for the education of natives in the District of Inhambane, East Africa. They will be a fine present to anyone, in exchange for gifts for the children of Africa.

Elyria, O.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

For 1909

The Best Christmas Present for $1.75

Where is the household to which a Christmas Present of a year's subscription for The Companion does not bring unfeigned pleasure? If it is given to one of the younger members of the family, the older ones will have a large share in it. What other present costing so little is so certain to be appreciated and welcomed? The contents of the fifty-two issues of 1909 will include:

- 50 STAR ARTICLES—Contributions to Useful Knowledge, by Famous Men and Women.
- 250 CAPITAL STORIES—Serial Stories, Stories of Character, Adventure and Heroism.
- 1000 UP-TO-DATE NOTES on Current Events and Discoveries in Nature and Science.
- 2000 ONE-MINUTE STORIES—Anecdotes, Timely Editorials, Miscellany, Children's Page, etc.

Giving as much good reading as twenty 400-page books of fiction, travel, biography, etc., costing ordinarily $1.50 each.

CHRISTMAS PRESENT COUPON.

Every New Subscriber who at once cuts out and sends this slip (or mentions this publication) with $1.75 for the fifty-two issues of 1909 will receive

Gift 1. All the issues of the paper for the remaining weeks of 1908, including the beautiful Holiday Numbers.

Gift 2. The Calendar for 1909—"In Grandmother's Garden"—a picture 8 x 24 inches, lithographed in thirteen colors.

Then The Companion for the fifty-two issues of 1909—a library in itself.

Send for Sample Copies of the Paper and Illustrated Announcement for 1909.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, BOSTON, MASSACHUSETTS.

NEW LIFE

Found In Change to Right Food

After one suffers from acid dyspepsia, sour stomach, for months and then finds the remedy is in getting the right kind of food, it is something to speak out about.

A N. Y. lady and her young son had such an experience and she wants others to know how to get relief. She writes: "For about fifteen months my little boy and myself had suffered with sour stomach. We were unable to retain much of anything we ate."

"After suffering in this way for so long I decided to consult a specialist in stomach diseases. Instead of prescribing drugs, he put us both on Grape-Nuts and we began to improve immediately."

"It was the key to a new life. I found we had been eating too much heavy food which we could not digest. In a few weeks after commencing Grape-Nuts, I was able to do my house work. I wake in the morning with a clear head and feel rested and have no sour stomach. My boy sleeps well and wakes with a laugh."

"We have regained our lost weight and continue to eat Grape-Nuts for both the morning and evening meals. We are well and happy and owe it to Grape-Nuts."

"There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Tools For A Factory

Given Away

FREE

IF YOU BUY CLOTH FROM US ACCORDING TO OUR SIMPLE EASY PLAN

Never Before in the History of Business Has Help Like This Been Offered to Ambitious Men

We Are Making You This Offer because we want you to start a Canvas Glove Factory of your own and become prosperous. We want to show you how this can be done on very little capital (from $50 to $200) with the possibility of making thousands of dollars within a short time.

Under Our New Plan we offer to give you free the necessary tools, such as dies, cutting table, maple cutting block, turning machine, cloth rack, rawhide maul, knife, patterns and equipments. Surely no such liberal offer was ever made before.

We Do All This For You—start your factory, furnish the tools, simply with the understanding that you buy your supplies from us so long as our prices are as low or lower than you can get elsewhere. This is Simply an Opportunity to get into the manufacturing business, which, with a reasonable amount of work and attention to business, should make any man or woman a prosperous factory owner in a short time.

THIS BOOK FREE

This valuable book contains a great deal of information about the secrets of the Glove business and how anyone with a capital of from $50 to $200 can make money right from the start. Send for it today. It is free.

THE McCREERY MFG. CO.
828 Dorr St., Toledo, O.

✱ Young People's Societies ✱

Sure of Salvation*

MUCH sorrow and confusion are caused, we are told, by taking things for granted. Scientists are constantly bidding us to challenge every statement. "Prove all things," is the apostle's injunction; and yet it is often an economy and a duty to take things for granted.

A mother was once asked, "Do you not have trouble in making your boys go to church Sunday mornings?"

"Never," she replied. "They expect to go to church on Sunday morning just as much as they expect to bathe and dress. It is taken for granted."

A father was once complaining of the tendency among educated young men to remain in bachelorhood, rather than to deny themselves certain luxuries which they could afford if single, but which would be out of their reach if they should take upon themselves the responsibilities of a family.

"You can't counsel boys on this subject," some one remarked. "To tell them they ought to get married as soon as they can afford it, and to hurry them in the matter, would only make them silly and sentimental."

"But direct discourse is not the only tool that one can employ," argued the father. "Some things—all of the great, simple, natural things of life—should be taken for granted with children. When you see a spoiled child, say to your boy, 'See to it, my son, that your own children are better brought up.' When you see a slatternly girl, say, 'I hope, my boy, that when you choose a wife, she will not be like her.' When you see a modest and sensible one, say, 'She makes one think of your mother when she was a girl. The wise young man picks out a wife with qualities like that.' Speak often of the delights of home, and say that to have a home of one's own—clean, well-kept, peaceful, is the 'cap and button' of human enjoyment; and that every young man and woman should save up money in order to provide that luxury. Marriage and the setting-up of a home of his own, as soon as he is earning enough to warrant it, should be openly and wholesomely taken for granted with every boy."

An enormous amount of emotional and vital force has been wasted in the world, because men have often failed to take it for granted that, when they have dedicated their lives to God, and are honestly, sincerely and prayerfully striving to serve him, they have been accepted.

This is not so common now as in the days when Calvinism held us in a stronger grip, and before the call to active service was so loudly heard; but there is still far too much questioning in the minds of young converts concerning their own fate in the future. Each one of us knows his own soul and its dark spots. One of the poets has said something like this:

God spares all beings but himself that hideous sight,
A naked human soul.

Even the best men have felt that their hearts were stained beyond cleansing; but it is useless to stand still and bemoan our condition. Morbidity, uselessness, despair, wait to engulf such a mourner. Repent, confess, pray for strength, read the promises and press onward.

You have heard the word of truth, the Gospel of your salvation, and you have believed. Upon your belief, if it was truly honest, you were sealed with his Holy Spirit—and that Spirit beareth witness with your spirit that you are the child of God—and nothing can separate you from his love.

Take this forever for granted. It is the right of every one of us. Let us claim it boldly and rest upon the promises, as we go forth to our work.

Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 6. Text: Rom. 8:14-17, 28, 29; Eph. 1:1-5.

Consistent Living*

SOMEONE has said that character is like a double or triple acoustic; whichever way it is read, it spells the same thing.

The man who is always the same, honest, faithful, at home, in his office, in his church, on his travels—he is the consistent man. We always know where to find him. Of such is the Kingdom.

In a certain large town two of the most prominent men attended the same church. Both were members of it, both contributed largely to its support, and both were perhaps equally noted for glaring weaknesses of character. Some individuals seem to think that if they pay their tithes into the treasury, they are relieved from the more arduous duty of living strictly up to the Ten Commandments. This was the medieval doctrine of indulgences, and it still prevails among too many of our latter-day churches.

Possibly this may have formed an article in the creed of these two inconsistent gentlemen. Or possibly they may have been densely unconscious of their shortcomings. At any rate, when their minister one Sunday preached a fiery and pointed sermon against certain sins to which they were addicted, one of them, Mr. R. C. Jones, as he walked down his especial aisle after service, pointed to the other one, and whispered to a friend, "I should think that Chandler Christy would feel pretty cheap after hearing that sermon"; while Mr. Chandler Christy, on the other side, was saying, "After that sermon, I shouldn't think that R. C. Jones would dare to hold up his head."

It behooves us all to take to ourselves every sermon and not to fit it to the back of some other mortal.

It is by the traitorous inconsistency of Christians that the progress of the church has ever been chiefly retarded. If every Christian had been true, how much more powerful would be the cause of Christ in the world to-day!

Mr. Beecher once said that flowers give forth always each its own fragrance, and wear always each its own color, and so it should be with the Christian. It is a beautiful simile.

It is said that when Lord Peterborough, an unbeliever, lodged for a season with Fenton, Archbishop of Cambray, he was so delighted with his piety and virtue that he exclaimed when he left him, "If I stay here any longer, I shall become a Christian in spite of myself."

In the same way, a young minister stated that, at one period of his life, he was nearly an infidel; "but," said he, "there was one argument in favor of Christianity which I could never refute—the consistent conduct of my own father."

Milton says that sin may and does come to every soul, but that it may be "so unapproved," and be so hotly cast out, that it may leave no stain behind. The evil thought may sometimes come—as the noxious insect may sometimes alight upon us; but if we fight it, resist it, thrust the accursed thing from us, God accounts it not sin in us.

To make himself mind himself—to learn the great lesson of self-control—is the first duty of every Christian. Good intentions are all very well; God may accept them. We do not know. But we do know that the outside world does not accept them without the deed. It jeers at the inconsistent man and says, "So this is religion!"—and thus we crucify our Lord afresh.

It is an old simile which compares the consistent character to gold. If it is of the true metal, it can go through fire or water; upon the dunghill, into the kennel; among the good, among the bad; yet it will still retain its purity and excellence.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 6. Text: James 3:10-13. Consecrated Meeting.

MONEY WILL STRETCH

At least it will go further if spent in the right place. 50 PER CENT. SAVED BY OUR BIG OFFERS. We can stretch your money and save you a full 50 per cent LOOK! Here are the most remarkable bargains in Magazine Clubs ever offered

Special Offers

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Cosmopolitan.....$1.00
Paris Modes.....1.50	$1.50
Pearson's.....1.50
Total.....$2.50

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Cosmopolitan.....$1.00
Designer......50	$1.25
Total.....$1.50

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Pearson's.....$1.50
Paris Modes......50	$1.50
Woman's National Daily.....1.00
Total.....$3.00

Metropolitan, Sunset or Bohemian can be substituted for Pearson's in this club.

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Woman's National Daily.....$1.00
Paris Modes......50	$1.00
National Home Journal......50
Total.....$2.00

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Outing.....$3.00
Sunset.....1.50	$2.25
Total.....$4.50

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Pearson's.....$1.50
Metropolitan.....1.50	$3.00
Sunset.....1.50
Bohemian.....1.50
Total.....$6.00

Outing or Smart Set can be included in any of above clubs at $1.50. Any two $1.50 magazines in above clubs will be sent to one or different addresses for only $1.50

Paris Modes, the greatest woman's magazine in the world, will be sent to any address one year for only 25c.

Big Bargain Clubs

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Smart Set.....$3.00
Pearson's.....1.50	$2.75
Woman's National Daily.....1.00
Total.....$5.50

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
World's Work.....$3.00
McClure's.....1.50	$3.50
Woman's Home Companion.....1.00
Total.....$5.50

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Cosmopolitan.....$1.00
Review of Reviews.....3.00	$3.00
The World To-day.....1.50
Total.....$5.50

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Everybody's.....$1.50
Delineator.....1.00	$2.00
Total.....$2.50

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
American Magazine.....$1.00
Cosmopolitan.....1.00	$1.65
Total.....$2.00

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Outing.....$3.00
Success.....1.00	$2.50
Cosmopolitan.....1.00
Total.....$5.00

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
Outing.....$3.00
Success.....1.00	$2.00
Total.....$4.00

Regular Price Per Year	Our Price
National Home Journal.....$0.50
Paris Modes......50	50c.
Total.....$1.00

Paris Modes, Nat'l Home Journal 50c. and your choice of Pearson's, Metropolitan, Bohemian or Sunset, to one or more address for one year only. $1.50

Big Bargain Price

on Single Yearly Subscription	Regular Price	Our Price
Outing.....$3.00		$1.50
Bohemian.....1.50		1.50
Pearson's.....1.50		1.50
Smart Set.....3.00		2.00
Paris Modes......50		1.00
Nat'l Home Journal......50		1.00
Woman's Nat'l Daily.....1.00		1.00

Our prices are the lowest. Show any Agency or Publisher quote or advertise better or different offers, send your orders to us at their prices.

We always acknowledge every order. This is very seldom done by any other agency

If you don't find all the publications you desire, in this list send us your list and we will show you a large saving by return mail

If you change your address, our magazines can be changed from old to new address.

Always remit by Express, P. O. Order or by Registered Mail. O personal checks, always loc. to exchange.

If you are already a subscriber to any or all of these magazine your subscription will be extended one year.

These offers are good to old as well as new subscribers.

If you don't want all of the magazines sent to one address, you can split the club and have them sent to any number of different addresses

Be sure and send for our big Bargain Catalogue. It is sent free to any address.

Reference: North Memphis Savings Bank, Memphis; or any business house in Memphis, or any magazine in our clubs.

Always mention the name of the publication in which you saw this offer

Always Order Club by Name, and Send All Orders Direct to Send for our Large Price List JONES BROTHERS COMPANY 600-606 Goodwyn Institute, Dept. 48, Memphis, Tennessee

WE WANT AGENTS AND REPRESENTATIVES in every city, town and village in the United States to take subscriptions to our clubs. We have many who are earning large sums of money each month. We can offer you regular salaries positions at $75.00 per month and upward if you can secure the orders. To agents and representatives of magazines we are in a position to offer you clubs that in every instance are far below the cost you have to pay the publishers or other agencies for the magazines in our clubs.

LITTLE BEAUTY NIGHT LAMP

Once filled with kerosene it will burn for 40 hours and is absolutely odorless. Ornamental, too, because handsomely constructed of brass, nickel-plated, and each lamp is provided with enough wick to last several years. The lamp can be used in entries, hallways, closets, and is invaluable for Nursery and Sickroom.

Ask your dealer or by mail (post-paid) 65 cents. Agents wanted.

65c.

SILVER & COMPANY
Sole Manufacturers
320 Hewes St., Brooklyn, N.Y.
Trade-Mark Registered, U.S. Patent Office

MUGGS

A jolly game for the home circle or for parties. Any number of players up to ten; the more, the merrier. Two games played with the same cards. Handsomely finished pack in telescoping case, 50c. Set of six packs for Progressive Muggs, $2.50. Sent postpaid on receipt of price. Chamberlin Bros., Pubs., 437 Missouri Av., East St. Louis, Ill.

THE BEST LIGHT

Infinitely better than electricity, gas, acetylene or kerosene and the most economical of all. Each lamp is a self-contained miniature light works.

MAKES AND BURNS ITS OWN GAS OVER 200 STYLES 2 CENTS A WEEK

100 CANDLE POWER

Fully guaranteed. Over 200 styles. Agents wanted. Catalog Free. Write to-day.

THE BEST LIGHT CO.
3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

LOOKING AHEAD?

If so, take advantage of to-day's opportunities for the merchant, farmer, fruit grower and business man along the Pacific Coast Extension of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway

Descriptive Books Free. P. A. Miller, G. P. A., Chicago

"Jubilee Year" of Page Fence

Page Fence is woven just the same today as 25 years ago. real triple knot—not a simple twist. Page Fence is made of High Carbon Steel of double the tensile strength and elasticity of common fence wire.

Page Catalog—"Jubilee Edition"—SENT FREE! Box 130X

Page Woven Wire Fence Co. Adrian, Michigan

Memory the Basis of All Knowledge

Stop Forgetting

You are no greater intellectual than your memory. Easy, increased income; gives ready memory for fact names, business, studies, conversational develops will, public speaking.

Write to-day

DICKSON MEMORY SCHOOL, 701 Auditorium Bldg., Chic

RISEING SUN

STOVE POLISH

The Product of Forty Years Successful Experience.

It is natural we should know what the housekeeper wants, and how to make it right. Try a cake of "RISEING SUN," from your grocer. Dissolves instantly. Nothing like it for stoves.

MORSE BROS., Props. Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

Solomon Chooses Wisdom

By MRS. M. BAXTER

AFTER the death of David, and after Solomon had fulfilled the last directions given to him by his father, he next turned his attention to taking a consort, and, apparently without divine direction, he married Pharaoh's daughter. This was, humanly speaking, a politic step, which would strengthen his kingdom in the eyes of the surrounding nations. But he had sought a wife, as Abraham bought one for his son, from the land of God, how much more blessed the life of Solomon might have been!

At this time, "Solomon loved the Lord, walking in the statutes of David his father, only he sacrificed and burned incense in high places." The very mention of this would infer a tendency to want of simplicity in worship, though now only latent, and like a dangerous germ in his life. He loved the Lord, "only!" How often this may be said of some child of God! He is a Christian, only he does love money; he is a Christian, only he is selfish; he is a Christian, only he is conceited; she is a Christian, only she does talk so against others, etc., etc. Oh, how much more there is of his damaged article, Christianity, than of the original, genuine type of apostolic days, when men "took knowledge of them that they had been with Jesus."

Solomon held his first great national assembly. He gathered "the captains of thousands and of hundreds, . . . judges, and . . . every governor of all Israel, the chief of the fathers," and they went with him to the tabernacle of the Lord, which was pitched in Gibeon, and there Solomon, in the presence of assembled Israel, "offered a thousand burnt offerings" upon the razed altar. It was a magnificent testimony to the honor in which he held his God, and he meant all Israel to know that he was not ashamed of God or of his worship. It was "in that light," after the thousand burnt offerings had been offered by him in Gibeon (II. Chron. 1: 7), that "the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream."

And God said, Ask what I shall give thee. Every promise of our God for spirit, soul, and body is spread out before us, and his Spirit lights them up and lights him up as he speaks these words to us. "And Solomon said, Thou hast showed unto thy servant David my father, great mercy, according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee." Solomon recognized that God's grace to his father was according to his walk with him. "And thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day. And now, O Lord my God, thou hast made thy servant king instead of David, my father: and I am but a little child: I know not how to go out or come in. And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude. Give, therefore, thy servant an understanding to judge thy people, that I may discern between good and bad: for who is able to judge this thy so great a people?"

God was "pleased." Oh, how glorious that God can be pleased with sinful man! But for the precious blood of Christ it could not be. "And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and hast not asked for thyself long life, neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies; but hast asked for thyself understanding to discern judgment, behold, I have done according to thy words; lo, I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither after thee shall any arise like unto thee." Solomon had the word of God for it, but there is no evidence that he felt himself any wiser than before; God was his guarantee that it was so.

This was enough. It is thus God would have us take his promises, taking for granted that, in the very nature of things, what he says must be.

God's wisdom was given to the "hearing heart." And now was manifested that which God had spoken: "All Israel heard of the judgments which the king had judged: and they feared the king; for they saw that the wisdom of God was in him, to do judgment."

A PERFECT GIFT

Our Red Letter Testament

It is dangerous to claim perfection, but our Red Letter Testament is so universally acknowledged to be perfect in every detail of manufacture that in this instance we may safely make the assertion.

This beautiful volume is the Only New Testament which contains all the Words Spoken by Our Lord Printed in Red. The Type is Very Clear, and the Alignment of the Red and Black Lettering Absolutely Perfect. The Red Letter New Testament is exquisitely bound in American Levant, Soft and Flexible, with overlapping edges—Red Under Gold—with book-mark, making a compact volume that may be conveniently carried in the pocket.

As an ideal gift for Sunday School teachers or special rewards for scholars, nothing would be more fitting or better appreciated than this PERFECT TESTAMENT, and when ordered with a new or renewed subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this superb book may be had for one-half the price you would pay elsewhere for a Testament half so good.

The Red Letter New Testament is issued in both the Authorized and Revised Versions, and is sent, all charges prepaid, together with The Christian Herald for one year, and our Art Gallery De Luxe, for only $2.

When ordering, state whether you want Authorized or Revised Version.

Address to-day: THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91 Bible House, New York City.

The Kaiser's Interview

NOT for a number of years has the Reichstag, the parliament of the German Empire, been so much stirred as in the last few weeks, the Emperor's interview showing his past friendship for Great Britain being the cause. The interview was written by a man of political standing in England, and through him given to the British public. In it the Kaiser said he had endeavored to make friends with England and had advised Victoria at the time of the Boer war. There were a number of other statements along the same line. He stated he had done this while official Germany and a large part of the population were hostile in feeling.

A large part of the German public and many members of the Reichstag became highly indignant regarding the utterances, which were regarded as indiscreet and liable to shake the confidence of Holland, France and other countries in Germany's foreign policy. The newspapers criticized their ruler's action, and the Reichstag witnessed a stormy scene when the matter was brought up by some of the members. Leaders of several parties attacked the Emperor's policy, and that of Von Buelow, the chancellor, saying that the Emperor had a foreign policy different from that popularly acknowledged, and supposed to be carried out by the foreign office. Some went so far as to demand a pledge that such a thing should not happen in the future. The chancellor defended the Kaiser and said that the latter was misunderstood and that he was working for peace among the nations. Von Buelow offered his resignation to the Emperor, but it was not accepted. He said that the Emperor had not seen the article before it was published.

PEARLINE
(A SODA POWDER)

Does The Work of Washing and Dyeing Pottery—
Enameled Hollow Ware, Hops, & Soft water Without the aid of other Agents—
Soda—Borax or Naphtha.

Does The Whole Work
It Washes Without Rubbing—Simply
Soaking or Boiling and Rinsing, and Easy, Quick and Thorough Rinsing is one of its strong points.

Does Nothing but the Work
Harmless to the Skin and Delicate Fabrics—
Keeps Laundry Bright and Clean—
Keeps Linen Soft and Plump—
Keeps the Rubbing of the Feet Away—
Keeps the Work and the Wool Wash
Your Clothes Bright.

The Born Steel Range

not only bakes better than other ranges and means cooking easier, but we know by actual tests, will save you fuel. Born Ranges are far better than ordinary stoves in material and workmanship and a good deal better in design—better by 12 exclusive patented features. Yet Born Ranges cost you no more than the ordinary kind.

Write us to day and we will send you catalog with all information giving you name of our nearest dealer or telling you how you can buy our stoves.

THE BORN STEEL RANGE CO. 2176 E. 9TH STREET, CLEVELAND, OHIO.
Makers of the First Steel Range in the World.

Vapo-Cresolene
(ESTABLISHED 1875)

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used while you sleep."

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough. Ever dreaded Croup cannot exist where Cresolene is used.

It acts directly on the nose and throat, making breathing easy in the case of colds; soothes the sore throat and stops the cough.

Cresolene is a powerful germicide, acting both as a curative and preventive in contagious diseases.

It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use.

For Sale By All Druggists.
Send Postal for Descriptive Booklet.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 180 Fulton St., New York
Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada.

5,000 Grand Offers!
Doors, Windows, Millwork

50% Below Dealers' Prices

Here are a few samples of our 5,000 Building Material Bargains: Doors 7c, Windows 6c, Storm Doors $1.25, 108 square feet Flint-Coated Roofing, guaranteed 8 years, $1.25, 108 square feet Tar Felt 20c, 45-light Hot Bed Sash $1.60, 100 lineal feet Quarter Round 25c, Base Blocks 4c, Corner Blocks 2c, Glass 8x10 inches, 3c, 10 feet Hardwood Flooring 5c, Porch Brackets 5c, Porch Spindles 15c, Hardwood Thresholds 6c, Adjustable Gable Ornaments 7c.

We save you at least 50 per cent on everything we sell for building houses, barns, garages, sheds, school houses, churches, stores, etc. It pays to buy from us.

The Largest Plant in America Selling Direct to Consumer Quality & Safe Delivery Guaranteed

Not in any Trust. Absolutely independent. Our stock is immense and we ship promptly. Everything is bright and new—no "week-end" All railroad stock strictly up to official grades listed by the Sash, Door & Blind Manufacturers' Association.

Get the Great Catalog FREE for a Postal

108 sq. ft. $1.25
Free Nails & Cement

It will save you a big money. Pay for it by mail. We will send you our complete catalog of 5,000 Building Material Bargains. Refunded and Free. It will show you how to get it. Exactly as Represented. Write for FREE CATALOG.

Gordon-Van Tine Co. 1215 Case St. Davenport, Ia.

THE LAW OF FINANCIAL SUCCESS

This book should be the seed to a fortune to the man or woman with brains and earnestness of purpose. Money is the best partner a man or woman can have. The book tells you in plain language how to develop and utilize the qualities necessary to succeed in accumulating money through personal application or investment. More individuals owe their financial success to the laws contained in this book than to any other known source. You cannot afford to be without it, as it places within your own hands the means of starting you on the road to a broader career and clean prosperity.

Regulated edition, limp leather bound, silk lined, $1.00 per copy, 6th special paper bound pocket edition, 16 chapters, 104 pages, published in response to popular demand, to sell at 10 cents per copy, 70,000 copies sold.

Mailed postpaid on receipt of 10 cents (or $1.00 for leather bound copy), stamps or silver. Send for it NOW.

JUSTITIA 496 Lenox Building Chicago, Ill.
Publishing Company

TEST YOUR OWN EYES

You can test your eyes with our

EYE METER

as well as any optician. We made our own. Eye Meter FREE on request. It is the only instrument made that will measure nearsightedness, all optical defects. We are manufacturing opticians and will make to your measure and the glasses you need, which, if not exactly right, won't cost you a cent. Write for the Eye Meter.

HOWE OPTICAL CO., 632 Fourth Ave., Louisville, Ky.

10.95 Buys This Large Handsome Nickel Trimmed Steel Range

Without warming closet or reservoir. With high warming closet, porcelain lined reservoir, just as shown in cut, $17.35; large, square, oven, wonderful baker, 6 cooking holes, body made of cold rolled steel, Duplex center-burners wood or coal. Handsome metal trimmings, highly polished.

OUR TERMS are the most liberal ever made. You can pay for it in 30 days. If you don't like it exactly as represented, the biggest bargain you ever saw equal to stove returned for double our price, or return it to us. We will pay freight both ways.

Write Today for our beautifully illustrated Stove Catalog No. 574, a postpaid card will do. 100 styles to select from. Don't buy till you see it.

MARVIN SMITH CO., CHICAGO, ILL.

$1,000 a Year Income

Invest your savings in Arcadia. Pay for it with down balance small monthly payments. We will send you a complete catalog of 100 styles to select from. Don't buy till you see it. That should pay $1,000 a year for you. Write for particulars. Grant & Dye, Inc., 832 American Bank Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

The sweetheart of the corn

Kellogg's
TOASTED CORN FLAKES

The package of the genuine bears this signature

W. K. Kellogg

Toasted Corn Flake Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Canadian Trade Supplied by the Battle Creek Toasted Corn Flake Co., L't'd., London, Ontario.

SEE PREMIUM ANNOUNCEMENTS PAGES 963 to 970 OF THIS ISSUE

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Copyright, 1908, by Louis Klopsch

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 2, 1908

VOL. 31—NO. 49. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Drawn for The Christian Herald by F. J. Boston

PRACTISING THE CHRISTMAS ANTHEM

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

J. J. D., Elkhart, Ind. What has caused such a change in our ministers' methods of preaching? Time was when they took certain verses of the Bible for a text upon which to base a sermon. Now they take a subject, give it a novel name, without reference to the Bible, and insert it in the local paper on Saturday. I am hungry for a plain, simple passage of Scripture taken for a text. Then I can tell pretty nearly what the minister is going to talk about.

We believe there are many who will echo J. J. D.'s criticism of the modern methods that have displaced the old Gospel sermon in many pulpits. When a pastor reaches out after sensation and novelty, the flock is likely to be fed on husks, instead of the "meat and drink" of God's Word. We have known many churches to be run down by a course of sermonizing on all sorts of topics save the one that most appeals to the soul. Essays, orations, disquisitions on history, biography, science, ethics, etc., are all right in their own place; but they are not the things that redeem men from sin or satisfy the soul's yearning for spiritual knowledge.

M. W. W., Forest Hill, Md. Is Darwinism refuted by Moses, and does the evolution of man clash with Bible teachings?

Darwinism, so-called, is dying out, and as we have repeatedly shown in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is now rejected by the leading scientists, including St. George Mivart, Professor Beale, the late Professor Shaler, Professor Haeckel and others. Haeckel was formerly an ardent Darwinite. The scientific view of the creation of man is becoming more and more in accord with Bible teaching. Scientific exploration has shown that even in the remotest periods in which we find traces of man, he was a sentient, reasoning being. There was a form of civilization six thousand years ago, and possibly much earlier, so the ablest investigators now contend. The Bible tells us that man was created in God's image, an intelligent being, body, soul and spirit. Science now declares that evolution is a fallacy, and that there is "no instance of the transmutation of species," which is a direct refutation of the evolution theory.

H. J. P., Gentry, Ark. Are the prophecies of II. Peter 3:10 and Rev. 21:1 and similar passages symbolical language?

"The day of the Lord" (mentioned in II. Peter), comprehends the whole series of events beginning with the pre-millennial advent and ending with the destruction of the wicked and the general judgment. The passage in Revelation describes the consummated kingdom of God on the new earth. Your other questions are not within our range of discussion.

F. S. B., Clarkson, N. Y. How many immigrants entered this country in 1907?

In 1907 the number was 1,285,349, that is, for the fiscal year which ended June 30, 1907. 1,004,756 came through New York; 66,910 through Baltimore; 70,164 through Boston; 30,501 through Philadelphia; 3,529 through San Francisco, and 60,512 through other ports. 48,967 by way of Canada.

S. R., Yarmouth, Ia. What does the word "Selah" signify?

Selah is a term which possessed a meaning in ancient Hebrew music. According to some views it indicated a pause, or emphasis; others say a change from one choir to another, or a change of meter, or of melody and theme, or a sign for louder singing, or possibly for vocal silence in some passage meant for instruments only. The last mentioned is the generally accepted view.

Subscriber. What are the laws in Ohio, if a man dies leaving no will? Would the wife have all the property?

Real estate: If there are children, they would get the fee, but a widow would be endowed of an estate for life of one-third of the real estate, and could remain in the residence free of charge for one year, if dower were not sooner assigned. If no children, wife would have all the real estate. Personal property: When a husband leaves no child, the wife is entitled to all the personal estate; but if there should be a child, the widow takes one-half of any sum not exceeding $400, and one-third of the residue.

J. D. G., Centralia, Mo. What is meant by the seven spirits of God as spoken of in Rev. 5:6?

The seven spirits of God mentioned in the Apocalyptic vision are the eyes through which the Spirit of God surveys and marshals the whole world. Here, as in other places, seven implies perfection or completeness. Thus we have seven lamps before the throne, shining a perfect illumination, and seven eyes, implying world-wide vision and observation. In many places in Scripture the number seven is to be interpreted not in an exact and literal sense, but symbolically.

E. L. Y., Los Angeles, Calif. Can you tell me on what day of the week September 20, 1883, came?

September 20, 1883, was Thursday.

A. H. B., Philadelphia. What control, under New Jersey law, would a husband have over the property of his wife, if she died without making a will? The property consists of house and lot and some railroad stock, all being a legacy from her own relatives and not earned by the husband. Could he sell stock or home? There are children. What rights would the husband and father have during their minority?

Under New Jersey law, if a wife dies an intestate (Real estate), The husband is entitled to his "courtesy," which would be the use and income of the real estate for life. The remainder and the fee would be in the surviving child.

lous island continent and its sudden destruction, no substantial fact has come to light and the world has held the story to be a fable.

Reader, Harrison, O. Is it a Christian act to turn horses or other domestic animals out to lie on the frosty ground on cold nights?

No true Christian will be guilty of cruelty or inhumanity to man or beast. Cattle have a right to shelter and care, and to neglect these is a sin. See Prov. 12:10.

Old Subscriber. Please tell me if every book published in this country is supposed to be found in the Library of Congress, at Washington, or are there some qualifications that are necessary for entrance. Also, are the books for circulation, or only to be read in the library itself?

A copy of every book that is copyrighted is placed in the Library of Congress. There is no obligation on the part of a publisher to send a book to the library. Books, aside from the copyright volume are purchased for the Library of Banks, of Chicago University, several years ago explored the traditional site in the territory immediately northwest of the Persian Gulf (south of Bagdad), where the Euphrates, the Tigris and other rivers corresponding to those mentioned in Gen. 2:10-14 are to be found. He made some discoveries and furnished strong reasons for regarding this as the original site.

A. M., San Diego, Calif. Can THE MAIL-BAG furnish any knowledge of any prize having been offered, being offered, or of any steps being taken by any individual or institution or government representative, looking toward the offering of a prize for best patriotic song-words or music, or both?

There have been several competitions of this kind, but there is none at present, and no offer from government or any other quarter of a prize for a new national anthem or hymn, which we take to be your meaning. The first competition was shortly after the Civil War. The latest was about a year ago. Both were unsatisfactory.

E. C. H., Driftwood, Pa. 1. Where did Amundsen locate the north magnetic pole? Give degrees Greenwich. 2. Is magnetic south pole 184 degrees distant on same meridian? 3. Would the line of no-declination from near Cleveland, O., to Charleston, S. C., if produced 360 degrees become the prime magnetic meridian? 4. Will the magnetic pole circumnavigate the earth's axis in 1,000 years with line of no-declination?

1, 2 and 3. A few months ago I gave an answer to a question regarding the magnetic poles for this paper, to which I refer, and in addition to that a brief explanation may cover the essentials of your questions. The earth is alive with magnetic currents, apparently moving in very irregular ways. In Paris tables have been kept for about 250 years. These show that in 1666 the compass pointed exactly north. Soon it began moving to the west, and in 1700 its variation was 8 degrees; in 1750 it was 17 degrees; in 1800 it was 22 degrees; in 1814 it was 22½ degrees. At this time it commenced returning, and in 1835 it was back to 22 degrees; in 1854 to 20 degrees; in 1863 to 19 degrees; in 1870 to 18 degrees; in 1878 to 17 degrees; in 1888 to 16 degrees; in 1908 to 12 degrees, and it will continue to decrease until 1962, when it will again point due north. The laws governing these variations are not fully understood. The changes seem to follow no regular order in point of time. Besides this, any disturbance on the sun affects the compass. See any nautical almanac. To your fourth question the answer is no.

SAMUEL PHELPS LELAND.

Miscellaneous

C. H. S., Oklahoma. We are unable to answer your question. Perhaps you might secure them through Hinds & Noble, book-sellers, New York City.

Mrs. J. A. W., Bradford, Pa. It is a prophecy yet to be fulfilled, and is to be accepted in faith, like the others, and its fulfillment patiently looked for.

O. J. S., Mayville, Mich. You will find the answer to your questions in "Astronomical Queries," on page 318 in the April 15, 1908, issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Reader, Somers, Conn. 1. Advise you to read article on Antichrist in Biblical Encyclopedia, which explains "marks of the beast" fully. 2. There can be no uniform agreement on the question, so why discuss it? See Col. 2:16.

C. G. B., Newark, N. J. We are unable to give complete information. We understand that a man must be a brakeman before he can become a conductor. Write to the Secretary of the Railroad Y. M. C. A., 361 Madison Avenue, New York.

Will Frame Her Art Gallery

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I wish to thank you for the splendid pictures, which I have received. They are certainly beautiful, and I am delighted with them and shall have them all framed. I enjoy reading THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, as each and every article is helpful and interesting.

Yonkers, N. Y. ALMA PITCHER.

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

UNVEILING BROOKLYN'S MARTYRS' MONUMENT

ONE of the notable historic events of the year was the dedication in Brooklyn of an imposing monument above the grave of 15,000 soldiers and sailors of the American Revolution, who died on board the Jersey and other prison hulks that were moored in Wallabout Bay during the British occupation of New York. It was of interest to North, East, South and West, for beneath the hillside of Fort Greene Park rest side by side bones of patriots from every colony from Georgia to Massachusetts.

For over a hundred years efforts were made to secure a fitting memorial. The present one was made possible by gifts from the government, the city and many private contributors. The memorial is an imposing column in the Doric style, 270 feet high, surmounted by a flagstaff and funeral urn, the latter of bronze. All of the remains are encased in coffins of metal resting in a large tomb. The approach is by a flight of several hundred steps.

Twenty thousand national and State troops marched in the procession, with delegations of the Sons of the American Revolution and other patriotic societies. Judge Taft and Governor Hughes were among the speakers at the exercises. Secretary of War Luke E. Wright presented the monument on behalf of the National Government.

(Personal property): The husband has administration of his wife's personal estate without account. He takes the whole of it himself. He can sell stock, and is entitled to all the proceeds. He cannot sell the fee to the home, but he can sell the use and income of it as long as he lives.

L. B. L., Smithfield, Pa. Is there anything in the Bible or out of it whereby we can learn who was the mother of Absalom's children that are mentioned in II. Sam. 14:18?

Her name does not appear either in Scripture or Josephus, the Jewish historian.

B. M., Des Moines, Ia. Has any reasonable evidence ever been discovered in support of the theory of a sunken continent called Atlantis?

Only the evidence of tradition and the conclusions of geologists and botanists. Several books have been written to demonstrate the truth of the lost Atlantis theory; but since Plato's fragmentary work, in which he describes the popu-

Congress as they would be for any other library. Members of Congress are allowed to take books, and others may consult them there. For full information, address the Librarian, Herbert Putnam, Library of Congress, Washington, D. C.

J. A. McF., Sewickley, Pa. I have read a partial history of Christopher (Kit) Carson, who was one of the pathfinders for General Fremont in the Northwest. Has our Government ever marked the resting place of Carson?

We are unable to answer this query. Perhaps some reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be able to send us the information.

J. M., Decatur, Ia. How many lands claim to be the true site of Eden, and where, according to the best authorities, was it located?

Traditional sites are claimed in Armenia, Syria, Ceylon, near the Caspian Sea, Egypt, Cashmere and Lower Mesopotamia. There is no decided agreement on the matter and cannot be. Prof.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

The Late Emperor Kwang Su

The Imperial Throne of China

The New Empress-Dowager

Copyright Underwood & Underwood

THE OLD AND NEW REGIME IN CHINA

Emperor and Empress-Dowager Dead. A Regency, with a Child as Heir-Presumptive

RUMORS of the death of the Emperor of China, which had been current for several days, found official confirmation on Saturday, November 14, when it was formally announced to the foreign legations in Peking, the capital, that the Emperor Kwang Su had passed away on the previous day. Almost within the same hour came the intelligence that the aged Empress-Dowager, Tsze-Hsi-An, had also died. This astounding intelligence was followed by an edict placing upon the throne Prince Pu-Yi, the three-year-old son of Prince Chun. The latter had become the Regent of the Empire, and his son was now the ruler of China, in accordance with a pledge given by the Empress-Dowager when Prince Chun was married five years ago.

It had been known for some time past that the Emperor was a sick man; yet the people were naturally shocked at the news of his death. The sudden taking-off of the Dowager-Empress took the whole nation by surprise. She was a vigorous woman, though old, and the ladies of the diplomatic corps recall the fact that at the last official reception she seemed to be in normal health and spirits. On the day when the American fleet left Amoy, which was her birthday, she was in apparently excellent health. These facts, which were known to the whole capital, intensified the public feeling and strengthened the suspicions of foul play.

It would be useless to repeat all the wild rumors that prevailed during the days immediately after the tragic events at the palace. Reports of poison and of suicide were rife. It was said that the Empress-Dowager had been slain by anti-Manchu leaders who feared punishment in connection with the last attempted revolt against the Manchu dynasty and that they compassed the death of the Emperor for the same reason. The palace eunuchs were arrested, it was said, immediately after the double tragedy. It is impossible to verify any of these stories. After the manner of Chinese officialdom, everything was shrouded in mystery, and this served to multiply the rumors of dark deeds at the palace and of a great anti-Manchu plot in which the leaders of the Chinese reform party were deeply implicated.

Following the deaths, there were fears of a popular uprising. Strong detachments of troops were held in readiness to check any incipient riots. Prince Chun, as Regent, issued orders to the Provincial Governors for the continuance of the administration on the same lines as heretofore, and announcing one hundred days of mourning. The Court at Peking will go into mourning for three years.

Immediately after the mourning edict was issued, the appearance of Peking was transformed and the blue emblems of sorrow became visible everywhere. At the palace, the elaborate rites for the dead, which have been used in China for thousands of years, were scrupulously observed. The official announcement of the deaths declared them due to natural causes—that of the Emperor to neurasthenia and heart failure, and that of the Empress to apoplexy.

Concerning the last hours of the Emperor and Empress, very few details have been permitted to leak out. It is learned, however, that they died alone and practically unattended, in the "death chamber" of the palace, although a number of notabilities and attendants stood a little distance off watching their expiring struggles. It is not permitted to touch the sacred persons of China's royal line, even at such a moment. "The poor, feeble Emperor died," says one correspondent, "as he had lived, without ministrations of any kind, or scientific aid. For months he had refused to accept the services of foreign doctors, and had gone back to the ancient Chinese forms of treatment; and at the last he was without assistance from any physician."

All the provinces seem to have accepted the regency of Prince Chun quietly, and thus far there have been no evidences of serious disorder anywhere. That the people were apprehensive, however, is evident from the fact that there was a run on the banks, some forty of which suspended.

Prince Chun, the new Regent, is a Manchu, and the grandson of Emperor Tao-Kwang, who reigned from 1821 to 1850. His name is Tsai Feng, with the title of Prince Chun. He is a brother of Kwang Su, the late Emperor.

Empress-Dowager Tsze-Hsi-An, who has controlled the destinies of China for forty-seven years, was the second wife of Emperor Hsien Feng, who reigned from 1857 to 1861. After his death, she and the first wife were regents jointly with Prince Chun, until the late Emperor became of age. She is a woman with a remarkable history. Her name was Yin Ding, and she was born in the most abject poverty in the outskirts of Canton. Her father, Li Tzun, sold her into slavery to the Tartar Tidoo general, who commanded the troops of the province and was a relative of the then Emperor, Hein-Fung. She was brought up in Tidoo's household, and at the age of seventeen was said to be the most beautiful girl in the empire. Tidoo presented her to his royal master, and the latter soon made her the favorite of his harem. Some say, however, that she was of a

Continued on page 957

Reproduced from a Press Photograph

The Late Empress Dowager (Seated) and Her Court Ladies

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY
Rev. A. S. Fiske, D.D.*

THE SAVING OF A SOUL

TEXT—James 5: 20:
"Save a soul from death"

Woe to him who crushes the soul with chain or rod,
And herds with lower natures the awful form of God.—WHITTIER.

A MAN, first of all and after all, is a soul. He has a body but he is not that. If he has decent common sense, he uses his body, and does not let it use him. He masters it and does not let it master him. So he has an intellect, but he is not that. He has a heart and he uses it—not it him. He is a SOUL—not simply he has one, but he is one. His value, himself, is soulhood. In it all qualities, faculties, character and worth inhere—all grandeur, power and joy. Soulhood is manhood.

We make tremendous mistakes here, mistakes as common as they are immense and disastrous. We are fallen on a materializing age. See how grossly it shows. How much is Jones there worth? Instantly you think of his property and say, "Well, I reckon he's worth about ten thousand," or "a million," or "he isn't worth a cent," as the case may be. A queer, nay, a profane thing that, when you come to think of it.

A parish priest, collecting for his church once, went to a poor widow—a "Madonna of the wash-tub"—the mother of ten children. He knew she was poor and had thought not to call on her at all. He was surprised, however, at the free largeness of her gift, and remonstrated with her, saying, "Why, my poor woman, that is too much." She answered, bridling, "Poor, am I? I've ten children and every one of them worth a hundred thousand dollars. I'm a millionaire, Sor." Each of them had barely the poor clothing which scantily covered him. She was counting the treasures her love and pride saw in themselves. That poor mother was right, if each of these ten was a soul.

The World's Estimate of Man's Worth

In the old war-time, which some of us are not yet too old to remember, suppose somebody had asked, "How much is General Grant worth?" or "Abraham Lincoln?" Would you have dawdled over the question of his property? Possibly, if you were so little a soul as that! But, if you were a man and a patriot, you would have answered, "Worth? Worth just about the sum-total of this republic's life, glory and future among the nations!"

In a not far-off city lived what passed for a man; gross in habit, depraved in morals, beastly in appetites; of vast inherited estates, the owner of fast horses, which he housed in a palace. He died worth millions? No! He wasn't worth the snap of a man's finger, or a tear to any creature on earth, save to some few who went swift fighting over his grave for his vast estate. A sane man would say that any one of his horses was worth more than he.

Estimate "things" at so much in gold or other stuff if you will, but estimate men, women, boys and girls—your children—souls, by another standard. You can't measure a soul with a yard-stick, or on the scales by which you weigh groceries, or in dollars and cents. The material universe has no worth to set over against a soul. On any good standard scale put a soul on one side and toss the material universe into the other, and the universe end kicks the beam lighter than air.

God alone knows the full grotesqueness of our common estimates here; but we can see the absurdity if we try. We bow down in awe and enthusiasm before mere money-bags, when only great, sweet souls have any real claim to worthiness, respect, reverence and enthusiasm. Make way there for your man, not for his gilt-edged securities, his bonds and stocks and mortgages—the stuff he has cluttered about him, by comparison to cheapen his very self and swamp his soulhood. Teach your children so. Children, make that your law—your ideal; and nine out of ten of all the peril and mischance of life for you will disappear.

One of the strangest things of all is to find, even in the thoughtful realms of education and culture in our boastful day, the same fearful blundering. Culture—set to the utilitarian note! Culture—studying how best to equip a man for mere material use as a gold accumulator. "Practical education" they call this trained deftness for doing and getting things! Should we value a man and his culture according to his fitness merely to serve some material use? There is even a scheme of philosophico-scientific culture that reduces morality to utility, acknowledging no absolute right or wrong. A man of "practical" science, a professional educator in a great university, was not long ago scoffing at the idea of "saving a soul" as absurd! The soul—it is the man, housed for a little while in a body and environed by matter. To save a soul is to save a man, the whole of him—body, mind and heart—to make him pure, brave, capable, generous, loving, beautiful, holy forever and through the universe—not to give him arbitrary title to some heaven, but to put heaven into him, as Christ himself said, "The kingdom of heaven is within you."

When you have saved a soul, you have set a man into righteousness and nobleness, shaken a life free from vice, meanness and shame; saved his home, his business, the whole circuit of his influence, and flung him, a branch of healing, into every bitter pool of human cares to sweeten it. You have set him forth a champion and uplifter of man for everlasting righteousness.

A group of liberal, or "Reformed" Jews were in the habit of attending a Christian church on Sunday evenings. The pastor asked them to stop one evening after service. They went up to his study and had a talk. "Our Messiah," they said, "has come, is, and is to come through the ages. He is any man who has for us a better thought, a higher life, the inspiration of a nobler motive." "Like Jesus of Nazareth?" the pastor asked. "Yes," they said, "like Jesus of Nazareth. He was a great man, a great teacher, too far ahead of his time: in so far he was a Messiah, yet only one of many. Our own rabbi is one, so far as we get of him these helps. We come here for truth and for views of it that are fresh and that stir us to better living through finding a Messianic voice."

Their thought was that a soul saved and commissioned to be the saviour of others into the higher world it has found, is anointed as "Messianic." They thought it no blasphemy. That is the exact commission of the Divine Christ, the true Messiah, to every soul he has saved. He sends it out to the field of the world as the Father sent him. "Go! Evangelize! Save the great soul of the world!" is the grand, the divine, the only practical business of man here. Carey, the father of modern missions, got at it when he said, "My business is the Gospel, but I cobble shoes for a living." Your business, O saved soul, is the Gospel, the salvation and glory of souls. You build houses, sell goods, make gowns, practise law, teach, break stones, or whatever else, for a living; but you live to prosecute your Christian mission—to save others. What else is our life for, any way?

Sons and Daughters of the King

Forever and ever, over and over, I repeat, Your soul is you. No soul's worth can be measured with a stick, or by weight of gold, or precious stones, nor by any earthly standard. It is precious beyond all things in God's sight and it should be so to us. Yet how few so value it? In our current estimates of men, and in our devotion to trifles of material concern, we are fallen far from any normal, moral or intellectual, not to say spiritual, basis of estimation.

A visitor was once watching a group of slaves, slouching and shuffling off to their work. One tall, broad-shouldered fellow strode on, head erect and with the gait of a man. "How's that?" the visitor asked. "Oh, he's the son of an African king," was the reply. "He never forgets that." Alas! We forget, amid the drudgeries of earth, that we are sons and daughters of the King of kings, and in training for thrones in his empire! Soulhood is being—kingship! These bodies? Take away the soul, and what is left but a handful of dust? Take souls out of this earth, and what is left? Only a bigger heap of useless dust. Would God have diverted himself by the making of it or the caring for it? Whoever among us tries to educate or to do anything else for child or man, without making an effort to uplift, glorify and save the soul, has no real profession. He is merely cobbling for a living, and he might as well not have lived.

Souls that think meanly, selfishly, wrongly; that imagine vileness, and desire and design it; that abdicate their moral and spiritual sovereignty, going down to serve the flesh and the lusts thereof, are lost souls. They are valueless, and worse, for their corruptions infect others and their earthliness depraves others. Alas! that it should be so! In every pile of yellow grain heaped for garner; in every mart, there are great heaps of chaff for the f. Back of every manufactory of valuable things is a rubbish heap, into which the refuse is flung. In the lumber camps in the solemn redwood forest I saw from my tent door great piles of sawdust slabs and bark, carried out there on endless aprons from the mills. I saw them smouldering, smoking and flaming up in lurid light in the titanic blackness, and I shuddered to think of the refuse of the universe and its Gehenna.

Souls thinking rightly; feeling as they ought loving, pure, sweet, generous, devoted, aspiring, hungering after righteousness; characters full of moral integrity and spiritual grace—these are souls saved, bursting with values, glowing with splendor worth their creating, their nurture and their great redemption. No wonder that for the joy that was set before him in such souls, Jesus "endured the cross and despised the shame." No wonder he came so far and suffered so much to rescue from the refuse heap where they were casting themselves, such magnificent values as these souls develop. The saved men and women are to shine closest to the throne—to exult nearest to his heart and to reflect most fully of all created things, the divine likeness.

The Real Meaning of Life

You have to do the work of the world for a living and to enable others to live. You have to study, learn and to practise your world's work well for yourself and others; to take an interest in it and do it in the best possible way and with enthusiasm. But all this work and study and necessity to do for yourself and others is put on you, not for any ulterior material purpose, but as a mere means to an end and that you may through them be enabled to follow out your noble task to make your soul—your moral and spiritual self—great, capable, holy, beautiful and loving, a helper and a saviour here and a prince of the world to come. All those things that are necessary to the existence and comfort of the race are made so in order to the development of soul force in the struggle for existence. Whatever makes for volume and value in the soul is of concern to you and nothing else ought to concern you so much. Whatever you do, settle it that you will be a soul bigger than your body, and that you will with divine help, at all hazards, keep it in all purity, generosity, gentleness and nobility; that you will be a man or woman with value in yourself, not for the thing you have, but for the thing you are, and for what you can help others to become. That's religion.

Do your world's work along all lines on that theory with enthusiasm, asking God's help always and you will make something of yourself and of others, too; something that will last beyond the grave; something that will have the splendor of the eternities; and you will then be a soul, a character, a sublime force in which God and the angels and your self shall exult—a something that it will be worth while to make immortal. How else can you glorify God, but by becoming yourself like him, and by helping others?

Oh, the things we do down here in this life are of no consequence except as they save and develop the souls of men. Yet multitudes are swamped under a culture of bodies that would make of man an effective brute; under culture of mind which neglects the morals and the spirit, and under the thronging tramp of earthly cares and ambitions, which ignore the supremest interests!

Manliness! You want that; you must have it, or you are good for naught. True manliness is in the soul—in its keen intelligence, its generous sensibilities, its gentle brotherliness, its mighty will for the right, the true, the beautiful and the good, in its raptures of holiness, in its devotion to God the Creator, Christ the Redeemer and to our fellow-man's redemption. This nobility of character is possible for every one who is in Christ. Moses was great, Elijah, Daniel and Isaiah were great, and of John the Baptist it is recorded that none greater has been born of woman; yet the very least in the new kingdom of Christ is greater than he. Thus whatever else we do for our fellow or our children, let our love be a true ministry of grace to their souls. Thus shall we fulfil our truest destiny, in accordance with God's purpose; and in bringing blessing to others, earn for ourselves the divine approval.

* Preached in the First Presbyterian Church, Cortland, New York.

great Manchu family, and the authorities deny the statement that she was a slave girl.

On the birth of her son, Tsi Chuen, in 1854, she received the title of Tsi Tshi, which made her second to the childless principal wife and titular Empress. In 1861 the Emperor died. Then the bold spirit of the woman asserted itself. With her seven-year-old son she ascended the throne, claiming for him the title of Tung-che, Ruler of the Celestial Kingdom. She associated the titular Empress with herself in the regency.

Their joint regency continued unbroken from 1861 to 1873, when the Emperor Tung-che began his short reign, and it was revived in 1875 on Tung-che's death and the accession of the late Emperor, son of Prince Tung, the brother of Hein-Fung. The titular Empress died in 1881, and Tsze-Hsi-An was left to exercise supreme control. Even the accession of Kwang Su, in March, 1887, did not diminish her influence, and she remained the highest practical embodiment of royal power in the Empire.

Kwang Su's reign was marked by several important events. Among these were the cession to France of Tonquin in 1884, the dismissal of Prince Kung as Premier in 1886, and the ascendancy of Li Hung Chang, who, with the Empress, really governed China for thirty years. Then came the Boxer rebellion in 1900, the flight of the court to Shansi, and the occupation of Peking by the troops of the foreign powers.

"Tsze Hsi," says an observant writer, "cannot be judged by Western standards. She must be judged by the standards of the country in which she was born and lived. It must be remembered that she governed not her own people, but a conquered race, which since 1736 had fought and conspired to destroy the Manchu dynasty. Her reign was one long fight, first and always with the Chinese and next with the opposition party of her own people. What she worked for and accomplished was to preserve the Manchu dynasty and to keep herself de facto the head of that dynasty. For forty-seven years she ruled the country, and probably in as satisfactory a manner as was possible with the existing conditions and available materials.

"She never forgave nor forgot an enemy. Her life was one of intrigue, plot and counter-plot. At seventy-four she had the appearance of a woman not yet sixty, and with her mental and physical powers still perfect. She stands out as one of the most remarkable women the world has ever seen."

Of Kwang Su, the dead Emperor, it can simply be said that he was hardly even a figurehead. Emperor in name only, he was obscured by the greatness and the dominant personality of the Dowager-Empress throughout his whole reign, and even his death affects the nation but little in comparison with that of Tsze-Hsi-An, who will long be remembered as "Head of the Manchus."

Yehopala, the new Empress-Dowager, is in control of affairs at the palace. Emperor Kwang Su, in his last message or valedictory, commended her to the confidence of the Emperor's Regents. She is a woman of ability and courage. Four thousand troops guard the palace. Prince Chun, the Regent, and Pu-Yi, the heir presumptive, visit the palace daily and the Regent, with Empress-Dowager Yehopala, participates in the meetings of the Council.

Prince Chun is represented to be amiable, intelligent and a peace-lover. In common with all the Manchu leaders, however, it is believed that he is jealous of the power and influence of Yuan-Shih-Kai, Grand Councilor of the Empire, who is a favorite with both the army and the people. Yuan's services in the past have been so valuable, however, to the Manchu rulers—although he himself is a Chinese—that it is believed he will be retained, together with Chang-Chih-Tung, his able associate in the Grand Council. These two are the ablest statesmen in China, and if they are in power, it is not probable that the revolutionaries can make any serious headway. The Regent is in daily communication with Chang-Chih-Tung. Meanwhile the charge of the northern army, on duty in the capital, has devolved upon Yang-Shi-Siang, although he is not a Manchu but a Chinese. It is announced that the new Emperor will be installed on the Chinese New Year, January 21 next. His reigning name will be Shien Tung (the well known).

Correspondents in Peking picture the situation as being like a powder magazine which a slight spark may suddenly explode. The Wai-Wu-Pu (Grand Council) has assured the foreign legations that it will be responsible for their safety, but this might count for little if the anti-Manchu party decided on a bold stroke. Doubtless the foreign powers will take the necessary precautionary steps. Our American battleship squadron now in the Philippines is held in readiness to proceed to Peking should its presence be needed there to preserve order and to protect foreigners.

There are two other claimants to the throne: Pu-Lun (a Manchu), grandson of Prince Yin Chih, a son of Emperor Tao-Kwang, who died in 1850, and brother of Emperor Hsien Feng, the second claimant being Pu-Chung (also Manchu) grandson of Prince Ching. Thus, between Manchu rivalries within the royalist party and Chinese antagonism without, the prospect is full of possibilities of trouble. Should the actual clash come between the Manchu and Chinese parties, there may be an upheaval which will rock the Empire to its foundations.

Prince Chun
The New Regent of China

Entrance to the Manchu Tombs
Where the Emperor and Dowager Empress are Buried

A THREE-THOUSAND-MILE REVIVAL TOUR

A RAPID revival tour has just been completed by the well-known evangelists, Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman and Mr. Charles M. Alexander. In nineteen days, their party held revival meetings and conferences in ten cities in the United States and Canada. The cities were widely separated, including Toronto, Chicago, Louisville and Berea, Ky.; Knoxville, Tenn.; Cincinnati and Columbus, O.; Brantford and Paris, Canada, and New York City. The party which made the tour included Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman, Mr. and Mrs. Charles M. Alexander, Mr. Robert Harkness, Mr. Ernest W. Naftzger and the writer; while we were accompanied part of the time by Dr. Parley E. Zartmann. From one to seven meetings were held in each place; and during the journey many hundred confessed Christ, or re-consecrated themselves.

At Toronto one conference and two meetings were held, the principal one at Massey Hall, accommodating about four thousand people. At Chicago, the evangelists spoke and sang in a large men's meeting composed of Christian workers and ministers. Mr. Alexander drilled them in his revival hymns, while Dr. Chapman thrilled them with a message of the transforming power of the Gospel.

The evangelistic party next hurried to Columbus, O., where they were greeted on Sunday afternoon by an audience of 3,500 people in Memorial Hall. It was the first of five meetings conducted in Columbus. Each gathering was one of great power. The Pocket Testament League was heartily endorsed in Columbus. At a meeting of the ministers nearly everyone present joined the movement. At Cincinnati, only one meeting for the students of Lane Theological Seminary had been arranged, but it was one which will bring forth marvelous results.

The evangelists next went to Berea, Ky., where a two days' conference had been arranged, which proved to be the climax of the tour. Berea College is a well-known institution for the education of poor, mountain young men and women, and even boys and girls. For seventeen years President Frost has been at the head of the college, and has made it one of the most powerful spiritual factors in the Southern States. There are now in attendance at the college about six hundred students, and in the winter the number is swelled to twelve hundred. The conference had been planned not only for the students, but for the people of the mountain district, which is in the heart of the famous "feud" territory. Secretary Will C. Gamble, of the college, had gone up and down the mountains inviting the people in from every direction. Hearing the news of the conference, the mountaineers came in from a radius of a hundred miles, by special train, in wagons, in carriages and on horseback.

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman, D.D.

Charles M. Alexander

Six meetings were held at Berea by the evangelists. The tide of revival fervor rose higher and higher until at the close remarkable scenes were witnessed. Scores of the students openly confessed Christ, while almost the entire body joined the Pocket Testament League. The Testaments were the gift of Dr. William H. Hubbard, of Auburn, N. Y. Near the close of the second day's meeting, a gathering was held for ministers and teachers and Christian leaders. A wonderful power was present in that crowded little room. Ministers and teachers got up and in trembling tones, and with broken voices, told how their lives had been transformed by getting a new vision of Christ, and a new passion for souls. They went from that little room to carry the fire to their churches and schools in the mountain districts and towns. President Frost and Mr. Gamble are planning to have an annual two days' conference hereafter.

From Berea the evangelists went down south to Mr. Alexander's former home at Knoxville, Tenn. Great audiences gathered to hear Dr. Chapman, and especially Mr. and Mrs. Alexander, as the Gospel singer had never before conducted a revival meeting in his home city. From Knoxville they went to Louisville, Ky., where they spent two days conducting meetings for various classes. One of their meetings was for the prisoners in the jail. Another meeting was held at the noonday hour for the workmen in the Louisville & Nashville railroad shops. About five hundred men were present and entered heartily into the service. Meetings were also held in Louisville for the ministers of the district, and for the students of the two theological seminaries. Dr. Chapman evoked applause by declaring that unless a man believed in the Bible from cover to cover, he should leave the ministry!

From Louisville the evangelists made a hurried trip through Kentucky, Ohio and Michigan to Canada, where at Hamilton, Brantford and Paris, fourteen evangelists and Gospel singers had been holding meetings for two weeks. In one day, three meetings were held in Brantford, and one at Paris, following which, in the early hours of the morning, Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander left for New York. The final meeting of the series was held at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York City.

GEO. T. B. DAVIS.

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

THE PASSING OF BELLA COOKE

FEW articles have ever appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD which have more quickly and universally enlisted the sympathies of its readers, than the brief sketches which we have published from time to time of Mrs. Bella Cooke, "the Saint of Second Avenue." It was only on November 4 that the last one appeared. In it Mrs. Cooke was described as very feeble, and as longing for her release; but she had so many times seemed to be equally ill, and yet had recovered, that her friends continued to hope against hope. It did not seem as though she could be spared, for no one else could ever perform the unique work which had providentially been placed in her hands. But now it is finished. On Sunday, November 15, at half past two o'clock, her eyes closed for the last time.

She was eighty-seven on the 13th of last July, and fifty years of her life had been spent upon her bed. For sixty years, nearly continuously, she had lived in the small house in the quiet court behind 492 Second Avenue, New York City. So feeble that she seemed to be constantly hovering on the confines of eternity, one can not understand how she could possibly survive so long. It can scarcely be explained except on the theory that Providence especially spared her to accomplish her beautiful work among the poor.

The funeral was held on Wednesday, November 18, at four o'clock, in the Rose Hill Methodist Episcopal Church on Twenty-seventh Street, near Second Avenue, and was largely attended. The vast majority of those who mourned over her bier had been for years among her pensioners. They had received Thanksgiving and Christmas gifts at her hands. In their troubles, they had come to her for comfort and advice. They understand well that one of their best friends—in many cases, the best friend of all—has gone.

In the evening, a memorial sermon was preached by the Rev. Edwin Whittier Caswell, D.D., from Rev. 7: 14, in which a glowing tribute was paid to the departed. Dr. Caswell said:

Multitudes who have inquired after Mrs. Cooke's health during the sixty years of her illness, have passed away, while the patient sufferer lived on. To-day we can reply to such inquiries, "Mrs. Bella Cooke is entirely well." Among her last words was the exclamation, "It is well with my soul."

A few days before the exaltation came, she said to her daughter, Mrs. Joseph Pullman, after enduring the most excruciating agony, in one of the spasms of her disease, "My dear, what am I waiting for?" Mrs. Pullman replied, "Mother, you are waiting for the Boatman to come." A calm peace settled upon the sufferer's face, as she triumphantly exclaimed, "Yes, I shall see my Boatman face to face, when I have crossed the bar." Her weary spirit is at rest forever; she has awakened in His likeness and is satisfied. The stormy voyage is past, as Faber sings:

The Land beyond the sea,
Sweet is thine endless rest,
But sweeter far thy Saviour's breast,
Upon thy shores eternally pressed;
For Jesus reigns over thee,
Calm Land beyond the sea.

Mrs. Cooke realizes now that sixty years of pain are but a moment compared with immortality. Her long illness appears now as "light afflictions" in the scale over against "the eternal weight of glory." Mrs. Cooke was the whitest saint we ever knew. Tribulation lifted her soul into the secret abiding place under the shadow of the Almighty. To be in her room, to look into her face, was like "days of heaven upon earth." Her face was illumined with unearthly beauty. She wore the smile of rapture, the gleam of life eternal. None who saw her can ever forget the expression of peace, patience, contentment, and joy that looked from her countenance. After leaving her presence, one would reflect that Mrs. Cooke had riches without money, sweet fellowship without mingling with society, influence without strength, contentment without health, rest of spirit in a body of unspeakable unrest. The only way to account for happiness amid such conditions

Engraved from an early photograph

The Late Bella Cooke

is that the divine Christ, her Creator and Redeemer, gave her the power of his life, supplying all her spiritual needs according to the riches of his glory.

Mrs. Cooke held sweet communion with her Saviour, every day of all those years of deprivation and pain; at last, when the journey was ended, she heard the voice of Christ whisper to her the enrapturing words, "This day shalt thou be with me in Paradise." To-day, like Enoch of old, she is not, for Jesus, the lover of her soul, has received her to serve him in the higher sphere, up among the "no mores," where there is no more sorrow, no more pain, no more tears, no more temptation, no more night, no more death, no more crying, where all things are new and beautiful.

God built for us his best mansions, in his world—the homeland of immortals. We feel that we are as indestructible as our Father. The querulous spirit within us flames with love and hope eternal. When our earthly house is dissolved, we are forever with the Lord. One moment we sing the song of loss and bereavement; the next, we join the hallelujah chorus around the throne. Jesus knows when to put on the last touch to make soul beautiful and complete in him. Mrs. Cooke waited patiently till her Lord said, "It is finished."

In her early life, she was employed by Anson Phelps as a Bible reader. After she became an invalid Mr. Phelps contributed largely to her support, as well as towards the gifts which Mrs. Cooke annually distributed to the poor of her neighborhood. The William E. Dodge family, especially Miss Grace H. Dodge, also took a great interest in caring for Mrs. Cooke and making her the dispenser of the benevolence, as did the Vanderbilts, Mrs. Cordtland deP. Field, Mrs. Henry Clews, Mrs. John Crosby Brown, Mrs. Charles Stickney, Lady Henry Somerset and many others. This vast work of benevolence which the wealthy allowed Mrs. Cooke to perform delightfully occupied her lonely hours, lessened the thought of pain and gave exercise and opportunity to her generous nature.

Think of a woman never taken from her bed for fifty-four years, carefully investigating each individual case of poverty who received aid from her hands, and never allowing one to go from her bedside without a word of warning or encouragement prompted by love for Christ and his children!

Among those who prayed with Mrs. Cooke at her bedside for healing, was the sainted Dr. Cullis, Boston. Mrs. Cooke believed in healing by faith in Jesus, but, in her case, she enjoyed the will of God in the answer given to Paul, "My grace is sufficient for thee." She believed from that moment that the mission of her life was in the sick room, rather than in health.

Among the many lovely traits of Bella Cooke character, the one that shone brightest was her deep solicitude for the welfare of others. She forgave her own needs in her absorbing devotion to her church, her loved ones, to the poor and lost one, and to her God. She seemed surrounded by an atmosphere of spiritual gentleness, tenderness and benevolence, wafted from Paradise, and breathed forth from her meek and quiet spirit, giving spiritual strength to all attracted to her side. Words are insufficient to picture the gentle manner, the affable bearing, the chaste nature and the enduring, uncomplaining submission to the divine will, under a trying emergency of her almost lifelong illness. Her soul is a gem of rare beauty for the Master's crown, a brilliant undimmed, even to mortals, while earth and time endure.

A sacred shrine is in our hearts to-day, containing the inscription, "We loved her." Her words to us in this hour of our grief are:

Say not good-night,
But in same fairer clime, bid me good-morning.

Till then, we say, All hail, and farewell, Bella Cooke!

A BELL FROM KAISER WILHELM

THE oldest German Reformed Church in New York is situated in East Eighty-sixth Street near Second Avenue. Its pastor is the Rev.

Julius Jaeger. The little church will complete its one hundred and fiftieth anniversary on December 6, and the occasion will be marked by the formal acceptance of the gift of a bell from Emperor William of Germany. The anniversary will be celebrated by four days of services, the principal service taking place Sunday afternoon, when the German Consul, Dr. Carl Buenz, will deliver to the pastor the bell sent by the Emperor, which was cast especially for the church. The bell will be hung in the church tower shortly after the anniversary exercises. It is five feet high and weighs three thousand pounds. The inscription states that the bell is a gift from Emperor William and includes the date, the German coat of arms and this verse from the Bible:

Rev. Julius Jaeger

The Kaiser's Presentation Bell

Rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation, and continuing instant in prayer.

The dedication sermon in English will be preached by the Rev. Dr. David James Burrell, of the Marble Collegiate Church, and that in German by the Rev. John H. Oerter, pastor of the Fourth German Reformed Church.

Pastor Jaeger will deliver a historical sermon in the morning. Sunday night and the following evening the meetings and addresses will continue. A missionary festival will be held Tuesday night. The closing celebration will be held on Wednesday night.

President Roosevelt, who was invited to the celebration, sent a letter of regret to Mr. Hauser. Other prominent men invited are Governor Hughes, and Colonel John Jacob Astor, whose ancestor, John Jacob Astor, joined the congregation in 1808.

The church was founded in August, 1758, the original building being in Nassau Street between John Street and Maiden Lane. The second edifice was built in 1812 in Forsyth Street, near Canal Street. The third was erected in 1862, in Norfolk Street. The present house is ten years old.

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

England's "Soldier-Archbishop" Retires

By WILLIAM DURBAN, London

IT HAPPENS that the Archbishops of York have during the last few generations been even more famous than the Canterbury primates. Every student of logic knows that Archbishop Thomson, by his beautiful work on The Laws of Thought, rendered what had for ages seemed a dimly dry study a most delightful intellectual pursuit. His successor, Dr. Magee (who was translated from the see of Peterborough to the Archiepiscopal Northern Province) was a native of Ireland, that land which produces so many orators, and he was reckoned the most eloquent Anglican preacher of his day. Then, after his lamented death, came Dr. Maclagan, who was asked King Edward to accept his resignation at the age of eighty-three.

The life of this extraordinary prelate has been no long romance. As his name suggests, he is a Scotsman, and was born in Edinburgh in 1825. His father, Dr. David Maclagan, was a noted medical man, who for several years was an army physician, serving in the peninsula under the Duke of Wellington while the British forces fought the French on many fields in Spain and Portugal. His fifth son was William Dalrymple Maclagan, the future ecclesiastic. The youth was born on the anniversary of the battle of Waterloo. He was educated at Edinburgh High School, but, instead of proceeding to the university, he joined the army. As a young soldier he was sent to India and there served for five years from 1847 to 1852, and retired with the rank of lieutenant. It is said that the fact of his birth on so singular a date had something to do with his military career in early manhood.

"That was a great birthday, and you must make a soldier of him," said one old soldier to the father.

"But it was Sunday, and you should make him a minister," rejoined the nurse.

Ultimately the young soldier did become a minister, for on his return to England he entered Cambridge University and graduated with honors in mathematics. Ordained to the Anglican ministry, he became a curate in London, at St. Saviour's, Paddington, removing next year to the other important parish of St. Stephen's, Marylebone. At this time he became widely known as secretary of the London Diocesan Church Building Society.

The young cleric's indefatigable industry and delightfully genial manners made him exceedingly popular, and his tireless advocacy of the claims of the society immensely advanced its interests. For five years he continued his labors in this direction. In 1855 the Bishop of London made him curate in charge of the important suburb of Enfield, in order that he might recuperate after his strenuous toil, the district giving him the advantage of country atmosphere.

In 1869, Mr. Maclagan was presented by Lord Chancellor Hatherley to the rectory of St. Mary, Newington, a great and populous parish in South London. There he did an immense amount of work under the most difficult conditions. For in that district the Anglican Church considered that great ability on the part of the clergy was needed in order to compete with the tremendous Nonconformist influence of the renowned Baptist preacher at the Metropolitan Tabernacle in Newington, Charles Haddon Spurgeon, the most popular preacher England ever knew.

The Most Rev. Archbishop of York

The noble Christian character of Dr. Maclagan was quickly manifested under these circumstances. A stiff and jealous priest of the National State Church might have displayed petty animosity to Mr. Spurgeon; but this new rector adopted a very different attitude, for Maclagan took care to establish kindly relations at once with the great Free Churchman. So friendly was he that he would not permit the bells of the Church of St. Gabriel, which he built near the Tabernacle, to be rung for more than a few minutes when Mr. Spurgeon's services were going on.

In 1878, Dr. Maclagan became Bishop of Lichfield, and on the death of the beloved Dr. Magee he was promoted to the Archbishopric of York. He it was who placed the crown on the head of Queen Alexandra at the coronation of 1902, after King Edward had been crowned by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Picturesque Old York Minster, from the City Walls

A BELOVED "LITTLE MOTHER OF THE POOR"

SUCH was the loving name by which the late Mrs. Rose N. Lesser was known among the teeming population of the East Side of New York. To thousands of the poor Jewish immigrants, she had been indeed "the little mother." There were few who did not know and love the sweet-faced, patient woman who was so kind and generous to them all.

Mrs. Lesser was born in Warsaw, Poland, in 1859. Her father, Jacob Rosenzweig, a physician, became involved in the Polish war for freedom and came to this country when Rose was only three years old. The family lived for a while in Kansas City, and later in Bloomington, Ill., where the daughter founded the Bloomington Aid Society in 1876. She came to New York eighteen years ago, and has ever since been actively identified with works of charity and benevolence. "Our Guardian Angel," the immigrants and the aged called her, but to the children she was always "The Little Mother."

When her own ample means had been spent in well-doing, she received assistance in her benevolences from many sources, including merchants, brokers, and tradesmen. She became president, twelve years ago, of the Hebrew Sheltering House at a time when its income was small. At the time of her death the House was receiving from the ladies' auxiliary alone $9,000 a year.

Mrs. Lesser was also president of the Montefiore Talmud Torah, and of the First Downtown Sisterhood, United Hebrew Charities, and connected with the Federated Sisterhood, the Council of Jewish Women, the Charities Organization Society and the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. She gave largely to charity in private also. Hundreds of persons were helped out with donations of unleavened bread and bitter herbs at Passover, and in seasons when work was scarce and distress prevailed in the Jewish quarter. Her funeral was marked by a great outpouring of the East Side poor, who loved her and mourned her loss deeply.

Mrs. Rose N. Lesser

The Tribute of Confucianism

IT WAS a notable tribute which the Chinese Minister to this country, Dr. Wu Ting Fang, paid to Christianity at a meeting held in New York a few days ago in the interest of foreign missions. He said in part:

Any church or mission, any corporation, or in fact, any body of people, whatever their denomination or creed, who are doing good work for the benefit of mankind, especially for my countrymen, will receive my sympathy and my help if it is possible for me to give it. Those who come from foreign lands to this country as students, naturally find themselves in environment of the highest order. The loneliness of those in humbler walks of life—the merchant, the laborer, the servant—is indescribable. These classes are dependent wholly on the churches and missions to furnish good surroundings. Churches and schools keep them from bad and baneful influences. I am glad to find that Christians are carrying out the spirit of an old tenet of Confucius, to give education to all people alike, regardless of race, color, or creed. I am glad to find these Christian people helping my countrymen, teaching them to behave themselves, to practise virtue, and to be good citizens. The keynote of the twentieth century is altruism, doing for others, serving others, sacrificing for others. We in China have this taught to us in the negative form, "not doing to others what we would not have them do to us." You who are Christians have the active form laid down for you in the Golden Rule by the Founder of your religion. We thank you for your work in behalf of our countrymen in this land. And we do not object to Christian missionaries coming to China, for we know they come to teach our people to be good and to do good.

This from one of the ablest of Chinese statesmen and thinkers is a sufficient answer to those who have foolishly criticised the Christian missionaries in that country, attempting to show that their teachings and actions have given offense to the Chinese. Dr. Wu's native land is the greatest mission field in the world to-day.

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly. Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue. Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York. Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter. Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa.

PLEASE show this copy of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and especially the Premium insert, to all your friends and try to induce them to subscribe and thus become members of the Great CHRISTIAN HERALD Family. You can help us more at this particular time by doing so than at any other season of the year. Will you do it?

The New Regime in China

AFTER nearly a year of sickness, the poor, puny, feeble Emperor of China has passed away in his imperial palace at Peking. His death would hardly have affected the empire perceptibly had it not happened that on the same day the Dowager-Empress also died. Although there were rumors of poisoning, it would now appear that the deaths resulted from natural causes.

Kwang Su never was more than a figurehead, the real ruler of the Empire being Tsze-Hsi-An, the Dowager-Empress, who was one of the strongest characters in the long record of Chinese history. For forty-seven years she has ruled nearly one-fourth of the population of the globe. One after another, Emperors have come and gone, and all were as puppets in her hands. She was strong, able, cruel, fearless, despotic. At times she has stood alone against her council and seemingly against all China. She was an obstacle to the nation's progress; but she had her ideals of Manchu supremacy and of patriotism and she lived up to them. She never loved foreigners, and only tolerated them because she could not successfully oppose them. Europeans and Americans remember her "campaign of extermination" against all foreigners in 1900 during the Boxer troubles and her flight with the Emperor and the entire court from Peking to Sian, the ancient capital in Western China. Of late years, her attitude toward foreigners and missionaries especially was more pacific; but in her heart she abhorred the "barbarians" and looked to the day when the country would be rid of them all.

Prince Chun, the new Regent, is said to be a quiet, amiable, conservative Manchu. Whether the nation will advance under the new régime cannot yet be foreshadowed. If Yuan-Shih-Kai and Chang-Chih-Tung retain their power, we may soon see a new China. If they are relegated to the rear, or displaced, it may be years before the ancient empire follows Japan's example and assumes its rightful place among the progressive nations.

National Progress

A READER in Kansas asks us whether in our opinion the people of this country are progressing or retrograding. This is a very broad question, and one that has been asked in various forms by other readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Doubtless the best test of a nation's progress is its advancement in education, in morals, in obedience to law and order, and in the general welfare of its people. In all of these it can be claimed with truth that we have steadily advanced. He must be a sorry American indeed who cannot see the signs of a national uplift in recent events, and who does not feel a thrill of gratitude to God for all the blessings our country enjoys.

In a more special sense, we may note advances on particular lines. Forty or fifty years ago, the temperance cause was a weak one. Intemperance was not regarded in the light of a social or moral offense, as it is reckoned to-day. Now, nobody wants to employ a drinker and the inebriate is ostracised. Prohibition laws prevail in a number of our States, and wherever such conditions exist, morality, sobriety, thrift and general prosperity have increased and crime and taxation have proportionately diminished. Our laws are more effectively enforced, and human life and property are better safeguarded. Wealth is less than before a shield to criminality. Children are better protected and the great evil of child labor, now being attacked in many States, is almost certain to be minimized and ultimately abolished. Hospitals have multiplied and the humane care of the sick and helpless is becoming more general as a public duty. The great movement for international peace has made amazing progress, our nation playing an important part in it. Ours is a position of power and influence among the nations, and we are among the factors that distinctly make for the world's betterment.

Illiteracy is disappearing and our public school system is gradually becoming one of the best in the world. With regard to religion, it may be said to be more practical and less theoretical than before. We have more of "applied Christianity." Our churches are broader, more tolerant and more fraternal. Bigotry and denominational narrowness are dying out and a kindlier feeling prevails. Church Federation, formerly undreamed of, is now almost within sight and gives promise of a rich realization.

As to public morals, we are fast legislating many of the old-time major evils out of existence. Turf gambling has probably received its deathblow. Only a few States now tolerate prizefights. In politics and legislation, the tendency is toward a higher and purer standard. Though corruption still rears its head in places, it is quickly detected and exposed. It can not long continue triumphant, as in former days. The secret ballot has been a great step forward. Our people are now minded to have their politics clean, and to see that moral issues are not permitted to be sidetracked. Rogues there are and rogues there will be, in public as in private life; but with the civic and national conscience quickened as now, they do not long go "unwhipt of justice."

Finally, the standard of living among our working people has been raised, and to-day, social and economic conditions are materially advanced. This is attested by reliable statistics. It may be urged that strikes, race riots, lynchings and the like occurrences indicate retrogression; but these should be regarded as inseparable from the growth of a nation like ours, which is composed of so many different elements.

We still have many hard problems before us as a people, but with faith in God's overruling providence directing the nation's destiny, we can keep our faces set resolutely toward the sunrise and press forward along the lines of civic and national righteousness to better and higher civilization.

Germany and the Kaiser

WHILE Germany has become more quiet since the declaration of the Kaiser to Chancellor Von Buelow that he would act in the future in accord with the general policy of the foreign office at Berlin, both the Emperor and the Reichstag seem unsatisfied. The former feels that he has been humiliated and the latter are not certain that the Kaiser will make his personality less prominent in the conduct of affairs. The recent interview of the Kaiser on his relations to Great Britain was referred to in the last issue of this paper. A few days after this was written, the Chancellor received the assurance mentioned above.

There still seems to be some doubt as to what the Kaiser really promised to do. At first it was claimed that he had promised to make his rule less personal, and that his ministers would be more responsible. Later reports convey the idea that William only reaffirmed his coronation oath to act in accord with the constitution and that he considers none of his privileges curtailed. Nevertheless it is probable that in the future the Emperor will act through his Chancellor and the various departments, rather than pushing them to one side and acting entirely on his own responsibility. The parliament, press and people are very insistent that he shall act through the channels that the founders of the Empire provided; in other words, the Emperor's idea of the "divine right" of kings has sustained a rude blow. Probably at no time in the future will he be able to carry things along entirely in accord with his own wishes alone, as he has so often done in the past. It is felt that his recent interviews and speeches have interfered with the general trend of Germany's policy in Europe and have been certainly counter to popular feeling. It is felt that his moves in Morocco and other places have damaged German prestige. The storm over the British interview was only the last of several acts which have not been pleasing to the great mass of Germans.

There has been some talk on the part of members of all parties that a change should be made in position of the cabinet and that they should be directly responsible to parliament instead of to the Emperor. If the Emperor, however, accepts present situation, there may not be a change in that direction for some time, as the same end would practically be obtained. If the Kaiser does not accept the situation, there will be, undoubtedly, storm scenes and stronger demands on the part of the Reichstag in the coming sessions.

Unanswered Prayers

WHY are so many prayers unanswered? This is a question which is frequently asked, and it is not one to be lightly passed by. Many very worthy Christians are troubled about it. They find it apparently unsolvable problem.

There are three essentials in the "prayer that prevails." First, the believing heart; then the earnest, concentrated desire, finding expression simply in the utterance from the lips outward, but in the cry that goes up from the soul itself; and lastly, the righteous prayer, which is worthy to be presented before the throne. If we pray in simple faith in His name, and not for those things which the senses crave and which minister to our worldly natures, or cater to vanity or display, or to power, pride or social position, but for all that we need to make us better men and women, our petitions will surely not go unanswered.

Christ has taught us to first "seek the Kingdom," receiving which all things will be added unto us. We are not, therefore, under the necessity of praying for mere material things, since the lesser is included in the greater. But in our hour of extremity, when earthly sources fail us, we have a right to come before our Father for all our needs.

That prevailing prayer is not a theory but a fact is triumphantly proved by the testimony of countless thousands of Christian men and women throughout the world over. Every week, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD receives scores of letters from God's people, attesting, by their own wonderful and varied personal experiences, the truth of answered prayer. These earnest souls write out of the fulness of grateful hearts. Having first "sought the Kingdom," they have found the promise true that "all things will be added unto you." Their real wants are supplied, their bodies strengthened, their faith increased and their hearts filled with the love of God, to whom they give all the glory for their answered prayers.

WE AGAIN remind our readers that our new serial, "The Little Doctor," commences in the issue of December 9. No one can afford to miss the beginning of this fascinating story.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 2, 1908

	PAGE
Practising the Christmas Anthem	Cover
OUR MAIL-BAG (Illustrated)	954
The New Regime in China (Illustrated)	955, 957
Saving of a Soul. Sermon by Rev. A. S. Fiske	956
A 3,000-Mile Revival Tour (Portraits)	957
The Passing of Bella Cooke (Portrait)	958
England's Soldier-Archbishop (Illustrated)	959
The Late Mrs. Rose N. Lesser (Portrait)	959
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	960
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	961
Our Jackies in Japan (Illustrated)	962
Premium Announcements	963-970
Family Page. Mrs. Sangster (Illustrated)	971
The Parson and the Baby. Story (Illustrated). May B. Brown	972, 973
Sunday School Lesson. Dr. and Mrs. Crafts (Illus.)	974, 975
New Books	976
Cuba's New President (Portrait)	977
Young People's Societies	978
Solomon Dedicates the Temple. Mrs. M. Baxter	979

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Buddhist Temple Torn Down

THE Temple of Buddha, set up by the late Professor Sommerville at the University of Pennsylvania, has been torn down and the Oriental curios with which the temple was furnished have been stored away. This temple was for many years one of the sights of the Archaeological Department of the University. After a lifetime spent in traveling through the East in search of such relics, the idols were gathered by the Professor from numerous temples in Japan. Some were presents from friends and many were purchased from their owners in the Islands. Professor Sommerville was in the habit of lecturing to ministers and others who would rather in the temple to learn of the inner secrets of the Buddhist religion, and in this way the temple was one of the sights of America. The college authorities have decided to do away with this curious reproduction of an Oriental place of worship, and the temple will no longer be seen at the university museum.

This removal of the temple is very proper. The space it occupies could be better employed. The tearing down of this pagan temple is also a type of the decay of Buddhism, which has such a tremendous hold upon so many millions of people. As the line of missionaries advances in the different nations of the Far East, the temples one by one are being deserted, and Christian churches are taking their place in the affections and worship of the people. And then the idols of wood and clay and silver and gold, like those in the museum of the University of Pennsylvania, will be reminders of a great religion that faded under the light of the Sun of Righteousness.

Their idols are silver and gold. (Ps. 135: 4.)

The Marvels of Surgery

Dr. Alexis Carrel, of the Rockefeller Institute in New York, in an address at the opening session of the American Philosophical Society, told of taking a leg from a dead dog and transplanting it in another dog's body. The fox terrier patient assumed normal control of the new leg and in three weeks there was only left a scar and the dog was up and about. Surgery has succeeded in transplanting parts of the human body. Human arteries and human veins have been interchanged and the patients have scarcely been able to tell the difference. Dr. Carrel held that this transplanting process would yet be employed in saving the life of ailing humanity and that kidneys and other organs of the body would be transferred from the dead to the living, with a large increase in the ratio of longevity. We have a kinship of clay with the lower tribes and science is constantly reminding us how nearly the same is the substance of which we are made. But the only real life we can have is that of God, which is transplanted into us by the spirit of his Son, by which we are cured of our physical, mental, moral and spiritual maladies.

I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly. (John 10: 10.)

Football Slaughter

Notwithstanding the systematized attempt to reduce the mortality of the game of football in this country, the harvest of slaughter has been great. Gridiron warfare between the colleges, high schools and athletic clubs to-day has resulted in ten dead and two hundred and ninety wounded. This is the death list:

Balthaser, Wilfred, Waterbury, Conn. Cooper, John, University of North Carolina. Dougherty, Albert, Evansville (Ind.) Y. M. C. A. Dickinson, Ernest, University of Arkansas. Dyck, J. J., Oklahoma State Normal School. Evans, Thomas, Utah Agricultural College. Ferebee, G. Cook, Virginia Military Institute. Marker, Charles, Great Bend, Kan. Potts, William M., Cannonsburg, Pa. Smith, William, Clarion, Ia. Two players died from spinal injuries, one from paralysis caused in an open tackle, one from a broken neck, two from concussion of the brain, two from internal injuries caused by strains and kicks in vital parts, and one player fell dead of heart disease. Collarbones have been broken on fields East and West, wrists cracked and jaws, feet, legs and shoulder bones shattered. Torn ligaments and dislocated joints have been numerous. All the deaths but one resulted from the open playing of the game.

Fourth of July is a good institution which we must maintain, but there has to be a stop to the wholesale murder which is occasioned by its celebration. Football is a splendid game which develops the strength and agility of the muscles, promotes a quick intelligence and courage, but it must be toned down in some way so that the useless massacre shall stop. Able presidents of colleges and others have sounded the note of warning and no attention has been paid to it. It is time now for parents and presidents and officers of institutions to so regulate this game that, while the sport may be retained, the fatal danger may be removed. For one precious life out of these ten who have been sacrificed is really worth more than the fun of all the students of the nation. Such an estimate was put upon human life in the Mosaic dispensation, that a man who killed another, even unintentionally, had to take shelter in a city of refuge to prevent his being slain by a relative of the one killed.

The Buddhist Temple Which Has Been Abolished

Then Moses severed three cities on this side Jordan toward the sunrise; that the slayer might flee thither, which should kill his neighbor unawares, and hated him not in times past; and that fleeing unto one of these cities he might live. (Deut. 4: 41, 42.)

Dorando and Hayes to Run

Dorando Pietri, the young Italian who came near winning the Olympic Marathon race in London, having entered the stadium before John J. Hayes, the American victor, arrived in New York the other day on the steamer Kronprinzessin Cecilie. He came over for the purpose of running a long distance race with Hayes. Dorando was ahead of Hayes at the finish, but he fell down fainting and had to be lifted up and pushed by his friends across the goal, which lost him the prize. Dorando has won thirty races. He is the champion of Italy at all distances, from five miles up. The sea made Dorando very sick, and he did not seem to be so certain of victory as he did when he first sailed; but the contest will be a very heated one and will attract the notice of the whole world.

This contest of swiftness and strength is only a type of the racing that is going on in every city street and on every country road, the race for wealth and fame and power and pleasure, and the trophies are handed out to those who reach the goal first. But the real race in life is that in which we outrun our weaknesses, passions and spiritual foes, reaching the goal of the highest manhood and womanhood, and then receive the crown of life as a trophy from the King.

Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord, the righteous judge, shall give me at that day. (II. Tim. 4: 8.)

The Animal Cemetery in Paris

La Fête des Morts (the "Day of the Dead") was observed in Paris recently, when the principal cemeteries were visited by vast numbers of people. The animal cemetery, which lies in an island of the Seine, near Asnières, was not forgotten. It attracted a large number of disconsolate mourners who had lost pet cats and dogs. Here are buried 15,000 dogs, 4,000 cats, 7 horses, 6 monkeys, 1 cow, 2 goats, 1 lamb, 1 panther, 10 parrots, 9 canaries, 4 pigeons and 1 goose. Some of the graves are very costly, made of granite or marble, neatly paved and enclosed and having their inscriptions. Over the resting place of a spaniel can be read: "I shall regret thee eternally, dear little one. How empty henceforth shall my life be without thee, dear little bow-wow!" On the gravestone of a pet cat is the following: "To our dearly beloved Mimi. Her poor dear little mother will love her always." Sappho, a departed toy terrier, has this inscription: "O Sappho! If my soul cannot join yours, dear and noble friend, I do not wish for salvation without thee!" The mourners at the cemetery were all women dressed in mourning.

A reasonable fondness for the lower animals is commendable, but such an excessive fondness for them as was expressed in Paris, is nothing short of the ridiculous. Too much faith is fanaticism; too great love for animals is folly. It usually means the substitution of love which should be bestowed upon children and other people, for children and older people have something which the cat and the dog and the horse do not possess—that something which gives to the child of God the image of its Father. It is this something, with its present significance and its future immortality, which gives any real meaning to All Souls' Day.

How much then is a man better than a sheep? (Matt. 12: 12.)

Masterpiece Smuggled from Italy

It had been thought that every possible device for cheating the custom house officers had been tried by both men and women. Articles of dress and of jewelry have been concealed in the most unusual places, but a new deceit was practised recently when a Vandyke picture, worth a quarter of a million of dollars, was rolled up into an iron pipe which was fastened to the bottom of a motor car as a part of the machine, and smuggled out of Italy into this country, free of duty. With this taint upon the canvas it now hangs in a gallery near Philadelphia. This stealthy introduction of the picture to this country was as unfriendly to ethical taste as it was a breach of good morals.

O deliver me from the deceitful and unjust man. (Ps. 43: 1.)

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

OUR GALLANT JACKIES IN JAPAN

By H. K. S., Yokohama

ON THE day when the long-looked-for guests dropped anchor in Yokohama harbor, it was like the glow of a rainbow of promise in clouds of war. Over every open doorway hung the word, "Welcome"; every shop window shouted in voiceless acclamation, "Welcome"; baby hands waved the Stars and Stripes for welcome, while the royalty cordially greeted the officers of the American fleet, and the public school children made the land echo with My country, 'tis of thee,

Sweet land of liberty!

A striking incident gave opportunity for patriotic enthusiasm in Yokohama, where the popular feeling found its natural climax. It was Thursday evening at dusk when, near the railway station, one of the "Welcome" arches made of evergreens and bamboo caught fire. An excursion train had just pulled in, and was disgorging hundreds of our United States marines. The first sight that greeted them was the flaming arch and above it waved "Old Glory" and the Japanese flag. In an instant one of our boys was scaling the structure and rescued the Stars and Stripes, amid loud applause from the crowd of Japanese spectators; but the other flag still remained. The fire grew more furious every minute and some one dared the boys to go up again and take down the flag of the nation. Two of our United States marines rushed up the burning mass again, and tore down the endangered colors, while cheers and joyful appreciation burst from the throng of witnesses.

Twelve thousand of our Jack Tars sailed into Yokohama harbor on the morning of October 18—twelve thousand hot-headed, whole-souled, true-blue American jackies! It was a big order to let loose in a little country; in fact, too big an order, and only three hundred were allowed ashore at one time, these three hundred privileged ones to be the picked and tried men of the whole fleet. Picket men were stationed over the entire city and any disorderly conduct was quelled in an instant.

Yokohama has its European slum, as have all other cities in the world; and perhaps in this city fiendish devices are more cunning; vice more rampant; the trade in the souls of men more hideous than anywhere else on the face of the earth. If the slum saloonkeeper prepared for a great rush of business in the hopes that twelve thousand souls would make his fortune, the strict discipline maintained upset his kettle of fish. The dens of vice never did such poor business. Instead, money flowed like water on Benten Dori, where the curio stores, the silk, fan and parasol shops, the needle workers, and the porcelain dealers line up on both sides of the street. The prevailing fashion among the boys was to buy a brand new dress suit case, which they filled with odds and ends of purchases. Then, tired with their wearisome work, they wound up at the end of the day on the wharf to await a launch which would take them to the battleships far out in the harbor.

On the wharf the Young Men's Christian Association and the Seamen's Mission erected tents. They were famous places, put up at the very entrance to the piers and made so attractive and inviting that the swarms of tired, hungry sailor sight-seers were glad enough to drop down upon the comfortable benches. The Seamen's Mission tent was especially famous for its hostess.

Every day excursion parties were taken by Young Men's Christian Association guides to accessible places of interest; the government offering free rides on tram and railroad. The men were detailed to go, and these trips were obligatory, so that during the very few hours of freedom they had little time to carouse. The Japanese newspapers were overflowing with words of welcome. Again and again came the expression, "As our guide on the road to civilization, we honor and respect the United States." And then, in thrilling enthusiasm, they wrote: "We, the people of Japan, cry out from the fulness of our hearts, All hail! Thrice welcome!"

Fleet week lasted as long as any other week—seven days—and then the American guests of the nation steamed away west. Seven hundred American representatives are left behind. They are the ordinary business men—every-day men in work-a-day clothes. While the blue-jackets were shielded on every side, these seven hundred who remain face the same temptations, unshielded, and without so much as a lifted finger in the homeland by way of precaution. We would like to have one church for them; is it unreasonable? One Union church over against hundreds of traps and dens of iniquity. Is it too much to ask? For thirty-five years the Union Church congregation has traveled in jinrikishas from one hired building to another for its services. And now, not because the American people have generously helped, but because a handful of faithful ones have sacrificed, struggled, pleaded, a church building is about to be erected. We have raised among ourselves nearly $20,000. We need more to complete the work. Who among the thousands of God's good people in the homeland is ready to help?

Old Age Pensions

Also Immediate Income and Insurance
Without Any Medical Examination!

ALL England is just now absorbingly interested in the Government scheme for providing Old Age Pensions, beginning at the age of Seventy. It is proposed to make a weekly allowance of $1.25 to single people and $1.80 to married couples, seventy years of age and over, whose income does not exceed $2.50 per week. Germany, by taxing employer and employee, and herself contributing to the Pension Fund, is working on the same line.

Better Than Government Pensions

But the best solution of the problem is in store for subscribers to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who will each and all have an opportunity to secure for themselves a regular Pension of from $100 to $1,000 Annually after attaining the age of Sixty, Sixty-five or Seventy years.

This opportunity will be afforded only to our subscribers, and it will be the most interesting proposition that was ever made to the American people in connection with Old Age Annuities or Pensions. There are also other advantages, such as Immediate Income, Life Insurance without Medical Examination, and in some instances much Larger Annuities.

One Hundred and Fifty Millions of Dollars of Capital are Back of this Beneficent Project

Full details of the plan will be ready by February 15, 1909, but will be sent ONLY to CHRISTIAN HERALD Subscribers. Therefore, when you Subscribe or Renew your Present Subscription, if interested in the matter of either Present Income, Life Insurance Without Medical Examination, or Old Age Annuities, just say, "Send me the Life Income Literature when Issued." Absolutely No Money or Medical Examination is Required.

Art Gallery De Luxe

Do You Want Your Pictures Beautifully Mounted and Sent by Express?

A NOTED Art Connoisseur who happened to see the Fine Collection of Pictures we have included in our Art Gallery de Luxe, suggested to us that we Give Every Subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD an opportunity to enhance tenfold the value of these Six Pictures by ordering them Mounted on Art Paper, Cream Tint, 15 x 20 inches, ready for framing, and sent by express, charges prepaid. This will entail a nominal charge of 50c extra. We have carefully studied the matter and have concluded to adopt this Excellent Suggestion.

A Genuine Favor for Our Friends

The Six Pictures sent out FREE with every Subscription are in every respect the same as those mentioned above, but unmounted and sent by mail. Therefore, even if you do not send the extra fifty cents, you get, as far as the pictures are concerned, identically the same as the mounted ones. But seeing the pictures before us, mounted on this superb Art Paper, all ready for framing, we feel that we are doing our friends a favor by advising all who can afford it to send for these pictures, mounted and shipped in the special manner described above.

Sole Rights of Reproduction

We may repeat here that the Six Pictures in this Collection have never before been reproduced, and can never be reproduced, by any art dealer or publishing house in this country; nor can they legally be imported, as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has Secured the Sole Right to Reproduce and Distribute these Masterpieces within the boundaries of North America, Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico and the Philippines. If you want Mounted Pictures, say so when you Subscribe for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and enclose 50c extra.

NOTE: By sending 50 cents extra for the SIX Superb Pictures in our Art Gallery De Luxe, Handsomely Mounted and Ready to Frame, you Get SIX BEAUTIFUL PRESENTS AT LESS THAN 10c. EACH.

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Over 1,200 Large Pages Yearly. Our Wonderful Art Gallery De Luxe Free with Every Subscription. Always Full of Bright Pictures
Published Every Wednesday (52 Times a Year) at the Bible House, New York. Subscription, $1.50 per Annum. Dr. Louis Klopsch, Proprietor

A Personal Letter to You From Dr. Klopsch

Dear Friend and Member of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Family:

I do not know just when your subscription to The Christian Herald will expire; perhaps it has already expired, or it may not expire for some months to come. Be that as it may, I beg to be permitted to suggest to you the advisability of renewing your subscription very soon, especially if it is your intention to avail yourself of any of the Premium offers so delightfully pictured on the pages that immediately follow.

December is the month in which the mails become increasingly congested and the express companies overtaxed; when snow and frost impede transportation; when many roads become almost impassable and when a thousand and one undreamt of things occur to cause delay, and perhaps even disappointment, around Christmas time.

As a member of The Christian Herald Family, you are entitled to every possible consideration at our hands, and that is what we wish to extend to you; but to win out, in view of the tremendous holiday pressure soon to come, we really must have your personal co-operation, and you can best help us by sending in your renewal early. You know, of course, that no matter when your subscription expires, you cannot lose even a day if, in order to favor us or to make sure of some special premium, you should renew earlier than necessary, as the full renewal term is invariably added to your present date of expiry.

"THE FOUNDLING"
Reproduced in Fourteen Colors for Our Art Gallery De Luxe. Size 12x15 Inches blessing that maketh rich, and to which no sorrow is added.
(SEE NEXT PAGE)

Surely, it is hardly needful for me to add that I would consider it a personal favor if you should continue your relationship to our Family Circle (now about to number 300,000) and that it will be my earnest endeavor during the coming year to provide for your edification and entertainment many genuine treats and delightful surprises.

May the Holiday Season bring you joy unalloyed, and may the New Year abound to you and to all your dear ones in the

Miss Klopsch

The Christian Herald, 92-116 Bible House, New York

Our Wonderful Art Gallery De Luxe

Painted by J. L. G. Ferris

Size 12 x 15 Inches

Washington's March Through the Jerseys

Painted by S. Paulus

Size 12 x 15 Inches

"Saved at Last, Thank God"

Free to All New and Renewing Subscribers

WE ARE at a Loss for Words to Describe in Adequate Terms the wondrous beauty of the "Art Gallery De Luxe," which the Christian Herald generously offers to send free to each and every subscriber. This fine collection consists of exquisite reproductions of Six Masterpieces in their Original Colors, aggregating a full thousand square inches of superb color-work, the value of which cannot be measured by the ordinary standard of dollars and cents. The little reproductions on this page and on the front cover page give a faint idea of the subjects represented in our Gallery De Luxe, but we lack the descriptive powers to convey to the reader an intelligent idea of their artistic merit.

☆☆☆☆☆

The Christian Herald always excels in its premiums the advertised description, but this year even its oldest and best friends will marvel at the surpassing attractiveness of its "Art Gallery De Luxe." New subscribers, who are not acquainted with the generous treatment that characterizes its every transaction, will not be able to understand how The Christian Herald can afford such a generous gift. Nevertheless it is a fact, though it may baffle many to understand how it is possible.

☆☆☆☆☆

Four months of steady labor, by the ablest artists, have been spent on this work, and the result is grand, glorious, superb, beyond compare.

Just think of Six Beautiful Separate Pictures, Unmounted, aggregating 1,000 square inches—offered FREE as a Premium, with a yearly Subscription to the Brightest and Best Family Paper in the World; All together for only $1.50. It seems incredible, but it is nevertheless true. How we can do it is our Secret. You get the benefit.

Painted by C. Von Bergen

Size 12 x 15 Inches

Under the Shade of the Apple Tree

Painted by Wilhelm Hasselbach

Size 12 x 15 Inches

"Hide and Seek"

These exquisite pictures, Each of Which Will Make a Handsome Christmas Gift, aggregate 1,000 square inches, and are reproduced in all the full splendor of their original colorings by the finest lithographic process in the world. Each and every one, framed and hung, would be a credit to the most refined home in the land. Moreover, these pictures cannot be purchased at any art store for any price, because the exclusive right for reproduction belongs to The Christian Herald; yet $1.50 entitles you to all six of these large pictures and a year's subscription to the Brightest and Best Family Paper in the World.

☆☆☆☆☆

Christmas time is coming. It will be here before you are fully aware of the fact. These Six Pictures will make Six of the Finest Christmas Presents one can think of, or they will adorn the walls of your own home for many years to come.

☆☆☆☆☆

To get a set of these Famous and Beautiful Masterpieces, you must act at once, or you may be disappointed. But remember that if you are too late your money is Immediately Refunded, or if you are not altogether satisfied—in fact, more than pleased—your Money will be refunded and No Questions asked. We do not require Any Explanation—just say the word and your Money Goes Back Immediately—and this applies to ALL our Premiums.

Should your subscription reach us too late to entitle you to this unprecedented gift, we will send you a telegram at our own expense, and your money will be immediately refunded by mail. This is done to modify disappointment, and to enable you to use the money, without unnecessary loss of time, in some other direction.

Painted by E. Debat Ponson

Size 12 x 15 Inches

The Tryst at the Brook

A Volume of Bewildering Enchantment

THE Attractive Volume of Enchanting Stories and Immortal Legends, compiled by Hamilton Wright Mabie, under the Captivating Title, World-Famed Stories and Legends, is a Book for the Library Table; a Book to be Read Aloud on Winter Evenings; a Veritable Treasure-House of Fiction. Here are the Stories that Young Folks Instinctively Love and Delight In; that Old Folks Keenly Relish; Stories that Appeal to the Heart at Eight or Eighty; that Develop the Budding Mind, Strengthen the Moral Character, and, in some Subtle Way, never fail to Make Us who are Gaining in Years feel Younger, Fresher and Better for having read them.

ACTUAL SIZE OF BOOK

ALL LETTERING ON COVER
IN GENUINE GOLD

WORLD FAMED STORIES AND LEGENDS

HAMILTON W. MABIE

WORLD FAMED STORIES AND LEGENDS

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
NEW YORK

Old, Yet Ever New

Here, too, in the second half of this Generous Volume, are the Legends that have Rocked the Cradles of Nations in their infancy, and have been handed down through the ages; Legends that are Ingrained in the Fibre of all English-Speaking Peoples; that are, many of them, Old beyond Years, yet will be New long after we are dead and gone.

Each a Priceless Gem

Thus does this Delightful Volume present in its 540 Beautifully Printed Pages the Stories and Legends that Yesterday, To-day and Forever exert their Irresistible Fascination over Old and Young; that are Each and All Priceless Gems Gathered from the Imperishable Literature of the World.

A Great Holiday Book

These are the stories and legends that have woven their enchanting spell over succeeding generations; that have stood the test of time and that never fail to meet the needs of the imagination, and answer the cravings of the heart.

What $2.00 WILL BUY

WE Will Send This Great Book, WORLD-FAMED STORIES AND LEGENDS, 540 Pages, Bound in Red and Gold; Our "Art Gallery De Luxe," and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Whole Year (ALL THREE), for only $2

ACT TO-DAY

☆ ☆ ☆ ☆

ADDRESS TO-DAY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
92-116 Bible House, New York

Sent, All Charges Prepaid

Millions of Dollars For World-Wide Charities

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is internationally known as the "Almoner to Nations in Distress." It has distributed in Home and Foreign Relief Operations during the past fifteen years the enormous sum of Four Million Dollars, or an average of nearly a Thousand Dollars every week-day for fifteen years. Emperors, Kings and Queens have received its representatives to express their thanks for the generous assistance afforded in staying the ravages of famine and pestilence. The American Government has repeatedly placed warships and specially chartered vessels at its disposal for the transportation of relief supplies.

In our own country the beneficences of The Christian Herald are without number. Its Bowery Mission supports the world-famed Bread Line, at which a hot breakfast is given to 2,000 homeless men and boys every night, and its "Children's Paradise," the Model Fresh-Air Home of the World, at Nyack, N. Y., has entertained for a ten days' outing over 31,000 children of the tenements, receiving 3,000 children annually. More could be said but more is not needed.

Only India Paper Red Letter Bible in the World

ISAIAH 61

22 A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the LORD will hasten it in his time.

CHAPTER 61

The Redeemer Comes to Zion with Blessings.

THE Spirit of the Lord GOD is upon me; because the LORD hath anointed me to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives, and the opening of the prison to them that are bound; ★

To proclaim the acceptable year of the LORD, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn;

3 To appoint unto them that mourn in Zion, to give unto them beauty for ashes, the oil of joy for mourning, the garment of praise for the spirit of heaviness; that they might be called trees of righteousness, the planting of the LORD, that he might be glorified.

4 And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen and your vinedressers.

6 But ye shall be named the Priests of the LORD: men shall call you the Ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

7 For your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double: everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For I the LORD love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the LORD hath blessed.

10 I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in

The Mission of the Lord's Anointed One

CHAPTER 60

Mat. 13: 31

CHAPTER 61

a ch. 11: 2
Lu. 4: 18
John 1: 32
John 3: 34

b Ps. 147: 3
c Jer. 34: 8

d Lev. 25: 9
e Mal. 4: 1, 3
f Mat. 5: 4

g Ps. 30: 11

h ch. 60: 21
i John 15: 8

j Ezek. 36: 33

k Eph. 2: 12
l Ex. 19: 6
m ch. 40: 2

n Zech. 9: 12
o ch. 49: 18
p Rev. 21: 2

1 decheth as a priest.

2 Ps. 72: 3
3 Ps. 85: 11
4 ch. 60: 18
5 ch. 62: 7

CHAPTER 62

a ch. 65: 15
b Rev. 3: 12
c Zech. 9: 16
d Hos. 1: 10
e 1 Pet. 2: 10

f 1 Azubah.

g ch. 54: 1

h That is, My delight is in her.

i 2 Ki. 21: 1

j That is, Married.

k With the joy of the bridegroom.

l ch. 65: 19
m Ezek. 33: 7

n Or, ye that are the LORD'S remembrances.

o silence.

p ch. 61: 11
q Zeph. 3: 20
r If I give, etc.

s Jer. 5: 17

my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the LORD GOD will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations.

CHAPTER 62

The Redeemer Calls the Watchmen to Awake.

FOR Zion's sake will I not hold my peace, and for Jerusalem's sake I will not rest, until the righteousness thereof go forth as brightness, and the salvation thereof as a lamp that burneth.

2 And the Gentiles shall see thy righteousness, and all kings thy glory: and thou shalt be called by a new name, which the mouth of the LORD shall name.

3 Thou shalt also be a crown of glory in the hand of the LORD, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou shalt no more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate: but thou shalt be called Hephzibah, and thy land Beulah: for the LORD delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem, which shall never hold their peace day nor night: ye that make mention of the LORD, keep not silence,

7 And give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a praise in the earth.

8 The LORD hath sworn by his right hand, and by the arm of his strength, Surely I will no more give thy corn to be meat for thine enemies; and the sons of the stranger shall not drink thy wine, for the which thou hast labored:

9 But they that have gathered it shall eat it, and praise the LORD; and they that have brought it to

Jesus Baptized; he Undergoes Temptation

ST

and his meat was locusts and wild honey.

5 Then went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan,

6 And were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins.

7 But when he saw many of the Pharisees and Sadducees come to his baptism, he said unto them, O generation of vipers, who hath warned you to flee from the wrath to come?

8 Bring forth therefore fruits meet for repentance:

9 And think not to say within yourselves, We have Abraham to our father: for I say unto you, that God is able of these stones to raise up children unto Abraham.

10 And now also the axe is laid unto the root of the trees: therefore every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and cast into the fire.

11 I indeed baptize you with water unto repentance: but he that cometh after me is mightier than I, whose shoes I am not worthy to bear: he shall baptize you with the Holy Ghost, and with fire:

12 Whose fan is in his hand, and he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he will burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire.

13 Then cometh Jesus from Galilee to Jordan unto John, to be baptized of him.

14 But John forbade him, saying, I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?

15 And Jesus answering said unto him, Suffer it to be so now: for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness. Then he suffered him.

16 And Jesus, when he was baptized, went up straightway out of the water: and lo, the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him:

17 And a voice from heaven, saying, This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased.

CHAPTER 4

The Temptation of Jesus; his first Disciples.

THEN was Jesus led up of the spirit into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil.

2 And when he had fasted forty

CHAPTER 3

Deut. 8: 8
Deut. 32: 13
1 Sam. 14: 25
2 Ki. 18: 32
Ps. 81: 16
Ezek. 27: 17
Lu. 24: 42
Acts 19: 4

3 And when a

him, he said, I

God, command

be made bread.

4 But he ans is written, Man

bread alone, bu

that proceedeth of God.

5 Then the de into the holy ci

on a pinnacle of

6 And saith u

for it is written,

angels charge

and in their han thee up, lest at thy foot against

7 Jesus said

ten again, Thou

the Lord thy God.

8 Again, the d

into an exceedi

and sheweth him of the world, a them;

9 And saith un

things will I giv

fall down and w

10 Then saith

Get thee hence,

written, Thou sh

Lord thy God, and thou serve.

11 Then the d

and, behold, ministered unto

12 Now wh

that John was departed into Ga

13 And leaving and dwelt in Cap

upon the sea coas

of Zebulon and N

14 That it mig

which was spok

prophet, saying,

15 The land

the land of Ne

way of the sea,

Galilee of the Gen

16 The people w

ness saw great lig

which sat in there

of death light is

17 From that to preach, and for the kingdom hand.

Specimen Page of Our India Paper Red Letter Bible

Shows Type, Size, and Binding

The Speed at Which this Circular is Run may Throw Out the Alignment of the Red Lettering. It is NOT SO with the Bible Itself.

Our Red Letter Bibles and Testaments

Our Red Letter Bible ONLY GENUINE EDITION

The only genuine edition of the Red Letter Bible contains the Authorized or King James' Version, unchanged save for the variation of the color in the type. Two colors (Red and Black) are employed, in accordance with the simple plan devised by Dr. Louis Klopsch, the Originator of the Red Letter principle applied to the Holy Scriptures.

What Is a Red Letter Bible?

- In the Old Testament, the passages quoted by our Lord, or directly related to incidents to which he referred, are Printed in Red.
- In the New Testament, the words universally accepted as those of our Saviour are Printed in Red.

- A Red Star (★) immediately following a verse in the Old Testament indicates that the verse embodies a prophetic reference to Christ as the coming Messiah.

Our Red Letter Bible, illustrated above, Contains Full References; also a Concordance, Subject Index, and Dictionary—all under One Alphabetical Arrangement—together with Helps, Maps, and Numerous Illustrations.

INDIA PAPER RED LETTER BIBLE

Weights Only 20 Ounces

THE text of this Bible is set in Bold-Face Minion, especially designed for this work. There are 268 pages of Helps (or Concordance) and 17 superb Maps. This gem of a Bible, small in bulk, light in weight, very legible and Very Durable, weighs only 20 ounces. It is bound in American Levant, overlapping edges, red-under-gold, and makes altogether the handiest and most satisfactory Bible now on the market. For size of type, size of page and appearance, see above illustration.

We send this superb Bible, together with The Christian Herald for one whole year and our incomparable "Art Gallery De Luxe," for only $3.00

SOMETHING STILL BETTER

If you can afford to pay $1 more, ask for the same Bible bound in Genuine Morocco, Calf Finish, Leather Lining, Silk Sewed, which will wear a Lifetime. This Bible is Equal to Any $10.00 Bible. It is Sent with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Year, and our "Art Gallery De Luxe," For Only $4.00

ALL CHARGES PREPAID IN EVERY INSTANCE

Our Red Letter Testament

This beautiful volume is the ONLY NEW TESTAMENT which contains ALL THE WORDS SPOKEN BY OUR LORD PRINTED IN RED. The Type is Very Clear, and the Alignment of the Red and Black Lettering Absolutely Perfect. The Red Letter New Testament is Exquisitely Bound in American Levant, Soft and Flexible, with Overlapping Edges—Red Under Gold—with Book-mark, making a Compact Volume that may be Conveniently Carried in the Pocket.

★ ★ ★

The Red Letter New Testament is Issued in Both the Authorized and Revised Versions, and is Sent, All Charges Prepaid, Together with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for One Year, and ART GALLERY, for ONLY $2.00

When ordering, state whether you want Authorized or Revised Version

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
92 to 116 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

A Glimpse Beyond the Lifted Veil

WHETHER Dr. Peters has looked into heaven with his own eyes we know not; but in this substantial and handsome volume he sees and makes his readers see the beauties of the Cloudless Land. In a singularly lucid, logical, simple yet scholarly manner, Dr. Peters treats of and discusses questions that have deeply agitated thinking men and women from time immemorial. As a lantern lighting with clear flashes of illumined thought the pathway that leads into the Eternal Life, this book will prove a comfort and solace to those who mourn the loss of some dear one, and a veritable inspiration to every thoughtful man and woman searching the sacred mysteries of

Beautifully Bound

400 Pages

ACTUAL SIZE OF BOOK

The Great Hereafter

It is impossible to give more than the briefest glimpses of the rich character of the contents of this attractive volume. Among the subjects discussed are: "Does Death End All?" "Light After Darkness," "The Soul Between Death and the Resurrection," "Heavenly Reunions," "The Joy and Comfort of Faith in Immortality," "Occupations in Heaven," "Our Children in Heaven," and many others, including "Poems of Comfort" and "Master Minds on the Life Beyond."

★ ★ ★

Many Golden Gems

In addition to the above, this Masterpiece of Thought and Literature contains a Vast Collection of Golden Gems from the greatest Historians, Philosophers, Preachers and Poets of all Ages and Nationalities on every phase of the Future Life.

"No! no! we cannot die;
In death's unrobing room we strip from round us
The garments of mortality and earth:
And breaking from the embryo state that bound us,
Our day of dying is our day of birth."

★ ★ ★

This splendid volume inspires its readers with the Holy Ambition to Live for Eternity.

★ ★ ★

What $2.00 WILL BUY

We will send this Great Book, "AFTER DEATH,—WHAT?" 400 Pages, Bound in Purple and Gold; Our ART GALLERY De LUXE, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for ONE YEAR $2 (ALL THREE), for only

ADDRESS TO-DAY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

92-116 Bible House, New York City

Sent, All Charges Prepaid

Of Immediate Importance to Our Subscribers

AS the mails and other transportation facilities are greatly congested immediately before Christmas time, and there are, consequently, innumerable possibilities for unexpected delays, we most earnestly urge our readers to send in their orders as soon as possible.

By doing so, you will not only save yourself time and trouble when the holiday season comes, but will make sure of receiving the premiums you may select fresh from the press, in perfect condition, and in good time for your requirements. You may also be sure that your order will be filled in a thoroughly satisfactory manner, without rush or likelihood of error.

We are always glad, when our readers so desire, to send The Christian Herald to one address and premiums or magazines each to a different address without additional expense.

Our Money-Saving Combinations

American Boy

Biggest, brightest, best boys' monthly magazine in the world. Profusely illustrated. Edited by experts who understand boy nature. Give your boy reading that not only interests but develops him.

The stories are by the best known writers for boys. All boy hobbies are exploited, such as stamps, coins and curios, photography, mechanics and electricity, popular science, puzzles, biography, athletics, etc. Parents like and respect its clean uplifting influence and all boys are enthusiastic over it. Parents need never worry about their boy's company when he is chumming with The American Boy. It is truly the ideal boy's magazine and is welcomed in 125,000 homes.

American Magazine

Is selected by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD this year as one of the leaders in its club offers because of the illustrious group of writers announced for the coming year. F. P. Dunne ("Mr. Dooley"), Ida M. Tarbell, William Allen White, Samuel Hopkins Adams, William J. Locke, May Sinclair, Stewart Edward White, Ray Stannard Baker, O. Henry and Brand Whitlock are a few among the many. Every number of The American Magazine contains the best that can be gotten from the pens of the greatest writers—literature that lives and breathes and spurs to better living—illustrations that are true to life and nature. It is a new magazine in every sense—new writers, new subjects, new artists and new fiction—and an appeal to the mind and heart that is brand new in periodical literature.

Cosmopolitan

No matter how many magazines you take, Cosmopolitan is the one you cannot afford to do without. Its subscribers of last year are subscribers this year—with their friends! They'll be subscribers next year—with their friends' friends! This, after all, is the real test of a magazine's merits—that its readers tell their friends about it. You can be sure that in 1909 one feature in each issue will be of such universal interest as to dominate the magazine world for that month—as single instances, take Cosmopolitan's great series of brilliant short stories by George Randolph Chester, or its remarkably popular special articles on "The Owners of America." The motto, "The best—no matter what it costs," makes Cosmopolitan resemble no other magazine but Cosmopolitan.

Good Housekeeping

Good Housekeeping is a richly illustrated magazine for all the family. It is, by general acknowledgment, the most practical of the household magazines, and at the same time one of the brightest, most refreshing periodicals for general reading. It has at least one first-class short story each month, abounds in good illustrated fun, and is an all-around family magazine. It makes a specialty of discussion of vital problems of the home in an incisive yet popular manner, of arts and crafts, of its inimitable "Discoveries." It was the pioneer in Emmanuel Church literature, and still maintains the most helpful department of this kind. It is issued monthly and reaches no less than a million readers. Whatever magazines you take, Good Housekeeping should be one of them.

Harper's Bazar

For forty-one years Harper's Bazar has been the leading American authority on fashion, good form, and entertainment. It will continue to be an invaluable household guide and assistant.

Harper's Bazar is made for all refined American women. Such women are its most ardent admirers, whether their incomes are large or small, whether their scale of living is simple or complex, whether they dwell in town or country. Harper's Bazar preaches economy—rational domestic economy, and wise economy. Harper's Bazar preaches simplicity—the simplicity of sane, wholesome living. Harper's Bazar preaches progress—progress in the kitchen, in the nursery, and in every other home department.

NOTE—The descriptive matter on this page concerning the above magazines is supplied by their respective publishers for the information of our readers.

Magazine Clubs

Originated with Dr. Louis Klopsch of The Christian Herald, in 1897. Magazine readers are therefore indebted to The Christian Herald for the opportunity of securing two or more magazines in a combination at about half price. For this year our selected list of choice magazines which we offer in clubs is as follows:

American Boy,	(Regular Price)	$1.00	Little Folks,	(Regular Price)	$1.00
American Magazine,	"	$1.00	McClure's,	"	$1.50
Cosmopolitan,	"	$1.00	Pearson's,	"	$1.50
Good Housekeeping,	"	$1.00	Success Magazine,	"	$1.00
Harper's Bazar,	"	$1.00	World To-Day,	"	$1.50
Woman's Home Companion, (Regular Price) $1.25

Four Genuine Bargains!

1. CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 1 Magazine above, $2.00
2. CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 2 Magazines above, $2.65
3. CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) AND ANY 3 Magazines above, $3.30
4. { CHRISTIAN HERALD ($1.50 a Year) } Send Us Only
 { REVIEW OF REVIEWS ($3.00 a Year) } $3.00
 ANY ONE OTHER Magazine on this Page For All Three

(Foreign Postage Extra. Canadian Postage Extra on Magazines.)

Each Magazine may be sent to a different address.

Our "Art Gallery De Luxe" goes FREE with every offer.

For "Modern Priscilla" (Fancywork—Monthly) add 25 cents to any combination.

After Feb. 1, 1909, 25 cents must be added whenever Woman's Home Companion is included.

EVER POPULAR GIFTS

Search wherever you may, you will never find anything that, at the price, gives greater and more genuine satisfaction as a gift than a weekly or monthly magazine, which the whole year through periodically reminds the recipient of the thoughtfulness of the giver.

Little Folks

A beautifully illustrated monthly magazine for young children. Mothers and fathers who wish to provide the very best reading and pictures for their young children, that will be read and re-read, and looked at and looked at, welcome Little Folks. It is a story-teller, a picture book, a playfellow, an out-of-school magazine. Its fun is of a simple, sunshiny sort. Its little tales of children possess an ethical value—they stimulate their readers and hearers to be fearless, cheerful, unselfish, and above all true and honorable. All stories of a painful kind are excluded, especially such as would haunt nervous and imaginative children. There is much curious and interesting natural history, also play-work for little fingers.

McClure's Magazine

The magazine of the hour. McClure's is an American institution—it reflects the opinions and beliefs of authoritative writers on the problems that are of vital interest to the American people.

McClure's is always a step in advance of other magazines. Besides the articles on government, politics, people and things, McClure's is also famous for its fiction. McClure's Magazine was the first to make the monthly periodical a vital influence in good government and good citizenship—an instrument to help a great, wide-spread people understand itself and its possibilities. The coming numbers will make new history for McClure's—you'll want them surely.

Pearson's Magazine

You hear more about Pearson's than any other magazine because it regularly contains things that tend to encourage and invigorate the America-loving American. Red corpuscle in its blood. Stalwart articles by James Creelman, Henry Reuter Dahl and Rupert Hughes—"The Message," a new serial by Louis Tracy author of "The Wings of the Morning," which will run well into 1909. Short stories that are genuinely good—serials that are standard—the best the world to-day produces. Pearson's fits everywhere. It fits every combination of magazines—unlike all the others. It fits your idea of instruction and entertainment—healthful upbuilding. No bones to pick—no muck-raking.

Review of Reviews

The Review of Reviews is accepted by intelligent people as the one best periodical to keep up with the times. Dr. Shaw's editorial "Progress of the World" opens the magazine with twenty splendidly illustrated pages that give the reader a clear, finely interpreted account of the men and events of the month.

The character sketches of just the notable figures who are interesting at the time, and the other contributed articles on the topics most "alive" are the most timely and valuable to be found in the periodicals.

Thus you have the month's history elucidated, the most valuable contributed articles published, the best things picked out of all the other magazines for you, and a hundred illustrations entertaining and educational at the same time.

Success Magazine

Success Magazine combines in a most unusual way, great inspirational features with high literary excellence and a special service to subscribers through its Home Departments and Correspondence Bureaus, which is quite unique.

Its inspirational editorials by Orison Swett Marden (author of "Pushing to the Front") are world-famous; its fiction is by the best American and European authors, and its illustrations and cover designs are by the leading artists of the day.

Among the important features for the coming year will be a continuation of the series recently begun upon "The Country Church and Minister and Their Life Problems," contributed by "those who know" from actual and heartfelt experience.

Woman's Home Companion

The Greater Woman's Home Companion at the new price of $1.25 has set a new standard for women's magazines. Fiction by Kate Douglas Wiggin, Mary Wilkins Freeman, Josephine Daskam Bacon, Elizabeth Stuart Phelps; The Reminiscences of Dr. Edward Everett Hale; Jack London's Round-the-World Letters—all will be a part of the Greater Companion for 1909.

Love scenes of the great novels are being painted for the Companion by Harrison Fisher, Howard Chandler Christy, C. Allen Gilbert and James Montgomery Flagg. Another unique art feature will be the portraits of the most beautiful women of all times—a remarkable collection of the famous beauties of the world. The Children's Department, and the twelve special departments for women, even more than in the past, will be the backbone of the magazine.

World To-day (The)

The only magazine of its class sold at a popular price. The World To-Day is a monthly world review, but is not made up of clippings of other publications. It obtains its information from original sources, and is reliable and up-to-date. Its contributors are the foremost men and women of the day. The reader will find in it recreation for the idle hour and—best of all—something worth while. Many illustrations are in colors. All other magazines of its class sell at $3. The World To-Day is but $1.50. Its remarkable quality and low price make it an exceptional bargain, and we recommend it strongly to our readers.

MAGAZINE COMBINATION BLANK

To THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 to 116 Bible House, New York City:

Enclosed please find $_____ for The Christian Herald and the following Magazines, to be sent to the Addresses as below, service to begin at once, if not otherwise specified.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD with any ONE Magazine (except Review of Reviews) listed on OPPOSITE PAGE, $2.00; with any TWO Magazines, $2.65; with any THREE Magazines, $3.30.

Send The Christian Herald

FOR ONE YEAR—52 TIMES—With ART GALLERY DE LUXE,
$1.50 for United States and Canada. Foreign Countries $1 Extra.

	NAME	STREET AND POST-OFFICE	STATE
to		IS THIS A RENEWAL?
SEND	HERE GIVE NAME OF MAGAZINE	With ONE Magazine, $2.00
SEND	HERE GIVE NAME OF MAGAZINE	With TWO Magazines, $2.65
SEND	HERE GIVE NAME OF MAGAZINE	With THREE Magazines, $3.30

FREE Our Superb ART GALLERY DE LUXE goes FREE with Every Annual Subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Name of Sender _____

Date _____ 190

Address _____

EACH MAGAZINE May be Sent to a DIFFERENT ADDRESS

1 Are All Your Offers Open to both New and Old Subscribers? They are.

☆☆☆

2 Do You Refund the Money if Premiums Are Not Satisfactory? Yes.

☆☆☆

3 Do You Fully Prepay Charges? Yes.

☆☆☆

4 In Case the Premium ordered is Sold Out before the Order Reaches You? We Refund Your Money at Once.

☆☆☆

5 If the Premiums are Injured in Transit? We Substitute Perfect Goods.

QUESTIONS ANSWERED

6 May the Magazines, Premiums, and Art Gallery each be sent to a Different Address? Yes. No Extra Charge is made for this Service. The Full Address should be entered Opposite the Premiums of Your Choice, and both nearest Express Office and Post Office should be Carefully Noted.

☆☆☆

7 Is the ART GALLERY sent with Every Annual Subscription to The Christian Herald? Always.

8 My present Subscription Does Not Expire for Several Months. How Can I Secure Magazines and Premiums NOW? By renewing Now. We will then Extend Your Subscription for One Year from the Present Date of Expiration, and Send Premiums and Magazines At Once.

☆☆☆

9 How May I Secure More Than One Premium? By Paying for Additional Premiums at rate quoted below for extra copies.

10 May a Subscriber who Selects a Premium Accept a Magazine Combination, and on what Terms? Yes; if a Subscription to The Christian Herald with Premium calls for $2.00, and One Magazine is selected, send $2.50; if Two Magazines, send $3.15; if Three Magazines, send $3.80. If the Subscription with Premium calls for $3.00, add $1.00 to the figures just given.

☆☆☆

11 May The Christian Herald or the Magazines be sent to Foreign Countries? Yes, by Paying Extra Postage.

If Your Remittance is in Excess of Amount Required, We Refund at Once the Difference at Our Own Expense. Please Bear This in Mind

REGULAR SUBSCRIPTION BLANK

To THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 to 116 Bible House, New York City:

Find enclosed $_____ for One Year's Subscription and Premiums as entered below, which send, all Charges Prepaid, to the following Addresses:

Send The Christian Herald

FOR ONE YEAR—52 TIMES—With ART GALLERY DE LUXE,
$1.50 for United States and Canada. Foreign Countries $1 Extra.

	NAME	STREET AND POST-OFFICE	STATE
to		IS THIS A RENEWAL?
SEND .. Inside History of the White House	to
By GILSON WILLETS. 500 Large Pages; Beautifully Illustrated; Bound in Silk Finish, Olive Green Cloth, Gold Stamp. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00. Extra Copies, $1.00
SEND .. After Death—What?	to
By MADISON C. PETERS, D.D. 400 Generous Pages; Richly Bound in Purple Cloth; Gold Back and Side. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00. Extra Copies, $1.00
SEND .. World-Famed Stories and Legends	to
By HAMILTON W. MABIE. Two Books in One; 540 Fascinating Pages; Bound Most Attractively in Red and Gold. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00; Extra Copies, $1.00
SEND .. Red Letter New Testament	to
ALL THE WORDS OF OUR LORD PRINTED IN RED. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $2.00. Extra Copies, $1.00		Authorized or Revised Version, WHICH?
SEND .. India Paper Red Letter Bible	to
HELPS, MAPS, CONCORDANCE; Overlapping Edges; Bound in American Levant, Divinity Circuit; Red under Gold. With THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, $3.00. Extra Copies, $2.00 (Weighs only 20 oz.) AUTHORIZED Version ONLY

If You Can Afford an Extra Dollar, Take the Genuine Morocco, Silk-Sewed, Calf Finish Lining. As Good as Any $10.00 Bible.

OUR SUPERB ART GALLERY DE LUXE FREE

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD and Each Premium may be Sent to a Different Address Without Extra Charge.

Date _____ 190

Name of Sender _____

Address _____

WHEN Premiums are ordered, Please give both Post-Office and Express Addresses

From John Adams to Our President-Elect

THE American People have recently decided the Momentous Question "Who shall be our next President?" and during the next few months all Eyes will be Especially Turned on the White House and Its Present and Prospective Occupants. Could any Book be more Timely than The Inside Story of the White House, which Unfolds in Brilliant and Realistic Style, for the first time the Story of the Comings and Goings, the Joys and Sorrows, and the Loves and Heartaches of

Measures, when Open, 8 x 12
Inches

Presidential Home Life

that are interwoven with its intensely Dramatic History? Here we see the Intimate, Personal, First Side Life of our 26 Presidents, their Wives, their Daughters and their Sons, since that New Year's Day when, with a splendid Reception, John Adams, our Second President, first opened the doors of the Stately Mansion. It tells how they Worked, how they Played, and how they Spent their Leisure Moments. Never was a Book more full of Captivating and Diversified Incidents or more Absorbing from the First Page to the very Last!

Right Up To Date

As we read The Inside Story of the White House our eyes are now Dazzled with the Brilliance of State Functions and again Dimmed by an Unexpected Bit of Pathos, as, pushing aside the Curtain of Pomp and Ceremony, we Enter the Private Lives of the Great Men and Good Women who have, each for a brief period, made the Stately White House their Home.

An Entire Chapter of this Volume is Devoted to the Incoming Presidential Family, with Portraits of all its Members.

★ ★ ★

What $2.00 WILL BUY

We will send this Superbly Illustrated INSIDE STORY OF THE WHITE HOUSE, Containing 500 pages, Bound in Olive Green and Gold; Our Incomparable ART GALLERY DE LUXE, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for ONE YEAR $2 (ALL THREE), for only

ADDRESS TO-DAY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD
92-116 Bible House, New York

Sent, All Charges Prepaid

Here are a Few Facts about the White House. Do you know them?

10,000 persons have passed through the White House on a New Year's Day and shaken hands with the President.

Every visitor to the White House must keep his hands always in sight—during the public receptions.

There were ten weddings within the White House.

A dozen children were born in the White House.

The White House piano is all inlaid with gold.

The White House china service consists of over 1,500 pieces.

Not a single President came from West of the Mississippi.

The only bachelor President was Buchanan.

The wife of John Adams used what is now the finest room in the mansion, the East Room, as a place to dry the weekly wash.

Hayes was the only President to take the oath of office actually within the White House, and he took that oath a day ahead of time.

Jefferson did his own marketing, and John Quincy Adams his own gardening.

While there have been only twenty-six "First Gentlemen," there have been thirty-two "First Ladies."

Two first ladies died in the White House—Mrs. Benjamin Harrison and the first Mrs. Tyler.

The wife of President John Adams had not wood enough to keep the big mansion warm.

Two private secretaries of the Presidents married each a daughter of a President.

Alice Roosevelt, on the day of her marriage to Nicholas Longworth, cut her wedding cake with the sabre of an army officer.

Four of our Presidents were widowers.

Four daughters of Presidents married in the White House.

The Prince of Wales was a guest at the White House for one week; General Lafayette was a guest of J. Q. Adams; Prince Napoleon Bonaparte visited Lincoln; and the Grand Duke Alexis of Russia visited Grant.

You will find the above facts and over a thousand others recorded in the

INSIDE STORY OF THE WHITE HOUSE.

OUR HOME FIRESIDE CIRCLE

The Neighbor Who Runs In

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

THE formal calls that are made in the afternoon when we are dressed in our best and slip our visiting cards into the card case that signifies elegance are entirely different from the haphazard calls of the neighbor who runs in. This neighbor is so much the friend of the family that she is never shown into the parlor, but says at the door to the child who opens it, "Where is your mother, dear, in the kitchen? Don't call her. I'll just step in there." She has thrown about her a wrap that hangs ready on her hand on the rack in her own hall, and she slips into the nearest chair while her hostess goes on beating eggs for a cake, or rolling pastry for a pie. The staple of their talk is the new carpet that is needed for the church, the barrel that is to be sent to the home missionary, the good news that has come from a friend who is in Japan, or the scholarship that has been won by little Johnny Bates who is at college.

The whole village takes a pride in Johnny Bates, for he was the brightest boy in the district school, and his mother has been making great sacrifices to send him through college. While the neighbor talks she does not interrupt the work that is going on around her, and presently having finished her call and borrowed the recipe of the oiled pickles, or the pudding which was the motive of her errand, she returns to her home, leaving a pleasant aroma of friendship in the atmosphere.

There are a good many suburbs, villages and hamlets where neighbors know and love one another and drop in socially for bits of chat at any time of day that suits their convenience. The particular type of neighborliness has vanished from our cities, and it must be admitted that it forms an interruption when women are busy about affairs that are not altogether domestic. But the passing from our town life of the neighbor who runs in at her pleasure is more a loss than a gain. We are in danger of becoming selfish in our resolution to narrow our meetings with friends to such hours as are set aside for conventional intercourse. About this time in the year the postman leaves at the door in the morning, if we are dwellers in towns, tiny envelopes in which our friends' cards are enclosed.

We learn that Mrs. Albert Hurd or Mrs. Nathaniel Winship will be at home to us and her world in general on first Wednesdays or third and fourth Tuesdays or second and third Thursdays until Lent, or until May. We are obliged to make an entry in our address book opposite the name of this friend, so that we may neither forget her at home days, nor blunder into calling upon her on Tuesday instead of Thursday, or Monday instead of Wednesday. When we call she greets us most cordially, and gives us a cup of tea, and we find ourselves in a circle of people who may be acquaintances or strangers.

The pleasant afternoon tea is a simple and kindly festivity, but it cannot have the intimacy nor quite the sweetness that there is in the old-time friendliness of the neighbor who runs in. Think of the necessity of a calling list and an address book that are part of city life, for all women who wish to keep up social intercourse, fashionable women not being especially meant, and then imagine the freedom of Mrs. Emery and Mrs. Bradbury in their pleasant villages up-country where no such paraphernalia is required among neighbors.

I had a letter the other day from a friend whom I seldom see, but who for years was my next-door neighbor. "There isn't anything I so much regret," she said, "as seeing strange people in your old house, and realizing that you and I cannot hope again to run in upon each other in the winter twilight."

Well, however we manage it, women who love one another find a way for expression, and if we choose we may put heart into our formal as into our informal meetings by the wayside of life.

About the Eyes

Speaking of reading, naturally leads to a thought about the eyes. When a child or a grown person persists in reading at the hour when the light is waning, and the book must be held closer and closer to the eyes, there is grave danger to vision. Reading in rapidly moving street cars, where the light is often uncertain and the focus is constantly changing, occasions more difficulty than heedless people think. More than half the diseases that attack the delicate organism of the eye might be prevented if common sense and prudence were used in its treatment. Parents often object to letting their children wear glasses, and when warned by a teacher that the child should make a visit to a specialist exclaim

Her "Baby Lion" Pet

MR. ROOSEVELT'S approaching lion-killing expedition in Africa has caused a new fad to come into existence—the substitution of the baby lion for the Teddy Bear. Little Miss Mamie Maxwell, of Doylestown, is probably the first American girl to adopt a real live baby lion. She considers it infinitely superior as a pet to a stuffed Teddy Bear. The baby is said to be quite tame, playful and affectionate.

that on no account would they permit their darling to wear spectacles. In many cases, timely use of spectacles in childhood would wholly prevent the necessity for their use in mature years. Often a little weakness of the muscles is entirely obviated or a strain relieved by the choice of the proper lens at the critical moment. If there is even the suspicion of trouble, an oculist should be sought at once and his advice taken. The popular impression that near-sighted eyes invariably correct themselves in advancing life is often proved an error. The near-sighted eyes are so strained in their constant effort to see that their power gradually diminishes, and blindness creeps on before the victim is aware of its approach. In the schoolroom great care should be exercised that the desks are arranged with reference to light, and in both writing and reading care should be taken that the light falls on the page from behind, and not in front. Our eyes are given us to be our servants for life. They are worth protection.

Variety on the Table

IN ORDERING the family meals the housekeeper is in danger of getting into a rut. To study the tastes of the entire household is, of course, a duty, although it is unwise to do this so obviously that either younger or older members make disagreeable comments on the food set before them. Every matron knows that catering for a family is not an easy task. It is even a little harder to do it successfully for a small family than for a large one. Sunday's roast must be utilized on Monday and sometimes on Tuesday, in the shape of a meat pie, a mince or as simple cold meat. Nobody who studies economy can do without the reappearance of left-overs several times on the table. Growing boys with good appetites are the greatest help in the matter of using up what is set before them. But ever when one has a circle of healthy children who pass their plates for a second and third helping, it is well to study variety. Oat meal porridge is excellent for breakfast, but why serve it every morning? There are other breakfast foods that form an agreeable interlude. Why have sausages and buckwheat cakes for breakfast the winter through? If you want John and the children to be good tempered, cheerful and healthy, study variety in the meals you set before them.

Baby's First Steps

When the baby first begins to walk alone, thus entering the ranks of independent soldiers on the march, there is general joy in the family circle. Babies have been learning to walk ever since primeval man started on his career. There is nothing remarkable about the fact, except that it is our baby. Very much as the mother and father bird watch the fledglings that are learning to fly, we parents hold our breath as the baby totters across the floor to reach the safe haven of the arms held out to catch him should he fall. The little feet will travel far before the journey of life is over, but of this we need not think in the least mournfully. All we ought to do is to sing a song of thankfulness that baby can walk, and put up a little prayer that baby may always walk in the straight and narrow path of virtue.

In these days both girl and boy babies enjoy the happy freedom of rompers, and are not encumbered with unnecessary skirts. If the mother is wise she does not hurry the infant, but lets the child take plenty of time, creeping first, then holding by chairs and at last, when the little legs are strong enough not to bend like a bow, encouraging the child to set off by itself. Of course, after baby has learned to walk baby will try a great many experiments and get into plenty of mischief. The infant in arms or in the crib needs far less watching than the little explorer who presently darts hither and yon about the house and must gently be taught neither to touch forbidden things, to hurt himself or to meddle with the property of grown-ups. The baby may be on good terms with pussy, but he must not pull her tail. After the baby learns to walk, he learns other things so rapidly that the mother is kept busy in her tasks of love from morning until night.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—WHO COMES FIRST? It has been facetiously said that an English wife follows her husband in entering a public place; that a French husband and wife walk side by side, and that an American husband follows his wife. You ask who precedes on entering a drawing-room, the hostess or her evening caller. The lady enters first and the man follows.

—WHICH IS THE GREATER AFFLICTION? I am asked whether blindness or deafness is the greater affliction. The question cannot be answered positively. The blind are, as a rule, more resigned to their infirmity and less irritable than the deaf. In either case, if the affliction is partial, seek such artificial helps as may be found. If total, accept the will of God and reflect that the loss of one sense usually tends to the greater sensitiveness of the other means of approach to the brain.

—THE MANNER OF AN INTRODUCTION. Here is a letter that I have received: "I have been reading a book of etiquette, and it says, always introduce the gentleman to the lady. I do not understand this. For illustration, which is correct: 'Mr. Jones, this is Miss Martin'; 'Miss Martin, this is Mr. Jones'; 'Miss Martin, allow me to introduce Mr. Jones'; 'Miss Martin, this is Mr. Jones'; 'Miss Martin, allow me to introduce Mr. Jones'?" Let me set you right in this matter. You should say, "Miss Martin, may I present Mr. Jones?"

THE PARSON AND THE BABY

"I cannot let you have him!" said the firm, ringing voice."

TO THE present generation, the Great American Desert is scarcely more than a name. Even those who gathered in the heart of it, where Chiccatunga now flourishes, have but a misty memory of what they found there.

To-day the traveler on the desert finds it made up of fertile farms and comfortable homes. When the Parson came there were only miles on miles of billowy prairie, like a great sea that had petrified into grass-grown waves—grass that was emerald in summer, but that turned a rich russet under the winds of winter. Sand—up to the alkali line—with flat river beds that on rare occasions held raging torrents for a day or two, and then for months were dry as ashes, except for weak little streams trickling along here and there in the water courses, and sometimes lost in the sand for a mile or more. Treeless, homeless stretches of country, over which the sky shut down like a great inverted bowl, through which the hot sun blazed, and under which the winds waged war on each other and on every living creature.

The Chiccatunga country was then inhabited only by roving bands of Indians, and by the men who looked after the thousands of cattle that from time to time found grazing here; this portion of the desert being the convenient half-way ground between the Texas plains and the great markets at Kansas City. Man being a gregarious animal, the cowboys gathered at a camp that took on the dignity of a trading post—the Chiccatunga that is to-day a pretentious city. Here resorted the men from the Dot Dash, the Flying U, the Star and Crescent, the Seven Up and the Bar Z herds. It was, in the words of the Dot Dash foreman, "On the short cut, jest around the corner from Purgatory, without a woman, a kid, or a cat within five hundred miles!"

One day (it was shortly after pay day, and the one street of Chiccatunga was hilarious, not to say dangerous) the Parson came—a dusty, weary rider on a tired horse. He was a tall, slender, gentle-faced man, who came at the order of no missionary board, but in answer to a call in his own heart to bring the Gospel to this tag-end of civilization. He was of a type new to Chiccatunga, and the population felt itself called to experiment with him, so that, within the first twenty-four hours, the Parson had looked into nearly every face past the muzzle of a revolver. But there was something in the inscrutable blue eyes that caused the arm of the nerviest man to tremble and his eye to waver; to more than one came a dim recollection of a blue-eyed stranger who rode unarmed into an inhospitable settlement.

"The Parson" was his only name among them, and the roughest of them respected him. He held his meetings in the open air, and the whole population, including the saloonkeepers, attended. The teachings may have fallen on stony ground, but his audience listened to him for the most part respectfully; while the songs that he sang in his clear tenor, more than one rough rider found himself humming in his rough voice, as he followed his herd. The plate, carried about at each service by Slant-Eyed Bill, of the Dot Dash—the deadliest man on the range—was so comfortably filled that the Parson might have laid up much treasure for himself; but he was satisfied with his rusty black, and hoarded every penny against the accomplishment of his desire—a church in Chiccatunga.

Then came "the Baby." He was frail and stooped, a man in years, a child in intellect, with eyes as blue as the Parson's; only where the Parson's burned with zeal or melted into softness, were entreating or commanding, the Baby's were the vacant, unchanging blue that bespeaks the clouded mind.

His father had been the first pioneer to bring his household to the Chiccatunga valley. The man and his wife were killed by Indians, who kept the son until the herders rescued him during the first years of the range. His captivity had rendered him almost imbecile, and he dragged out a wretched existence, fed by the carelessly charitable men, clothed from their cast-off buckskins, yet tormented and teased, in the wanton spirit in which a boy will often torture a dog or a cat.

Cayuse Pete, having drank enough to render him viciously playful, met the Baby just outside of town, and was shooting at the unfortunate's feet.

"That's it!" he was shouting approvingly to his dancing victim. "A hen on a hot griddle couldn't do better. How, jest a leetle mite faster!"

Just then the Parson rode up, and, dismounting, walked calmly between Pete and his target.

"Put up your revolver!" he shouted.

Now, Pete was a dead shot, and of notoriously bad temper. He had been known to wing a man for differing with him in regard to the weather, but he dropped his hand and thrust his revolver into his belt.

"Who is this man?" was the Parson's query.

"Wall, ye see, Parson," began Pete conciliatingly, "he's that half-wit ye've heard about—the Baby, we call him. He jest got back with the Cross Rail outfit that's been out three months. I wouldn't hurt him, ye know, an' was only exercising him a little. He's so fetched, anyway, that he don't know nothin'."

By May Belleville Brown

"He is not too weak-minded to tell abuse from kindness. I think that even your lawlessness would have spared such as he," responded the Parson sternly. "From now on, I want you all to know that this man is under my especial care, and whoever touches him answers to me!"

"An'," said Cayuse Pete, in relating the tale that evening, "ef he didn't walk over an' boost the Baby onto his hoss an' lead it into town, leavin' me settin' thar hunched up like a prairie dog in the sun, never sayin' a word to his impudence—me, with two six shooters an' a dirk in my belt! An' I bet he hadn't even a penknife in them togs o' his!"

"I know jest how ye felt," said one of his listeners, sympathetically.

It was unwritten law in Chiccatunga after that that the Baby must be treated with deference. He did not know how the change had come about, but he knew that the Parson was his liberator, and yielded him the most dog-like obedience from the first. He dressed no more in the buckskins of the past, but wore limp and time-worn black more proudly than if it had been kingly regalia.

The Parson lived in a little adobe house in the edge of town, and here the Baby took up his abode. Here he swept and garnished, and pottered about with an industrious, inconsequent zeal that must have tried the soul of his benefactor. He mixed the small stock of provisions beyond the possibility of separating them into their original elements of rice, sugar and tea; he spilled water into the flour barrel; he broke crockery; he upset all the careful, housewifely ways of the Parson. And after such wreckage he would look appealingly into his friend's face, and ask with childish intonation, "I help you good?"

The answer was always one of unequivocal praise. Both were happy, the one, because the kindness due in childhood had arrived at last, and the other because his ministrations responded to the craving of the universal fatherhood in man.

The strange relationship had lasted a year, when the Chiccatunga country was launched into that species of trouble which sends even a Kentucky feud into the background—a cowboy war. When it was discovered that the Flying U brand had been systematically changed to the Seven Up—a change necessitating but one stroke of the branding iron—almost all the men on the range felt themselves called upon to take part in the resulting unpleasantness. It began on the range, but the wholesale taking up of arms occurred in Chiccatunga. There was a re-cinching of ponies, a looking over of shooting irons, shouted orders; then the popping of the first shots, the clatter of hoofs, and shouts dying away across the prairies.

Late that night, the forces went back and the battle raged fiercely up and down the narrow, adobe-line streets. As the clamor reached the Parson's ears, he strode forth from his hut, the Baby in his wake. Just the what had been that morning a daring cowboy of the Seven Up outfit, but now a dusty, gibbering semblance of humanity, threw himself upon the Parson. Fear of the most craven sort possessed him, and he was a creature to be despised by friend and foe alike. "Hide me, for God's sake!" he sobbed, tremblingly. "Don't let them get me!"

It was but the work of a moment to thrust him into the house and push the Baby after him.

"You stay here and watch him, Baby," he directed. "You mustn't go out to-night, anyway. Don't let any one get him."

The Baby looked longingly after the retreating figure, but obedience was his strongest trait, so he stayed behind with the creature who was for the time more bereft of reason than himself.

Meanwhile, the Parson hastened to the centre of town, where there were shouts and shots and clouds of smoke. Cayuse Pete, his sorrel crouched in a vacant place between two buildings, was industriously peppering the upper windows across the corner. Smoke and sound betrayed the fact that every crevice on the street was an ambush. Across this space, where Death rode on singing bullets, strode the Parson. His appearance caused the fusillade to waver; still it was a miracle that he came out alive. He reached Pete's horse, caught the bridle and pulled the beast into the open.

"Come out of this!" he commanded.

"What are you trying to do?"

"Git out o' the way!" warned Pete. "We're after the Seven Up gang. Jimpson, the ringleader, is up over the White Hoss saloon, an' we're goin' to shoot him out."

"Jameson is at my house," retorted the Parson. "I left him there not fifteen minutes ago. He is under my care, and you cannot have him."

A loud yell wound and circled across the square. Several men appeared in answer to it.

"Jimpson is up at the Parson's," shouted Pete. "Come on!"

The Parson threw Pete's horse back on its haunches, and shouted commandingly at the other men, but the rush was on. A moment Pete waited,

Continued on next page

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

The Parson and the Baby

Continued from preceding page

While the hand of iron lay on his shoulder; then, with an oath, he clubbed his revolver, struck loose the detaining grasp, and was gone.

The Parson was as one petrified. So fixed was the purpose of the man's life, that the idea of failure had never occurred to him. The very audacity of his orders had wrought the obedience of the cowboys. That their passions might be aroused to such a pitch that the primeval savage in their natures would refuse to respond to his masterhood he had not anticipated. He had placed too much confidence in his power over them.

In the lee of the buildings several horses were tethered. Leaping on one of these excited beasts, he galloped over the renegades. Swiftly as he went, he was not in time.

The men stood before the hut; facing them, a hand on either door-post, stood the Baby. But was it the Baby? It was the form and feature, but were were the stooped shoulders, the vacant eyes, the wavering mouth? This being carried a high head; his jaw was tense; his eyes blazed. This was a man!

"I cannot let you have him!" The firm, ringing voice was not the Baby's, surely. "The Parson told me to take care of him."

The men were wild with blood thirst. "Stand aside, or we'll let daylight into ye!" they shouted.

"The Parson said—" reiterated the baby.

Two pistols barked. The figure in the doorway writhed and reeled; but his hands never loosed their grasp. Just then the belated Parson galloped directly between the men and the door, and flung himself from his horse. At sight of him, the Baby loosed one hand and reached it waveringly toward him; then the other hand relaxed its hold, and he fell into the Parson's outstretched arms.

"I didn't let them!" he shrilled in an excited voice. "I told them you said I must take care of him!"

The Parson eased him to the ground, and knelt, holding him in tender arms. Death was already stamped on the face that looked adoringly into the grief-stricken eyes above him. His strength was gone; but in his last moment, coherent speech was given him, and he who had lived as a child was allowed to die as a man.

"No one was ever so good to me as you," he gasped. "I know I've made you trouble; but it was because I loved you and wanted to help you. It is good to die this way—with you holding me in your arms—and I did the last thing you told me—I kept him safe!"

He tried to speak again in answer to the Parson's tender words, but could not; so, with his eyes fastened on the face he loved, he gasped for a little longer, and was gone!

After a little the Parson laid him gently on the ground and confronted the cowed and awe-struck men.

"I have given you a year of my life, gladly, willingly." His tone was low and intensely sad. "I would give all the rest of it to undo what your passion has done to-day."

As he turned again, he caught a glimpse of a crouching figure within the candle-light hut, and motioned toward it. "There is Jameson. Take him!"

The men looked at each other. All thirst for battle had gone; but each read in the other's eyes a fierce contempt for the crouching coward. Pete stepped inside, kicked the whimpering figure to its feet, and shoved it, trembling and shaken, to the outside.

"Coward!" It was an anathema. "Ye needn't shake. We ain't shootin' coyotes. Clear out, an' don't ye never show yer face on the range agin!"

Among the low adobe houses of Chiccatunga arose a tall-spired church of whitest limestone. Within, over the pulpit, where the cowboys could see it by raising their eyes above the Parson's head, is a stained-glass window, in the midst of which shines a haloed figure, whose saintly face recalls the face of the Baby.

The building of this church, the hauling of the material from the limestone hills, many miles to the north, and the purchase and importation of the window, the like of which is not to be found short of the old Spanish Cathedrals at the other end of the Santa Fe trail, would constitute a story in themselves.

But this chronicle sets forth the reason for their existence. It is the Baby's monument as well as a testimonial of the love which the men bear the Parson. And the circumstances of its building mark the virtual end of lawlessness in Chiccatunga.

ANSWERED PRAYERS

JESUS, Saviour, meek and mild,
Keep me ever thy dear child;
Never let me from thee stray;
From the true and living way.

Often have I grieved thee, Lord;
Oft have disobeyed thy word.
May thy promise to forgive
Help me nearer thee to live.

When the storms of life are o'er,
And I grieve thee, Lord, no more,
Safe upon thy faithful breast
May my weary heart find rest.

L. B. C.

L. G., Kentucky. "God restored to health a dear daughter."

Mrs. A. H. B. "Our heavenly Father has answered many prayers of mine."

J. O. G., Ohio. "I prayed when in distress, and He graciously answered me."

W. T. C., Illinois. "The deep sorrow that r days threatened our home life has been dissipated by prayer."

Reader. "For the answers to prayer, resulting in the recovery of my wife and daughter, I am grateful acknowledgment."

M. L. B., Vermont. "To the dear CHRISTIAN HERALD I want to acknowledge a prayer that the Lord has heard. He has been so good to me."

A Wisconsin Reader. "A short time ago my mother was very sick and I prayed that her life might be spared and he restored her to health."

H. L. S., Kentucky. "I promised I would acknowledge it if he would hear my cry. He did so and I am glad to thus glorify his finished work."

R. B. C., North Carolina. "One who is very dear to me was very near to death and I prayed earnestly to God that she might recover, and he has heard my petition."

W. G. S., Texas. "With a thankful heart I acknowledge that God has lately graciously answered two of my prayers. I have complete faith in his promise to answer prayer."

A Subscriber, California. "I was in great trouble. All these things seemed against me. I sought the Lord, my help and refuge. But Jesus, in his own time, answered."

M. M., Illinois. "I wish to acknowledge an answer to prayer. I was afflicted and prayed. My prayer was answered. I shall always put my trust in God. I praise him for his goodness to me."

A Constant Reader, New York. "I wish to acknowledge to the world that God does hear and answer prayer. Two years ago God gave me a direct answer to an earnest prayer, and now again he is helping me."

A. H. G., St. Louis, Mo. "God has answered many prayers for me. A short time ago I promised, on my knees, that if God would answer a certain prayer, I would acknowledge it to the world. The prayer was answered in three days, and I am devoutly thankful."

L. T., Ohio. "God has answered my prayers many times. Blessed be his holy name!"

E. B., Canada. "I wish to acknowledge through your paper an answered prayer; the answer came so quickly that I was surprised as well as glad."

CLERICAL ORDERS FOR 1909.
Pennsylvania Railroad.

The Pennsylvania Railroad Company will issue the usual Clerical Orders for use during the year 1909. These tickets will be issued to regularly ordained clergymen in charge of churches located directly on the lines of the Pennsylvania Railroad East of Pittsburgh. Application blanks may be obtained of Ticket Agents.

Do Not Permit Alum or Alum-Phosphate Baking Powders to be used in your baking. The acid employed in them is sulphuric; they add an injurious substance to the food, in part destroying its digestibility. Your doctor will confirm this. Powders that do not name cream of tartar upon their labels contain alum or phosphate of lime.

Absolutely Pure Baking Powder is

Royal

BAKING POWDER

The only Baking Powder made from Royal Grape Cream of Tartar

Safeguards the food against Alum

CORNISH

Sent To You For A Year's Free Trial

Name Your Own Price and Terms.

Why Shouldn't You Buy As Low As Any Dealer?

More than 265,000 people have saved from $25 to $150 in purchasing a high grade organ or piano by the Cornish plan. Here is our offer: You select any of the latest, choicest Cornish styles of instruments,—we place it in your home for a year's free use before you need make up your mind to keep it. You state your own terms, taking two years to pay if needed. That's the Cornish plan in brief. You save one-third to one-half what any other maker of high grade instruments must charge you—you buy as low as any dealer.

The New Cornish Book shows the choicest of 50 latest beautiful and artistic Cornish styles and explains everything you should know before buying any instrument. It shows why you cannot buy any other fine organ or piano anywhere on earth as low as the Cornish.

You should have this book before buying any piano or organ anywhere. Let us send it to you free.

CORNISH CO. Washington, N. J. Established Over 50 Years

Automobile Jackets, Blizzard Proof

Outside texture so closely woven it resists wind and wear alike, lined with wool fleece that defies the cold. Snap fasteners, riveted pockets.

PARKER'S Arctic Jacket

Registered in U. S. Patent Office. Better than an overcoat for facing cold and work together. Warm, durable, comfortable. Ask your dealer, or sent postpaid on receipt of $2.35.

JOHN H. PARKER CO., Dept. K
25 James St., Malden, Mass.

Don't fail to read Priscilla advertisement on page 975 before you renew your subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Be sure to Read Third Column on Page 962.

AGENTS My Sanitary Coffee Maker produces pure, sweet coffee, needs no settler and never wears out. Saves coffee, money and health. Every wife buys at sight; new invention; exclusive territory. Send 15c. for 50c. size, postpaid.

DR. LYONS, 180 Day St., Pekin, Ill.

BE A STENOGRAPHER AND BOOK-KEEPER

Make a future for yourself. Stenographers and bookkeepers earn good money. We teach you by mail. No previous experience necessary. Demand for competent stenographers is growing. Write for FREE BOOK. The Wentworth School, Dept. S-E 176, Freeport, Me.

4 Fifty HAND MADE Cent Drawnwork $1.00
Handkerchiefs for 1=
 PACKED IN with a sprig of fresh
 A HOLLY MISTLETOE FREE
 BOX

These beautiful imported handkerchiefs are made especially for us by the most skilled workers; warranted all genuine hand drawnwork on sheer handkerchief linen; worked all 4 corners; 4 designs; regular value 50c each. As a Special Xmas Offer to introduce our Mexican Drawnwork, Indian Handicraft and Native Gems, direct from our native workers to you, we will send all 4 handkerchiefs shown, neatly packed in fancy holly box with free sprig of fresh mistletoe enclosed, all postpaid, for only $1. The same handkerchiefs but in sheer pure Irish linen for $1.50.

Almost FREE This Xmas
STOCKING 10 cts.
Full of Toys

A pretty Xmas novelty, Stocking, hand made from decorated paper and full of 13 Japanese toys, no two alike — lanterns, fans, parasols, musical toys, etc., pretty and not resting. Good for party favors, Xmas trees, and children's gifts. Regular value 25c, but as a special holiday offer, to introduce our catalogue of genuine moderate-priced Japanese, Mexican and Indian Handicraft, we will mail to any address for only 10 cents, to partly pay cost. Twelve for $1.00. (No more than twelve to one person.) Order quickly.

Genuine Indian Basket
FREE With Orders

For each $2.50 worth of articles ordered from this advertisement we will enclose free this genuine Indian basket, 5 in. high, hand woven for us in pretty colors by Indians.

FREE Holiday Catalogs. Write today for our holiday catalogs of Mexican and Indian Handicraft and Native Gems mounted and unmounted. Large 108-page complete art catalog sent for 6c. We guarantee satisfaction; cheerfully refund money if not pleased; and prepay delivery charges. Orders filled same day received.

The FRANCIS E. LESTER CO., Dept. E12, MESILLA PARK, N. M.

LABLACHE
FACE POWDER

Winter Festivities

intensify the necessity for a perfect complexion. Lablache protects from the rough, reddening winds. Refined women everywhere use Lablache, the wonderful beautifier.

Refuse substitutes. They may be dangerous. Flesh, White, Pink or Cream, 50c. a box, of druggists or by mail. Send 10c. for Sample Box.

BEN. LEVY CO., French Perfumers,
 Dept. 22, 125 Kingston St.,
 Boston, Mass.

Safe Christmas Trees

Stick's Tree Holder (adjustable) holds the tree safely and steadily. Straightens trees that are slightly bent. Can't slip or tip over. Absolutely indestructible. Made substantially of steel. Quickly and easily applied, and will last "forever." A neat appearance and folds compactly when not in use.

Give your children the joy of a "tree," but insure your own peace of mind and against accidents. Regular size, for trees up to 12 ft. high, only 25c. Order through your dealer; or if dealer does not carry, send price to us direct, with dealer's name where you inquired. Dated today to avoid misstatement.

Rhineland Refrigerator Co.,
 Dept. C, Rhineland, Wis.

Don't fail to read Priscilla advertisement on page 975 before you renew your subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

THE TEMPLE OF THE LIVING GOD

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

BY WHOM was the building of the temple of the living God, commonly called "Solomon's Temple," planned? King David had the plan of the temple in every detail ready to pass over to his son, King Solomon: "The pattern of all that he had by the Spirit" (I. Chron. 28: 12). So Moses had received from God the pattern of the Tabernacle (Heb. 8: 5). The pattern given to King David included not only the temple building, but the form of services as well, the kind and numbers of vessels to be used therein, and the manner of ministrations by the priests and Levites. And King David had treasure to pass over to King Solomon which he had gathered for the building of the temple, to the amount of five hundred tons of gold, more than one thousand tons of silver, about eleven hundred tons of brass, and six thousand tons of iron, chiefly for tools. This treasure came largely from the spoils of war, and from royal gifts to King David (I. Chron. 18). And the people had made gifts toward the building fund, which "with perfect heart they offered willingly to the Lord." The surrender of this treasure to the young king followed by a wonderful prayer by the aged king were the last acts of his life.

Still other materials were needed for the building of the temple, particularly the wood, which King Solomon obtained through treaty with Hiram, king of Tyre, who had cedars of Lebanon to give King Solomon in exchange for wheat and oil.

How Long Was the Temple in Building?

Only seven years and a half. One hundred and eighty-three thousand six hundred persons were employed in its construction. Thirty thousand of the builders were Jews, the others were Phœnicians. The time used in the building is incredibly short, when compared with the Cathedral of Cologne, more than five hundred years in building; St. Peter's at Rome, over three hundred years, and the Duomo at Florence, about four hundred years. The marvelous thing stated about the building is that there was "neither hammer nor axe, nor any tool of iron heard in the house while it was in building" (I. Kings 6:7).

The real workshops were in quarries underground, where travelers to-day are taken to visit the "Royal Caverns," close by the Damascus gate of Jerusalem, and there they can see great blocks of half-wrought work, and shelves where the workmen put their lamps. It was in these quarries that the sound of the hammer was heard, and from which the stones were sent forth ready for joining without noise. Naturally we ask, why was it desired to build the temple so quietly? Because it would seem more sacred.

Where was the temple built? On Mt. Moriah, a place always sacred to the Jewish people because upon its top Abraham had built an altar, and laid on it his son Isaac in obedience to the command of God. The temple area contained about twelve acres; the sides of the mountain being built up with stupendous masonry to make so large a space on the mountain top. The Mohammedans are in possession of the temple site now, and they consider it a sacred place, having invented a foolish legend connected with Mohammed.

What was the appearance of the temple? The exterior was "a mass of snowy marble and gold against the half encircling green background of Olivet," resting at the top of a series of terraces, the lowest of which formed the Court of the Gentiles; the next, the Court of the Women; then the Court of Israel, then the Court of the Priests. The temple itself was not a large building—one hundred and twenty feet long by sixty feet wide and thirty feet high. There was, however, a porch in the front, which rose to the height of one hundred and eighty feet. Compare these dimensions with your church. At the entrance door stood two bronze pillars, thirty feet high, and nearly six feet in diameter. These were named Jachin and Boaz. The interior of the temple was built of cedar, plated with gold—gold beaten into plates about one-eighth of an inch thick and nailed to the cedar boards. And there were carvings of palm trees, flowers and cherubim, overlaid with gold, and decorated with rubies, emeralds and other precious stones. The people were not permitted to pass into the temple—only the priests.

King Solomon in the Temple

Their duties took them into the large first room, but the small room beyond only the high priest was privileged to enter, and he could do so only on one day of the year—the day of Atonement. A heavy curtain of rich embroidery hung between those two rooms: the holy place, and the most holy place, or holy of holies. It was the veil (like that which was rent in twain at the time Jesus died upon the cross).

When was the temple dedicated? In October or November, B.C. 1005. It had been completed almost a year before it was dedicated, King Solomon having wisely set the time of dedication for the Feast of Tabernacles when a great throng of people from every part of the land would be present in Jerusalem. In preparation for the dedication a high platform had been erected near the great altar, on which King Solomon could stand and be seen and heard by all of the people in the different courts. But at first the attention of the people was directed toward a company of Levites in the distance carrying all that was left of the old tabernacle built by Moses five hundred years before, bringing it from Gibeon where it had been stored, to place it in the temple. As the people watched the Levites, they saw a company of priests join them on Mt. Zion, who were bearing the precious Ark of the Covenant. This they were bringing to place in the holy of holies. It was the symbol of God's presence, and the most precious thing on earth to the Israelites. On they came, and arriving at the temple, the Levites placing in the holy place the golden candlestick, the table of shewbread, and the altar of incense. Then they lowered the priests, and in the holy of holies they deposited the Ark of the Covenant, under the outspread wings of the golden cherubim. There were glad acclamations, and bursts of song and music on instruments. Then King Solomon, kneeling in sight of all the people, offered the prayer of dedication. How tremendous, how solemn the occasion! Was David permitted from the heavenly heights to view the glad occasion? God was looking on.

and we must think that David was permitted to look also.

God in the Temple

God's part in the dedication. The prayer ended, God proceeded to bless the temple by the searchlight of his own glory, which so filled the holy place that there was not room for the priests to stand in it.

"And Solomon offered a sacrifice of peace offerings which he offered unto the Lord, two and twenty thousand oxen and one hundred and twenty thousand sheep" (I. Kings 8: 6). This was the personal gift of King Solomon, and it has been estimated have represented a value of the quarters of a million of dollars. It was a form of love feast in which was pictured fellowship with God, the people eating together at his altar table for on the altar the fat of the inward parts of the sacrifice was offered God by burning, and the people were given to eat of the other parts. These features it differed from the whole burnt offerings for sin.

What the Dedication of Solomon's Temple Means to Us

We are builders of temples: our selves.

Let us build wisely (I. Cor. 3: 10)
 Continued on next page

* International Sunday School Lesson for December 13, 1908. Solomon Dedicates the Temple. I. Kings 8: 1-11. GOLDEN TEXT: "I was glad when they said unto me, Let us go into the house of the Lord." Ps. 122: 1.

A COURSE IN ESPERANTO

LESSON No. 24—By Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

The following interesting article, contributed by an eminent Esperantist, is given as a reading exercise:

John Paul Jones

CHARLES W. STEWART, Author of John Paul Jones Commemoration

JOHN PAUL JONES estis la unua granda marbatalisto de nia lando. Li sukcese komandis dek Amerikajn militŝipojn en la militado "la Amerika Revolucio, 1775-1783."

Li estis dua filo de neriĉa Skota ĝardenisto, John Paul, kaj estis naskita ĉe Abigland, Skotlanda vilaĝeto, la sesan de Julio, 1747. Lia patrino estis bona kaj bela virino kiu instruis siajn geinfilojn pri bonaj moroj kaj bonaj faroj.

John Paul, filo, fariĝis maristo ĵus kiam li havis dek-du jarojn, kaj surnagis Amerikon kaj Amerikon en sklavŝipo, sed porforlasis tiun kruelan komercon post unu jaro. Kiam deksep-jara li estis sub-ŝiparo, kaj ŝipestro kiam dudek-jara. Li estis kalvinano, framasono, fervora soldato, kaj intimo kun nur la bonuloj. Ĉiokaze 1773, sur sia ŝipo, li mortigis, memdefende, ribelan mariston kiu lin atakis. Li ŝiparano unuvoĉe donis falsan ateston kontraŭ sia estro (vidu leteron de la (afina Moŝto Selkirk), kaj li forkuris Amerikon—Usonon—kie li loĝis du jarojn en Virginio kaj Norda Karolino. Riĉaj kaj potencaj amikoj nomitaj Jones (onze) ricevis por li komision kiel leŭtenanto en la Norda Amerika Kolonia Naveo, kiel sub la familia nomo prenita pro siaj ditaj amikoj Jones, John Paul Jones fariĝis la unua de la Unuaj Leŭtenantoj, kiel plej altranga leŭtenanto, en 1775. Li estis la unua kiu suprenlevis la flavan kontinentan standardon kun pinarbo, sonsento kaj devizo "ne paŝu sur min," kiel la militŝipo Nigra Princlino, poste la Fred, ĉe Filadelfio, la trian de Decembro, 1775. En ĝi li surnagis en la eskadro al Nova Provencio, kie li pilotis militŝiparon en la havenon. Tie oni kaptis multe da militprovizoj kaj gravaj militŝipitoj. Li baldaŭ poste estis nomita de la admiralo kapitano de la ŝipo Providence. Li marmilitis kontraŭ la Angloj ĉe 1776 kaj 1777, kaj kaptis multe da ŝipoj kun militprovizoj kaj vestaĵoj kiuj estis uzitaj por la Kontinenta Armeo. En la 14a de Junio, 1777, la tago en kiu la "Steloj kaj Strekoj" estis adoptitaj de la Kongreso, tiu leĝdona korpo elektis John Paul Jones kapitano de la militŝipo Ranger, en kiu li surnagis Europon, kaj tie en Kiberon Bazo, Franclando, la dekkvaran de Februaro, 1778, li mem ricevis la unuan oficialan saluton de iu fremda nacio por la "Steloj kaj Strekoj."

En 1779, komandante la Bonhomme Richard kaj eskadron, li ree ĉirkaŭnagis la Britan Insularon, renkontis la Britan ŝiparon en la Norda Maro kaj tie faris sian faman batalon, la plej treege bravan batalon en la historio de la maro, kontraŭ la pli nova kaj pli pova Brita militŝipo la Serapis, per la eluzita kaj jam kondamnita Bonhomme Richard.

Dum la batalo la Brita kapitano demandis, "Ĉu vi kapitulacis?" Jones respondis, "Ankoraŭ mi ne komencis batali." La Brita ŝipo kapitulacis post kvar-hora sangplena barakto.

Jones tenis multe da gravaj komisionoj de sia regno kaj estis diplomata oficiro de Usono kiam li mortis en Parizo la dekokan de Julio, 1792. Dum mallonga tempo li estis vic-admiralo en la Ruslanda Naveo, kaj en la sesa kaj sepa de Junio, 1788, venkis la Turkan militŝiparon sur la Nigra Maro. Kvankam Jones estis enterigita en 1792, en la tiame bonkonita Protestanta Tombejo en Parizo, lia tombo restis nekonata dum pli ol cent-jaro. Generalo Horace Porter, Usona Ambasadoro al Franclando, trovis de subtera esplorado la korpon de Jones sendifektan, en plumba ĉerko, identigis la kadavron kaj transportigis ĝin Usonon per eskadro de Usonaj Naveaj ŝipoj en Julio, 1905.

En la dudek-kvara tago de Aprilo, 1906, memorigaj solenoj okazis ĉe la Usona Navea Akademio. Tiel finiĝis la hejmenveno de John Paul Jones. Lia korpo kuŝas en la belega memoriga kapelo, kie lia persona honoreco, virteco, kaj kuraĝeco ĉiame estos alta ekzemplo por niaj junaj maroficiroj.

Granda statuo estas konstruota kaj starigota ĉe Vaŝingtono, en Franklin Parko.

Li honorigis la epokon en kiu li vivis, kaj estontaj generacioj lin nomos bona kaj vera.

Sunday School Lesson — Continued

Let us dig deep (Luke 6: 48).
Let us lay a stone foundation (Isa. 28: 16).
Let us lay the only enduring foundation (I. Cor. 3: 11).
Let us build after God's design (Ex. 2: 40).
Let us build as Christ shows us (Eph. 2: 2, 5, 10).
Let us so build as to endure testing (I. Cor. 3: 13).
Let us be sure of good materials (Eph. 3: 18).
Let us seek the help of the Master Builder (I. Cor. 3: 9).
Let us build so as to help others (Pet. 2: 11, 12).

How to Prepare Ourselves to be Builders
I believe that the Bible is the Word of God.

I accept the Bible as my only rule of faith and practice.

I accept God's promise of a new heart.

I believe that Jesus Christ died to save the world.

I accept him as my personal Saviour and Redeemer.

I believe that prayer is the duty and privilege of the Christian.

I promise my Saviour to daily seek his aid and guidance.

I believe that whatever is sinful or inconsistent should be laid aside.

A beautiful story of building is to be found in the life of Queen Elizabeth of Roumania. She has long been impressed by the sufferings of humanity, particularly the blind. This has led her to study deeply into the ways by which blind people may be made happy by being helped to be useful. She conceived the idea of forming a blind colony where they could live with their families and carry on useful forms of labor by which to support themselves—a noble sort of building, that! The good queen went into the colony herself and with bandaged eyes learned to read and write according to the Braille system. Then she wrote letters to blind people. She bought a lot of typewriters for the blind, and taught them to use them, and to write translations of her own beautiful poems and other books, and to send them to blind people in every part of the world.

Very few of us will be called upon to build as King Solomon did, but we all have our life temples to build and it is our privilege to help others in building their lives.

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

A Dollar Saved is a Dollar Earned

$3.00 saved monthly is $500 at maturity.
$5.00 saved monthly is $1,000 at maturity.
$10.00 saved monthly is $2,000 at maturity.
$15.00 saved monthly is $3,000 at maturity.
Takes about ten years to mature. You can make it mature in five years or draw your money before with interest. No speculation or money permitted by State Laws. Money earns more and is better safeguarded than when loans are invested. Can furnish list of references, men of character, and marked reputation. Secures one million dollars. Small first mortgages on Colonial homes. Send 2c. stamp for booklet. L. B. BEOMFIELD, Mgr., 12 Jacobson Bldg., Denver, Colo.

WHEN YOU REMIT FOR THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

whether you take or do not take premiums, or whether you take or do not take a magazine combination, always add 25c. to your remittance for THE MODERN PRISCILLA (A Fancy Work Magazine) for 1909 and the balance of 1908.

READ THIS DESCRIPTION OF THE MODERN PRISCILLA

THE MODERN PRISCILLA, published by The Priscilla Publishing Co., 85 Broad St., Boston, Mass., has for many years occupied a unique position in the magazine field; it being the only monthly magazine in the United States devoted wholly to Fancy-Work, Home Decoration, and kindred subjects.

Every woman at some time or other wants just the information that The Modern Priscilla gives. Perhaps she wants to know what kind of embroidery is fashionable at the moment. The Priscilla tells her. It also gives her designs, ideas, suggestions, instructions. Perhaps she is interested in Knitting or Crochet, or in Lace, Netting, Tatting, or Bead Work. The Priscilla will tell her all about these things, too. Every month there are from 30 to 50 new needlework designs.

Some women do not care for needlework, but occupy a part of their spare time in Oil, Water Color, or China Painting; or in Stenciling, Pyrography, Basketry, or Leather Work. All these things may properly be classed as "Fancy-Work," and The Modern Priscilla, recognizing that fact, devotes space to each of them from time to time.

Besides all this, The Priscilla finds space each month for various departments, in charge of competent editors, and every issue is filled from cover to cover with a variety of information that is of inestimable value to the home-loving women, who are the flower of America's womanhood.

The regular subscription price of The Modern Priscilla is 50 cents per year, and only the generosity of the publishers of The Christian Herald makes it possible for you to receive it now at half price. Let nothing prevent you from taking advantage of this offer.

Renew your subscription for The Christian Herald NOW while the matter is fresh in your mind, and be sure to include 25c. for a year's subscription for THE MODERN PRISCILLA.

Do You Know The American Boy?

Do you know that it closely touches every phase of boy life in a helpful, uplifting manner—that it is clean-cut, carefully edited, handsomely illustrated—and each month eagerly Welcomed in 125,000 Homes.

Useful departments on Photography, Stamps, Coins and Curios, Mechanics and Electricity, Sports; Biography and Fiction by the best authors. Boys appreciate it, parents respect it—as evidenced by our remarkably high record for subscription renewals. $1.00 yearly—where else will that amount buy so much high-class reading for your boy? Subscribe to-day. Sample copy 10c.

SPRAGUE PUBLISHING CO., 52 MAJESTIC BUILDING, DETROIT, MICH.

For Young and Old

The Metropolitan Training School for Nurses

Blackwell's Island, N. Y.

Offers a three-years' course of training. Applicants must be over 21 and under 35 years of age, and have had one year in high school or its equivalent. The school is registered and connected with a hospital of over 1,300 beds. An allowance is made for current expenses as follows: $10.00 per month the first year, $12.00 the second, and $15.00 the third. Classes are formed every two months. The new Nurses Home is located on one of the finest sites in New York City. The rooms are all single, with spacious entrance hall, library and sitting-rooms.

AGNES R. WARD, R.N. Superintendent.

It's the "IMPERIAL"

Which has exclusive features not to be had on other ranges, such as:

The STONE OVEN BOTTOM absorbs and holds the heat in oven, a fuel saver.

The ODOR HOOD carries all steam and odor from cooking up the chimney.

The ASH SIFTER permits sifting the ashes right in the range. No dust.

The OVEN THERMOMETER tells exact temperature of the oven. No guessing.

SEND ON TRIAL. SOLD ON TIME. FREIGHT PREPAID.

And if you do not find it the handsomest looking, best cooked of any range you ever saw, send it right back. Send for catalogue; it tells all about the exclusive features, the special terms upon which we sell, and how we save you money.

THE IMPERIAL STEEL RANGE CO., 158 State Street, CLEVELAND, O.

YOU CAN AFFORD

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

"A fair face may prove a foul bargain." Marry a plain girl if she uses

SAPOLIO

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

A New President for Cuba

ELEVEN days after our own election the people of Cuba went to the polls to cast their ballots for a president of the island, and, greatly to the gratification of Governor Magoon, the day passed with far less dis-

General Jose M. Gomez

the outbreak of the Revolution of 1906, when the United States was compelled to intervene. There was some trouble at Mantanzas and Cardenas, where cutting affrays occurred, but in Havana, and most places, excellent order was preserved.

Governor Magoon made two trips in an automobile to all the polling places in Havana during the day to watch the progress of the election. He was everywhere greeted with cheers, the crowds waving their hats as he came up and as he rode off. Governor Magoon said later to an American correspondent: "I am much pleased with the regard for order and the self-restraint shown by the Cuban people and the enthusiasm which they displayed in participating in the election. I believe the Cuban people will accept the result, whatever it is, and in so doing will demonstrate their capability for receiving and carrying on the government."

The defeated candidate, General Menocal, said, before he knew the returns, that if the Liberals should win the Conservatives would not start a revolution, but would help the Liberals to carry on the government. He said he thought the present government would last, as the Cuban people of both parties will support it as a Cuban government.

It is now probable that Governor Magoon will turn over the government to President Gomez during the last week of January and the Americans will again withdraw from the island to let the Cubans make their second effort at home rule.

An Ornament to Any Room

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The pictures are fine; every one admires them. I shall have them framed, as they would add to any room. Many thanks to you. I am a new subscriber, but I love the paper, and look forward to its coming each week. MRS. HATTIE READ.

Salinas, Cal.

Be sure to Read Third Column on Page 962.

Workers at Home and Abroad

A GREAT CYCLONE storm recently swept the Nicaraguan east coast, doing immense damage and rendering hundreds of people homeless. The Moravian mission at Bluefields began relief work among the sufferers, and distributed 810 soles ($200) in food, clothing and medicines.

—EVANGELIST C. F. O'HARA, known as the Illinois Cyclone, has met with much success in his work the past year. During two weeks' service in one locality sixty-five took a decided interest in the church. He is now in Kansas holding a four weeks' revival meeting.

—THE BETHESDA Leper Home in Surinam, Dutch Guiana, is in great need of bandage material (old linen, cotton, cheese cloth, old sheets, pillowslips, etc., all white). Readers desiring to help should send their gifts, clean, well packed and express prepaid, to Mr. Wolterbeek, 1-3 Ann Street, New York, who will forward them to the Home.

—EVANGELISTS HART and MAGANN, of Fairbury, Ill., have just closed a successful revival connection with the Nebraska Wesleyan University and the First Methodist Church, University Place, Neb. Over three hundred conversions were reported. These evangelists are now engaged in a union tabernacle meeting with all the churches of Auburn and South Auburn, Neb.

—A NOTABLE REVIVAL has just closed at Chapton, Clarendon Parish, Jamaica, W. I. Evangelist Raglan Phillips conducted the services, assisted by Rev. W. B. Esson, G. P. Hall, and others. As a result of the movement a Christian Citizens' Association has been organized. In the last night of the Chapton meetings, 125 decided for Christ. Revival services both at Forus and Chapton have been marked by several hundred public confessions of saving faith.

—MANY MISSIONARIES are writing to us enthusiastically concerning our "Native Substitute" plan. It is proving a great aid to the workers in spreading the Gospel. Rev. Frederick Wood, Byculla, Bombay, writes that he can use to advantage one worker at $40 yearly, and two at $50 yearly. Rev. Mr. Stephens, Poona, needs five workers; Rev. Mr. Fisher, of Ratpuri, could utilize ten workers, and Rev. Mr. Scholberg, at Kalyan, desires three workers. Support in all of these cases would average from $40 to $60 per annum. Any reader of this journal wishing to undertake such support should communicate with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

—ON SEPTEMBER 26-28 the representatives of 400 Christian Endeavor Societies, and over 16,000 members from all parts of South India met together. There were important addresses in various languages—English, Tamil, Telugu, Canarese and Malayalam. One of the most important addresses of the Convention was delivered by the chairman, Dr. J. H. Wyckoff. The speaker rejoiced in the birth of a new life in India, evidenced by the so-called unrest, but pleaded the need of this spirit being directed into right channels. Education of both boys and girls, the emancipation of women, and a universal acknowledgment of the brotherhood of the race were the needs especially emphasized; while unbrotherly caste distinctions, early marriages and enforced widowhood, extravagant expenditure on marriage celebrations, litigation, and debt were some of the burning wrongs that the speaker urged must be redressed.

—THE PRESBYTERIAN General Assembly's Committee on Evangelistic Work is arranging plans for a revival in foreign lands. This revival is to be conducted by the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman and Evangelist Charles M. Alexander. They will leave for Australia April 14 and will conduct a mission extending through five months in the larger cities of that country and New Zealand. They will return home by way of the Orient, and will conduct a series of conferences with missionaries and native Christian workers in five large Chinese cities. Among these will be Canton, Peking and Shanghai. Thence the party will cross to Japan, where, in Tokyo and Yokohama, they will carry on a similar work. Their next conferences will be in Korea and Manila. Dr. Chapman expects to reach the United States in time to spend Christmas, 1909, with his family in New York. The party will include, besides Dr. Chapman and Mr. Alexander, Mrs. Alexander, Mr. and Mrs. William Asher, the "Saloon Evangelists," Robert Harkness, pianist, Earl W. Naftzger, soloist, and George T. B. Davis.

"Where can I invest my money so that it will be safe and where I can have it when wanted, and yet so it will bring me reasonable earnings when invested?" This question will be answered to your satisfaction if you will write the Industrial Savings & Loan Co., whose advertisement appears on page 976.

FREE

This Big Book to Help You Buy Christmas Jewelry

HERE is a cut of our big new illustrated catalog. It shows over three thousand different pieces of newest and latest style jewelry—at prices ranging from a dollar up. Any pocket-book can be suited.

Write your name and address on a post-card—or in a letter. Mail it to us. As soon as we get it, we will send you our Big New Catalog, postpaid—FREE.

This catalog is yours for the asking. And it helps you with thousands of suggestions for Christmas gifts.

Remember this—New York City is "the Home of Jewelry." No matter where—nor of whom—you buy, some New York City house realizes a profit on nearly every article of jewelry sold in America.

Why should you pay two or three profits? Buy from us and you buy direct from "the Home of Jewelry"—New York City. You buy direct from the makers. You pay but one very small profit—that of the manufacturer. You get full value for your money—in jewelry. You get newest and latest designs.

Write for our catalog to-day. A post-card will do. You are welcome to the catalog in any event. It is sent postpaid—FREE—for the asking. Address us at once.

Lambert Brothers, 112 Christmas Corner 34 Ave. & 58th Street New York City.

The Necklace, No. 7777—shown in this advertisement is one of our newest and most beautiful flexible serpent coils. It is made from 14 karat solid gold—Roman finish—with a fine, full-cut, white diamond set in the serpent's head and for a pendant has a large finely cut Amethyst picture shows almost exact size. Price, $55.00.

$3.25 Post-paid in U. S.

Ease Your Feet "THE PILLOW" SHOE

For Woman's Wear: absolute comfort for TIRED, TENDER FEET, a beautiful hand turned shoe, no breaking-in required; relief from pet Corns and Bunions; soft, flexible, durable, dressy and stylish. The sole oak leather. The whole top genuine Vici Kid, soft, pliable RUBBER HEELS. No lining to wrinkle or chafe. We guarantee to fit you perfectly. Absolute comfort and satisfaction or money cheerfully refunded. Oxford Style $3.00. Write to-day for our Free Illustrated Catalogue and special self-measure blank. What better Christmas gift can you select for the same price? Address SUFFOLK SHOE COMPANY

184 Summer Street, Dept. 3, Boston, Mass.

Don't fail to read Priscilla advertisement on page 975 before you renew your subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

PATENT YOUR IDEAS
$8,500 for one invention. Book, "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in fourteen Manufacturers' Journal. Patent Obtained or Fee Returned
CHANDLER & CHANDLER, Patent Attorneys
Established 16 Years
1003 F. Street, Washington, D. C.

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure THIS DOES IT ALL
The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles astonishes agents.
V. C. Giebler, Cole, O., sold 22 pairs of Positive Tension Shears in 3 hours, made $14.50. We guarantee to show ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $10 to $100 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents than are not found in stores, than any other house in the U. S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address Thomas Mfg. Co., 168 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio

6 TREES FREE
To prove that our Blizzards Belt Evergreens will grow in all parts of the country we offer to send 6 fine spruces 4 to 12 ft. tall free to property owners. Wholesale value and mailing expenses over 30 cents. To help, send 5 cents or not as you please. A parcel with living trees and our catalog containing many colored photo plates of our choice Blizzards Belt Fruits. Write today. The Gardener Nursery Co., Box 107, Osage, Ia.

HOW TO GET EGGS
Feeding is everything. Hundreds of leading poultrymen continue to buy and use Darling's Laying Food year after year. Rich in egg making material, no waste, rightly balanced. $2 per 100 lb. bag. Scratching Food—Chicago price, $2. New York price, $2.25. Forcing Food, $2. Beef Scraps, $2.75. Chick Feed, $2.50. Oyster Shells, 70c. Mica Crystal Grit, 65c. F. O. B. Chicago or New York. Cash with order.
DARLING & COMPANY
Box 36, Union Stock Yards, CHICAGO Box 36, Long Island City, NEW YORK

X-RAY Stove Polish
Trade Mark
Free Sample. Write Dep. B-11
Lamont, Corlies & Co., Agents, 711 Hudson St., N. Y.
SHINES EASIEST

SAWS
ANY WOOD IN ANY POSITION ON ANY GROUND 4 in. to 6 ft. Through
1 Man Sawing Machine Beats 2 Cross-cut Saw 6 to 8 cords daily is the usual average for one man.
EUSSEY EASY No Backache weighs only 41 lbs. EASILY CARRIED
SAWS DOWN TREES
Our 1909 Model Machine saws faster, runs easier and will last longer than ever. Adjusted in a minute to suit a 12-year-old boy or the strongest man. Send for catalog showing latest improvements. First order gets agency. Folding Sawing Mach. Co., 158 E. Harrison St., Chicago, Ill.

These trade-mark crisscross lines on every package
Cresco Grits and Barley Crystals BREAKFAST AND DESSERT CEREAL FOODS
FOR CASES OF STOMACH, INTESTINE, KIDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES
Delicious foods for sick or well.
Unlike other goods. Ask grocers. For book or sample, write FARWELL & RHINES, WATERTOWN, N. Y., U. S. A.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS
Bearing the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label.
Get "Improved," no tacks required.
Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

Here's a Low Price!
We sell our 240 Egg Incubator for less than $11. Write and see how much less. Other sizes Incubators and Brooders—just as low in price. Why pay double our prices for machines not so good? Get our Free Book—learn how to raise poultry and run Incubators. Write today—now.
Reliance Incubator Co., Box 520, Freeport, Ill.

Ideal The Low Priced Standard Incubator
25 years of experience in it. Tried and proven. Make results certain. Send for great free book, "Poultry for Profit." 128 pages, practical, reliable. Worth dollars for fine pictures alone. Free. Send today to J. W. Miller Co., Box 179, Freeport, Ill.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOVELTIES

GREAT INTRODUCTORY PACKAGE ONLY 10c

We want you to get acquainted with our new and helpful things and so we make this generous offer. Send TODAY. For TEN CENTS we will send postpaid this remarkable package.

4 beautifully illuminated cards, 5x7 inches, one each of Lord's Prayer, 10 Commandments, Beatitudes, 3rd Psalm, 1st Christmas Calendar, 1902, very dainty. 11904 Golden Text Book, with full schedule of Int. S. S. Lessons, Daily Bible Readings, etc. 1 Embossed Bible Book Mark, telling where to find principal things in the Bible. One of Celebrated Wilde's Bible Pictures. One of Famous Tissot Colored Bible Pictures. 1 set of 15 Life of Christ Illuminated Christmas Post Cards. 1 new Universal Birthday Card in blue, red and gold. 1 copy The Business End of a Sunday School, 72 pages with illustrated Holiday Catalogue of Sunday School Novelties.

HAMMOND PUB. CO., Dept. F, Milwaukee, Wis.

THE LAW OF FINANCIAL SUCCESS

This book should be the seed to a fortune to the man or woman with brains and earnestness of purpose. Money is the best partner a man or woman can have. The book tells you in plain language how to develop and utilize the qualities necessary to succeed in accumulating money through personal application or investment. More individuals owe their financial success to the laws contained in this book than to any other known source. You cannot afford to be without it, as it places within your own hands the means of starting you on the road to a broader career and clean prosperity.

Regular edition, limp leather bound, silk lined, $1.00 per copy. 5th special paper bound pocket edition, 16 chapters, 104 pages, published in response to popular demand to sell at 10 cents per copy, 50,000 copies sold. Mailed postpaid on receipt of 10 cents (or $1.00 for leather bound copy, stamps or silver. Send for it NOW.

JUSTITIA 596 Lenox Building
Publishing Company Chicago, Ill.

The New Evangelical Magazine

SPECIMEN FREE

by addressing THE INSTITUTE TIE, 80 Institute Place, Chicago. Monthly $1.00 a Year, Illustrated.

GOVERNMENT POSITIONS

46,712 Appointments were made to Civil Service positions at $300 to $1,500 per year. Excellent opportunities for young people. Thorough instruction by mail. Write for our Civil Service Announcement, containing full information about all government examinations and questions recently used by the Civil Service Commission.

COLUMBIAN CORRESP. COLLEGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

PULPITS Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Desks, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks.

Ask for Catalog by number only

C112 Church Furniture School Desks S112
L112 Lodge Furniture Opera Chairs O112
B112 Bank Furniture Office Desks D112

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

NEW LIGHT, Incandescent KEROSENE OIL BURNER

Fits any lamp, gives 3 times light, costs 1-6 oil, 1-5 gas, 1-10 electricity. Everyone likes it. Agents wanted. Send for booklet and price list No. 7. U. S. A. Light Co., Springfield, Mass.

CHRISTMAS POST CARDS.

Eight loveliest silk and gold embossed Christmas cards, with 3 months' subscription for 1902: 24 cards and 1 year sub., 25c. HOUSEHOLD, 945 Jackson Street, Topeka, Kan.

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS

BETTER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

Money for Church Work

A simple and effective plan, involving no outlay and no risk. Write for free information, giving name of organization. Address THE ANDERSON MFG. CO. Department A Elyria, Ohio

LADIES We will mail you, postpaid, three beautifully embroidered collars for $1.00.

LIFE OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, splendidly bound in cloth, sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. The Unexcelled Novelty Co., 399 Clinton St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

AGENTS NINE IN ONE

$55 monthly. Combination Rolling Pin. Nine articles combined. Lightning Seller. Sample free. FORSHEE MFG. CO., Box 206 Dayton, O.

PATENTS that PROTECT

Our 3 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 6 cts. stamps R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Rooms 20-30 Pacific Bldg., Wash., D.C.

AGENTS Portraits 35c, Frames 15c. Send pictures to, to whom you wish, and receive FREE. Complete Portrait Co. 290-155 West Adams, Chicago

* Young People's Societies *

The Joy of Overcoming*

WE GRUMBLE and weep over the obstacles and persecutions which come to us, and which seem to be impartially distributed among mankind. Do we ever stop to think what a flavorless and a foolish world this would be if everything went smoothly with us all? It would be, indeed, "stale, flat and unprofitable."

In Drummond's wonderful chapter on "Parasitism," he illustrates the effect of struggle upon character by one of his striking analogies from the animal world. He tells how the highly organized crab, if situated so that it is not obliged to work and fight for its food, soon begins to lose its legs and feelers. One by one they drop away, until the creature is a mere sac, sucking in its easily provided sustenance.

It will be remembered that Ruskin has much to say on this subject in his various works; he never fails to give a sharp thrust to idleness, whenever a chance offers. In speaking of a sentimental song, which had for its inane burden, "Live, love, die," he raged, "If it were written for nothing better than silk-worms, it might at least have added 'spin.'"

The doctrine of work is the only sound one for mankind; and, alas! few human beings will work unless they have to. It was ordained that we should fight our way to goodness and to glory. It is the only method by which sinews can be strengthened, or heroism developed, or anything noble made out of this poor mortal fabric. But after the breathless battle, he who has endured to the end shall "eat of the fruit of the tree of life"; he shall "not be hurt of the second death"; he shall receive a precious "white stone, on which a new name shall be written"; he shall receive the gift of "the morning star."

He may have been bruised and fainting in the conflict—but if he has "held fast"; if it can be said of him, as of the church in Thyatira, "I know thy charity and thy service and thy faith and thy patience and thy works," he shall, if his sins have not outweighed his virtues, be "clothed in white raiment," and his name shall be entered in the book of life.

Pericles said to the Athenians, "I would have you day by day fix your eyes upon the greatness of Athens until you become filled with the love of her. Then you will freely give your lives to her, as the fairest offering which you can present at her feet."

So let us fix our eyes upon the greatness of our God, and open our hearts to the indwelling of his love.

The Rev. W. J. Coulston, in a fine passage upon this subject, says that this "personal commitment" to the service of the great General is what is oftenest lacking in us. We are willing to fight now and then, but we have not really enlisted for the daily campaign—the constant warfare by which alone we can overcome.

"I am ready," says Paul. "Ready!" calls the captain, as he stands by his company's line; and every musket is in position. The volley is fired as from one gun, because all were ready. "What God, in his militant church, needs, is not so much 'guerrillas' or 'bushwhackers,' but steady, loyal, obedient soldiers."

"The cradle of the infant church was a tempest and her earliest lullabies were storms," writes an eloquent historian.

In the soul of the Christian, the history of his church is repeated. In us Satan wrestles ever with the angels of light. Temptations to worldliness in society, in business, in professional life, meet us daily. May God arm us for the fight and help us to overcome!

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 13. Text: Rev. 2: 7, 11, 17, 26-29; 3: 5, 12, 21.

Books That Help*

IF YOU belong to a profession, you must read the standard books of that profession. The doctor soon gets behindhand who does not keep up with the constant output of medical literature. He cannot begin to read it all, but he must keep track in a general way of the most important works and read some of them. The minister, the lawyer, the editor, the engineer, the merchant—every calling has its own voluminous literature in these days, and no man who has proper ambition can neglect it. This is especially true of our religious life. We must read our books—the lives of our heroes—the strong sayings of our leaders—and most of all, the Book of books.

But a man must not confine himself to what are called "technical" writings. He must keep up more or less with progress in all the departments of life. A good daily paper helps him to do this; the first-class weeklies and monthlies, still more. But it is a temptation to all of us to spend too much time with the innumerable periodicals which come to our tables. They are beautiful with pictures, they are printed with care and taste, and the best talent in the land is enlisted in the task of making each one more interesting than its rivals. It is said that half of our adult population read nothing beyond the papers and the magazines. But they cannot entirely take the place of books, and especially those books which have stood the test of time—the great literature.

A discussion rages every now and then among the papers concerning tests of culture. One distinguished authority has said that no one who has not read the essays of Jeffrey can lay claim to culture. Another feels that unless one can talk intelligently of the works of Plato and Aristotle, he is outside the pale. Every educated man has his own notions upon the matter.

Certainly, everybody ought to recognize at once the names of the great Greek and Roman writers and of their chief works; also, of any one of Shakespeare's plays, and of the chief characters in them—perhaps, also, the commonest quotations from them. He ought to know something of Milton, Browning, Scott, Tennyson, Thackeray, Dickens, and of the great writers of other nations—Goethe, Schiller, Dante, Racine, Corneille, Balzac, Tolstoi, Turgeneff. These are only the commonplaces of culture.

It is a fad among literary people just now to seek out obscure authors of past generations, and to discourse learnedly of the "verve" of "Dickson," or the "intensiveness" of "Maddington," each striving with the other to find out and exploit writings of which no one else has taken note.

This is weak and silly; and yet it is just as silly to go to the other extreme and read only the books which everyone else is reading. There should be in every community one or more "book-tasters," as it were, who should be constantly on the watch for the really fine books, past and present, and should tell us just what to read.

A famous minister chanced to be in a remote mountain village of the South and to go into its humble church on Sunday. There he heard a sermon of such power and finish that he decided the man who delivered it, though he was plain in looks and manner, must be a college graduate.

On questioning him, he found that his sole education had been derived from a Bible, a hymn-book and a set of Kitto's Commentaries.

The Bible is indeed enough to afford liberal culture to anyone who will study it aright, and no man is truly cultured, whether or not he is religious, who does not know it well.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 13. Text: Prov. 4: 1-9.

Music Lessons Free

IN YOUR OWN HOME.

A wonderful offer to every lover of music, whether a beginner or an advanced player.

Ninety-six lessons (or a less number if you desire for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Bar Cornet, Sight Singing or Mandolin) will be given free to make our home study courses for the instruments known in your locality. You will receive one lesson weekly, and your only expense during the time you take the lessons will be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small. Write at once. It will mean much to you to get a free booklet. It will place you under no obligation whatever to us if you never write again. You and your friends should know of this work. Hundreds of our pupils write: "Wish I had known of your school before." "Have learned more in one term my home with your weekly lessons than in three terms with private teachers, and at a great deal less expense." "Everything is so thorough and complete." "The lessons are marvelous of simplicity, a my 11-year-old boy has not had the least trouble learn." One minister writes: "As each successive lesson comes I am more and more fully persuaded I made no mistake in becoming your pupil."

Established 1898—have thousands of pupils from eight years of age to seventy.

Don't say you cannot learn music till you send our free booklet and tuition offer. It will be sent return mail free. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

A Holiday Necessity

A BOX OF

Kuylers' UNEQUALLED CANDIES

Fancy Boxes & Baskets in all Sizes & at all Prices in large variety of Designs

SOLD BY OUR AUTHORIZED SALES AGENTS EVERYWHERE & AT ANY OF OUR FIFTY RETAIL STORES

Don't fail to read Priscilla advertisement on page 975 before you renew your subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Near-Brussels Art-Rugs, $3.50

Sent to your home by Express, Prepaid.

Sizes and Prices
9x6 ft.,	$3.50
9x7½ ft.,	4.00
9x9 ft.,	4.50
9x10½ ft.,	5.00
9x12 ft.,	5.50
9x15 ft.,	6.50

New Catalogue showing goods in actual colors, sent free. ORIENTAL IMPORTING CO., 918-Bourse Bldg., Philadelphia

VOICE CULTURE

A thorough, practical HOME STUDY COURSE for cultivating the voice, preparing you for Choir, Concert or Operatic Singing, or for Teaching. Special Course for pianists who also wish to teach VOICE. Any of these branches mastered will make you independent. Individual instruction for each voice. Send to-day for Free Booklet. SHACKLEFORD SCHOOL OF MUSIC 4049 Olive Street, St. Louis, Mo.

CHRISTMAS POST CARDS

25c per doz. New Years, Birthday and Flower cards, 25c. per doz. Lord's Prayer series, 8 cards, 15 cents. 6 Stork cards, 10 cents. All postpaid. THE POST CARD CO., Dept. 15, FREMONT, NEBR.

Solomon Dedicates the Temple

BY MRS. M. BAXTER

WHEN the temple was completed, Solomon held a grand dedication service. In order that he might be better heard, he had caused a brazen scaffold to be constructed, "and had set it in the midst of the court, and upon it he stood, and kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands towards heaven." Oh, what a day it would be for any land whose ruler has it in his heart to pour out a full heart to God in prayer in the midst of his people! Solomon's glory was very great, his wisdom was unsurpassed, but never did he so shine as the king and father of his people as at this particular moment. He was not ashamed of his God, as so many people are in the present day; it was his glory to show what a value he set upon him.

Having blessed the people, being their royal priest for the time, he told the assembled multitude the origin of the temple building and the communion with God which his late father had had on the subject; how the Lord had not permitted David, his father, to build the temple, but had promised him a son who should rise up in his stead and build. He testified to the faithfulness of God in fulfilling his word. And then, before the altar where the sacrifice was laid, Solomon began to pray. Here was a king justifying and glorifying the King of kings—a king who was no cipher in politics or in power, whose intellectual gifts were the wonder of the age, yet, on the greatest occasion of his life, he was not ashamed to recommend his God, but acted the prophet and the priest in his own person, that all his people might learn what a God they had to trust in! What has come to the so-called Christian kings and queens of our day that we hear of no such royal testimonies to our God? How comes it that men of intellect and position so often look down on those that fear God?

But this powerful king, Solomon, finds himself in the real, felt presence of a greater than he, and he says, "But will God indeed dwell on the earth? Behold, the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?" Solomon did not delude himself with the idea that he was conferring a favor upon God by building him a temple. On the other hand, he counted that it was a great favor on God's part to accept anything at the hand of his servants.

At the end of his prayer, Solomon blessed the people: he arose from his knees and "stood and blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, saying, "Blessed be the Lord that hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised: there hath not failed one word of all his good promise, which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant." "Now therefore arise, O Lord God, into thy resting-place, thou, and the ark of thy strength: let thy priests, O Lord God, be clothed with salvation, and let thy saints rejoice in goodness. O Lord God, turn not away the face of thine anointed." It was a definite commitment of himself and his people into the hands of God, with confidence that he was dealing with the living God who was an interested party in the welfare of his people. In his days, those who said, "No God" were counted fools; now, those who believe in him are counted fools!

When Solomon "had made an end of praying, the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering and the sacrifices; and the glory of the Lord filled the house." This was a token from God that the prayer was heard, a visible witness which human eyes could see. "And the priests could not enter into the house of the Lord, because the glory of the Lord had filled the Lord's house." The priests could not add anything to a God-filled house.

This distinct answer from God awed the people. "All the children of Israel looked on when the fire came down, and the glory of the Lord was upon the house."

See our Premium Announcement Opposite Page 962. Also be particular to read the whole of the last column on Page 962.

"Mother Bird's" Sunday Meeting

THOSE who have never experienced the luxury of a "Mother Bird" Sunday morning breakfast and Gospel service, will not object to a recital of such an experience.

Away "down in the Bowery" is of itself quite interesting enough for the average person; but to be invited to speak to "Mother Bird's boys" at the regular Sunday morning gathering is altogether unique. On approaching the entrance, at No. 37, we were surprised that a throng of men were kept outside the door. All seemed eager for admission. As we entered we saw to our amazement that every seat, to the number of five hundred, was already filled. A cordial reception was given by Mrs. Bird, also by a splendid corps of converts who were about to open their usual morning Brotherhood meeting. This meeting was held in the rear of the platform and the time was mostly given to prayer.

When the time arrived for the opening of the great meeting, the platform was filled with redeemed men whose faces indicated that help beyond themselves had been administered and that now their sole ambition was to help their fellow-men to a better life. With soul-inspiring singing, the throng of "fellow pilgrims" expressed their gratitude for the blessings of the day. The closing hymn sung in the opening service was Mrs. Bird's favorite: "My hope is built on nothing less than Jesus' blood and righteousness." Then the Scripture lesson.

After the reading of the Word, fully two hundred men asked prayer for themselves or for friends. As the speaker of the morning looked out into the sea of upturned faces, he was impressed with the dead-in-earnest expressions of nearly all present. He was also comforted in not having present a uniformed guard or a policeman, such as he observes in some places where he is invited to speak. We came away from that meeting with many excellent impressions, some of which are: The sane and purely Christian manner of the leader, the strong and manly appearance of the converts, who were honored with all the details of the work, and thirdly, the general character of the men present.

Visit the Bowery Mission. If you have any doubt as to the power of the precious promises to comfort and save the lost, go and see for yourself. If you think there is some new and better way of saving souls than by the simple methods carried on in this mission, and in others of like character, look them up. We fail to find men and women engaged in works of this kind who are idling away their time with "reasons why Jonah could not have been swallowed by the whale."

GEORGE P. AVERY.

Be sure to Read Third Column on Page 962.

Best light for the eyes—a lamp fitted with a MACBETH lamp-chimney.

MACBETH chimneys fit, and compel perfect combustion—a steady, even flame, without smoke or smudge. My chimneys are made from glass that won't break from heat. My name is on every one.

My index, sent free, shows which is the right chimney for your lamp.

MACBETH, Pittsburgh

Deafness

"The Morley 'Phone'"

A miniature Telephone for the Ear, invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E, Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia

Don't fail to read Priscilla advertisement on page 975 before you renew your subscription for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

SPRAY

It will pay you to spray your Fruit Trees and Vines for protection from scale and all insect pests and fungus diseases. FREE Instruction Book shows the famous Garfield, Empire King, Orchard, Jonarch, Leader and other sprayers; also gives lot of formulas and other valuable information.

Old Force Pump Co., No. 75-111th St., Elmira, N.Y.

Irrigation System Installed

A orchard tract in Arcadia should net you $1,000 or more a year. Pay One-tenth Down. Finance small monthly payments. Centre of fruit district. Spokane new by; four transcontinental R.R.; ideal climate. We plant and care for trees for four years free of charge. Write us for further particulars.

Ant & Dye, Inc., 832 American Bank Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

CORNS

removed quickly and painlessly with A-CORN SALVE. No burning, no risk from cutting. 15c. at druggist's or by mail.

GIANT CHEMICAL CO., Philadelphia

FENCE

STRONGEST MADE. Built strong chicken-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue free.

COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47, Winchester, Indiana

GOLD FISH

There is no more delightful Christmas gift than a globe of beautiful Gold Fish. We ship safely everywhere in the United States. Handsomely illustrated catalog free.

IOWA BIRD COMPANY, DES MOINES, IOWA

15 CENTS A ROD

For a 25-inch Hog Fence; 27c for 47-inch Farm Fence; 37c for 60-inch Poultry Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. 68 styles and heights. Catalog free. Write for it today.

ITSELMAN BROS. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

3 HOLIDAY POST CARDS 10c

Send us 10c and we will send you 3 Beautiful Colored Christmas and New Year's Post Cards. 24 cards for only 25 cents. The best value ever offered.

ANSAS POST CARD CO., 449 W. 7th Ave., Topeka, Kan.

PATENTS

SECURED OR FREE RETURNED. Free report as to Patentability. Illustrated Guide Book, and List of Inventions Wanted, sent free.

WANS, WILKENS & CO., WASHINGTON, D.C.

Agent's Outfit Free.

Delight, Biscuit, Cake and Doughnut Cutter, Apple Corer, and Strainer. 5 articles in one. Sells on sight. Large Catalog free.

RICHARDSON MFG CO., Dept. 6, BATH, N. Y.

FOR BOYS 25¢

FOR MEN 50¢

Boys are delighted with "POROSKNIT"—the most healthful Summer Underwear. The mesh lets the skin breathe, absorbs the perspiration, prevents chills. It's elastic and comfortable.

Well made throughout. Durable double seams. Get them next Spring from your dealer. All styles in boys' and men's garments have

THIS ONE LABEL

Chalmers Knitting Co. 30 Wash'n St. Amsterdam, N.Y.

TRADE MARK

Porosknit

REG U.S. PAT. OFF.

"I MADE $12 PER DAY

Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set"

From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM.

AGENTS

are coining money. Claude H. Rogers sells one every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us prove it. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $12 to $10 a day. OUT-FIT FREE to workers.

THOMAS MFG. CO. 423 Home Bldg. Dayton, Ohio

$10 PER EASY EARNED AS A DAY PIANO TUNER

The Tune-a-Phone Does It.

We will teach you Piano Tuning, Voicing, Regulating and Repeating quickly by personal correspondence. New Tune-a-Phone Method. Mechanical aids. Diploma recognized by highest authorities. School chartered by State. Write for free illustrated catalogue.

Biles Bryant School of Piano Tuning, 59 Music Hall, Battle Creek, Mich.

LEARN TO DRAW MONEY

By mail at home—in our Resident School. Men and women artists are good advertisement work. Illustrations practical instruction. We guarantee profitable or money refunded. Instructional Illustrating, Cartooning, Commercial Designing, Mechanical, Architectural and Sheet Metal Pattern Drafting taught by instructors trained in Europe and America. Adversary Board approves lessons. Test work sent free to find out your need and profitable success. Tell us your school.

ACME School of Drawing, 228 S. St., Kansas City, Mo.

FATHER AND SON

Both Gained Health on Right Food.

A food that will build up the health of a man and that can be digested by a baby, certainly has value worth considering.

The following report from an Ohio wife and mother is to the point and interesting.

"My husband had suffered great agony from stomach trouble at times for five years. Finally, after six months in the hospital, he was operated on for appendicitis.

"From that time he grew weaker and thinner until, when we brought him home he was reduced from 145 to 108 lbs.

"Then he began to eat for breakfast, Grape-Nuts with cream and a soft boiled egg. For dinner a dish of Grape-Nuts and cream, toasted bread and a glass of warm milk. For supper same as breakfast with a baked potato, one or two poached eggs, and a glass of warm milk.

"After two months on this diet, he had nearly regained his normal health. He took out-door exercise, and got plenty of sleep. He has no more trouble with his stomach, and can eat anything.

"These results induced us to try Grape-Nuts on our 6 months baby, who from birth had been puny. Nothing seemed to agree with him, although we tried the whole list of Infant Foods.

"When I began to feed him Grape-Nuts with warm milk poured on to make it soft, he weighed only 13 lbs. After six weeks of his new diet he has gained 7 lbs., and is healthy and happy."

"There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION

For 1909
The Best Christmas Present
for $1.75

The 52 issues for 1909 will give as much reading for $1.75 as twenty 400-page books of fiction, history, etc., ordinarily costing $1.50 each.

50 STAR ARTICLES

Contributions to Useful Knowledge by Famous Men and Women.

250 GOOD STORIES

Serial Stories, Stories of Character, Adventure and Heroism.

1000 UP-TO-DATE NOTES

on Current Events, Discoveries and Inventions in Nature and Science.

2000 ONE-MINUTE STORIES

Bits of Humor and Miscellany, the Weekly Health Article, Timely Editorials, the Children's Page, etc.

Send for Sample Copies of the Paper and Illustrated Announcement for 1909.

Christmas Present Coupon.

Cut out at once and send this slip (or mention this publication) with $1.75 for the 52 issues of 1909 and you will receive

Gift 1 All the issues of the paper for the remaining weeks of 1908, including the Beautiful Holiday Numbers; also Gift 2 The Companion Calendar for 1909, "In Grandmother's Garden"—a panel picture, 8 x 24 inches, in 13 colors.

Then The Companion for the 52 issues of 1909—a library in itself.

HFS 114

The Youth's Companion, Boston, Mass.

$1.50 a Year—5c. a Copy
Published 52 Times a Year

New York — Christmas Issue — Dec. 9, 1908

Vol. 31—No. 50
Offices: Bible House, N. Y.

Copyright 1908 by Louis Berniker

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Designed especially for The Christian Herald

Christmas Morning in Colonial Days

The Very Newest Idea in PRUDENTIAL Life Insurance

A Statement by the President:

THERE is no other business which bears so important a relation to the welfare of the family as that of Life Insurance. The Prudential's object is to provide for the men and women of the United States the most practical form of Life Insurance Protection—that which will contribute most completely to the welfare of those for whose benefit Life Insurance is taken.

With this sincere purpose in mind, The Prudential is issuing a Life Insurance Policy which, it is believed, meets more closely the necessities of the family—those who are left behind when the breadwinner dies—than any other form of Life Insurance before the American people to-day.

It is called the Monthly Income Policy, from the fact that the proceeds, instead of being payable in one sum, are paid to the family in a series of checks on the first of each month,—and continue for a period of 20 years or for the lifetime of the Beneficiary if it has been so selected.

The great advantages of this plan are apparent. Think of being able to leave your wife a Monthly Income,—a guaranteed sum which nothing can disturb—not affected by hard times, bad judgment in investments—which cannot be lost, depreciated or stolen—but which will come to her regularly every month for twenty years, or her lifetime,—thus enabling her to adjust the family expenditures, relieving her from all worry and putting poverty out of reach.

This is just what the new Monthly Income Policy accomplishes—it pays the rent, the household bills, provides food, clothing, education for the children—perpetuates your salary in fact—all by a monthly Income which cannot fail.

THE COST of this policy is low. For example, if you should be 30 years old you could, by paying The Prudential $167.35 per year (which means a saving of only $13.95 per month, or about $3.50 per week), assure to your family after your death—$50 Every Month for 20 years, or $12,000 in all! At slightly higher cost, you could make this Income payable to your wife or daughter for her entire lifetime. This is called the Whole Life Plan.

You can also arrange to confine all your payments to the Company to the first 20 years after taking out the Policy. This is called the 20 Payment Life Plan.

Now suppose you should like to arrange to protect your own old age—to assure yourself of an Income which would start 20 years from to-day, if living, and last for 20 years longer, or—for you as long as you live and your wife as long as she lives if she survives you. This can be done too, under the Endowment Plan.

Suppose you and your wife were both 40 years of age: $214.20 per year (a saving of $4.12 weekly) paid to the Company for 20 years would provide a guaranteed Income of $25 per month, beginning at age 60 and continuing as long as either you or your wife should live,—and in any event for not less than 20 years.

Every rate and value in this Policy is absolutely guaranteed—in the Policy itself—while back of it are the great resources of The Prudential.

The success already attending this new Monthly Income Policy proves that it is striking the keynote of popular demand. You cannot afford to ignore a method of providing for your family or for your own old age a protection so sensible, so sure, so convenient, and so inexpensive. We wish to tell you what The Prudential can do for You in this matter. Write now while the subject is fresh on your mind. We will furnish you full Information—just adapted to Your particular case.

Remember, we believe this to be the greatest plan for the protection of your family ever devised—marking an epoch in Life Insurance. You should take advantage of it, for your family's sake. Write Now to

The Prudential Insurance Co.
OF AMERICA

Incorporated as a Stock Company by the State of New Jersey.

Home Office: Newark, N. J.

President.

In order that we shall know where you read this we would appreciate it if you would mention this publication in your letter.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Mahmoud Pasha

Kamil Pasha

Gabriel Effendi Noradounghian

Sheik-ul-Islam

MEN WHO MADE A REVOLUTION

LITTLE by little the true story of the short but effective revolution in Turkey, and the reasons why certain men who appeared at the very summit of power disappeared in a night, and others, whose names no one outside of Islam had ever heard, were placed in authority, is now coming out. A few men stood for what we call the old régime, and a few others, leaders of the young Turks and patriotic advisers of the Sultan, stand for the new. Their stories make up, in great part, the history of the recent revolt. While the revolution was expected, as it now appears, throughout a large part of Northern Turkey, the Western world had given the rumblings of discontent but little attention. Attempts at revolt there had been for years, always with the same result: a few regiments volleyed into the rank and file of the malcontents, while the leaders disappeared, usually sewn up in bags and dropped quietly and unostentatiously into the Bosphorus—and Turkey settled back silently if not comfortably to a few more years of misrule. As for Europe, it shook its head, shrugged its shoulders, and like a council of doctors wondered at the great vitality of "the Sick Man of Europe," who never died, despite his chronic internal trouble, and who never got well.

Young men of the empire have felt in recent years that energetic measures should be taken to improve the political condition under which they lived. Hundreds of them had been students in universities in Germany, Paris, Austria, and a few in Great Britain. These saw the results of good government, and returned full of hope for the future of the Ottomans. But their reception by the authorities of the old régime was frosty in the extreme. They were at once under suspicion on account of their European training, and were debarred generally from service to the State.

They found the Sultan surrounded by officials whose ideas were medieval, as were some of the offices, also. For instance, there was the court astrologer Eb-ul-Huda. His influence had been growing for years. He pretended he could divine the future, and performed what seemed to the Sultan most marvelous feats, such as reading telegrams before they were opened, or informing Abdul what answer would come if a certain letter was sent. He did all this by having high officials in his pay as well as

Before the message was delivered El Huda would interview the constellations, get a few bright, star-light ideas, and report his findings to Abdul. A little later came the telegram giving exactly the same information, showing that the star and crescent were still keeping a watchful eye over the country.

Several other members of the old régime deserve mention. Izzet Pasha was Grand Vizier; then there was Hassan Rami, minister of marine, and the two brothers, Selim Melhamé and Medjid Melhamé. The whole Melhamé family enjoyed great power and was correspondingly unpopular with the Young Turk party.

Selim was minister of mines and forests. He opposed the Young Turkish movement bitterly and many members of the party suffered death, it is reported, through his orders. The brother, Medjid, also held influential offices. Fehim Pasha, adopted nephew of the Sultan and chief of the secret police, was one of the worst of the ring.

Against this ring plotted the Young Turks. While not openly aiding their plans, noted men in Constantinople gave their tacit approval. Up in the north near the stormy Balkans the officers of the army determined on a bold stroke. To win meant a new life for Turkey; to lose meant death for themselves and their followers. Carefully sounding officers and men, Major Niazi Bey and Enver Bey found them ready for revolt. Some word of this reached Constantinople and the ring determined to break up the opposition through strategy. They sent a pressing invitation to Enver Bey to visit Constantinople, saying he was to be promoted, and thanking him for his military services to the Sultan. Enver saw that the trap was baited for ladies of the harem, and he found out just what answer the officials would send to any questions from the Sultan. He received large amounts of money from his royal master and lived luxuriously in one of the Yildiz Kiosks, within easy call of the Sultan. But now his brilliant and lucrative career is at an end. He was the last man to be consulted by the Sultan as to whether he should comply with the demand of the army and grant a constitution. His historic parallel is found in the astrologer who was consulted so often by King Louis XI. of France, and who is so graphically sketched in Sir Walter Scott's story of Quentin Durward. That old French astrologer knew he could not rely on the friendship of his crafty master, who only had one oath he would keep, and no one knew which one that was from among several dozen that Louis would offer. Like his prototype, El Huda is now in disgrace from a slight oversight on his part which will be mentioned later, and his greatest feat of magic has been that he has been able to keep his head on his shoulders after the recent overturn. Huda had the active assistance of the Pasha in charge of the telegraph at Yildiz. This official would send him advance information as to the contents of all telegrams that came in for the Sultan, sent by generals and governors of provinces.

Con. on next page

Yildiz Palace and the Sultan's Mosque

Major Niazi Bey

Enver Bey

Eb-ul-Huda

Prince Sabheddin

Prince Reched

Selim Melhame

Medjid Effendi

Fehim Pasha

him and took to the hills to save his life. The Major, the hero of the revolution, determined to act. He sent a telegram direct to the Sultan: "Proclaim a constitution at once or we will march on Constantinople with 300,000 men." Then followed another: "We demand the heads of Izzet and Tahsin Pashas." Huda must have had an uncomfortable interview with the stars when he read this. Then came the last message: "In case you do not proclaim a constitution immediately I will see that your name next Friday is not mentioned in any mosque in Stamboul." Consternation reigned in the Palace. The Sultan called his advisers together and asked them what was to be done. Not one dared to utter the words, "Grant a constitution." Then he sent for the astrologer, who was brought in from a sick-bed, and he showed that he had courage. He told the Sultan that the only thing that would save his throne would be to proclaim a constitution. The Sultan did so, but sent Huda away in disgrace because he had not foreseen the revolution which would have been the most valuable bit of advance information the Sultan could have desired.

The next few days saw startling changes. Izzet Pasha disappeared, no one knew where. Selim Melhamé was arrested while trying to escape, assisted by the Italian embassy. Medjid Melhamé was caught at Adrianople, and so one after another of the old régime was imprisoned or managed to escape to Europe. A new régime came in, representing all that was opposed by the old. Kamil Pasha now enjoys great influence. He is a former Governor of Syria and Grand Vizier, one of the best statesmen in Turkey. When he became Grand Vizier, a number of years ago, he stopped the Armenian massacres. Gabriel Effendi was made Minister of Works. Sheik-ul-Islam is another reformer who will be listened to with respect. Mahmoud Pasha, who fought the old régime so bitterly, died in exile in Paris, but his body was brought back. He once controlled the Department of Justice.

Looking ahead, it is probable that Mohammed Reched Effendi, the Sultan's brother, will inherit the throne. He has pledged himself to the new constitution, but is not regarded as a positive character. Two of the Sultan's sons, though men grown, are not counted upon. Medjid is more of an artist than anything else, while his brother is interested in music. Some think Mohammed may prove a reactionary, but the new order will probably be well started before he inherits the Sultanate of all the Ottomans, as Mohammedans and other creeds call themselves under the constitution.

A GREAT LEGAL CONTEST

PUBLIC interest is widespread in the suit of the government to annul the charter of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey, which is the holding company of the organization known to the public under the general name of "Standard Oil." The hearings are being held on the fifth floor of the new Custom House, near Bowling Green, in New York City, and the hall has been filled with spectators from the first day. The most interesting witness, of course, was Mr. John D. Rockefeller himself, who was called in to give a general history of the company and of its methods. Mr. Rockefeller has seldom appeared downtown in New York during the last few years, having left the management of the company largely in the hands of its vice-presidents and other officials, while he spent most of his time in the country or traveling for his health. Recently, however, he has again returned to his desk at 26 Broadway, which he had relinquished at the age of fifty-nine, when he supposed he had retired from active work for good. His recent return to his office is probably connected with the present litigation.

People stood on chairs to see him and those who could not enter the room climbed up and peered through the transoms.

Mr. Rockefeller began his account of the company as it started in the sixties. He seemed ready to answer all queries put to him, and brought out many incidents of the history of the company never before published, despite the several attempts that have been made to write the full history of Standard Oil. He said that the business was really started by a loan of two thousand dollars from a business man in Cleveland. "I talked to him until I thought I had him properly enthused and then asked for a loan." When he was asked how much he wanted "I thought I would shoot high and said 'two thousand dollars.' Somewhat to my amazement he gave me the money. That was my start and literally the start of Standard Oil. In 1870 the new oil company started with a capital of $1,000,000, which was considered a large capital at that time. Three firms were consolidated to form the company. Mr. Rockefeller said that it was a prosperous business from the beginning, and that he and his associates introduced many innovations which gave them a lead over their competitors. One of the most important was the manufacture of barrels by machinery. Better barrels and saving in cost gave them an advantage over their competitors. Throughout the taking of the testimony Mr. Rockefeller endeavored to show that the position that the company acquired was due to their endeavor to do away with the cost of middlemen's profits, warehousing charges, etc.; the others using antiquated methods and thus not being able to do business at a profit, were unable to compete with the Standard.

"We were enabled to produce for our own use, and at prices below the prices at which we had previously purchased and at which our competitors were buying." He said that they were the first oil dealers to build their own warehouses and have their own lighters, and were enabled to secure large sums of money at lower rates than it could be secured in the West. No other company had tried at the time, he said, to do this.

When the question of the absorption of other and smaller companies came up Mr. Rockefeller was asked: "Were there any coercive methods used by you in making purchases of competitors' plants?"

"None whatever," was the reply. "They were fair negotiations, and I may say for myself it is the kind of negotiations I have always made, and none other." At another point in the proceedings he stated another reason for the success of Standard Oil was that "We were large borrowers from the beginning, and we always had good credit, for we always kept our covenants and paid our paper."

All of the foregoing was brought out on the questioning of Mr. Milburn, one of the counsel for the Standard Oil Company. The cross-examination was taken up later by Mr. Kellogg, acting for the government.

Mr. Kellogg made strict inquiries into the connection of Standard Oil with various railroads. He made a demand for the stock transfer books. Mr. Rockefeller said he did not know where they were, as he did not have charge of them. He said he would have them looked up.

Mr. Archbold, who has been the most active figure in the Standard Oil Company for the last few years, took the stand after Mr. Rockefeller. In answer to the attorney's question he denied that the company fixed the price of oil, saying that this was done by the markets of the world.

As this edition of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD goes to press, the testimony of Mr. Archbold is still being taken. Probably it will be some time before any judicial decision is made for or against the continuation in business of the Standard Oil Company of New Jersey.

Mr. Rockefeller and His Attorney on the Way to His Hotel

GETTING READY FOR THE NEXT CENSUS

At the New Tabulating Machine

S. N. D. North, Director of the Census

Operator Working the New Card-Punching Machine

By WALDON FAWCETT

the last census, entailing, of course, a proportionate increase in the volume of census work, it is the belief of the government officials that they will be able to complete the census of 1910 at a cost little if any in excess of the census of 1900. This economical miracle will be made possible through the introduction of unequaled time and labor-saving machines in the compilation of our population statistics. By the aid of these mechanical wizards, a force of its operation is very fatiguing to the young women who do nothing else all day long.

However, it was no easy matter to find a substitute for this machine that would constitute an improvement. James Powers, the mechanical expert of the United States Census, has been puzzling his brain over this problem for years, and only within the past few weeks has he finally triumphed and perfected the invention of a marvelous new card-punching machine. The new machine is built on the plan of a typewriter with 240 keys, and the mere depressing of any desired keys and the switching on of an electric current serves to punch the holes as needed. Heretofore, the most expert operator, using the old hand machine, could not punch more than nine hundred cards per day. With the new machine, any of the young women at the Census Bureau can punch from 3,500 to 4,000 cards per day.

Moreover, with the old machine, a first-class operator would inevitably spoil at least one-tenth of the cards handled. With the new machine, not one card in a hundred is spoiled. This new machine will make possible the announcement of the total population of the country in record-breaking time.

Automatic counters are attached to the keys, registering on a dial every time a hole is punched. Thus, just as soon as there have been punched the eighty odd or ninety million cards, representing the people of the United States, the Census Bureau will be enabled to announce the full totals, with all the statistical information as to the different classes of our population throughout the country—males, females, native, foreign, white, colored, married and single.

The coming census will also introduce an altogether new style of tabulating machine, on which the work is performed by a pin box, equipped with a needle for each possible hole in a card. Each of these needles is set on a fine spiral spring and when the pin box is brought down over each card in turn, the needles which meet the unpunched surfaces are repressed, while those that pass through the holes make an electric contact and cause one or more "counters" or dials to register. In the old-style machine the counters had to be read and the results recorded by hand, and all the dials had to be reset by hand.

In the new machine there is an automatic recording and printing system which mechanically keeps count of the cards as they pass through the machine and delivers the result of the count on a neatly printed slip. Then, when a "run" of cards covering any city, county, or other geographical division of the country has been concluded, it is only necessary to press a button and all the dials or counters will be reset automatically, in readiness for making more statistics.

The Keyboard of the Wonderful New Tabulating Machine clerks no larger than that employed ten years ago will be able to turn out one-fourth and perhaps even one-half more work than was accomplished a decade ago.

Mechanical mathematicians of one kind or another have been in use in the census office since 1870, but the system of electric tabulation which will be employed for the thirteenth census will be far in advance of all predecessors in the matter of the machinery utilized. Under this plan, the census will be compiled on the card index system, with a card for every man, woman, and child in the country. However, it will be different from the card index system found in the average office in that, instead of data being copied on the cards by pen or typewriter, it will be recorded by punching holes in the cards. The positions of the holes on each card will carry significance as indicating facts relative to the individual whose biography the card records. No writing whatever will be necessary on any of the cards.

The use of this short-cut in census taking requires the use of two main classes of machines. First, there are the machines that punch the holes in the cards as above described, and, secondly, there are the tabulating machines that take these cards after they have been punched full of holes and, solely by mechanical means, add and classify and make up totals from the cards. The style of card-punching machine heretofore in use at the Census Bureau is a simple affair, in which the pressure of a lever by hand power is necessary for the punching of each and every individual hole. It has not been all that could be desired in speed; it is easy to make a mistake and spoil the card being punched; and finally

ALTHOUGH it is yet more than two years in advance of the beginning of actual enumeration, preparations are already under way for the next National Census of the United States—that of 1910. The counting at the end of each decade of every man, woman and child in the republic is the greatest business project Uncle Sam is called upon to undertake. Realizing that with the continuous rapid increase in population the next census will be a record-breaker in every respect, the government officials sought to take time by the forelock and secure at the last session of Congress an appropriation of money that would enable the inauguration of the preliminaries of the census proper. The desired appropriation was not secured at that time, but there is reason to believe that money will be set aside for this purpose early in the session of Congress.

With a new policy of forehandedness, the officials of the Bureau of the Census have not waited for the Congressional appropriation, but are already busy with the administrative details of the coming census. The mechanical experts of the bureau have been gradually evolving a number of wonderful new machines which will enable the compiling of the census returns more quickly and more accurately than has ever heretofore been possible. These early preliminaries have been rendered possible by the creation of the permanent Census Bureau which came to existence after the last national census—that of 1900. In days gone by, each successive census was an independent enterprise, with all the disadvantages that might be expected to result from entrusting a gigantic task to officials not familiar with the work and employees wholly partly inexperienced. To remedy these important defects Congress in 1902 established the Bureau of the Census as a permanent government institution.

The forthcoming Federal Census will entail upon the nation an expense of about $14,000,000. Of this total about $1,500,000 is needed for the maintenance of the permanent Census Bureau above mentioned, whereas $12,500,000 represents the anticipated outlay for the canvass of the country's population. In addition to this, Mr. S. N. D. North, Director of the Census, will ask Congress at its coming session to appropriate the sum of $675,000 to purchase a site and erect a six-story building as a permanent home for the census. The new home would be a six-story fire-proof structure, with ample accommodations for the 3,000 educated and capable men and women in the volunteer army that will assemble at Washington to do the clerical work of the coming census.

Although the population of the United States has increased perhaps fifteen or twenty per cent. since

Cressy L. Wilbur
Chief Statistician of the Census

James Powers

THE MESSAGE TO THE SHEPHERDS

A CHRISTMAS SERMON

By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D.

Minister of the Marble Collegiate Church, New York

TEXT—LUKE 2:8

"And there were shepherds abiding in the field."

THE time had come to announce the most important undertaking that ever occurred in the history of the world. The long-looked-for work of redemption was about to begin; and a pursuivant must be chosen to bear the message to the children of men. O fortunate angel! And fortunate those who bare him company as he set forth, followed by the benisons of heaven, to assure the beleaguered race that the God of salvation was now to make bare his arm!

But who shall be chosen to receive the welcome news? The heralds of the evangel, as they speed on their beneficent mission, pass over the cities of Egypt and tarry not; for on its tombs, its temples and its palaces is written, Ichabod, "The glory hath departed!" The Pharaohs sleep in their mummy crypts and the Sphinx looks on with dreamy eyes; while the people bow at the altar of gods whose liturgy is written in the Book of the Dead. The message is not for worn-out dynasties, but for such as have their eyes attent and their hearts attuned to the promise of brighter days.

Will the heralds pause, then, at Athens, "Mother of arts and eloquence?" Here is, indeed, the intellectual centre of the world. Zeuxis and Apelles, Phidias and Praxiteles are filling its temples and palaces with masterpieces destined to be the wonder of the ages. In the schools by the Ilyssus, the Grove, the Academy and the Painted Porch, philosophers in scholastic robes walk up and down, discoursing to their pupils on the reason of things. But heaven has no message for Pride of Intellect; wherefore the angels still pursue their flight.

And now they are approaching Rome, the political centre of the world. Cæsar, from his palace on the Capitoline, looks proudly down upon the Forum where trains of captives are passing under his yoke. He has realized the dream of universal empire, and the wealth of a thousand tributary nations is pouring into his exchequer. It is the Augustan Age of luxury and vice. But there is leprosy in the mortar of this imperial fabric. Heaven has no word of promise for Pride of Power.

The couriers, at length, have reached Jerusalem. Here surely they will arrest their flight; for is not this the religious centre of the world? The lights are burning in the temple, and clouds of incense rise while worshippers chant, "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord!" Priests with broad phylacteries are making long prayers at the corners of the streets; scribes and Pharisees display frontlets between their eyes, on which is written, "Holiness to the Lord." But all is pomp and circumstance. These are mere mask wearers who draw nigh unto God with their lips while their hearts are far from him. Heaven has no message of hope for Self-righteousness.

The herald angels, still pursuing their course, have reached the hill country of Judea; and here they pause to deliver their message to a strange company, of whom Milton, in his "Ode to the Nativity," sings on this wise:

The shepherds on the lawn, or ere the point of dawn,
Sit simply chatting in a rustic row.

It is a still night. The air is heavy with the perfume of palm groves and olive yards. The stars hang low in the clear blue sky. Now and then the twittering of a bird as it flutters from its nest betokens the approach of day. The sheep are still asleep, save one and another that, with drowsy zest, nibble the succulent grass freshened with the night dew. The silence of the closing night is over all.

The group of shepherds, early awake, are conversing in low voices. A torch thrust into the ground, in the centre of the company, casts its flickering light upon a parchment spread before them. The theme of their conversation is the coming of Messiah, "the Hope of Israel." For there is a current rumor of his near approach and a prevalent feeling of expectancy.

But how and when and where will he come? To the Law and Testimony! How reads the parchment?

acquainted with griefs," and "We hid, as it were, our faces from him?"

And what of his mission? "He shall break every chain and bid the oppressed go free." Will the deliverance be for the Jews only? "He shall call a nation that he knew not. Gentiles shall come to light and kings to the brightness of his rising."

And when shall he appear? It is recorded in the prophecy of Daniel that he shall come at the end "seventy weeks of years." Is there a sign given? Yes; the sign of the falling sceptre; as it is written in the blessing of Jacob, "The sceptre shall not depart from Judah nor a law-giver from between his feet until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the nations be." Is not the sign fulfilled? The sceptre is falling from Judah's hand! The census of Cyrenius has just been ordered, by which all Israel passes under the Roman yoke. A carpenter and his wife from the hill country of Galilee, who passed the shepherds last night on the highway, were on their way to enroll themselves in Bethlehem. Alas for the vanished glory of Israel!

But where shall this Messiah be born? In the very city in which those wayfarers were bound; as it is written in the prophecy of Micah, "And thou, Bethlehem, art in no wise least among the princes of Judah; for out of thee shall come a Governor, who shall be the shepherd of my people." Thus these rustics commune with one another until, at length, they lapse into silence and the torch flickers and goes out.

On a sudden they awake and gaze wonderingly; for a strange light is shining among them. Had they known it, this is the Shekinah, the lost Glory, in which God had formerly been accustomed to reveal himself to men. It led the children of Israel through the wilderness as a luminous pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night. It hovered over the mercy-seat of the Ark of the Covenant from which God delivered his messages. It filled the temple of Solomon, at its dedication, with a golden haze. It had vanished with the waning loyalty of Israel, four hundred years before. And now it reappears in the midst of this group of shepherds, growing brighter and brighter, while the voices of the herald angels fill the air with a harmonious strain: "Glory to God in the highest; peace on earth and good will to men!" The shepherds are amazed, bewildered and afraid. Can they be dreaming? In the midst of the Glory the elect angel leads the advent song: "Fear not; for, behold, I bring you tidings of great joy! To you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." The chorus continues, in rising and falling cadences; three trumpet notes like the Trisagion of heaven: "Glory, peace, good-will!" It is the sweetest song earth ever heard. And then the Glory fades, the vision is ended, the light of the morning glows upon the eastern hills.

But why was this message delivered to a company of shepherds rather than to the dreamers by the Nile, the philosophers of Athens, the world conquerors or the pietists?

First, because they were simple folk. And this is

Continued on page 987

Christmas Morn

By ANNIE E. MICHENER

BANDS of holy angels
Gladden Christmas morn
With the joyful tidings
That a Babe is born.
In a manger lieth,
Cradled, heaven's King,
While earth's wisest sages
Swift their offerings bring.

Out across the desert,
Guided by a Star,
Frankincense and myrrh
Bring they from afar.
At the feet of Jesus
Bow they humbly, low;
'Tis the world's Redeemer,
Promised long ago.

Hark! the voice of angels,
Wondrous, sweet and fair!
Caroling the tidings
In the upper air.
Peace on earth! Sweet story!
Listen, while they sing,
As the new-born message,
Thus to earth they bring.

All adown the ages
Men have caught the strain
Wafted by the angels
O'er Judea's plain.
Peace on earth! as ever,
Thus the angels sing;
While in adoration
Swift our hearts we bring.

Copyrighted

It begins with the protevangel, "The seed of woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Has Moses aught to say? Ay; "A prophet shall the Lord your God raise up like unto me; him shall ye hear!" And Isaiah? He speaks yet more explicitly: "A virgin shall conceive and bear a son and shall call his name Immanuel; which is, being interpreted, God with us"; and again: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

Is there aught as to his personal station? Yes; "He shall rule as a king in righteousness; his kingdom shall be an everlasting kingdom, and of his dominion there shall be no end." But how shall that be reconciled with this, "He is a man of sorrows and amazed, bewildered and afraid. Can they be dreaming? In the midst of the Glory the elect angel leads the advent song: "Fear not; for, behold, I bring you tidings of great joy! To you is born this day in the city of David a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." The chorus continues, in rising and falling cadences; three trumpet notes like the Trisagion of heaven: "Glory, peace, good-will!" It is the sweetest song earth ever heard. And then the Glory fades, the vision is ended, the light of the morning glows upon the eastern hills.

But why was this message delivered to a company of shepherds rather than to the dreamers by the Nile, the philosophers of Athens, the world conquerors or the pietists?

First, because they were simple folk. And this is

Continued on page 987

RD HOW TO GIVE JOY AT CHRISTMAS

A Roman Tale of Christmas

Queen Alexandra's Christmas Card

Madonna and Child

The Queen of Spain's Christmas Card

Order of the Garter, 13th Century

King Edward's Christmas Card

IT HAS become a fashion in certain quarters to bemoan the approach of Christmas. "The expense is intolerable"; "Christmas giving has become a mere form without heart"; "I dread to have the day come around"; are only specimens of the way in which these pessimists regard our greatest annual festival.

Some people, perhaps wisely, lessen the pressure of the time, by indicating to certain friends that birthdays or Easter or some other day, which may have some special personal significance, will be celebrated with gifts, instead of Christmas. But the whole idea of regarding this beautiful festival with dread and dislike, is wrong. It should be the most joyous season of the year. Let us conquer its difficulties and insist upon our birthright of happiness.

"What can you do?" You can write a letter. A loving Christmas letter, long or short, but full of news and good wishes, or whatever you think your friend may like best, is one of the most acceptable of Christmas gifts.

If you can draw or paint, or engross, you can choose some fine verse or sentiment, and illustrate or engross it, or both, on a pretty card. If you write verses yourself, as nearly everybody does nowadays, you can present some lines of your own. Do not imagine that you are making a boastful display of yourself in doing this. If you knitted a tidy or embroidered a centerpiece, or made a scroll-saw shelf or bracket, nobody would accuse you of trying to parade your accomplishments.

The Christmas card, too, has resumed all of its old-time popularity, and it can be purchased for any price, from one cent upward. Many houses are issuing beautiful specimens of this sort of gift, that of Raphael Tuck & Son, as usual, leading in the competition. As they enjoy royal patronage, it can be learned from them just which design is chosen by various royalties and their near relatives. The information is interesting. The King of England has chosen for his Christmas card the picture of Edward III. and the Countess of Salisbury, in the scene which originated the famous Order of the Garter. Queen Alexandra sends this year a card on which is an Alma-Tadema group of John Bacon—a storyteller, before whom three beautiful Roman maidens sit in attitudes of rapt attention. The Prince of Wales chooses the scene in which Edward III. bestows the Order of the Garter upon the Black Prince. The card of the Princess of Wales shows the three wise men on their camels, following the star. The German Emperor has selected an old pageant in which shipmates drain their beakers in a toast. The Queen of Spain and Queen of Norway have selected beautiful modern madonnas. The supply of cards and booklets was never so large and choice as now. A card, a booklet or a good book forms one of the very most desirable gifts.

Last year, just before Christmas time, a large-hearted and quick-witted woman paid a visit to an old friend. She had been wealthy, and in her halcyon days had spent lavishly for her friends at Christmas time. "Ah!" she said now, as she wept in her friend's arms, "I used to love to see Christmas coming, for I knew that I was going to make many people happy. But now I have not one cent to spend for anyone, and I am too weak and ill to undertake any sort of work. It is the saddest time in the year for me."

The friend pondered the matter. She herself had not much to spend, but she decided that her Christmas gift for this friend in 1908 should be different from anything she had ever given before. She determined to spend five or six dollars for her, and she saw now how that sum could be best invested.

All through the months since then, she has been looking out for dainty little things for this friend. She found some delicate centerpieces at fifty-eight cents, which had cost $2 apiece, and bought two; some dainty purses, "marked down" to an even lower price; some really fine pictures (unframed) at a tempting rate; an embroidered handkerchief or two, and other little things—all of fine quality. Early this month a box was packed with these treasures, and was sent to the friend with the following note: "My Christmas gift for you this year, dear heart, consists of little things for you to give away. I know that nothing for yourself could please you so much as this."

Whatever we do or whatever our friends do, let nothing cloud the joy of the season. Christ was born in Bethlehem. Let every heart be glad on his birthday.

KATE UPSON CLARK.

The Message to the Shepherds

A CHRISTMAS SERMON BY

DAVID JAMES BURRELL, D.D., LL.D.

Continued

in pursuance of a recognized law of sociology, to wit, that the redemption of society is to come by a process, not of leveling down, but of leveling up. Who dreams of regenerating the world by bettering the condition of the nobility and aristocracy? As well might a housewife kindle the fire above the water she wishes to heat. Save the people, and kings will come trooping after them! It was for this reason that Christ addressed his teaching to the masses, whereof it is written, "The common people heard him gladly." And of the composition of the Apostolic church it is recorded, "Not many wise men after the flesh, not many mighty, not many noble, are called; but God hath chosen the foolish things of the world to confound the wise; and the weak things of the world to confound the mighty; and base things of the world, and things which are despised, hath God chosen, yea, and things which are not, to bring to nought things that are; that no flesh should glory in his presence."

And, furthermore, the message was delivered to the shepherds because they were thoughtful folk. This also is in pursuance of a law, namely, that Truth comes in at open doors. It turns aside from the preoccupied and prejudiced, to find a welcome in responsive minds. "While I was musing," the psalmist writes, "the fire burned." But musing is not dreaming; it is thinking outward and beckoning to truth. "I was in the Spirit," says the evangelist, "and I saw." Men who are "in the Spirit" do not shut themselves apart in the coldness and bitterness and selfishness of life, but stand rather on tip-toe, listening for truth as for the footfall of God. And thus it happens that "not many wise men after the flesh are called." While they are thinking their own thoughts and framing their commonplace prejudgments as to spiritual things, there is many an aged saint, sitting in the chimney corner with the sacred scroll upon his knees, who sees wonderful visions and communes face to face with God.

The shepherds, awaking from their bewilderment, look into each others' faces saying, "The Consolation of Israel has come! Let us now go, even unto Bethlehem, and see this great thing which is come to pass, which the Lord hath made known unto us."

And here they are beside the manger. The two travelers whom they had seen the previous night on their way to Bethlehem are here, and with them the Christ-child. "Great is the mystery of godliness! God is manifest in the flesh; the angels desire to look into it."

The answer to the shepherds' hopes and longings had come at last; because they were not disobedient to the heavenly vision. It was in vain that Moses prayed, "O Lord, show me thy glory!" He caught a glimpse of it at the burning bush and heard a voice saying, "I Am That I Am," but that was all. And, later, hiding himself in a cleft of the rock, he heard the rustle of a garment and saw a passing light; but that was all. It was impossible that any man should see God and live; unless God should be pleased, in some extraordinary way, to bring himself within the apprehension of finite men. This is the thing that has now come to pass. God has bowed the heavens to come down. The shepherds realize the fulfillment of the prayers of Moses; in the Christ-child they behold the Incarnation of the Glory of God.

"And they returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things they had heard and seen. And they made known the saying which was spoken unto them." As they journeyed, they told it to the travelers on their way to the Holy City; and when they had reached home, other shepherds came from the neighboring fields and asked them concerning it. The light, the angels, the Child in the manger; could they describe them? Did they try to reproduce the wonderful song? Vain effort!

But these shepherds never forgot. Their life was changed. The stars shone brighter, the very grass was greener, and the watching of their flocks was a finer task since they had seen the Christ-child. And the advent song rang ever in their hearts, until, one by one, they laid down their shepherd crooks and went to meet Christ and praise him in the new song, "Worthy art thou to receive honor and power and dominion forever and ever!"

Are these advent joys for us? God save us from the Barmecide feast of a Christless Christmas! A preacher in the mountains of Wales was repeating the message of the Advent angel when a woman's voice rang out in the congregation, "To me, also! Oh, to me, also!" And why not? In the light of this gospel vision shall we be as those who receive only the incidental blessings of the Gospel, resting not under the Tree of Life but only under its "boughs that run over the wall"? Shall we give shelter to Christ in some outer place, or open our hearts and make room for him "in the inn"? The evangel awaits us. Shall we abide still in the fields, with the message ringing in our ears, or shall we say, like the shepherds, "I will arise and go quickly and see this great thing which is made known unto us?"

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly.
Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner
available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside
the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the
wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time
to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN
HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

The Joy of Christmas

CHRISTMAS brings with it a joy that is unlike any other the world has ever known—a pleasure that is pure, exalting and universal. No other religion has ever brought to its followers such a festival as this, which commemorates the “unspeakable gift” of God’s own Son to a sinful race. The song of the herald angels is still sounding in the hearts of men. No musician, be he ever so gifted, might reproduce those heavenly strains; no human painter might hope to adequately picture the glorious scene, though many have tried. Christ’s lowly advent in the Bethlehem manger set all the bells of heaven a-ringing, and awoke all the celestial chorus, while nature hushed to listen.

If we, too, would hear the angel-song in our hearts, and feel the true joy of the Christmas-tide, let us give to others the best there is in us for the sake of Him who was the “unspeakable” gift to men. On our loved ones we may shower the usual tokens of affection, and it would be strange and unnatural if we did not; but there is a vast outside constituency to whom the Christmas festival will bring little cheer unless it comes from the hands and hearts of God’s people. There are the poor at our doors, the stricken and afflicted, the unsheltered and friendless, the outcast and wanderer. Let us not forget them at this season, when all the world is rejoicing.

If ye would hear the angels sing,
Christians! see ye let each door
Stand wider than ever it stood before
On Christmas day in the morning.

If ye would hear the angels sing,
Christians rise! the world is bare
And bleak and dark with want and care;
Yet Christmas comes in the morning.

Consecrate the coming festival by making your gifts carry with them a part of your own life. Then, no matter how inconspicuous they may be, if they are given with the whole heart and in His name, they will be royal gifts indeed.

War Clouds Blow Over

TWICE within a month the European nations have had a fleeting glimpse of the spectre of war. First it was the Balkan troubles, beginning with Bulgaria’s somewhat theatrical declaration of independence. Fortunately the approach of winter renders it unlikely that any fighting will take place in northern Turkey or the Balkans at present, and long before next spring, the troubles may have been peacefully adjusted. Next, it was when the German Emperor, in an incautious moment, gave his now famous “personal and confidential” interview to a foreign correspondent, who immediately proceeded to print it in England, thereby precipitating a storm in the Reichstag and stirring up hostile breezes all over Europe. But it was only a passing gale and died down almost as suddenly as it arose.

It must be apparent to any ordinary observer that times have greatly changed—and changed for the better—since the days when such happenings would have led to serious misunderstandings, if not to actual war. The frightful cost of a modern military campaign and the long impoverishment that inevitably follows make the civilized powers hesitate. Besides, the people themselves are tired of war. Wherever ignorance and superstition are passing away under the influence of education and civilization and the Gospel, the folly and wickedness of military enslavement is becoming apparent. In England, Germany, France, Russia and in our own land, the multitudes know that the sound of the trumpet and the clang of the sabre would be a dirge of woe and suffering to countless homes where peace brings happiness and comfort.

Yes, the time is coming when the world will be sick of war, and when peace will grow more and more attractive to all the enlightened peoples. Our children’s children may yet see, in the museums of the future, types of the great man-killing naval leviathans of our day, and of the horrid mechanism of slaughter used on modern battlefields. And as they gaze on the antiquated guns and the obsolete warships that cost so much, they may smile while they listen to the tale how the nations in those barbaric days spent their strength in mutual destruction; how a single shot from a big gun equaled the keep of a workman’s family well-nigh a year; how some of the great “conquerors” not only poured out their subjects’ lives as freely as water in the “great red game of war,” but sent all the silver and gold out of the country and left it a land of decrepitude and pauperism.

Let us be thankful that the peace movement is making progress silently but surely, in spite of all obstacles. Let us remember, too, that our own land stands pledged to help it, for the American people took the first steps that led to the holding of the original International Peace Congress in 1841, and they have been foremost in the advocacy of the world’s peace ever since.

Keeping Our Word With Cuba

SEVERAL times onlookers in Europe have sarcastically doubted America’s sincerity in regard to its intervention in Cuba from the war of 1898 on to the present occupation of our troops due to the insurrection of 1906. The United States, nevertheless, has gone serenely about its business of acting as the elder brother of the newcomer among the nations.

The recent election was carried through with as little trouble as we would have in our own country at a similar event, and José Gomez, the new president, is preparing to take office. The United States feels it has done its duty and all troops will be withdrawn by the last of January. How many other nations would have acted as generously or kept their word so well in a like emergency and opportunity to acquire new spheres of influence? We believe they are few. On Thanksgiving Day the order was given by our government to the troops in the Isle of Pines to start the evacuation, which is to leave Cuba in charge of its own people once more. Our men are leaving with the friendship between Cuba and the United States not only unimpaired but improved. We have kept our word to Cuba and her people believe more firmly than ever in our sincerity and good will.

President Gomez said in an open letter to the American people: “Neither the administration of our friend, President Roosevelt, nor the first step taken by that great nation to co-operate for our independence shall be forgotten. . . . Our foremost endeavor shall be to practically demonstrate that the efforts made by the American people in aiding us to obtain our liberty have not been useless.”

An Opportunity for Inventors

THE mild winter has been marked by a succession of heavy fogs, rendering river and harbor navigation extremely hazardous. It is almost a miracle that some serious disaster has not been chronicled. Some time ago, a foreign inventor devised a fog-dispeller, which the published descriptions declared to be partially successful in dispersing fog within a limited radius of about an acre of the surrounding atmosphere. The secret of his invention was not disclosed, however, and so an experiment which might have proved of great value to the world was apparently lost. Here is an attractive field for ingenious American chemists and electricians. The inventor of a practical fog dispeller would not only reap a rich reward financially, but his name would be handed down to posterity as that of a great public benefactor.

Pedestrian Dangers

AUTOMOBILE accidents are increasing at an alarming rate. Almost daily, we read of pedestrians being maimed or killed by careless drivers, who are either exceeding the speed limit or neglecting to take reasonable precautions for the safety of the public. At present, the laws for the regulation of automobiles are sadly ineffective. It is not an infrequent thing to see machines driven at high speed along roads at night, in the open country and without lights. On one such road along the Hudson River, a few days ago, two victims of wild auto night-riders were found dead, the reckless chauffeur who had run them down having hastened away after the “accident” to avoid arrest. This is only one many similar instances lately, in which the law-breaking autoist has fled to avoid the consequences of his crime.

It would seem that the passion for speed has tendency to drive out the spirit of humanity from the heart of the auto devotee. A man responsible for a tragedy as the result of reckless driving should be made to suffer both fine and imprisonment. It has been seriously suggested that incorrigible violators of the speed laws should be compelled, in aggravated cases, to submit, as an additional punishment, to confiscation of their machines. To such offenders this would probably be the severest punishment that could be inflicted. Whether confiscation could be legally enforced or not is a question for courts and lawyers to decide. As matters now stand, it is evident that more stringent laws are urgently needed for the protection of pedestrians in nearly all the States. It would be a politic and graceful thing for the Automobile Associations to take the initiative, and work for the passage of law that will effectually suppress the violators within their own camp and guarantee public safety in the future.

Dinners for School Children

LAST year teachers in the public schools of New York found that many of the children in the poorer districts came to school without having had any breakfasts, or having had food of such poor quality as to sorely impair the working ability of the pupil. Efforts were made to remedy this state of affairs by a number of organizations, with more or less success. Recently the question of schools supplying proper food at noon-time has come up, not necessarily in the poorer districts, but in places where some of the pupils have to go long distances to reach their homes, to snatch a hurried lunch and then rush back in time for the afternoon session.

In the Boston High Schools there are lunch rooms and the plan has been tried with success in some of the other large cities. In most cases, however, the food has been sold by some one who has secured the contract, and is not supplied by the school.

New York City is trying a new experiment that is being watched by educators with interest. The principal of one of the largest grammar schools felt that it was necessary to do something toward providing the children under his care with noon lunches. This he undertook to do at cost. He received the approval of the Board of Education, and if it proves successful it will be taken up in other schools. The plan is worthy of a thorough trial.

Body and mind are too closely linked to expect good work from one while the other is neglected. Our modern system demands the care and proper development of both, and the question whether the pupils may secure proper lunches is just as important to our educators, or should be, as the question as to which arithmetic they should use.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 9, 1908

	PAGE
Christmas Morning in the Colonial Days . . .	Cover
Men Who Made a Revolution (Illustrated) . . .	983, 984
A Great Legal Contest (Illustrated) . . .	984
Getting Ready for the Next Census (Illustrated) . . .	985
The Message to the Shepherds. Christmas Sermon By David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D. . . .	986, 987
How to Give Joy at Christmas (Illustrated) . . .	987
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM . . .	988
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated) . . .	989
The First Christmas (Illustrated) . . .	990
Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts The Little Doctor (Illustrated) . . .	991, 1002
Serial Story by Agnes Lowe Ellis . . .
The World’s Redeemer Born. Music . . .	992
Miss Ethel Roosevelt’s Reception (Portrait) . . .	992
The Journey of the Christmas Spirit (Illustrated) . . .	993
Liebreich. By John Luther Long . . .	994, 995, 1000
OUR MAIL-BAG . . .	996, 997
English Suffragettes (Illustrated) . . .	997
A Soldier-Preacher (Portrait) . . .	998
At the Bethlehem Manger. By Mrs. M. Baxter . . .	998
Christ’s Birth. Christian Endeavor Topic . . .	999
Open Doors. Epworth League Topic . . .	1001

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Royal Funeral Services in Peking

Prince Ching

THE ceremony at the Imperial Palace in Peking, November 22, when the members of the diplomatic corps presented the condolences of their respective governments on the deaths of the late Emperor and the Dowager-Empress of China, was one of the most impressive ever witnessed in China. Prince Ching, Commander of the City Guard, secret friend of the legations during the siege and, later, Police Commissioner in the capital, appeared, for the first time since the death of their majesties, officially as the head of the Foreign Board. It was said that the Empress-Dowager called him to her side shortly before her death and through him approved the edicts declaring Prince Pu Yi the heir presumptive and Prince Chun the Regent of the Empire. With Prince Ching appeared at this funeral service the heads of the various governmental departments, with the members of the imperial clan and 7,000 minor officials, all dressed in white. Our legation was represented by three of its members. The spectacle, as the foreigners approached the palace, was unprecedented. The catafalque of the Emperor, draped in black satin embroidered with dragons, was on a dais in the Chien-Ching-Kung Hall. The large image of a bird upon the throne, emblematic of the glory and beauty that good government sheds all over the world, was covered by a white curtain, as were also the numerous mirrors in the throne room. White satin screens, set at an oblique angle to the catafalque, shut out from the view of the foreign representatives a numerous gathering of mourning palace attendants and servants. Prince Chun stood at the table beside the catafalque of the Emperor. The Dowager-Empress lay in state in her own private palace called Huang-Chi-Tien, where on November 3 she had received the congratulations of the diplomats on the occasion of the seventy-fourth anniversary of her birth. This palace is located in the east wing of the Forbidden City. The palaces of kings and queens cannot keep out the messenger of death. The rulers of 300,000,000, as well as the humblest persons, have to pass through the portals of the tomb. There is universal lamentation in China as there was among God's chosen people when Josiah died.

And he died, and was buried in one of the sepulchres of his fathers. And all Judah and Jerusalem mourned for Josiah. (II. Chron. 35: 24.)

The Sewer Disaster in Brooklyn

A shocking accident occurred in Gold Street, Brooklyn, where a gas explosion in a new sewer which was being constructed entombed fifteen or twenty men. The difficulties of recovery were so great that thirty-six hours elapsed before the first body was taken out of the ruins. Three huge boulders had to be blasted and the flimsy frame buildings on both sides of the street had to be braced up with timber supports. The water, fire and police departments were each charged by citizens with some share of the responsibility for the accident, and for the tardy rescue of victims. When the accident occurred, there was one brave woman who saw a little child down among the debris. She rushed down, caught it and climbed the crumbling hill with it to safety. She looked and saw another child in danger of being overwhelmed with the caving in of the sides. She rushed down again and rescued that child also. A woman's instincts and courage always rise to such emergencies.

The public improvement of our cities is necessary and commendable; but the reckless loss of life by the negligence of irresponsible agents is appalling and should be stopped. The pit on Gold Street is only a type of the moral sewers and explosions in the sewers, entombing the best talent and hope of the land. It is a fortunate thing that there are so many good people bent on closing up these sinks of iniquity and saving our citizens from the ruin of these moral pitfalls.

Let not the pit shut her mouth upon me. (Ps. 69: 15.)

Locating Wells

For centuries, the divining rod, the hazel switch and other devices have been used for locating springs of water underground. Wizards have been found in many communities, whose discovery of water for wells has been little less than marvelous. A scientific device for finding underground currents of water has been invented by a Frenchman named Dienert. It was suggested by the instrument known as Daguin's acoustèle, a mechanism for the analysis of sounds which looks somewhat like a megaphone. To use it, a hole about a foot deep is sunk in the earth, and the large end of the horn is placed in it; tubes are attached to the small end, and inserted in the operator's ears. If there is underground running water anywhere in the vicinity, it may be heard

"The Temple of Heaven," Peking, where the Chinese Emperors Worship plainly, the sound resembling that of the wind in a forest. Still water, of course, cannot be detected. Experiments with this instrument prove that it is likely to be used practically. In the discovery of veins of water, thousands and tens of thousands of dollars are expended in fruitless boring in the earth. It is said that a woman near Hook Mountain, on the Hudson, not very long ago spent several thousand dollars in driving through the rock for water, without obtaining a drop.

In the search for the Water of Life, there are so many wells that hold no water, but by the help of the Bible as an instrument, there is no difficulty in finding Christ, who is a well of water springing into everlasting life.

The water that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life. (John 4: 14.)

Brave Boy and Brave Man

John Nicholls, the sheriff of a county in South Carolina, by singular courage recently saved a prisoner who was in his custody, from death at the hands of a mob. A correspondent in Spartanburg, S. C., has written a New York daily an account of the singular heroism of Sheriff Nicholls, when a boy on one of the battlefields of the Civil War. At the battle of Spottsylvania Court House, young Nicholls went from the shelter of the Confederate rifle pits, under a murderous fire, to carry water to a wounded Federal officer. The writer says:

With canteen and ramrod in hand, he was out of the pit in a jiffy. The dust from shots flew all about him, as he fell on his belly and wormed his way across the open to the wounded man. He was a target for an army. He got to the soldier, or close enough to fasten the canteen to the ramrod and hand it to him. The man wanted to fasten his watch to the ramrod, but Nicholls refused, and wormed his way back to the pit and fell over in my arms. Yes, his clothing was pierced by numerous shots, but his skin was not broken. I will always believe that nothing short of God in heaven kept and protected him.

What an ideal officer of the law Nicholls made, and how much needed such men are in the North, as well as in the South! His beautiful conduct in carrying water to a wounded enemy, in a boy of his age, was Christlike. There were many instances on both sides of the struggle that were beautiful and divine.

Therefore if thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink. (Rom. 12: 20.)

Rattlesnakes and Mice

At the Bronx Park Zoo, in New York, a keeper was giving the rations of mice to the rattlesnakes, when a fearful fight occurred in one of the cages. The cage contained two diamond rattlers and one Mexican rattler, all three among the largest rattlesnakes in captivity in this country. When the mice were dropped into the cage at the top, two mice fell in the same spot, and a third landed a few inches away. The two diamond rattlers, according to their custom of gazing at their prey before striking it, looked at the two mice which lay together. They stared at the mice for several minutes and then made a lunge at the same instant. Their sinuous bodies uncoiled side by side, and their heads brushed each other. Each pressed the other away from the food. So rapid was the double movement that the eyes of those who looked on could scarcely follow. What followed was so quick that at times the two snakes appeared only a blur of brown and white in the cage. Lunging at each other, they sank their fangs into each other's heads and necks and bodies. Now and then they would draw away, coil, then lunge again with mouths open and fangs exposed. There came no sound from the cage except the angry rattle, which sounded at times like a hive of bees, and the rasping sound of their bodies on the sand and gravel which covers the bottom of the cage. The fight lasted about five minutes. The keepers were powerless to stop the conflict without danger of releasing the serpents. The fight ended as suddenly as it began. The reptiles ceased their struggling and coiled themselves in opposite corners. Neither would touch the mice, which the Mexican rattler afterward devoured. Each of the two snakes was severely wounded. Dr. Raymond L. Ditmars, curator of the Reptile House, said after the fight that the rattlesnake is immune to the poison from the fangs of one of its kind, so that it is likely that neither will die from the effect of its wounds.

There is a good deal of the swine in man, which prompts him to push his neighbor away from the food in the trough; also a streak of the rattlesnake in him, which will prompt him to fight over a mouse, or pretty nearly everything else that measures rivalry or desire. The fangs of a rattlesnake are merciful compared with the venom and malice which some people carry in their hearts against their rivals and enemies. One of the most difficult tasks the grace of God has to do is to cure this venom and hate in the human heart.

Turn from thy fierce wrath. (Ex. 32: 1.)

THE FIRST CHRISTMAS

IT WAS ushered in by a wondrous light from heaven, even at the midnight hour. It was acclaimed by the singing of angels. Shepherds on the plains of Bethlehem saw the light and heard the music. It was all too wonderful for their human sense, and they were affrighted. But they recovered themselves when in sweet tones an angel told them not to be afraid. And when the angel told them where they would find the new-born child, the holy one of God, they willingly let their eager feet carry them thither. The swaddling clothes, the manger—

From Painting by Da Vinci

A Heavenly Messenger

by these signs, the angels said, they would find the child. And they found him. Did they travel over the cold and the snow? No; for in Bethlehem the fields were all abloom at that time of the year, and it was no hardship for the shepherds to be watching their flocks in the open with the bright stars shining over head. They found Mary, the mother mild; Joseph, the tender foster father; and, best of all, Jesus Christ, the little child. They recited then what they had seen and heard of the heavenly sights and sounds in the field. The mother hid their words in the treasure chest of her heart.

And when the shepherds had paid their tribute of love they returned in gladness of heart to their flocks, which were hardly awake yet in the early dawn. And all along the way they scattered the good tidings of the God-child born upon the earth.

My heart is made a manger
For the coming of the Lord;
He's sweetly born within me
Whom heavenly hosts adored;
The morning star above me
Now bids my darkness cease;
The angel choirs are hailing
My glorious Prince of Peace.—W. F. C.

Childhood Blessed

Christ came and brought Godlike childhood to the earth. The Divine became a child to teach us that a child may become almost divine. The Germans have a beautiful legend which they more than half believe, that on Christmas morn the Child born in a stable revisits the earth to look after all other little ones; that from the little prince in his royal cradle to the baby sleeping like himself in the straw, none are left unvisited by him, that he may know how men have welcomed those whom he gave as a special legacy into their tenderest keeping. This legend is but one form of stating the fact that Bethlehem has brought Christ near to the child heart. But what of the children before Christ came? Even in cultured Rome parents continually abandoned their newborn children by placing them at the base of the Lactarian column by night that they might escape the inconvenience, anxiety or burden of bringing them up—rich and poor alike. The helpless little ones were destroyed by birds of prey and wild beasts, or met a worse fate in being taken by evil men and women who deformed them in order to make successful beggars out of them, or sold them to be brought up for vicious purposes. Constantine, the first Christian Emperor of Rome, made the first law for the protection of children. The recognition of childhood is one of the best thermometers of the progress of an age or a nation, and a sure test of the narrow or full development of Christianity in its midst. Christianity startled the world with the new doctrine that to develop the greatest manhood we must "become as little children." If any other system of ethics had been searched for the model of manhood, it would have presented stoical firmness, bold indifference to circumstances, or some other rough, stern virtue as our model; but Christ, as represented in a beautiful painting in the National Gallery at Edinburgh, lays his hand on the head of a little child as it rests trustingly on its mother's knee in the midst of the disciples and says: "Except ye become as little children, ye can in no wise enter into the kingdom of heaven."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. W. F. CRAFTS

Wisdom is oftentimes nearer when we stoop
Than when we soar.

Little Town of Bethlehem

Of all places in the world where one would choose to spend Christmas is Bethlehem! Many persons accomplish this desire, and so the Christmas throng at Bethlehem is great. One might easily walk there from Jerusalem, as the distance is only about six miles. We approach it walking. Oh, such a view! These very meadows in which Ruth had gleaned; these very valleys in which David had led his flock; above all else, this very field where suddenly the shepherds had heard the first "Gloria in Excelsis," the rugged wilderness of Judea extending beyond, and bounded in a far-away dreamy east by the blue soft hills of Moab. The town is built mostly of white stone and this gives it rather a dazzling appearance. It is situated on a high ridge, facing the northeast. The streets are irregular, narrow and slanting, in which are mixed humans, goats, camels and donkeys. The children are in gay attire and the women wear a picturesque costume peculiar to Bethlehem. There is the invariable head-dress, brimless hats, six or seven inches high, covered with rows of glittering golden coins, and on each side a string of larger coins which join on the breast. When in full dress a thin transparent veil completes the hat, hanging down two or three yards over the shoulders, and embroidered on the ends with richly-colored silks. In Bethlehem are seen the women of Palestine at their best. We are glad that it is so. Many shops are along the street, in which one finds pearl carvings, as this is the industry peculiar to Bethlehem; also olive wood carvings.

The Shepherds Come to See the Christ-Child at Bethlehem

The centre of attraction is the Church of the Nativity, which is conspicuous by its size among the small buildings of the town. The church was built in A.D. 330 by the Empress Helena, mother of Constantine. Connected with the church is a group of buildings, which include Latin, Greek and Armenian convents. On all sides one hears the monotonous intonations of the monks. And everywhere are the Turkish guards whose presence alone prevents bloodshed among the warring sects. We naturally ask the question: Is the location of the church authentic? Lieutenant Condor tells us: "The tradition which indicates the grotto in the old Basilica Bethlehem as the site of the stable where Christ was born, is the most venerable in existence, place being noticed by Justin Martyr in the second century. It is almost the only site which we can trace earlier than the time of Constantine, and tradition seems to me credible, because throughout this part of Palestine there are innumerable instances of stables cut in rock, resembling the Bethlehem grotto."

Our guide leads us down the winding stone steps

From Painting by Da Vinci

One of the Singing Angels to the traditional manger cave of our Saviour's birth. We can trace a little of the cave itself by the lights of countless faintly glimmering oil lamps. We are told that a silver star marks the precise place where the Christ-child lay in the manger. Many pilgrims kneel and frantically kiss it!

O purple plains, O starlit steeps,
O kingly diadem!
Each faithful heart forever keeps
Its Bethlehem.

The Larger Christmas

Christmas fills not a day only, nor a month, nor even a season, but all centuries and all countries.

A faint ray of the new star fell upon Adam and Eve in the hour of the fall. Balaam saw the star centuries before the Magi, and Isaiah yet more clearly.

In the prophet Malachi's day it had become so near that it was seen to be a flying sun. To the Magi it was an apostle to the Gentiles. John, in Revelation, saw it afar in the heavenly vision as "the bright and morning star."

A Light for All Nations

The holy light of that Child's face which Correggio, the famous Italian painter, represents as lighting up the dark stable where he was born has shone out into all nations, and now the whole world keeps Christmas day. No art gallery in the world would hold half the great paintings of the Child whose name is Wonderful; neither could one volume hold all the poems of the Nativity. That which so lights the world can not be a mere human candle—it must be a star of heaven! The only ancient king who rules to-day is one whose first palace was a stable and who had no permanent earthly home. Still his word is with power.

That there shall dawn at last a glorious day
When He, who cradled in the manger lay,
In all the majesty of Heaven arrayed,
Shall rule the universe His hands have made.

"A Splendid Book"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have to-day received the book of the White House and am ever so glad for it. I think it is splendid and am well pleased. I think that every family ought to take THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. It is full of up-to-date reading, and it is a magazine that anybody can take up and read.
Philadelphia, Pa. MRS. L. M. MEYER.

The Little Doctor

A New Serial Story Written for "The Christian Herald"

By AGNES LOWE ELLIS

CHAPTER I

DON'T move a step, George. Isn't she beautiful?"

"What is the matter, Dudley?"

"Why, look at that superb creature at the turn of the road. She carries herself like a queen."

"Ah, Dudley, that is Miss Danforth, the only child and petted darling of old Squire Danforth. His summer residence lies between those two hills yonder, and that is the avenue leading to Miss Marian's home."

"George, couldn't you contrive to have me meet her? Is she really as attractive as she appears?"

"Yes, my boy, she has a complexion pure as alabaster, and lovely brown hair and eyes. Indeed, when looking into the depths of those heavenly eyes, I question myself whether he be in or out of the body."

"George, have you lost your heart entirely? You have aroused my curiosity to such a pitch that, to tell the truth, I can hardly wait for an introduction."

"Why, man, the old gentleman guards his treasure with such vigilance that he is a fortunate man indeed who ever gets a peep at her."

"Is that so?" (with a low whistle). "You have the pleasure of her acquaintance, have you not?"

"Well, scarcely that; I have had the pleasure of an introduction at the door of the little country church at Branksome, and a glance from those heavenly eyes; but, aside from that, I have had to worship from a distance, realising the pangs of the love-lorn one who was 'so near and yet so far.'"

George Hunter and Dudley Verner had been college chums. Now they were about to make a start in active life, George as a lawyer and Dudley as a physician. They were spending their vacation together, before taking to the practice of their chosen professions, in this beautiful town of Branksome, to which George's mother (a widow) had but lately removed, and whose home her son's friends were always welcome.

The quaint town, with its one hotel, postoffice and two stores, was a favorite resort for those who cared more for pure air and sunshine, and the quieting influences of the "simple life," than for the fleeting pleasures found in the fashionable summer resorts, where the giddy round of pleasure robs one of needed sleep and rest.

As the two young gentlemen wended their way toward the main street of the village, a crowd of loungers eyed them curiously, each ready with his remark on the "young swells," as they called them.

Just as they were about to enter the postoffice, the Squire's carriage was driven up, and the rather pompous old gentleman alighted.

His eye brightened as he caught sight of George, to whom he had been introduced the previous Sunday by a mutual friend, and with courtly grace he extended his hand in greeting.

"Good morning, Mr. Hunter. I see you are still in the neighborhood. Do you propose spending the summer here?"

"Yes, sir, I want to see all I can of our beautiful town before taking up my busy round of cares and discouragements. You know we are all reminded at the close of our school career that our pathway is to be full of thorns, and not all plain sailing."

With a sigh the old gentleman replied in a hurried manner, "Yes, yes, we all have our troubles, young man—but why do you say 'your town'? Is it not to be yours also? I have understood that the Mrs. Hunter, who bought the old Jackson property, is your mother, and a widow. Now, surely, your duty as a faithful son should keep you here. By the way, I have not noticed her at church. There has been only a young girl, besides yourself, in the family pew."

"My mother is an invalid, Squire Danforth. She has been delicate for years—so much so that she is seldom able to leave home, except for an airing during a cool, bright morning. The young lady you refer to is Miss San-who had been chatting with the postmaster, made his appearance.

"Pardon me, Squire Danforth," said George, "may I detain you for a moment to introduce Mr. Verner, who is spending his vacation with me?"

The Squire stopped just as he was about to motion the driver to bring the carriage to the door, and turned, bowing politely to George's friend. As the merry black eyes were lifted to his, he gave a start that was not unobserved by the young men, who, after a few commonplace remarks, turned from the old gentleman and entered the postoffice together.

"I say, George, what ailed the old man? Didn't he look and act rather queer? Was it the sight of me, or was it the annoyance of being detained a few minutes? Perhaps he may have

"There stood a fair young 'Rebekah'" born, my cousin, who, since she became an orphan, has been a member of our family. Much as I would like to take up my abode here, I hardly think that there is enough business in the way of deeds and wills to draw up and quarrels to settle, to justify a young aspirant for legal honors in settling here."

"Well, there is reason in what you say, and yet I am sorry to have you seek elsewhere for the living which I think the town owes you. May I tell you I should miss something if you put yourself where I shall not see you again, at least only at very rare intervals?"

As he uttered the last words, his eyes grew misty and he hurriedly said, "Good morning," just as Dudley, thought that I was too small for his notice."

"I cannot think he would feel any annoyance at that. He had just assured me that he rather liked me, and I think he should rather have been pleased than otherwise by an introduction to my particular friend."

"I wish he had taken a notion to invite you to call on him, George; and I am sure your loyalty to your friend would have made an opportunity for me to see the daughter he thinks too good for common mortals to look at."

"I might infer from your remark that you consider yourself an uncommon mortal. But have patience, Dudley. Who knows what the fates may have in store for you? As my old Scotch nurse used to say to me when I was impatient, 'Eh, Geordie, my lad, hae patience. Patience is the root o' wit.' This good old Elspeth is still a member of our household, dispensing words of wisdom as occasion offers. Whether she thinks I have gained in wisdom by the flight of years I cannot say, but I honor her teachings by passing them on to you."

The two friends had been quietly chatting in a corner of the large, airy room used as a postoffice. Now they passed out and walked in the direction of the railway station.

Here the usual crowd of loungers was to be seen, conspicuous among them Jack Green, or the "Branksome News," as he was often called, from the fact that he seemed to possess a never-failing fund of information in regard to everybody's business. Jack was usually able to tell of every newcomer, by the time that he had been twenty-four hours in town, whence he came, whither he was going, and whether he was married or single, rich or poor.

As our two friends approached the station, they noticed Jack, with his hat drawn down almost to his eyes, giving one the impression that all surrounding objects were shut from his view, and that he was intent upon his whittling. A close observer could see him cast a furtive glance from under the old hat, every time a new arrival came into view. As George and Dudley approached, he glanced up, and as they both took seats near him, remarked, "I reckon you are strangers hereabouts?"

"Correct, sir!" answered Dudley rather shortly.

"Wal now, stranger, you needn't be surprised at me axin' questions. Why, everybody in these parts knows Jack Green, and they as knows him knows he takes a sort o' interest in all hereabouts. You kind er made me think of an old acquaintance of mine as I hadn't seen for twenty years or thereabouts. That's why I spoke to you."

Seeing Dudley's face flame up as if he were about to make a sharp reply, George stepped over to the end of the bench where Jack was lounging and said, "Are you an old resident of Branksome?"

"Be I 'an old resident'? Wal, now, I rather think I be! Why, I've lived here since I was knee-high to a duck, and there hain't been many doin's in the neighborhood that Jack Green hain't had a hand in."

"I suppose you remember the town when it had very few inhabitants."

"Yes, stranger, I do. I can take you all around this here town and show you where the first white settler's cabin stood, and get you a drink out o' the old well that he dug—and there hain't no better water in the country to-day. That old well never has caved in, and its walls hain't got a loose stone in 'em, after all these years. Old Squire Danforth lives there now, and although he be rather high and mighty, you know, his housekeeper, old Mrs. Langdon, is a kind critter and just like a mother to that poor orphan lamb, Miss Marian. Say," he added, eyeing the haughty Dudley, who had been gradually drawing nearer, "would you like to see the old place? I am at your service this minute."

"I hardly like the idea of going to a place owned by a man whom I know

Continued on page 1001

Who Will Help Save Them?

DEAR DR. KLOPSCH: I am confident that not a few of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be interested in the following sad affair to which my attention has just been called.

Dr. J. C. Sherrill, who has been a missionary in Africa for more than nine years, and whose labors in leading the people to Christ have been greatly blessed of God, writes me as follows:

"I am sure you will be greatly surprised to hear of the death of our dear brother Jasper Grant, that prince in Israel. He was buried at Barraka, his home. His death means a great loss to the work at Plebo. He leaves a wife and eight children without any protection—and one hardly able to wait on the other. All are girls and we are expecting considerable trouble with their heathen families on both Brother Jasper's and his wife's side, and not only about the children but Sister Grant herself. According to their ancient custom, they are entitled to come in now and lay claim to the mother and the children, and sell them to heathen men for wives. This is the thing Brother Jasper always dreaded, and spoke of often to me. Is there no way to save this Christian family from being swallowed up by heathenism?"

Now, just a word as to who Jasper Grant was. Some years ago a brave young white woman left her home and loved ones in America and went as a missionary to Africa. Her name was Grace White.

She led Jasper out of heathenism to Christ, gave him a Christian name and taught him to lead his fellows to the Master. Several years ago, she laid down her life for Africa, and her bones lie bleaching in the cemetery at the old Barraka Mission. Jasper and one or two others have been carrying forward the work she began. He was not only rearing a Christian family, but had established a Christian town, composed of those of his people who had been saved through his labors. What I want to do is to save his family from heathenism, but in order to do so we must buy them outright at $30 a head. Now who will help do this? Two have already been provided for, but there are seven others. Who will buy a girl? If you, dear reader, wish to have a share in their redemption, send your money or your gift to Dr. Klopsch, editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Yours for God and humanity, BISHOP J. B. SCOTT.

Monrovia, Liberia, Africa.

Miss Ethel Roosevelt's Reception

ON DECEMBER 28 the President and Mrs. Roosevelt will give a reception in the White House in honor of their daughter, Miss Ethel Roosevelt, who will then make her formal entrance into Washington's social world. It is her mother's desire that Miss Ethel shall have the pleasure of making her debut while her father is still occupying the White House. Miss Roosevelt will take the position for a few months that was held by Miss Alice Roosevelt before she became the wife of Congressman Longworth, of Cincinnati, as a leader of the younger set.

Up to the present, Washington has only known Miss Ethel as a schoolgirl, interested in both her books and in outdoor life, which is a characteristic of most of the members of the Presidential household. She is a great favorite with her father, and she often accompanies him on long horseback rides about the District of Columbia and sometimes across the Potomac into Virginia. She is also fond of walking and may be seen almost any day, rain or shine, walking along Pennsylvania Avenue. In school she has been very popular with her classmates. While her face is not beautiful it is very pleasing, as she has much expression and perfect coloring.

No sooner was the announcement made that Miss Roosevelt was to make her debut than invitations to social affairs began to pour in upon the young lady. Most of the wives of the members of the Cabinet and other high officials will entertain her formally. The reception on the 28th will be notable for the prominent people who will be present, including members of the diplomatic corps. Miss Roosevelt will have as her guests several girl friends who also make their formal entrance into the capital's social life this winter.

Miss Ethel Roosevelt

Copyright by Virginia M. Pratt

THE WORLD'S REDEEMER BORN

A Christmas-Time Hymn

FANNY CROSBY

FRED SCHILLING

1. The winds had ceased their lul-la-by, The world in si-lence slept, And Ju-dah's shepherds
2. In won-der lost the watch-ers stood, O'erwhelmed with mute surprise, While harp and voice re-
3. Im-mor-tal peace on ea-gle wings, De-scending from a-bove, Caught up the soul in CHO.—O hal-lowed hour! O bliss-ful song! That thrilled the ear of morn, When mul-ti-tudes from o'er their fold Their night-ly vig-il kept; When, lo, an an-gel form ap-peared, And, spon-sive rang Har-mo-nious from the skies; The start-led earth from slum-ber woke To spir-ing theme, And sang re-deem-ing love; And still in sil-ver tones we hear The heav'n proclaimed The world's Re-deem-er born.

from Je-ho-vah's throne, A-round those fear-ful, trembling ones A sud-den glo-ry shone.
swell the might-y strain: All glo-ry be to God on high! Mes-si-ah comes to reign.
an-them sweet as then: All glo-ry be to God on high, Thro' Him good will to men!

Copyright by Biglow & Main Co.

Temperance Victories of 1910

THE great Auditorium building in Denver, seating about four thousand persons, was the convention hall of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union, which lasted from October 28. A preliminary day was devoted to School of Methods, which superintendent explained their work. new and young superintendent, who show exceptional ability this School and also the convention, was Mrs. Rose Wood-Allen Chapman, of Brooklyn, N. Another is Mrs. Edith Smith Davis, of Milwaukee, who two years ago succeeded Mrs. Mary H. Hunt as superintendent of the Department of Scientific Temperance Instruction in Schools and Colleges. During the past year Mrs. Davis has succeeded in having the children of the public schools of the United States write 800,000 essays upon temperance subjects.

A daughter of Mr. Davis has been chosen by the World's Women's Christian Temperance Union to go to Japan aid in the temperance educational work there. She went directly from the Denver convention in company with Mr. Katherine Lente Stevenson, of Boston, who under commission to go around the world strengthening the Unions which are already formed, and organizing others.

Over twenty thousand new members were added to the ranks of the National Women's Christian Temperance Union the past year. This large increase, together with the recent prohibition and local option victories, made the convention one of jubilation. The address of the president, Mr. Lillian M. N. Stevens, of Maine, was replete with cheering notes of victory. The "Dry Half Hour With the State Presidents" was also a time for praisefulness, as the large extent of saloonless territory was made very vivid when each president told of conditions in her State.

A mass-meeting was held on Sunday evening which was addressed by the Georgia Prohibition orator, Hon. Seaborn Wright. His theme was the capitalization of vice for the love of money. "There are probably 25,000 young men coming up in Denver," he said; "for money, you deliberately plan saloons to tempt and destroy these young men. The thing that is holding the saloon in our cities is not the appetite of the men who drink, but the avarice of the taxpayers. Remove the license fees and the saloons would be shut within a year."

Another notable address was that of Judge Benjamin B. Lindsay, the founder of the Juvenile Court system. He said that the liquor trade is largely responsible for the crimes committed by children. Children of drinking parents are forced into wage-earning when they should be in school.

Two new officers were elected, Mrs. Elizabeth F. Hutchinson, of Kansas, as treasurer, and Mrs. Frances P. Parks, of West Virginia, as corresponding secretary. Next convention will be held in Omaha.

Marcellus, N. Y.

MRS. MARTHA M. ALLEN.

"A Book That Gives Pleasure"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I received by express this morning the book entitled The Inside History of the White House, and I am delighted with it. Among the many beautiful and interesting books I have received through or along with your valuable paper at less than half price, I think the present book is not only interesting, valuable reading, but it is gotten up in a beautiful style, and adds greatly to one's library. I will take great pleasure in showing it to my friends and acquaintances.

Philadelphia, Pa.

ELBRIDGE G. STOUT.

The Journey of the Christmas Spirit

By ELEANOR H. PORTER

Author of "The Transformation of Margaret"

IT WAS Christmas eve. From the north came a keen, cold wind laden with powdery flakes of snow. The Spirit shivered—though not with cold; two women had brushed by him, and one had said: "It's so tiresome, you know—this Christmas shopping!"

The Spirit wavered and fell back to where the snow swirled into a big feathery drift, white and untrodden. For some minutes he stayed there motionless, a curious air of indecision mingling with the dejection of his attitude; then merry voices and shouts of laughter reached his ears, and he raised his head abruptly.

Down the street were trooping half a dozen youths and maidens, bright-eyed, rosy-cheeked, and smiling. The Spirit waited until they had quite passed, then, dejection and indecision all gone, he stepped into line and followed them.

Everywhere were a blaze of light and a riot of color. Scarlet bells and berries vied with the brilliancy of the glossy green leaves, and diamond dust and tinsel caught the light from numberless bulbs and gas jets, and sent it back scintillating with all the colors of the rainbow. The Spirit saw it all and smiled. He raised his head yet higher and squared his shoulders. He had the air of a king who has come into his own.

Before a toy-shop window the youths and maidens paused, and when, a moment later, they filed in at the swinging door, the Spirit trod close upon their heels. For a time he saw only the lights, the gay toys, the merry faces, and heard only the laughter and happy voices—then he saw the drawn face of a tired salesgirl, and heard the cry of a sleepy baby in a woman's arms. His face changed. The next moment he was out once more with the hurrying throngs on the street.

There were other Christmas windows after that, before which the Spirit paused, and other swinging doors through which he filed in the wake of some Christmas shopper; but no longer did he see the scarlet and green of the Christmas cheer—he saw only the weariness of long days of selling, and the fretfulness of long days of buying; and his heart grew sick within him.

"So it's come to this," he muttered, as he strode along, head down, and shoulders bowed. "It's come to this!"

"Once in Royal David's city," pealed the bells far up in the church tower, and the Spirit raised his eyes from the ground.

Across the street stood a great stone church whose wide-flung doors and illuminated windows seemed to bid the whole world a radiant welcome. Over each entrance hung a Christmas wreath, and from the tower above still pealed the Christmas music. The Spirit crossed the street and joined the throngs that were entering the doors.

It was an impressive service. The well-paid, well-trained choir sang sweetly of the Holy Child, and the deep-voiced, scholarly man in the pulpit referred to him most touchingly in his prayers. Even the lights burned softly, and cast a reverent glow over the silks and furs and laces of the kneeling worshippers. Yet the Spirit was not at peace; and long before it was time for the sermon to begin, he slipped from his seat.

Far down a side street he came to a small chapel, and here, too, a brightly-lighted doorway bade him enter, and once again he accepted the invitation.

There were no well-paid, well-trained singers here, no subdued lights, no silks and laces and jewels. Nor yet was there something else that the Spirit looked for anxiously—there was not a single face bearing the imprint of the real Christmas joy.

On the platform a weary-looking, earnest-faced man was speaking: "I tell you, my friends," he was saying, "we have lost it—the Christmas Spirit. Things have come to a sorry pass indeed when we dread the coming of Christmas."

The Spirit shivered and shrank lower in his seat. "At the first," continued the man on the platform, "at the first the idea of Christmas was the most beautiful thing under God's heaven. There was to be this one day when care and worry were to be done away with; when joy and peace were to reign supreme; when everyone was to forget self and give a simple token of love and good will to his nearest and dearest, not forgetting the poor at his gate."

The Spirit drew a long breath and sat more erect in his seat. It was not so hopeless, after all, he thought. This man at least knew.

"And what have we done with it—this Christmas celebration?" went on the earnest voice from the platform. "What have we done with it? We have made it an annual hurly-burly wherein peace and joy have no part; a frantic struggle to give any one and every one as much as—and a little more than—any one and every one gave us last year; and we come out of it with nerves worn to a frazzle and tempers strained to the breaking point. We—"

But the Spirit heard no more. With a groan that was as soundless as were his steps, he left his seat and hurried down the aisle toward the door.

"It's not true. I'll not believe it," he muttered. "Somewhere I'll find the home of the Christmas Spirit!"

On and on he sped. The streets grew broad and quiet. Brightly lighted stores gave way to somber, imposing-looking residences, though here and there an uncurtained window allowed a glimpse of blazing hearth or of glittering tree. Before one door a sleigh drew up with a jingle of bells, and two women stepped out. When they entered the house a moment without asking herself, 'Now for whom shall I buy that?'

"And as if that weren't trouble enough," continued Evelyn, after a pause for breath, "there were the presents themselves: the furs she bought in January were all moth-eaten before July. And so it went! No wonder she's a wreck. . . . Brrr! Where's that draft come from?" she finished with a shiver, as the Spirit swept past her chair on his way to the street.

It was nearly eleven o'clock when the Spirit stopped again. He was in the theatre district. All about him were music, laughter, and gay crowds. One after another he scanned the faces of the men and women; again and again he paused to listen to their words.

"Stockings? They're all filled," he heard one woman say. "I get the ready-made kind—all filled when you buy them. It's ever so much easier!"

"I know it; 'tis a bother," came the answer; and at the words the Spirit covered his ears with his hands and fled.

A "bother"—this sweet privilege that comes to a mother but once a year—a bother!

All night the Spirit wandered from street to street, and from town to town, with many a pause before lighted door or window. And as the hours passed his step grew slower, and his face became pale and drawn. Everywhere he heard the sighs of a weary, nerve-wrecked people. But at dawn, when the Christmas sun flooded the world with light, the Spirit once more took heart. Christmas had come. It was already now the Day. Let the past be blotted out.

Christmas! From end to end the earth was littered with bits of ribbon and squares of tissue paper. On every side rose the cries of Merry Christmas! Yet the Spirit sighed. Everywhere the strain had told. The arduous preparation had defeated its own ends. As for the "simple token of good will" that was to crown the day with love—even the children weighed their presents with a practiced hand, and looked their hobbyhorses in the mouth!

It was night when the Spirit once more reached the city streets. The lights, the laughter, they were all there; but with a frown he turned his back and strode swiftly down a narrower street whose windows did not flaunt the Christmas green.

The street was dirty and ill-paved. Here and there a drunken man reeled against a post. A woman, shivering in her rags, rubbed her numbed fingers and lifted them to her blue lips. The Spirit hesitated and almost turned back. Surely nowhere here, in the midst of all this gloom and misery could be found the thing he sought! Then from far down the street came the sound of music, and he lifted his head and passed on with irresolute steps.

A dozen children were singing. In spite of their rags their faces were aglow, and their eyes were dancing.

And I have not (it makes me sigh) one gift within my power;
'Tis winter, too, in me, and I have neither fruit nor flower,
they sang cheerily.

On both sides of the street doors and windows flew open.

The Spirit watched amazed. The song, the singers, the surroundings—he could not understand. Then a low voice came to his ears.

"Who are those children? Who taught them to sing?" a sweet-faced little woman was asking.

"An' don't ye know?" said a woman in the doorway. "They're lame Molly's kids. It's that little English girl what was hurt, ye know, last year. She's been teachin' them songs ter all the kids she could git hold of for weeks. She said Christmas was comin', an' that we oughter sing an' be happy an' make other folks happy. An' she said she couldn't go out an' do it, of course, bein' as how she couldn't walk, ye know, an' so she sent them. She told 'em ter sing it everywhere—all up an' down the streets. Kind o' pretty, now, ain't it? Hush! there they go again."

Yet let me give my thankful heart, O little Lord, to thee, Bless it and give it out again to other men from me, sang the children.

The Spirit smiled, his face alight with sudden joy. He had found his own.

PLAYING AT SANTA CLAUS

Do you know that Christmas is coming?
You must not be bad or cross,
For Teddy and I together
Are playing we're Santa Claus.

I've lots of presents to give you,
I've ever so much to do,
I'm playing this is a snow-plow
And I'm hurrying home to you.

later, the Spirit entered too. He was still at their side when, with the mistress of the mansion, they stood before a great tree in the back parlor.

"Oh, how lovely!" cried the two women who had come in the sleigh.

"Think so?" murmured their hostess, with a sigh. "To tell the truth I'm so tired I don't know how it looks—and I don't know that I care!"

"Oh, Evelyn—and it's Christmas!"

"Yes, I know," confessed Evelyn, wearily. "Rank heresy and all that; but I can't help it. Why, girls, I've bought two hundred presents in the last two weeks, and by the time the two-hundredth one was reached I didn't have an atom of wit left."

"You poor thing!" laughed the taller of her two visitors. "You should do as Ruth Seymore said she was going to do—begin the 26th of December to prepare for the next Christmas."

"My dear!" cried Evelyn in a mockingly tragic voice. "Have you seen Ruth Seymore—lately?"

"Why, no; I don't know that I have."

"Well, she's a wreck—a total wreck; and 'twas Christmas that did it."

"A wreck? Then she didn't carry out her ideas!"

"But she did—and that's just what's the matter," laughed Evelyn. She said she had the whole thing down to a system as fine as the multiplication table, and she thought it was going to be perfect. Not a store could she go into, not a thing could she see

LIEBEREICH*

By JOHN LUTHER LONG

I THE HOUSE THAT HE AND EMMY BUILT

"H E'D be better off," said Mrs. Schwalm, referring to the possible death of old Liebereich. "You don't mean you'd be?" grinned Hermann Schlimm.

He had drifted into Mrs. Krantz's kitchen, among the women, after the funeral. No one gave him any attention.

Old Liebereich's wife had just been buried, and they were met to pay Mrs. Krantz their respects. She had been the "next-door neighbor" through Mrs. Liebereich's illness.

There was some strawberry preserve presently, and some "field tea."

Then Mrs. Krantz said to Mrs. Schwalm: "You had better go now."

Mrs. Schwalm was "next door" on the other side. She would now housekeep for old Liebereich for a week. Then Mrs. Engwein, who lived next to Mrs. Krantz, would take her turn, and so on while old Liebereich lived—which it was thought would not be long. For no one ever went to "the poor-house" or "the home" from this German vicinage.

These things were so well understood that they were not even discussed at this gathering. But there was a well-defined understanding that the brief management of old Liebereich would be difficult. Mrs. Schwalm rose to go.

"He won't fold his trousers unless you make him," warned Mrs. Krantz.

"And I've heard," said another, "that he never hangs 'em on the back of a cheer if he kin put 'em on the floor."

Old Liebereich had an odious reputation for this sort of thing.

"You know Emmy she spoiled him."

"If he didn't do things, she done 'em."

"That's a good way to spoil 'em!"

Mrs. Krantz warned again: "You got to keep the clock on him all the time, or it's no use. At six he's got to eat his supper. You'll have to push him right in his cheer, and see that he gits things in his mouth. If you don't, you'll have to clean 'em off the floor. Seven, to bed with him. Yesterday he says to me, says he: 'I ain't no baby! Lemme alone! I kin git to bed myself.' But I had him asleep by that time."

Mrs. Schwalm sighed. It was plain that she was going to a house of trouble. But it was her duty, and she would do it, as they all would.

I do not know at what point, precisely, along the pike, east and west from old Liebereich, the "next-door neighbor" obligation ceased. It was very far. Nevertheless, before the year which succeeded the death of his wife had passed, its courtesies had been exhausted. Each neighbor had served two turns, and each had murmured dismally at the prospect of a third. Finally, they all joined in discussing out-and-out rebellion against custom and Liebereich.

Indeed, one morning the doctor, whose business it was to keep the people up to their duties, found an interregnum. He brought Mrs. Krantz from her house to old Liebereich's as one does a detected criminal.

"I've had three turns a'ready," she defended.

"The man has had no breakfast," said the doctor. "He must eat while he lives!"

"Well, he'd be better off, and so would we, if he was—"

The doctor stopped her with a solemn uplifted finger: "'Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me.'"

She thought it made no difference that she gave grudgingly. But old Liebereich felt the touch of impatience. And he saw that she swept the dirt into a corner, stood the broom where it did not belong, and left the stale water in his pitcher.

"You git out!" he quavered senilely. "I kin housekeep for myself!"

"Git in your clothes or I'll—"

He did it so suddenly, in his fright, that Mrs. Krantz's humor returned, and she laughed. She was dressing him. He broke out afresh at this evidence of safety:

"I built this here house before I was twenty-one or you was born—I did. My mother she says, says she: 'Bill, soon it will be a man in the house. Don't you think you'd better git the house? You and Emmy's mighty thick.' I took the hint. And, on the morning I got to be twenty-one, here I was! And there"—he pointed to the other side of the fireplace—"was Emmy! She and me done it all—together. She drewed the plan. You see them bricks that ain't the right color? Emmy laid 'em! Yessir! With her little hands—and a trowel—and mortar! They are all right except the color. I says, says I, 'Take 'em right out!' But she threw the mortar on me, and it went in my hair and eyes, and she had to wash it out—that's why they was never changed. And I'm glad they wasn't. Whenever I look at 'em—one of 'em's a little loose—I kin see my Emmy laying 'em! Well, you never see nothing as nice, I'll bet you, as Emmy laying bricks! Old Gaertner made the bricks—out there where the boys swim now. That was all clay once. None of the ground clods like you git in bricks nowadays! It's too long for you to remember, I expect. You not more'n sixty-five or so." Then his mind flew back to the cause of his rebellion, and he was all the more angry that he had forgotten it in thinking of Emmy. "And now you want to boss me! I won't stand it. Git out! You're just a spring chicken."

"You shut up!" cried Mrs. Krantz. At this anathema he gasped in fresh fear.

"Betsy," he said humbly when he could speak, "you're too young to talk to me like that!"

"I'm going on seventy!" snapped Mrs. Krantz; which boast was untrue. "So?"

Old Liebereich caught the insincerity and turned to inspect her.

"Tain't so!" he said, with old-fashioned passion against a lie. "You think you kin shut me up that-a-way and I'll go to bed easy! You git out!"

"If you don't take keer I will!" cried the exasperated housekeeper. "Let's see what the Lord says!"

She closed her eyes and put a finger on a text of the Bible which lay open there, meaning, if it were favorable, to take him at his word and leave the consequences to heaven.

But what she read was:

"Verily I say unto you, Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

II

EMMY AND HE WERE NEVER APART

WHEN seven o'clock came, old Liebereich, unrebuked, still reviled her and her housekeeping. For the Scriptures had spoken and the woman knew her duty. She did it. And not a word delayed or hastened by an instant old Liebereich's relentless progress to bed.

Even when he was there he said:

"You can't keep no house! My Emmy kin beat you all! Look at that!"

It was an andiron which had become dull.

"When my Emmy gits back you kin go to grass!"

But the last word was mumbled in the delicious sleep Mrs. Krantz had brought him.

Then Mrs. Krantz humbly polished the dulled andiron, cleaned the dirt out of the corners, restored the broom to its rightful corner, folded old Liebereich's trousers and hung them over the back of a chair, lighted the lamp, shaded it, looked again at that Scriptural text, as if to ask whether every cross had been borne, then went out, to return at five in the morning. For old Liebereich was permitted to sleep late. He was no trouble when he slept.

Now, while old Liebereich sleeps, I shall tell you some things you ought to know. In the idiom of the vicinage he was considered "funny," which means only queer. Happiness had made him so, they said. His most constant and odious boast was that he had loved his wife for eighty years. It began, he said, when he was four and she was born.

And old Liebereich did not know that she was dead. Something had dulled his faculties when they told him she would die, and now he believed (as they told him, so that he would not "bother" them) that she was at her sister's in Maryland to get well, and would be home soon. So the curious jerk of his head toward the door by the fireplace meant only that he was vigilant for his wife's return. The neighbors thought it part of his aberration.

But even the little intelligence he retained made out this return to have been logically too long delayed. It was no longer "very soon," as they had at first told him; it was scarcely "soon," as they had at last told him.

And Christmas was coming!

"Do you think she will be here for Christmas?" he asked each one of them. They assured him of this.

"Then I'll hang up the old stockings and su'prise her!"

Here, again, I must explain that they had always cherished the element of surprise in their Christmas giving.

You will have seen that old Liebereich was living too long for his neighbors. I must be careful how I put their sentiments into words, so that injustice be done them. I think I had better say that it began to seem to them like effrontery for him to live on. They said oftener now and with greater unction that he would be better off. And they answered Hermann Schlimm's query (in the second paragraph of this story), when he repeated it, with accumulating anger now.

But you are not to suppose that old Liebereich was made unhappy by the least knowledge of this. On the contrary, nothing of it reached him. He found another reason for their brusqueness. They were simply women—and unlike Emmy.

One day, Mrs. Schwalm, wearily responding to his questions about his wife, asked him why he did not write to her. This at least, she thought cunningly, would consume time, keep him quiet, and give death added opportunity.

Now, in all his thoughts there had never been that one.

"Why, you see," he said, "Emmy and me was never apart for a day. It was no need to write. And," he went on, "I ain't no scholar. But—say—you got any ink?"

The letter was a secret office which he attended to himself. It took many days. But he was very happy afterward, and delivered it to Mrs. Schwalm and Mrs. Krantz, who were to get a stamp and mail it.

"What we going to do with it?" whispered Mrs. Schwalm. "Burn it?"

"No. Open it."

However, Mrs. Schwalm, who was known to be sentimental, opposed this. "But it's got to be answered."

This was so. Mrs. Krantz cumulated her arguments.

"He'll ask for the answer a dozen times a day till you're crazy!"

"Well, anyhow, let's wait a little. He may die any day," was the way Mrs. Schwalm temporized.

"You're interfering with the Lord's business!" chided the curious Mrs. Krantz, finally.

III

"VERGISSNICHTMEIN"

SO, WHILE they went away with this letter which was never to be mailed, old Liebereich sat by the fire in the fireplace which he had built, and rocked gently, and sang old German songs, and would not go to bed, but fell asleep there. And even in his sleep he was found singing:

Blau ist ein Blumlein
Das heiszt Vergissnichtmein—

None of us will ever agree with those old German wives, I think. How could old Liebereich ever be better off—how could any one—than singing old German songs by the fire and waiting for the coming of his wife—and Christmas?

And he got an answer to his letter. It told him very briefly not to worry, that she would be home at Christmas. It was signed "Emmy."

For the wives had said among themselves that God would understand.

Continued on next page

From Heinrich, by John Luther Long. Published by special permission of The Macmillan Company. Copyright, 1904, by The Century Company.

LIEBEREICH

Continued from page 994

Just as if they understood God! If I should take him, all would be well. Not, He would find a way. It was because they thought God would understand that they had opened that pitiful letter of old Liebereich's. He spoke of his loneliness; how he had waited for her without complaint; how, now, he could wait no longer. At the end he told her, with the imperiousness of a husband, that she must come home. They read this; they saw the childish blots; they knew where his half-palsied hands had missed the line, then recovered it; finally they read the boyish signature with dry eyes.

Then they wrote that reply. I hope that neither you nor I could have done this—with dry eyes. But the night before Christmas arrived, and old Liebereich's wife had not come. Nevertheless, he had no doubt. No one had ever lied to him except Mrs. Krantz. And he had never lied. And here was her letter. There was her name.

They came in and found him reading the letter.

"My Emmy never fooled me yet," he told them exultingly. "She'll come. Only she's late a little."

He put the letter in their eyes. "Don't it say she'll be home at Christmas?"

And I hope that neither you nor I have ever had that happen to us—such a letter thrust into our eyes!

When they whispered among themselves he grew cunning, and pretended to sing, while he listened. What he heard made him think that she was already come, but was in hiding to surprise him. Something was to happen the moment he went to sleep. And he decided that they meant to bring her at that moment. Well, he liked that. To surprise he had ever planned himself was quite so fine. Emmy was to bring his Christmas gift!

But what they had spoken about was the paleness of his old face, and how he had recently "failed." For he could not sleep now, or eat, for watching and waiting.

And old Liebereich carried his cunning on to a desperate end. He pretended to be prodigiously sleepy. Yet, when they would have hustled him off to bed, he suddenly and savagely rebelled, stamped his feet, and put them out of the house, in a specious fury they could not withstand.

"I kin put myself to bed," he cried happily after them. "I ain't no baby. I won't be bossed in my own house!" But the moment he had closed the door upon them he laughed.

And when he pulled down the blinds he did not know that he shut out their sleeping eyes.

It all had made him tired.

IV

THE NIGHTSHIRT WITH THE FEATHER-STITCHING OF BLUE

HE UNLOCKED the door by the fireplace, presently, and lighted two new candles. Then he got from the bottom drawer the nightshirt with the blue feather-stitching about the collar, and put it on. His trousers lay on the floor.

"Now," he laughed defiantly, "what will Mrs. Schwalm say? Let her say!"

For you must know that such things as this adorned nightshirt had been banished to the bottom drawer, since it was commanding, as far too frivolous for his years. You will also observe that old Liebereich expected Mrs. Schwalm to see him in this garment and to rebuke him. But it was about this that he was so very reckless. For at the moment of its discovery his wife would have arrived, and then, in his own words, they might all go to grass!

But this obliges me to speak of old

Lieberreich's cunning plan, or, which perhaps is better, to let him tell it for you as he now told it to himself in the kitchen of the house he and Emmy had built.

"They'll bring her in that door by the fireplace, all dressed for Christmas. And they'll all be crowding in behind her to see what I'll do. Well, they'll see! Oh, they'll see! I wish it would be early morning and the sun come through the door. I expect I kin wait that much longer. And mebbey the bells'll ring. They'll sneak her right up to my bed, and then they'll holler, 'Merry Christmas, Liebereich! Wake up!'"

"But I'll fool 'em. I'll hug Emmy right afore 'em all, and let 'em know that I've fooled 'em! And I'll laugh at Mrs. Schwalm. So will Emmy. And after that—" Now what could there be after that? "After that we'll just be happy. That's all."

Meanwhile he tidied the room as it had never been tidied before, and then fixed his thick white hair about his face in the fashion which Emmy liked.

At last he held up both candles and looked at himself in the mirror, and there were pink spots on his cheekbones, and the bit of blue about his neck went very well with his faded eyes. Old Liebereich wagged his head with the satisfaction of a dandy at what he saw.

Suddenly he started away from the mirror, then back to it. Then he laughed.

"I thought it was you, Emmy. And you looked like that first day when you saw your face in it. Sixteen. I wouldn't like you to come back looking sixteen, and me eighty-four. No, I ain't quite ready for you yet, Emmy; I must get clean sheets. But we ain't far apart now no more!"

He went close to the mirror to whisper this. He still was not sure that he did not see her there.

And I hope that you and I have "seen things" in the mirror, though perhaps we are not eighty-four and have no Emmy.

Then he went on getting ready for her till he was very tired—more tired, he thought, than he had ever been.

Outside Mrs. Schwalm was whispering to Mrs. Krantz: "No, they ain't far apart! He's mighty funny to-night. He is seeing things."

At last he was ready to hang up their stockings on the brass nails which had been put into the mantel for this purpose when the house was built.

And, for something to surprise her, he took from behind that loose brick a gold coin. It had the date of 1825 on it. There was a hole in it, and through the hole a narrow blue ribbon.

But now he stopped and his heart heaved. "It was to cut the baby's teeth on."

After a while: "We was going to call him Billy if he was a boy—Emmy if she was a girl."

Again: "But there never was no baby."

And then, at last: "But there never was no baby."

He put the coin in the toe of Emmy's stocking and went to bed and closed his eyes—to watch. And his last words were: "Tired—tired—tired—Emmy!"

He dozed and made himself wake so often, and nothing had happened, that he grew afraid and much more tired. And the red went out of his cheeks, and he could feel his face becoming very cold.

He dozed a long time, at last, without waking.

Then they outside, seeing this, came in—all those neighbors—stealthily, whispering and going toward his bed. Some one brought a candle and held it so close to his eyes that it scorched and tortured him. He woke; he was tremendously terrified by their stealth, but he did not understand at all—he who had never had such thoughts as theirs.

Continued on page 1000

To Wash Blankets:

Dissolve shavings of Ivory Soap in boiling water, add cold water until nearly lukewarm. Immerse blanket and knead with the hands; rinse in clean warm water in which Ivory Soap has been dissolved. Dry in a room neither warm nor cold.

Follow these instructions and your blankets will be as clean and soft and fluffy as the day you bought them.

There is no "free" uncombined alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

Ivory Soap
99⁴⁴/₁₀₀ Per Cent. Pure

$100 EACH EARN
$1,000 6%
$10,000 GUARANTEED
Payable Every Six Months
Ask for Booklet 14, to-day
New York Realty Owners Company
489 Fifth Avenue, New York City
ASSETS OVER $2,500,000.00

Safe Christmas Trees

Rick's Tree Holder—adjustable holds the tree safely and steadily. Straightens trees that are slightly bent. Can be slipped over. Absolutely safe. Made of substantial steel. Quick and easy to use. And with just one screw. No need to apply glue or nails. Connects to plain pole. Use of a "tree" of any shape, with or without branches. Holds tree from 10 to 12 ft. height. See. Price. 50c. Made in U.S.A. Your dealer or Rhineland Refrigerator Co., Dept. C, Rhineland, Wis.

The Metropolitan Training School for Nurses

Blackwell's Island, N. Y.

Offers a three-years' course of training. Applicants must be over 21 and under 35 years of age, and have had one year in high school or its equivalent. The school is registered and connected with a hospital of over 1,300 beds. An allowance is made for current expenses as follows: $10.00 per month the first year, $12.00 the second, and $15.00 the third. Classes are formed every two months. The new Nurses Home is located on one of the finest sites in New York City. The rooms are all single, with spacious entrance hall, library and sitting-rooms.

AGNES R. WARD, R.N.
Superintendent.

Print Your Own
Cards, circulars, book, newspaper. Press $5. Larger $18. Save money. Print for others. big profit. All easy, rules sent. Write factory for press catalog, type, paper, etc.
THE PRESS CO., Meriden, Connecticut.

DIRECT from FACTORY at Wholesale Prices, Freight Paid
We sell to you at the same price we sell to the dealer, plus the freight. Stoves, polished, ready to set up, safe delivery insured. Then, after
ONE YEAR'S TRIAL
we refund your money if you are not satisfied.
Gold Coin
Stoves and Ranges
standard for fifty years.
Our Illustrated Stove Book, free, tells all about stoves, drafts, chimneys, etc. Send for it.
Gold Coin Stove Co.
11 Oak St. Troy, N.Y.

Money for Church Work
A simple and effective plan, good for all outlay and no risk. Write for information, giving name of your church.
Address THE ANDERSON MFG. CO.
Department A
Elyria, Ohio

YOU CAN AFFORD to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOVELTIES

GREAT INTRODUCTORY PACKAGE ONLY 10c

We want you to get acquainted with our new and helpful things and so we make this generous offer Send TODAY. For TEN CENTS we will send postpaid this remarkable package.

4 beautifully illuminated cards, 5x7 inches, one each of Lord's Prayer, 10 Commandments, Beatitudes, 23rd Psalm. 1 Christ-Head Calendar, 1909, very dainty. 1 1904 Golden Text Book, with full schedule of Int. S. S. Lessons, Daily Bible Readings, etc. 1 Embossed Bible Book Mark, telling where to find principal things in the Bible. One of Celebrated Wilde's Bible Pictures. One of Famous Tissot Colored Bible Pictures. 1 set of 5 Life of Christ Illuminated Christmas Post Cards. 1 new Universal Birthday Card in blue, red and gold. 1 copy The Business End of a Sunday School, 72 pages with illustrated Holiday Catalogue of Sunday School Novelties.

HAMMOND PUB. CO., Dept. F. Milwaukee, Wis.

news 1c. 30 days' credit. Samples and Catalog Free. Consolidated Portrait Co. 290-155 West Adams St., Chi-

OUR MAIL-BAG

Continued from preceding page

AM., Climax, Mich. Did any of the ancient people have any idea of the transmitting of sound on wire or any other thing like a telephone?

Who have no record of anything of the kind for A. D. 1667, when Robert Hook sent sounds the distance over a distended wire.

Q. 1. Does the sacred writer (in Gen. 1:5) mean a natural day? 2. Does not the institution of the Sabbath derive its significance from Ex. 20:11?

A. The best authorities hold that the Hebrew word "day," used in this connection, does not literally 24 hours, but an undefined period. The first verse, according to Hebrew scholarship, is in substance: "Of old, in former duration, God created the heavens and the earth." "Day" therefore means a period, an age, the time duration of a condition. Parallel expressions (definiteness) are "the day of the Lord," "day of vengeance," "our day and generation," etc. Creation was therefore a series of natural works extending over vast periods of time. 2. Yes, but man's little day and God's are different. To him "a thousand years are as a day."

Q. P., Kerr, N. C. Does the Bible say that if an animal dies of itself, it is right to dress it and sell it to strangers?

A. The text you refer to is Deut. 14:21. It is a prohibition of the Levitical law. The Jews were forbidden to do many things that were common among other nations at that time.

visit in the Epistle to the Romans. Eusebius, however, says Peter was twenty-four years in Rome; Jerome says twenty-five years. The evidence of his martyrdom at Rome seems complete. Ignatius, Papias, Dionysius of Corinth, Irenaeus, Caius (the presbyter) and many others, all agree that he was at Rome, but the time cannot be stated. He was one of the joint founders of the church there, but neither bishop nor pope.

S. M. B., Spartanburg, S. C. 1. I wish to get an approximate idea at least of the number of words used by uneducated people in ordinary conversation? 2. People of high school and college education? 3. Preachers, lawyers and authors?

A. The average vocabulary of the uneducated, it is estimated, does not exceed 500 or 600 words, and among the very ignorant it is even less. People of high school or college training possibly average 2,500 to 4,000, the majority the lesser figure. Those who study hard to increase their vocabulary seldom reach more than 6,000 or 7,000. A few writers of great range have at command 8,000, but very few reach 10,000. Shakespeare, it is said, had 13,000. It is impossible to give any reliable figures; these are simply estimates by experts.

F. J. J., North Yakima, Wash. By what pope was the Jesuit order excommunicated?

A. In 1684, under Pope Innocent, the order was forbidden to receive any more novices, but this was revoked in 1686. In 1759, they were excluded from

A Notable Group of English Suffragettes

THESE seven women are the leaders of the English "Social and Political Union," who organized the monster demonstration in Hyde Park in favor of votes for women, at which 500,000 persons were present. The famous Mrs. Pankhurst is on the extreme right. Next her is her daughter, Christabel, whom Editor Stead has called "The English Joan of Arc." The fifth from the right is Clara Drummond, who planned the great demonstration. These thoughtful and earnest faces denote a high type of womanhood, which must be reckoned with and respected.

The passage simply means that while others eat animals so dying, the Jews must not. They were at liberty, however, to give or sell carcasses to any outsider who asked for them and whose dietary laws were not so strict as those of the Jews.

Q. I. W., Ferndale, Calif. Please explain in verses 12:5, what connection "the almond tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden," has with the verse?

A. Among Orientals, the hair is usually very dark. In age, it is white like the blossom of the almond tree among all the darker trees around. The grasshopper typifies the dry, shriveled form of old age, with projecting bones and enlarged joints. They are soon fatigued. According to the fable, Tithonus, in old age, was turned into a grasshopper (came like) a dried-up grasshopper.

Q. Stanford, Ky. Was there a patron saint of the Roman Church named St. Asaph? The records of Lincoln County disclose the fact that Col. Benjamin Logan, in 1775, established a fort a mile west of Stanford, Ky., and gave the name of St. Asaph's to a cave from which a fine stream of pure crystal water flows. The addition is that he camped there on St. Asaph's day.

A. Asaph, according to tradition, was a disciple of Kentigern, and author of books on church dances and biography. He is said to have been in Scotland in the sixth century, and to have held office as bishop of Glasgow in the early 10th. Very little is known about him; when he was born, when he died or when he was canonized by the Roman Church.

Q. H., Philadelphia. Did the Apostle Peter ever visit Rome, or was he bishop or pope here for twenty years?

A. The whole subject is involved in doubt. If he did visit Rome, it was probably during the last years of his life. There is no mention of such a

Miscellaneous

L. A. H., Oroville, Wash. No.

J. M., Oneida. Send us your full name and address.

Reader, Kittery, Me. Write to Rev. Silas C. Swallow, Harrisburg, Pa.

Mrs. S. R. J., East Hampton, Conn. The first is gambling, the second is not.

Subscriber, Slippery Rock, Pa. These things, like many others, cannot be decided by Scriptural reference.

Joseph M., Cumberland, Md. There is no further light on these subjects than that which is found in the Gospels.

G. M., Johnstown, Pa. Send your query to the Professor of English Literature, University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, Pa.

"Every American Should Have It"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I write to express my gratification in receiving Inside History of the White House. It has far exceeded my expectations. It is beautifully gotten up, leaving nothing for improvement, and I expect great pleasure in the reading. Every American should have a copy. You should have double your former subscription. MRS. JOHN GRAHAM.

New York City.

The Development of the Remington is the History of the Writing Machine

NEW MODELS, 10 and 11—NOW READY

MODEL 10

With Column Selector

MODEL 11

With Built-in Tabulator

REMINGTON TYPEWRITER COMPANY

(Incorporated)

NEW YORK AND EVERYWHERE

The Weather Side Of the House

There's always a room on the weather side that's hard to heat.

The easy and cheap way to heat this cold room is with the Perfection Oil Heater. It makes no difference how many times the wind changes—you can carry the heater from room to room as often as you like. The simply can't smoke or smell—it can't be turned too high or too low—the wick can't climb up when your back is turned like the old-fashioned kind. Burns nine hours with one filling. Finished in nickel or Japan. Every heater guaranteed.

PERFECTION Oil Heater

(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

The Rayo Lamp is the safest and best lamp for all-round household use. It is equipped with the latest improved central draft burner—gives a bright light at small cost. Absolutely safe. All parts easily cleaned. Made of brass throughout and nickel plated. Every lamp warranted. If you cannot get the Rayo Lamp and Perfection Heater from your dealer, write to our nearest agency.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY (Incorporated)

A Soldier-Preacher

THOSE visitors who attend the Sunday services held in the New York City Tombs, the Queens County jail, and other penal institutions, often hear the earnest and eloquent tones of "The Soldier-Preacher," as the inmates like to call him—George Jones, of Woodside, N. Y. Jones participated in the siege of Sebastopol. Although almost an octogenarian, he is still active and vigorous, and often preaches in city churches, where he illustrates the "good fight of faith" by allusions to incidents in the Crimean War, especially the "Charge of the Light Brigade," and the work of that far-famed nurse, Florence Nightingale, whom he met in the hospital wards.

He was born in Lambeth, England. "My father was an atheist, but gave me a good education," he says. "In 1854 I left home and made my way to Liverpool. At the docks there I found that the hospital ship Golden Fleece was about to proceed to the Crimea. We had on board several batteries from the arsenals at Woolwich. I had been but a short time at sea when I wished I was home again. It took about two weeks to reach the scene of strife." He witnessed the siege of Sebastopol, and is probably the only eyewitness of that event now living in America. On his conversion, he left the army, and entered the field as a soldier of the Cross. The "soldier-preacher" believes firmly in the mission of the church. He has passed a long life in England and America in Gospel work, and is doing effective work as a supply in churches and in revival services.

George Jones, Crimean Veteran

AT THE BETHLEHEM MANGER

By MRS. M. BAXTER

IT HAD been prophesied that the coming Messiah should be born in Bethlehem. Mary's home was in Nazareth. Just before the birth of Jesus, a decree went forth from the imperial court at Rome, that a census should be taken of the entire population of the empire. In obedience to this law, Joseph and Mary were bound to appear, and to answer to their names, in Bethlehem, David's city. The genealogy was always reckoned through the male members of the family. Joseph, Mary's husband, being descended from Solomon, the son of David, and Mary, the daughter of Heli, from Nathan, David's son (Matt. 1: 7-16; Luke 3: 23-31). Thus God wonderfully brought about the fulfillment of prophecy, and the proof that Christ was David's son.

During their stay at Bethlehem, Jesus was born. His birth was in far other circumstances than that of his forerunner. John was born in the family home, neighbors and kinsmen congratulating the happy parents who were so well known and loved; the wonderful healing of his father's infirmity had added to the family joy, and the whole countryside knew what had happened. It was otherwise with the birth of Jesus; no family home received him, all was discomfort about him, there were no rejoicing friends around, the only preparation made was the swaddling clothes in which he was wrapped, and the manger was the only cradle found for the Son of God. "There was no room for them in the inn."

Jesus came into the world as one of the weakest things the world knows—the young of no animal is so helpless as the human babe—and yet he was Lord of all. And so he comes into our human life, not with noise and show; to the eyes of man so little, so humble, needing to be fed and cherished in our hearts—and yet so truly Lord of all. But while the unconscious, indifferent world slept, all heaven was moved. It was not to the kings or captains or great ones, it was not to the Scribes and Pharisees, the learned, the religious, it was not to the prominent men of any class, but to a band of simple shepherds, that God made known his wondrous tidings. Away on the plains near Bethlehem were shepherds keeping the night watches, lest any beast of prey should rob their flock. "And, lo, the angel of the Lord came upon them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them, and they were sore afraid." The angel gave as the burden of his song of joy, "For unto you is born this day, in the city of David, a Saviour, which is Christ the Lord." All Israel looked for a Messiah to be born on earth. But the shepherds' faith was to undergo a trial. This august babe was to be found, not in the midst of kings and nobles, not in the high priest's palace, not in Herod's court, but wrapped in swaddling clothes and lying in a manger! Probably all their preconceived ideas and expectations of the Messiah received a rude shock; could it be that such an One could be born in circumstances so humble? Were they not, after all, deceived? Just at this moment there came again from on high unlooked-for confirmation of their faith: the whole heaven was lit up, not with stars, but with angels, "praising God, and saying: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

They got the truth from heaven, and they believed. Thus they could join the angels' song, and find in the drawing near of God, his glory; his condescension only made his glory more glorious; he was not less great because he came down to man in deepest lowliness. And then was proclaimed to a world of sinners, of law-breakers, an universal amnesty, an unconditional pardon, to all who would accept it, "On earth peace, good will."

It was an overwhelming communication for the shepherds! Were they indeed the recipients of this unparalleled secret? What, then, should they do? Should they exult in the favor done them by God and magnify themselves in their own eyes?

A TIMELY INQUIRY

Have you renewed your subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD? If not, why not do it to-day?

25c Now—for a Pair of Genuine Holeproof Sox

Those who have heretofore paid 25c for inferior goods can now have the best at that price. For you can now buy six pairs of "Holeproof" Sox (formerly $2) for $1.50

We are now able to give you the same sox and save you 50c on the six pairs. Yet we don't have to alter our quality, nor change our expensive process. The reason is this:

The Best Yarn Now Costs Us 10c Less Per Pound

We now pay an average of 63c per pound for our yarn. Before, we paid 73c. The best Egyptian and Sea Island cotton yarn—the softest and finest—now costs us 10 cents less per pound. So the saving is all in the market price of yarn—and that's a real saving because you get the same quality though you pay less. The saving is yours—not ours.

All makers now pay less for their yarn. But they're not cutting the price of their sox. They are simply making more profit. We are using this opportunity to reduce our price. So the best sox now cost no more than brands of inferior grades.

It remains for you to take this advantage—to ask for the best, and insist on it.

31 Years to Make the First Pair

It took 31 years of constant improvement to perfect "Holeproof" sox.

"Holeproof" are the original "guaranteed-six-months" sox.

You cannot get more for $1.50 than you get in six pairs of "Holeproof." They are the most satisfactory sox that are sold to-day.

Over 100 imitations have been placed on the market since "Holeproof" became a success. So don't think for a moment that all guaranteed sox are genuine "Holeproof" sox.

Nearly all the other names sound like ours, so you must needs be careful in choosing. Else you may get the inferior grades—the stiff and harsh kind—the kind that get fuzzy and fade.

FAMOUS Holeproof Hosiery FOR MEN WOMEN AND CHILDREN

"Holeproof" never wrinkle, stretch, crack, fade nor rust. And they are comfortable, because of our extra fine yarn. We could buy coarse yarn for less than half what we pay. We could then charge less still for the sox. But you wouldn't wear such sox more than once. It's far cheaper to buy the best.

Please compare "Holeproof" with the best unguaranteed sox. Then let them show how they wear. That will prove more than we can say in this ad. See if any sox you know are one-half so good.

HOLEPROOF HOSIERY COMPANY, 214 Fourth Street, Milwaukee, W.

CAUSE AND EFFECT

Good Digestion Follows Right Food

Indigestion and the attendant discomforts of mind and body are certain to follow continued use of improper food.

Those who are still young and robust are likely to overlook the fact that, as dropping water will wear a stone away at last, so will the use of heavy, greasy, rich food, finally cause loss of appetite and indigestion.

Fortunately many are thoughtful enough to study themselves and note the principle of Cause and Effect in their daily food. A N. Y. young woman writes her experience thus:

"Some time ago I had a lot of trouble from indigestion, caused by too rich food. I got so I was unable to digest scarcely anything, and medicine seemed useless.

"A friend advised me to try Grape-Nuts food, praising it highly, and as a last resort I tried it. I am thankful to say that Grape-Nuts not only relieved me of my trouble, but built me up and strengthened my digestive organs so that I can now eat anything I desire. But I stick to Grape-Nuts." "There's a Reason."

Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed
NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A Veterinary Remedy for Wind, throat and stomach troubles. Strong recommendations. $1.00 per can, of dealers, or exp. prepaid. The Newton Remedy Co. Toledo, Ohio.

Our guarantee in each box of six pairs of "proof" Sox read:

"If any or all of these sox comes to holes or darning within six months from the day you wear them, we will replace them free."

And we mean that exactly. Try "Holeproof." You'll see then how we can afford this. See you save and gain when you wear "Holeproof." Once know and you'll always wear them.

If your dealer does not have genuine "Holeproof" Sox, bearing the "Holeproof" Trade-mark, direct from us. (Remit in any convenient Holeproof Sox—6 pairs, $1.50. Medium and weight. Black, light and dark tan, navy pearl gray, and black with white feet. Size to 12. Six pairs of a size and weight in a box one color or assorted, as desired.

Holeproof Sox, (extra light weight)—made of Sea Island cotton. 6 pairs, $2.00.

Holeproof Lustre-Sox—6 pairs, $3.00. Finish like silk. Extra light weight. Black, navy light and dark tan, and pearl gray. Size 9½ to 12.

Holeproof Stockings—6 pairs, $2.00. Medium weight. Black, tan and black with white. Sizes, 8 to 11.

Holeproof Lustre-Stockings—6 pairs, $3.00. Finish like silk. Extra light weight. Tan and black. Sizes, 8 to 11.

Boys' Holeproof Stockings—6 pairs, $3.00. Black and tan. Specially reinforced knee, heel and toe. Sizes, 5 to 11.

Misses' Holeproof Stockings—6 pairs, $3.00. Black and tan. Specially reinforced knee, heel and toe. Sizes, 5 to 9½. These are the best children's hose made to-day.

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"
Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set
From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM
AGENTS
are coining money
Claude H. Rogers sell
500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make
$3 to $10 a day. OUT-
FIT FREE to workers
THOMAS MFG. CO.
428 Home Bldg.
Dayton, Ohio

Pianos at Unusual Prices

The World's Largest Music House

LYON & HEALY

announces a Clearing Sale of Pianos, owing to the Re-building of their warehouses. Nearly one thousand fine instruments are offered without reserve until all are sold.

In this stock are a number of Steinway, Weber Lyon & Healy and Washburn instruments. Also new and second-hand pianos of almost all well known makes. Prices, $120, $140, $150, $165, $190 $200 and upwards. This is an opportunity that will not occur again. Lyon & Healy must reduce their stock at once to facilitate Re-building.

LYON & HEALY, 22 Adams St., Chicago

Pianos Shipped Everywhere. Freight costs very little.

Occupations for Women

By FRANCES E. WILLARD

500 pages; illustrated. Regular Price, $3.75
SPECIAL PRICE, $1.00, all Charges Prepaid.
P. B. Bromfield & Co., Bible House, New York

Christ's Birth*

IN THE stress and tumult of the holiday season, when young people come home from school or college for their vacations, and when cares and joys of all sorts seem to be doubled, we are in danger of losing sight of the deeper meanings of the Christmas festival. We rejoice. Why do we rejoice? We give gifts. Why? We see in every side symbols—the manger, the star, the wise men, the Madonna and the Child. All are so common, so familiar, that too often we treat them as merely pretty pictures, which have come to belong to the season.

It is well, therefore, that we read this week and meditate upon that mysterious Being who has during the past 2000 years transformed the world. As Augustus found Rome brick and left it marble, so Christ found the world dedicated to the Spirit of Selfishness, and he left it dedicated to the Spirit of Love. He brought a sword with him, which should, as Dr. S. V. Cole has strikingly phrased it, give us no peace until "he reaches the most—God."

It is well that we trace back that wonderful thread of prophecy which, stretched far down in ages understanding it not, shows out here and there the inspired visions of God's chosen ones; and which binds together in an integrity which no infidel can break, the old and the new dispensations. It is well that we remember how in every detail those strange and fragmentary prophecies were fulfilled; and how Christ lived and died to show us ways of overcoming disease and sin and death. How much of his mission was physical, how much was spiritual; how much of his teaching is to be taken literally, how much figuratively; are topics which, simple though they may seem at first thought, have engaged the profound attention of the greatest minds of Christendom for ages. New interpretations of his meanings are constantly appearing, and a world eagerly weighs and examines them. Is not miraculous!

The whole creation is blessed at this season. Men who have never named the name of Christ as their Saviour, wish each other a merry Christmas. Men who never enter a church-door to worship their Maker, exchange Christmas gifts. Christ died for all mankind. Therefore it is well that everyone should celebrate his birthday. But how contemptible and unworthy that men should, as it were, seize the gifts from that wounded hand, and yet utter no thanks to the giver! That they should take the benefits and yet refuse the daily worship and service!

Dr. Watkinson tells of a gentleman in London who once gave a garden-party full of surprises. Willow trees lined the lake and rivulet, their branches gay with great red blossoms. A lofty spruce had effervesced on every sprig with roses. An elm tree was apparently bearing oranges. An oak was heavily laden with gleaming scarlet apples.

Dr. Louis Banks employs this vivid illustration to show how men have often appropriated to themselves the fruits of the Spirit, the virtues of Christ's people, without any right to them. They have grasped for themselves, consciously or unconsciously, the noble and beautiful results of Christianity, and yet their hearts have not been given to Christ. Like the fantastic trees in the garden, they are frauds, and they have no real right to the benefits of Christ's reign.

But good will to all men was the sacred message which the angels sang over the cradle of our Saviour. By love, not by violence or reproof, he draws all men unto him.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 20. Text: John 18:33-37. (A Christmas Meeting.)

The EDISON PHONOGRAPH

reproduces all sounds, and especially the sounds of the human voice and the music of instruments, so marvelously that you would be amazed at it as a scientific invention if you had not become so used to its wonderful work.

We want everyone who has not yet experienced the delight of owning and listening to an Edison Phonograph to go to some dealer today and hear the Edison Phonograph play. There is only one way to know how good the Edison Phonograph is and that is to hear it. Nothing can describe it.

The Edison Phonograph makes all music available in your home.

The cost is trifling. You can buy it at once for a low price or on the instalment plan, paying a little at a time, and begin to enjoy it at once. The point is to get it today.

There is an Edison dealer near you who will be glad to show you how it works and let you hear some of the many varied selections which have been prepared for it.

Edison Amberol Records

The New Phonograph Records that play twice as long as the regular Edison Records

These are the new Records which have just been made to play on the Edison Phonograph. They play more than twice as long as the old ones and play far better. This is the latest great discovery of Mr. Edison for the benefit of his favorite invention, the Edison Phonograph, and for your benefit if you are wise enough to get an Edison Phonograph with the Amberol attachment at once.

Edison Records are made in Bohemian, Cuban, Danish, French, German, Hebrew, Hungarian, Italian, Norwegian, Polish, Spanish, Swedish, etc.

Edison Amberol Records, 50c. Regular Edison Records, 35c.
Edison Grand Opera Records, 75c.

FREE. Go to your dealer or write to us today and get these books, THE CATALOGUE OF EDISON PHONOGRAPHS as well as COMPLETE RECORD CATALOGUE, SUPPLEMENTAL CATALOGUE and the PHONOGRAM, which tell about all the Records, old and new.

National Phonograph Co., 8 Lakeside Ave., Orange, N. J.

Sold at the same prices EVERYWHERE

Edison Gem Phonograph, Price $12.50

Edison Standard Phonograph Price $25
with Amberol attachment, Price 30

Edison Home Phonograph, Price $35
with Amberol attachment, Price 40

Edison Triumph Phonograph Price $55
with Amberol attachment, Price 60

Most dealers will arrange to sell you an Edison Phonograph on easy payments.

Into Still Waters

AND

Transformation of Margaret

These Two Stories, which appeared in The Christian Herald, have been published in Book Form, under the titles of

PRICE

Cross Currents, $1.00

Turn of the Tide, $1.25

Cloth Bound and Handsomely Illustrated.

W. A. WILDE COMPANY, BOSTON

A Fine

Lyon & Healy

Organ, $1⁰⁰ a Week

Think of the pleasure and satisfaction you would get from owning one of these beautiful instruments. Possess a far sweeter tone quality than other makes, as countless testimonials received during the past 45 years amply attest. Write for our new illustrated catalog today.

LYON & HEALY,

70 Adams Street, Chicago

No Place Like Arcadia!

Your income should be $1,000 a Year Per Acre. Independent Home. Ideal climate, complete from Spokane, 4 transcontinental Railroads. Trees planted and cared for 4 years without charge. Irrigation system installed. No water famine in Arcadia. Continue your present employment. Your property will be well cared for. Write us today: Grant & Dye, Inc., 832 American Bank Bldg., Seattle, Wash.

GOLD FISH

GIVEN AWAY

THE MIDLAND MANUFACTURING COMPANY
Desk 19, Toledo, Ohio

LIEBEREICH

Continued from page 995

They did not know that he was awake.

"He is better off," said one of them. "He died easy," said another.

Then, suddenly, old Liebereich understood. He did not quiver. But his heart was bursting.

"I don't know about that," said a wary one.

Some one took Liebereich's hand from under the covers.

"Sh! He's only asleep," the voice whispered.

Another sighed a disappointment.

"Touch his feet," said one.

This was done, and the same verdict reached. He was not yet dead.

"He still thinks she'll come!"

There was a laugh somewhere.

"Look at the nightshirt!"

"How long is she dead now?"

They left him then, and he could breathe a moment. They put into his stocking some things they had brought—simple things—at the last a spiral of pink-and-white candy.

But there was no laughter—only silence. Once more they were doing their duty. And once more—for only the second sad time in his long life—old Liebereich understood.

"It ain't much," said a pitying one.

"It's enough," said another, crossly.

The last one said—to comfort both: "He'll never know no better."

Then they came and looked at him again. "Yes—only asleep."

Another voice said: "In the morning, I expect. Often they sleep away."

A doubting young woman said: "Mebby it just happened now and he ain't cold yet."

But her elders, who had seen death often, only frowned.

Then they went out.

Old Liebereich lay very still. He was icy cold. The feet and hands they had touched would not get warm. He felt yet their cold touch. Two tears stole down his cheeks. His heart was still filled to bursting. Yet he lay quite still. Presently something like content came and stayed, and smoothed the sorrow from his face, and made it beautiful.

V

THE SECOND OPENING OF THE DOOR

THEN, without the least warning, the door opened again, directly in his eyes, and everything was quite as he had fancied it. Like a picture in its frame, there stood his wife dressed for Christmas. And she was well and happy—by the smiles on her face. And the morning had come, as he had wished; for, as the door opened, the sun behind her smote away the darkness, and it seemed as if she had come down to him on those sheaves of glittering javelins. And yes, closely crowding behind her, came the very people he knew would come, filling all the door and making a background for his picture. Such a background! He forgave them all at once. For he must have dreamed those other, sadder things. And, more—and better still—the bells of the little town were jangling out their Christmas madrigal. (You know how dear the bells are to Germans!)

And old Liebereich, too, did everything just as he had planned it. He lay quietly in his bed until they shouted, "Merry Christmas, Liebereich! Wake up!" Then he rose and took his wife in his arms and laughed at them—in the very faces of them all!—and told them how cunningly he had fooled them. Precisely as he had planned.

And he had two recollections of the moment. One was that Mrs. Schwalm smiled when she saw the blue feather-stitched nightshirt; the other was that his wife was the prettiest of them all. After that came the vast happiness—all as he had planned.

For all of this, from the second opening of that door, old Liebereich had only dreamed. But, quite as they had said, he would never know better, for he never woke.

And when the neighbors indeed came through that door again in the morning, with guilt upon them, with stealth, wondering whether he were now dead, while it was yet dark, holding candles once more to his eyes, old Liebereich met them with such a beautiful, smiling, heaven-touched face that, one and all, they dropped to their knees. And their eyes were not dry.

And I am no longer sure of that philosophy, a few pages past, where we agreed that nothing could be better than to wait for old Liebereich's wife—and Christmas.

Or maybe the German wives are right, and he is better off?

For perhaps he hears sweeter music than the Christmas bells; perhaps there is a more glorious light than the morning sun in that doorway; perhaps the background of his picture is crowned with fairer faces than those of his former neighbors. God knows! Perhaps immortal youth has, in truth, come. Perhaps he does, indeed, embrace his wife. Else what is the use of heaven? God knows!

The Late Rev. W. H. Withrow, D.D.

PROBABLY few men were better known or more generally beloved by Canadians and by many people in the United States than the late Rev. W. H. Withrow, D.D. Born and educated in Canada, he was active in the Methodist Church from his early manhood, and as writer, preacher, teacher, and editor, he won a high place among the progressive Christian public men of the Dominion. Dr. Withrow was a keen student of history and biography, and much of his literary work on these lines is now accepted as standard. But his pen was not confined to a limited range of topics. He was versatile and many-sided, and had a mind enriched by travel and observation in many lands. He became the editor of a number of Methodist Sunday School publications in Canada in 1874, and continued in charge thereafter, doing most valuable service. He contributed much to church periodicals, but it is in the wider field of literature that he is chiefly known and esteemed as an author. Contributions from Dr. Withrow's pen have appeared from time to time in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Kindly, generous-hearted, scholarly and capable, his death is regarded as a distinct loss to Canadian Methodism.

Greatly Pleased with the Premium

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I wish to most heartily thank you for the beautiful India Paper Red Letter Bible received a few days ago. I am more than delighted with it. It is just what I wanted. I think this is the most compact, all readable little Bible I have ever seen yet, and you can handle it easily, being small in size, and the type is so very clear. I must say I just love this dear sweet little Bible.

And I also want to thank you very much for the book, Inside History of the White House. It is just grand. I am more than pleased with it in every way. I have taken THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, I think, for fourteen years. I consider it the best of all papers. I wish you continued success, and may our heavenly Father bless you in your good work.

(MISS) M. P. BENEDICT.

Brooklyn, N. Y.

Among the Workers

—REV. E. PAYSON HAMMOND begins a series of revival meetings in Omaha, Neb., March 1, 1909. He was ordained an evangelist in the year 1863. President Mark Hopkins, of Williams College, preached the sermon on that occasion.

—IN NEWTON, KAN., Evangelist W. E. Biedewolf has just closed one of the most successful evangelistic meetings that city has ever experienced. The campaign was under the auspices of the Kansas Forward Movement for Evangelistic work. Hundreds of men and women confessed Christ. A tabernacle seating close to 3,000 people was erected. Cottage and union prayer meetings were held for weeks before the opening.

Big Bargains in Books

ANNUAL CLEARANCE SALE

All New Fresh Copies of Publishers' Remainder

Garnett and Gosse's English Literature. A Monumental Work. By Richard Garnett, C. B., LL. D., and Edmund Gosse, M. A., LL. D. Illustrated with hundreds of colored plates, photogravures and wood engravings; the best English literature ever published. Published in four volumes at $24.00. Our Price, $13.25, express prepaid.

The Confessions of a Caricaturist. By Harry Furniss. Published at $10. Our Price, $3.00, express prepaid.

Essays—Two Volumes, Political-Biographical. By the Marquess of Salisbury, K. G. Published at $4.00. Our Price, 75 cents, postpaid.

Famous Homes of Great Britain. 2 Vols. Illustrated. Edited by A. H. Mahan. Published at $7.50 net. Our Price $4.25, express prepaid.

French Revolution and Religious Reform. By William Milligan Sloane, LL. D. Published at $1.25. Our Price, 90 cents, postpaid.

French Noblesse of the XVIII Century. Translated by Mrs. Colquhoun Grant. Published at $3.00 net. Our Price, $1.65, postpaid.

The American Immortals. Popular Edition. Published by Putnam's at $3.50. Our Price, $1.50, postpaid.

The Brontës in Ireland. By Dr. William Wright. Published at $1.50. Our Price, 75 cents, postpaid.

Researches in Sinai. By W. M. Flinders Petrie. Published at $6.00 net. Our Price $2.85, postpaid.

Book of Spiritual Life. By Lady Dilke. Published at $3.00 net. Our Price, $1.12, postpaid.

Little Flowers of St. Francis of Assisi. By Dutton, at $2.00. Our Price, 80 cents, postpaid.

The Commonwealth of Man. By Robert Afton Holland, S. T. D. Published by Putnam's at $1.25. Our Price, 60 cents, postpaid.

Old Diary Leaves. By Henry S. Olcott. The True Story of The Theosophical Society. Published at $2.00. Our Price, $1.00, postpaid.

The American Commonwealth. By James Bryce. With a chapter on "The Tweed Ring in New York" written by Rufus Rockwell Wilson. 2 Vols. Published at $4.00 net. Our Price, $2.00, postpaid.

The Art of the Greeks. By H. B. Walters. The chapters concerning gems, coins and ceramics make this work one of unusual interest. Publisher's Price, $6.00. Our Price, $2.50, postpaid.

Greek Story and Song. By Alfred T. Church, M. A. There is no more scholarly a work written dealing with Greek history and thought. Publisher's Price, $1.50. Our Price, 75 cents, postpaid.

Rome and Its Story. By St. Clair Baddeley and Lina D. Gordon. Fifty Colored illustrations, reproduced from Aubrey Waterfield's water-color drawings. Thirty reproductions of famous pictures and statuary. Published by Dent at $6.00. Our Price, $2.80, postpaid.

Booklovers' Science Set. 5 Vols. "Descent of Man," Darwin. "Data of Ethics," Spencer. "Origin of Species," Darwin. "Education," Spencer. "Other Worlds Than Ours," Proctor. An education in higher and wider thought. Publisher's Price, $10.00. Our Price, $5.10, postpaid.

The Teachings of Jesus Concerning Wealth. By Gerald D. Heuver. Published at $1.00. Our Special Price, 60 cents. By Mail, 10 cents extra.

Friendship's Garland. By Matthew Arnold. Lett and Opinions of the late Arminius Baron Von Thund Ten-Tronckh. Publisher's Price, 70 cents net. C Price, 30 cents, postpaid.

The Pleasures of the Table. A history of gastronomy with its schools, literature and distinguished artists; a recipes and views in the aesthetics of dinner giving. Published by Doubleday-Page at $1.50 net. Our Price, 1 cents, postpaid.

Letters and Recollections of George Washington Showing the first American as a country gentleman; a diary of the General's last days. By Tobias Lear. Publisher's Price, $2.50 net. Our Price, $1.10, postpaid.

Hymns That Have Helped. Edited by W. T. Stead. Beautifully illustrated. Published by Doubleday-Page. $2.00 net. Our Price, 75 cents, postpaid.

Men of Might in Indian Missions. By Helen F. Holcomb. Published at $1.25. Our Special Price, 6 cents. By Mail, 12 cents extra.

The Passing and Permanent in Religion. F. Minot J. Savage, D.D. Published at $1.35. Our Special Price, 75 cents. By Mail, 13 cents extra.

Marcus Aurelius Antoninus, the Roman Emperor His Meditations Concerning Himself, Treating of a Natural Man's Happiness, wherein it Consisteth, and of the Means to Attain unto it. Six full-page photogravure illustrations. Published by Dutton at $2.00 net. Our Price, 85 cents. By Mail, 98 cents.

Ideals for Girls. By Mrs. Frank Learned (Priscilla Wakefield). Familiar talks which have appeared in The Delineator. The Secret of Charm; Manners; Friendship and Marriage; Books as Friends and Companions; Letter and Letter Writing; Personal Appearance; Money; Spending; Business Life; Girlhood, Old and New, are a few of the subjects. Published by Stokes at $1.00. Our Sale Price, 30 cents. By Mail, 38 cents.

PAGE'S FAMOUS COPYRIGHT ILLUSTRATED HOLIDAY BOOKS

BEAUTIFULLY BOUND IN GOLD ON ART CLOTH

A FEW OF THE FORTY TITLES:

Shakespeare in Art	Hartman
The Madonna in Art	Hurll
Child Life in Art	Hurll
Saints in Art	Clement
Love in Art	Potter
Christ in Art	French

Published at $1.50, $2.00, $2.50

OUR SPECIAL PRICE, 83 CENTS BY MAIL

Macmillan's New Miniature Series

Each Volume Contains 6 Illustrations, 19 Titles

The Choice of Books	Harrison
The Friendship of Nature	Wright
The Golden Treasury	Palgrave
Maxims and Reflections	Goethe
Brown Heath and Blue Bells	Winter
Oxford and Her Colleges	Smith

DROP A POSTAL

Send now for our Fall Catalogues of new and used Books withdrawn from the "Booklovers' Library." Thousands of books as good as new at prices cut in halves and quarters. Literature, Science, History, Travel, Biography, Fiction—all recent publications.

The Tabard Inn Book Company

1302-4 FILBERT STREET

PHILADELPHIA

EXAMINE AT YOUR HOME, WITH NO RISK, THIS

Glove-Fitting
RUSTLING

Taffeta Loraine
Petticoat
(Made to Measure)

DELIVERED, $2.00

Unless it pleases you and equals the best you can have made at $3.50, return at our expense and we will refund your $2.00 at once.

This is a 6-gore petticoat in latest style, with a rich 16-in. 4-ruffle flounce with a 1-in. fold hem and a 9-in. under-flounce with a 3-in. dust-ruffle stitched to and on it. Bottom ruffle is cut 6 yds. wide. Cut on lines of a dress-skirt; daintily but strongly made; ruffles elaborately shirred and tucked, and each ruffle-seam bound in and reinforced with tape. Patent fasteners (no strings or fullness) give 12 adjustments of tightness around hips, assuring perfect fit of overskirt.

TAFFETA LORAIN is an ideal petticoat fabric, rustling, silky in appearance, lustrous, firm, very durable and never cracks.

This price gives YOU retailers' and wholesalers' profits. We are manufacturers of long standing, and this garment, made under the perfection of modern sanitary conditions, is the best value we ever saw. There is a distinction about the fabric and garment not found in anything ever offered even at a much higher price. Made in Black, Navy, Tan, Golden Brown, Taupe Gray, Maroon, Bottle Green and Nile Green. Send waist, hip and front and back length measures.

A. MONTROSE MFG. CO.,
Box 2584 BOSTON, MASS.

$1 You can't breathe wrong with $1

BREATHE-RITE

What Breathe-Rite Is

BREATHE-RITE is an elastic brace, not a corset, made of an indestructible, washable white fabric. It is as easy to put on and take off as a vest. It is equally good for Men, Women, Boys and Girls—one size fits anybody.

What Breathe-Rite Does

BREATHE-RITE enlarges the chest, reduces the abdomen, corrects round shoulders, and strengthens the back. It holds the body gently but firmly erect, whether walking, sitting or standing.

The BREATHE-RITE patented six-slotted slide does the trick.

PRICE ONE DOLLAR

Nothing better at any price.

If your dealer cannot supply you, send us his name and ONE DOLLAR and "BREATHE-RITE" will be forwarded at once prepaid.

$1 THE BREATHE-RITE CO. $1

No. 6 THE MONOLITH, 45 W. 34th St., New York

We have an interesting proposition for wide awake men and women agents in your territory.

GOD OF ANSWERED PRAYERS

LOOKING back o'er life's long way,
Christians show their power!
Answered prayers for every day
And for every hour.
Dare to sound their marvels out,
Thus a triumph win;
Challenge thus a world of doubt,
And a world of sin.
Tell the faithless, tell the weak,
How he answered you;
Let his great responses speak
For his promise true.
Ours the God who lives and moves;
Ours the God who cares;
God of all, for all he loves,
God of answered prayers!

FEARED BEING GRABBED

Woman's Nervousness from Coffee Drinking

The brain acts through the nerves. When the nerves are irritated by coffee drinking the mind often imagines things which have no real existence—such as approaching danger, unfriendly criticism, etc. Mich. woman suffered in this way, but found how to overcome it. She writes: For twenty years I drank coffee, thinking it would give me strength when tired and nervous. The more coffee I drank, the more tired and nervous I became until I broke down entirely. Then I changed my work from sewing to house-work. This gave me more exercise and was beneficial, but I kept on drinking coffee—thought I could not do without it. I was so nervous at times that if left alone I would not go from one room to another for fear someone would grab me, and my little children had to go around on tiptoe and speak in whispers. Finally an attack of the grip weakened my nerves and the smell even of coffee was nauseating. Then my husband prepared some Postum for me, believing the use of coffee had caused my breakdown, so that my head and hands shook like the palsy. At first I did not like Postum but I kept drinking it and as we learned how to make it right according to directions on pkg., I liked it as well as coffee. Occasionally I made coffee when we had guests and give it to the children too, but as soon as they taste it they return their cups for Postum. Now I go anywhere in the house day or night and never think of anyone grabbing me, and the children can romp as healthy children should—my nerves at all right. "There's a reason."

Came given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

CONFIDENCE WARRANTED

5% ASSURED. Favorable location, experience and ample resources enable us to loan money on the best real estate security, and pay 5 PER CENT PER YEAR on all small sums invested through us. Our investors send us $25—$50—$100 or more at a time. They may leave it with us for a few months or a few years. They receive 5 per cent per annum monthly by check, reckoned from the day we receive the loan to the day they withdraw it. We number our patrons thousands, and they are in every State of the Union. Write us and we will give you the names of those nearest to you who permit us to refer to them. Fifteen years of successful operation.

Assets of $1,800,000 and regular supervision by the New York Banking Department warrant your confidence.

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, New York

Made to Your Measure by hand from choice new skins (which outwear old stock in a store). Cummings Glove. Guaranteed Pre- and paid $1 up. Cape, Glace, Chamorro, Silk—standard colors, all lengths, at factory prices. Winter Gloves, Children's Gloves. Write for our Style Book. Cummings Glove Co., 16 Forest St. Gloversville, N.Y.

AMUSING and INSTRUCTIVE Run Toys. Fun for Boys. Three sizes: prices, 75c, $1 and $1.25. Any good Dry Batteries will run them for days. Send for FREE Catalogue T 24: 168 pages. 1,000 electrical specialties with net prices. Manhattan Electrical Supply Co., 175 Fifth Avenue, Chicago; 17 Park Place, New York City.

NEW LIGHT, Incandescent KEROSENE OIL BURNER Fits any lamp, gives 3 times light, costs 1-6 oil, 1-5 gas, 1-10 electricity. Everyone likes it. Agents wanted. Send for booklet and price list No. 7. U.S.A. Light Co., Springfield, Mass.

Open Doors

BROADLY speaking, the whole world is now open to our missionaries. Even the sealed cities of Tibet are gradually revealing their long hidden treasures to the passerby, and learning something of the countless advantages of international intercourse. We are truly living in "a grand and glorious time," and when we listen to the fervid tales of returned missionaries, with their almost startling revelations of God's workings, the millennial sun seems almost to be rising.

But there is another side to the picture. The mills of God grind but slowly in some quarters. Darkness, violence, lust, barbarism still disfigure and degrade vast empires. It is well that at this gift-time we think much of the gift which is above all gifts, and that we renew our prayers and our plans to send it forth to these heathen lands where it is so greatly needed.

The Far East just now absorbs, perhaps, more interest than the rest of the world put together. Beautiful and fascinating Japan, the boundless plains of China, picturesque and ancient India—these captivate the imagination and fill us with the thought of the strength of Christ's kingdom, if these mighty empires could only become his.

Perhaps China is of them all the most interesting, especially in view of the recent sensational changes in her government and her policies.

The testimony of missionaries and of the leading Chinese is overwhelming as to the good which Christianity has done in the Flowery Kingdom. The love borne to our workers there is in many cases almost adoration. Miss Vaughan, of the North China Mission, during her visit to this country, just now closing, told touching stories of the devotion of her people, and their beautiful gifts to her upon her departure for Europe and America. Miss Emily Hartwell, born in China, and an ardent lover of her native land, is enthusiastic over the virtues of the Chinese, and over the loyalty of the native Christians.

The few stories of an opposite character have been utterly buried beneath the mass of the testimony in favor of Christianity and what it is doing for the Chinese. Wu Ting Fang and many of the others among the foremost Chinese nobles have only good words for it. One story told by a devoted missionary deserves to be remembered always as a tribute to the unselfishness of the Chinese converts, for its hero was only one among many.

During the Boxer rebellion, a Christian Chinese boy learned that his beloved teacher was in danger. She could not believe that the peril was so imminent as he represented, but in response to his entreaties, she consented to don his clothing and to steal away in the twilight. The boy put on hers, well knowing what might be the result, but aware that unless the crowd supposed that they had trapped the teacher, they would track her to her hiding place. In less than an hour, they had killed him, but the teacher was saved.

One thinks of Christina Rossetti's Round Tower at Jhansi, with its:

A hundred, a thousand to one, even so,
Not a hope in the world remained.
The howling, swarming wretches below
Gained and gained and gained.

But Christ came to save these "wretches," and it is to us that he has entrusted the work. As we look at China, and at Korea, its neighbor, where the field is white for the harvest, and the laborers are pitifully few, let us pray with stronger fervor than ever for "the world for Christ."

*Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 20. TEXT: Rev. 3: 8-11; Acts 13: 1-3, 20, 21. (Missionary.)

A WELL KNOWN EMBROIDERY AUTHORITY WRITES:

I HAD WASHED WITH PEARLINE

which had been the result of my embroidery that was so beautiful with rich colors. With the PEARLINE I had washed my windows, HANDLED by hundreds of people, and the result was in every respect SATISFACTORY. I shall instruct all my teachers to use PEARLINE in cleansing their windows and floors.

Pearline washes silks perfectly

SAFETY 6% PROFIT

Why Shouldn't You Get the Benefit of the Full Earning Power of Your Savings—

especially if it can be done without the sacrifice of safety? You shouldn't sacrifice safety under any condition.

This Company issues Certificates of Deposit

running for 2 years and bearing 6 per cent. interest. They are backed by first mortgages on improved real estate and are absolutely sound and secure.

On Savings Accounts, withdrawable on demand, we pay 5 per cent.

Write for Booklet giving full information.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

Vapo Cresolene ESTABLISHED 1879

for Whooping Cough, Croup, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used while you sleep."

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough. Ever dreaded Croup cannot exist where Cresolene is used.

It acts directly on the nose and throat, making breathing easy in the case of colds; soothes the sore throat and stops the cough.

Cresolene is a powerful germicide, acting both as a curative and preventive in contagious diseases. It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use.

For Sale By All Druggists.
Send Postal for Descriptive Booklet.

THE VAPOR-CRESOLENE CO., 180 Fulton St., New York
Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada.

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure THIS DOES IT ALL

The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles authorized agents, V.C. Graham today, 100, and 22 pairs of Positive Tension Shears in choice, make $100.00. We guarantee to show ANYONE HOW TO MAKE $100.00 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents than are not found in stores, than any other house in the U.S. Sample free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address: Thomas Mfg. Co., 188 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

Better Bred Birds

Your choice from 100 strains, the paying kind. Bred from prize winners. Booklet on "Proper Care and Feeding of Chickens, Ducks and Turkeys." Free Poultry Paper, 1 Year, 10c. Catalog Free.

ROYAL POULTRY FARM
Dept. 237, Des Moines, Iowa

Peter Moller's Cod Liver Oil

should be purchased for the following good reasons:

It is a pure oil, so pure that it is positively free from disagreeable taste and odor. Children take it without persuasion. It digests readily, does not cling to the palate, and never "repeats."

It is made and bottled by Peter Moller at his own factory at the Norway fisheries—no adulteration possible.

Not sold in bulk. You know you get the genuine when you receive the flat oval bottle bearing the name of Schieffelin & Co., New York, Sole Agents

20 Year Gold Filled NOT AFFECTED BY ELECTRICITY MAGNETISM

$7.50

NON-MAGNETIC WATCH

Gentleman's (10 size) or lady's (8 size). Hunting or Open Face. Pendant wind and set considerably than model.

CASE Richly engraved, engine turned or plain polished; antique look, stylish and of artistic merit.

MOVEMENT Strictly high grade; temperature difference equalizing expansion; heavy; guaranteed; 17 jeweled lever movement; exposed winding crown; NON-magnetic, absolutely accurate and reliable.

GUARANTEE We will cheerfully furnish a new watch if, with reasonable use, the watch is not in good case should wear off within 20 years or the movement prove defective during the same period.

WE WILL SEND watch upon receipt of price or if O.D. is express with postage.

LATEST IN FOBS New model; fast; most useful; to become very popular. Genuine; never heard of; made in an artistic light brown tint with the natural white showing through in the raised pattern; gold filled chain and trimmings. Send postal for $1.00.

SPECIAL If ordered together we will send watch, chain and fob for $8.25. Big catalogue for the asking. Write today.

EXCELSIOR WATCH CO.,
76 Athenaeum Bldg. - Chicago, Ill.

Why Tone is so Sweet

There is no other tone so sweet as the tone of the SEYBOLD PIANO AND ORGAN CO., ELGIN, ILL.

SEYBOLD REED-PIPE ORGAN

THE LITTLE DOCTOR

Continued from page 991

so slightly," said George. "Wouldn't he think that we were rather bold?"

"He! Not a bit of it! He's a proud old chap and rather likes the idee of strangers admiring his place. Why, bless your souls, I've took, many a time, a whole party from the hotel there of an afternoon, and he'd only say, with a grand wave of his hand: 'Look around as much as you please. Yes, Paradise is a fine place.' He calls it 'Paradise.'"

Thus persuaded, our young friends set out, more attracted by the hope of seeing the fair young mistress of the mansion somewhere in the grounds, than by any inducement held out by the loquacious Jack.

"Pr'aps you don't know, strangers, that the Squire hain't lived here all his life, but he moved to this place when Miss Marian was a very little shaver."

"Was his wife dead when he came to reside here?" inquired George.

"Laws, yes, there never has been any one in the family 'cept Mrs. Langdon—she be the housekeeper. I ruther think she's a kind of an aunt, or somethin'. Leastways, they always call her 'Aunt Phoebe.' You see, not bein' a reg'lar tradesman, but a kind o' handy Jack-o'-all-trades, I often get an odd job o' work around the Squire's house, and, nat'rally, I know enough to take an interest in their affairs," he added, with a sly twinkle in the eye.

Dudley walked on in perfect silence, maintaining his previous haughty bearing until they found themselves within the grounds of Squire Danforth. Then he seemed to drink in the beauty of the surrounding scenery, entirely oblivious of the cares and interests of mankind in general. Therefore, it fell to George to conduct the conversation with their officious guide.

"Do they entertain at all?" he asked.

"How?"

"Do the Squire and Miss Danforth ever give parties, or go with their neighbors in any except a strictly business way?"

"Not much, I reckon. They travel a good deal. Once the house was shut up a whole year at a time—and they went off to Mexico or some other furrin parts. That was the first year they was here, I reckon. Just the week after they started, a stranger, who had the look of a furriner, come to visit the family, and I tell you now, my name ain't Andrew Jackson Green, if he didn't carry on high when he found they was clean gone."

"What do you mean?" asked George.

"Why, you see, he come down on one of the late trains one evenin', and I bein' the only man loafin' around the station, he axed me did I know where Squire Danforth lived, and seemin' as I did, bein' ginerally posted in such matters, he offered me five dollars if I'd find a rig and git him out there in half an hour. Wal, it took me a-flyin' round pretty spry, but I managed it, and when we found the house all shet up and heard from the old gardener, who lived near by, that they had gone and no tellin' when they'd be back, he jest tore round like all possessed, stampin' up an' down the path, and swore it was jest his luck—and said a lot o' stuff I reckon he didn't think I'd hear."

"Well, well," remarked George hurriedly, "perhaps it isn't just the thing for us to be listening to all this. Perhaps he had some great trouble on his mind."

"I rayther think he had, and I never told some o' the stuff he said. But I tell you, I never since that day seed such a pair o' eyes—but once—as his." Then he added, looking up to Dudley, who had by some strange coincidence given up his musing just in time to hear the last part of these remarks, "Be you tired?"

"Yes; I am both tired and thirsty enough to wish for a rest and a drink from the wonderful well you have talked about."

CHAPTER II

JACK was in his element. He had an opportunity to talk, and he held forth eloquently on the beauties of the grounds. The Squire had indeed made most attractive the surroundings of his stately mansion. Nature had greatly assisted him in his work. Such grand old trees of oak, maple, linden and chestnut are seldom seen. All underbrush had been cleared away. Winding paths had been made to run here and there in every direction, and invariably they led to some picturesque view, or into deepest, darkest shadows of coolness and comfort, where rustic seats and arbors invited to rest and enjoyment.

Jack pointed out the "Indian trail," which was traversed in early times with fleet foot by many a noble son of the forest.

Under a small mound, which they noticed near this trail, reposed, he said, the remains of a famous Indian chief.

At length, with great pride, he showed them the ancient well from which "the old oaken bucket" had been removed and replaced by a pump.

The picturesqueness of the scene was somewhat marred by this change; but, lo! there stood a fair "Rebekah," even Miss Marian herself, ready to give drink to the young "Isaac" who had come to search out the land.

At the sound of Jack's voice, Miss Danforth turned to see who was approaching. At the sight of the young gentlemen she paused, with a goblet in one hand, and the other leaning on the handle of the pump, while a bright flush spread over her beautiful face.

As George stepped forward and introduced himself, with uncovered head, she bowed modestly.

"Pardon me, Miss Danforth. My friend Mr. Verner and I, being strangers in the neighborhood, have been assured by this man that he was at liberty to show us over the grounds and give us a drink from the famous old well."

"Oh, yes," she replied, with a merry glance at Jack. "Our friend, Mr. Green, thinks that no sight-seeing in the neighborhood of Branksome would be complete without a view of our grounds. It is a lovely spot to me, Mr. Hunter; indeed, the dearest spot on earth; but it may not strike strangers as being anything more than a very ordinary sort of place."

"You have grown up here, Miss Danforth, have you not?" inquired Dudley.

"Yes, almost. I remember no other home distinctly, although I spent the first few years of my life abroad. I have lived here long enough to know nearly everybody in Branksome. The hotel visitors are the only persons I fail to recognize at our little church. Was the young lady I saw in your pew on the day when I was introduced to you a cousin, Mr. Hunter?"

To be continued

Ordained at Six Years of Age

REV. F. LUKE WISEMAN, the head of the Birmingham Wesleyan Mission, England, tells the story of what he called his own ordination to the ministry. As a child he was taken one day to a little chapel down in a lower part of London. Sitting in a pew, he found out the hymn for a blind old man who sat next him. "At the end of the service," Mr. Wiseman continued, "my friends came up and said, 'This is the preacher's son.' And the old blind man put his hand on my head and said, 'The Lord bless thee, and make thee a preacher.' That was my ordination!" said Mr. Wiseman. "I was ordained by a layman—a man of God who prayed for the little lad of six years, and the little lad could not get away from the prayer!"

DIAMOND GIFTS

20% Down, 10% a Month

A wealth of suggestions for Christmas gifts is contained in our latest Catalog number 73. Send for it today. It will solve the problem of "what to give"—and, better still, how to pay for it.

Every diamond we sell is guaranteed as to price and quality. If your local jeweler can duplicate it at the price, we will take it back and return your money.

Our direct methods of buying and selling save you at least two profits. We send goods prepaid for examination. Send for catalogs.

J. M. LYON & CO.
71-73 Nassau St., New York
ESTABLISHED 1848

ROSENBERG'S BURGLAR PROOF Automatic Sash Lock

IS THE BEST AND CHEAPEST BURGLAR INSURANCE

No mechanical skill required to fit it to any sash—the only tool necessary, a screw-driver. By merely shutting the window, IT LOCKS AUTOMATICALLY. You can sleep by the open window without sacrificing security, as it locks the sashes securely at any desired point when open from top, bottom or both. You can not forget to lock your window; it is always locked when open or shut.

No Burglar's "Jimmy" Can Pry it Loose

It might splinter the sash to pieces, but the lock would hold. Cannot be picked from the outside—no knife can be inserted between the sashes to pick it. It is an entirely new principle and locks to stay locked. Draws sashes tightly together, no matter how separated and

PREVENTS RATTLING OF WINDOWS

Fits any new or old style window and does not interfere with other sash locks which are already in use. Retail Price, 50 Cents, at all hardware dealers. If your dealer will not supply you, write to us. An interesting Booklet tells more about this wonderful burglar proof lock. Write for it to-day. It's free.

CLIMAX LOCK & VENTILATOR CO., Dept. G, Ellicott Square, BUFFALO, N. Y.

RISEING SUN STOVE POLISH IN CAKES

SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH IN TINS

THE BEST ATTAINABLE RESULTS OF FORTY YEARS' EXPERIENCE.

Rising Sun is the most durable Stove Polish. It gives a brilliant and abiding lustre. It will not cake on the iron. It will not burn red. It will not stain the hands. It stands heat better than any other Stove Polish made.

SUN PASTE produces a most beautiful black lustre. After dinner, the stove may be touched up in a minute with it and may be kept bright and clean with very little labor and no dust. Try it and you will be delighted.

At all Grocers. MORSE BROTHERS Props., Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

TRAVELING SALESMEN

EARN BIG SALARIES

From $1,000 to $10,000 a year and expenses. If you want to enter the easiest, best paid profession in the world, our free catalogue "A Knight of the Grip" will show you how. We place hundreds of our graduates in good positions with the best firms all over the United States and Canada. Write (or call) for particulars today. Address Dept. 298 National Salesman's Training Association, Chicago, Kansas City, New York, Minneapolis, San Francisco. Write nearest office.

Don't Throw it Away

Does Your Granite Dish or Hot Water Bag Leak?

USE MENDETS

They mend all leaks in all utensils—tin, brass, copper, granite, hot water bags, etc. Nosolder, cement or rivet. Any one can use them; fit any surface; two million in use. Send for sample pkg. 10c. Complete pkg. assorted sizes, 25c postpaid. Agents wanted. Collette Mfg. Co., Box 22, C Amsterdam, N. Y.

Wonderfully Elastic!

Page Fences "give and take" but never break. 25 years of practical experience woven into the fabric. No other fence has it! This is the "Jubilee Year" or Quarter-Centennial of Page Fence. "Jubilee" book FREE. Page Woven Wire Fence Co., Box 130 Y, Adrian, Mich.

WOMEN'S HANDS ALWAYS KEPT WHITE AND SOFT

A million pairs of these women's work gloves sold every year. Used in sweeping, clothes-hanging, tending furnace, etc. Protects hands. Automatic emulsifies. Five-pairs prepaid $1. FREMONT MITTEN & GLOVE COMPANY, 1218 Wood Street, Fremont, Ohio.

FENCE STRONGEST MADE

Full-strength chicken-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue free. COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 47, Winchester, Indiana.

DEAF 25 YEARS

CAN NOW HEAR WHISPERS

I was deaf for 25 years. I can now hear a whisper with my artificial EAR DRUMS in my ears. You cannot see them in my ears. I CANNOT FEEL THEM, for they are perfectly comfortable. Write and I will tell you a true story—How I Got Deaf—and How I Made Myself Hear. Address G. P. WAY, 2 Adelaide Street, Detroit, Mich.

LEARN PLUMBING

A trade that will make you independent for life. Hours Shorter—Pay Bigger—Demand Greater than any other trade. You need no previous experience. Our practical methods enable you in a few months to hold position as skilled plumber or conduct your own business. Catalog sent free.

St. Louis Trades School
4455 Olive St. St. Louis, Mo.

THE BEST LIGHT

ABSOLUTELY safe—Is very brilliant, powerful and steady. One burner gives more light than six 16-candle power electric light bulbs—more economical than kerosene. Each lamp is a miniature light works.

FULLY GUARANTEED OVER 200 STYLES. Agents wanted. Catalogue Free. Write to-day.

THE BEST LIGHT
3-70 E. 5th
Canton.

PARKER'S Arctic Sock

Registered in U. S. Patent Office. Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick room. Worn in rubber boots absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealer or by mail. 25c a pair. Parker pays postage.

Catalogue free. Look for Parker's name in every paper.
J. H. PARKER CO., DEPT. K 25 JAMES STREET, MALDEN, MASS.

15 CENTS A ROD

For a 22-inch Hog Fence; 27c for 47-inch Farm Fence; 37c for 50-inch Poultry Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. 68 styles and heights. Catalog free. Write for it today.

KITSELMAN BROS. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

Wonderful Reading

FREE OFFER!

THE greatest writers in America are now contributing to the Woman's World. Woman's World has a circulation of over 2,000,000 copies monthly, and in order to maintain this unparalleled circulation—THE LARGEST IN THE WORLD—we will send Four Issues FREE in accordance with the offer below. The following are only a few of the great features in these four free issues, and will give you an idea of the quality of the reading published in the

Woman's World

Homes and Near-Homes in the Far North, By REX BEACH, Author of The Spoilers, also The Barriers, a book which established a record sale of 50,000 copies in six weeks. Mr. Beach's article in the Woman's World is an accurate, realistic and pathetic account of the home-life in the Frozen North. The account abounds with the rapid, moving-picture style of description, the surprising touches of nature, the soul-stirring pathos so characteristic of Mr. Beach's work.

Music and Romance of Ireland, By CHAUNCEY OLCOTT. Few actors on the American stage have a more liberal and enthusiastic following than Chauncey Olcott, whose charming story in the Woman's World deals with the romance and music of Ireland, which will go straight to every heart that appreciates Irish characteristics. It is full of inimitable, personal touches and anecdotes of how this Prince of Irish Actors has himself lived a romanceful life of comedy and pathos.

The Path of the Erring, By EDWIN W. SIMS, United States District Attorney in Chicago. Mr. Sims was the Government Official in the famous $29,000,000.00 Standard Oil Case. A leading clergyman commenting on this wonderful article by Mr. Sims, writes: "Knowing the great price of a single soul, having had our minds stirred and awakened to the existing causes of the evils that engulf so many girls in the dark and dread whirlpool of death, let each of us appoint ourselves a committee of one to do all we can to stamp out the monstrous soul-scourge and impede its further inroad into the homes of the Nations." Mr. Sims' treatise is written strictly from the viewpoint of a Government Official who has had to deal in his many recent prosecutions and investigations with this difficult and delicate subject.

The Sins of Society, By JOSEPH MEDILL PATTERSON, Author of A Little Brother of the Rich, the greatest book sensation of the year. Mr. Patterson is an insider, and his contribution to the Woman's World is a startling expose of the life and customs of the fashionably rich, who, Mr. Patterson states in his interesting article, have established an imitative court in this country, the basis of which is wealth.

White Slave Trade, By EDWIN W. SIMS, United States District Attorney. The Chicago Tribune says: "The revelations made by United States District Attorney Sims in the Woman's World should be given as wide a currency as possible. The extent of the White Slave traffic, and the machinery by which it is maintained, should be brought home not only to the officials sworn to deal with crime, but to parents sworn under a Higher Law to guard their young. As Mr. Sims says, thousands of girls from the country are entrapped each year, and he points out the pitiful fact that the parents of a great majority of these girls are unaware of their fate. As a consequence of this state of public ignorance, the traffic proceeds unchecked save by the efforts of prosecuting officials, which are necessarily restricted and temporary in effect."

Great Events March, Complete Piece of Music by ABE HOLZMAN, Author of "Smoky Mokes," "Blaze Away," "Uncle Sammy" and other well-known musical hits.

"THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE FAITH," by Mrs. Clara Louise Burnham, author of "Jewel," "Jewel Story Book," "The Open Shutters," etc.

"THE MOST INTERESTING THING IN THE WORLD," by George Ade, George Barr McCutcheon, Forrest Crissey and William Hodge.

"LOVE-MAKING IN FOREIGN LANDS," by Frank L. Pixley, author of "King Dodo," "The Burgomaster," Prince of Pilsen," etc.

"THE OLD HOMES AND THE NEW," by Hon. Adlai E. Stevenson, former Vice-President of the United States.

"THE SINS OF HIS FATHERS," by Cyrus Townsend Brady, author of "A Little Traitor to the South," "Richard the Brazen," etc.—a powerful story dealing with "The Sins of the Fathers visited unto the third and fourth generations."

"MY BEAUTY AND HEALTH SECRETS," by Miss Della Carson, first prize winner in Chicago Tribune's $10,000.00 Beauty Contest; also in World Contest. Miss Carson tells the secret of how she has the appearance of a girl of sixteen, whereas she is thirty.

"NEW ARKANSAS TRAVELER STORIES," by Opie Read, author and originator of "The Arkansas Traveler."

"THE JOURNAL OF JULIE." The confidential and personal experiences of a young country girl winning her way in a great city.

"THE WILD ROSE LETTERS." Being the heart secrets between Elaine, Countess of Wycherly, and Rose Mary of Strawberry Point (Ia.). Its sentiment is as sweet and delicious as wild honey.

Some of the other contributors to these four issues are: Margaret Sangster, Ella Wheeler Wilcox, Roswell Field, General Charles King, Harriet Prescott Spofford, Elia W. Peattie, Elliot Flower, Stanley Waterloo, Frank L. Stanton, Edwin Balmer, Maude Radford Warren, Allen D. Albert, Dr. W. F. Waugh, Ellen Stan, John Kendrick Bangs, and many others.

WOMAN'S WORLD
46-48 W. Monroe Street, Chicago, Ill.:

Send me free, and postpaid, at once, the 4 copies of the Woman's World containing all of the features mentioned in your advertisement. I enclose 25 cents to pay for a full year's subscription to the Woman's World, to commence after receipt the four free copies. Send me as a subscription receipt the Della Carson 1909 Art Calendar.

Name

Address

Date

FREE OFFER:

Pay for a Special Full Year's Subscription, to start after the receipt of the four free issues.

EXTRA OFFER:

Colors of Miss Della Carson, the $10,000.00 Prize Beauty, with 1909 Art Calendar. This beautiful Art Calendar sent as a receipt and for introductory purposes only.

WOMAN'S WORLD, 46-48 West Monroe St., Chicago

WOMAN'S WORLD is Not Sold on Newsstands, and Can Only be Obtained Direct Heretofore unpublished photograph

REX BEACH

Author of "The Spoilers," "The Barriers," etc.

The following and many more well-known writers and celebrities have all contributed to the Woman's World during the past six months:

Jane Addams
Maud Ballington Booth
Rex Beach
Chauncey Olcott
Opie Read
Margaret Sangster
Roswell Field
Elliott Flower
Samuel E. Kiser
Ella Wheeler Wilcox
Elia W. Peattie
Maud Radford Warren
General Charles King
Clara Louise Burnham
Cyrus Townsend Brady
George Ade
George Barr McCutcheon
Will Payne
Frank Pixley
Harriet Prescott Spofford
Allen D. Albert
Edwin Balmer
John Kendrick Bangs
Edwin W. Sims
Joseph Medill Patterson
Forrest Crissey
Sam Loyd
Della Carson
Stanley Waterloo
George B. Forrest

Woman's World is ably edited by Forrest Crissey, Stanley Waterloo and Geo. B. Forrest

Beauty's Favorite

The article which excels all others in improving the beauty of the skin is naturally and deservedly beauty's favorite. This has been the acknowledged and honored position held by Pears' Soap for nearly 120 years.

It won, and has maintained, that position by virtue of its complete purity, and by the possession of those emollient properties which soften, refine and impart natural color to the skin. No other soap possesses these qualities in such a pre-eminent degree as

Pears' Soap

"All rights secured."OF ALL SCENTED SOAPS PEARS' OTTO OF ROSES IS THE BEST

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Copyright, 1908, by Louis Klopsch

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 16, 1908

VOL. 31 NO. 51. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

From the Famous Portrait by W. L. Forster

See Bicentenary Art. p. 11

1708 — CHARLES WESLEY, METHODISM'S GREATEST HYMNOLOGIST — 1908

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

G. E. M., Sharon, Vt. Is the place of Washington's encampment at Valley Forge marked by a memorial or monument?

In 1903 the State of Pennsylvania voted $25,000 toward making the site of the encampment at Valley Forge a public park. The amount was insufficient, so the plan has not been completed. There are a number of markers, and a beautiful memorial chapel is being built by private subscription. There is a bay or section paid for by people in each one of the States, representing the thirteen colonies. Some of these bays are paid for by the Sons of the American Revolution.

Reader, Michigan. Will you tell me the qualifications of a librarian? Also, where there are schools for librarians and how long the course requires.

In the first place, a good education is required. One must, at least, have covered studies equal to those of a high school or academy, and will be more successful in the end if a college course may be added. There are several good schools which give the technical training, notably Pratt Institute in Brooklyn, and Simmons College, Boston, Mass. Write to the secretaries for full information. Training courses are usually two years in length.

C. H. G., Saginaw, Mich. Are the words "And forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us," found in any one of the four Gospels in either the King James (Authorized) or American Revision? If not, is there "good and sufficient" reason for so repeating it in public and teaching it to our children?

You will find the authority for the use of "trespasses" in Matt. 6:14, 15. The use of it in the Lord's Prayer by some of the churches, instead of "debts" and "debtors," is not important. It is simply a variant and nowise affects the meaning.

C. A. O. P., Boston, Mass. There is nothing in the Constitution or laws of this country to prevent any man being elected President on account of his religion. It would be practically impossible, however, for a man whose views were so pronounced as to offend the majority of the people, to be chosen, as for instance, an atheist or infidel, or a bitter and malevolent partisan of any religion, especially a religion opposed to Christianity. The spirit of the whole nation is Christian, but it is broad and tolerant.

W. W. S., Pickering, Ont. What became of the battleship Maine, which was sunk in the harbor of Havana previous to the outbreak of the war with Spain?

The wreck of the Maine is still in the harbor of Havana. One mast and some rigging protrude above the surface. On the anniversary of the wreck it is decorated with flowers and the American flag. Several plans have been made to remove the wreck, but none of them have been carried out.

Several Inquirers. The headquarters of the Family Altar League are at 602 Lakeside Building, Chicago, and covenant cards will be gladly sent from there to all who desire to join the League or will make efforts to get signers. Whenever a covenant is made, the card is to be sent to headquarters, and in its place there will be sent, without cost, a certificate of membership. Every request for covenant cards or wall cards will be promptly honored.

A. E. B., North Windham, Vt. 1. When was Thanksgiving day first observed by the United States. 2. Where is Aguinaldo? Is he being kept in confinement?

The custom of thanksgiving was introduced by the Pilgrims in 1621, the year after they landed on Plymouth Rock. Governor Bradford, after the first harvest, appointed a day for thanksgiving. From New England the custom spread over the entire country. 2. Aguinaldo has been at large for a number of years. At last reports he was living in Manila, and had some scheme for a Filipino banking system.

J. F. J., Brooklyn, N.Y. Is there anything in the Bible telling where or how the Virgin Mary died? Is it stated anywhere that she ascended to heaven without dying?

There is a tradition that she lived in the home of John the disciple and died there. Another tradition states that she went with John to Ephesus and died there. Juvenal says she was buried in Gethsemane. There is, however, nothing in Scripture concerning her life after the crucifixion of Jesus.

W. L. L., Dardanelle, Ark. Were Napoleon's wars of conquest prompted by patriotic motives or were they prompted by selfish ones?

Napoleon's wars cannot be characterized by a single adjective. His career divides itself into three parts: 1. When he was fighting for the peace and harmonization of affairs at home. 2.

When he fought for conquest, as in Russia and Egypt. 3. When he fought for self-preservation against the allies. The first was patriotic; the second had in view, besides his own greed for fame, the glory of France, which he wished to make the mistress of the world; the third was selfish, having in view the retrieval of his own lost power. Glory does not make war defensible, however.

F. E. B., Pensacola, Fla. Will you inform me as to when and by whom the Nicaragua Canal was started? Has the United States ever had anything to do with it? Has it ever been completed, or was it a failure?

Work on the Nicaragua Canal, which was intended to unite the Pacific and Atlantic oceans, was begun in 1889 and suspended in 1893. In 1901 a treaty was signed by Great Britain and the United States making the proposed canal neutral. The United States in 1903 decided that the canal started through Panama should be completed and the Nicaragua scheme was left in abeyance.

J. P. S., Cincinnati, O. Will the MAIL-BAG direct me how to obtain the latest statistics upon child labor in the United States?

Send to the United States Census Bureau in Washington, D. C. Such facts are gathered there, as well as the vital statistics of the country.

was finished by Louis XIV. It was sacked in three revolutions, burned in 1871 and the ruins sold in 1882. The garden of the Tuileries still exists. 2. No; the site of the temple is a Mohammedan mosque. 3. Yes; Mrs. Eddy is the head of the Christian Scientists and lives in Brookline, Mass. 4. No; Australia is part of the British Empire. Great Britain still holds her possessions in the East Indies.

B. Roanoke, Va. Where can I find the passage in which these lines occur:

"O, yet we trust that somehow good Will be the final goal of ill?"

It is from Tennyson's In Memoriam, part 54.

H. G. T., Salisbury, N. C. Explain the vision of Ezekiel in the first and tenth chapters, also what is meant by the image of jealousy in Ezek. 8:5?

It was a time when the exiles were looking forward hopefully toward Jerusalem, anticipating a peaceful return. Hence the prophet's vision, which carried him in spirit to the temple at Jerusalem, was a seasonable communication to the exiles at Chabar, north of Babylon, whither they had been sent by their oppressors. The "image of jealousy" was the heathen Astarte (or Asheerah), set up by Manasseh as a rival to Jehovah. "The glory" of God was still there, not-

Miscellaneous

F. H. S., Earlham, Ia. What you say doubtfully true; but we suppose it will altogether right until the millennium.

Reader, Atlantic Highlands, N. J. God the world, but many men, through sin yielded themselves to Satan's dominion.

A. A. R., Lodi, Calif. An earnest Christian has nothing to do with the production of intoxicants, even in the remotest degree.

E. M. A., Rockford, Ill. We are unable to answer your question. Write to secretary of the Society of Christian Scientists, Boston, Mass.

G. E. F., Peona, Mo. Other nations—practically all the European and several Asiatic—have harvest festivals and feasts, which are the alien of our Thanksgiving.

L. L. B., Cawker, Kan. 1. The religions of Presidents were given in THE MAIL-BAG a few weeks ago. 2. St. Pierre has not been rebuilt as far as we are informed.

J. M. W., Winchester, Ky. Opinions differ on the subject, but it is a safe rule to avoid anything which your conscience cannot unhesitatingly approve. Write to the Medical Record, New York.

Mother Bird's Invitation

Dear Friends of The Christian Herald

We have never told you much about the work going on in our Gospel Settlement—a work that since 1907 has grown steadily. As we were the white door in this district, the children took it upon themselves to name "The White Door Settlement," and has proved a badge of welcome to thousands of children ever since. It could fill many pages with the history of the Settlement's activities.

The work has grown beyond all expectations and, though our class rooms are large, and we have an average of six classes or clubs a day, and even after school hours, we have always a waiting list of three or four children which we cannot dispose of.

Our aim is to fortify these children to meet the temptations of every day life. Is it not worth while to lay the foundations of a home life, which the children will build in the future, with a knowledge not only of sanitation and cleanliness, but of wholesome living and a spirit of love and unity in the home?

There is not space to tell of the Sunday School, and how the children, so full of them, wait on the steps for hours for the door to open; of the Mother's Meeting on Sunday, when Bible verses and stories are learned, and the women form a cradle choir, the little voices ringing out in Christmas carols or singing quietly "Abide With Me" or "Just for To-day;" nor of the Kindergarten and Housekeeping classes and the Sewing (Junior and Senior and Shirtwaist) Clubs; nor of the Boys' and Men's Clubs in Civil and Literature, and the Mother's Club numbering 106.

We are preparing now for our Christmas Tree, which we will use five evenings, for 800 children. In this time the children are told the real story of Christmas—the story of the Christ-Child and the meaning of the gifts.

If the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who have done such mighty things through their gifts, are disposed to help us in this beautiful work they may send their contributions to Dr. Klopsch of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, Bible House, New York, who has kindly consented to receive them. What more acceptable gift can we offer to the Christ-Child than to bring joy and sunshine into the lives of some of "the least of these" living in the depths and darkness of an East Side tenement?

SARAH J. BIRD.

Unveiling the Sheridan Monument in Washington

ONE of the finest equestrian statues in the country is that of Lieutenant-General Philip H. Sheridan, just unveiled in Washington, D. C. It represents the cavalry leader reining in his charger with his left hand, while he extends the other in command. It is of the finest bronze. President Roosevelt, General Porter and others prominent in the Government and in military circles, spoke at the ceremonies, which were attended by General Sheridan's family and a great concourse of people.

Mrs. J. A. M., Shelburne, Ont., Can. What is the sin against the Holy Ghost?

It is believed to have consisted in attributing the miraculous powers of the Divine Spirit to Satanic agency. There is, however, much difference of opinion on the subject.

Reader, Raeford, N. C. 1. In what chapter of the Bible is the Lord's Prayer found? 2. Why is it called "The Lord's Prayer"?

1. See Matt. 6:9 and Luke 11:2. 2. It is the prayer which Christ taught to his disciples.

Reader, Clayton, N. Y. What is the specific gravity of ice?

Ice has a specific gravity of .92.

B. Mc., Bouckville, N. Y. Does the word Mississippi come from the Indian language? If so, how did they pronounce it and what did it mean?

It is an Indian word. The tribes along its banks called it Mische-sepe. It is best translated as "Father of Waters."

B., Waupaca, Wis. 1. Please explain the Tuileries in France. 2. Have they commenced to build the temple in Jerusalem? 3. Is Mrs. Eddy the head of the Christian Scientists? 4. Has Great Britain lost Australia or the East Indies?

1. The Tuileries is the name of a palace of the Renaissance period in Paris, France, and long one of the residences of the French kings. It was commenced by Catherine de Medicis in 1564 and withstanding the idol's presence, implying his long-suffering toward Israel. The vision is an ideal pictorial representation of the idolatries into which the people had relapsed.

C. A. B., Tunnel Hill, Ga. 1. The question concerning Judas and the Lord's Supper has already been thoroughly discussed in the MAIL-BAG. 2. With the exception of some tribes in the interior of Africa, some few in remote parts of Asia, also some in parts of the interior of China, and the people of Tibet, practically "all the world" has had the Gospel preached to it.

M. F., Flemington, N. J. What is the object or the practical value of the extraordinary tests of physical endurance which we read of in the newspapers and magazines from time to time, as having been suggested or directed by President Roosevelt? Has the President the right to assume the duties of athletic instructor for our soldiers and sailors?

The President, as Commander-in-chief of the Army and Navy, has the power to do this, although no previous President ever did it. Doubtless some of the officers regard the severe tests he has instituted with repugnance, as for instance the seventeen-mile daily walk on three successive days; the long-distance riding tests; the "follow-my-leader" test with its dangers and discomforts; but on the whole, the new system tends to improve physique, which is the President's object.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Port-au-Prince, the Haytian Capital, Seized by the Revolutionists

HAYTI'S SUCCESSFUL REVOLUTION

AN EXTRAORDINARY man is Nord Alexis, ex-President of Hayti, who has just been deposed by the successful revolution under Generals Simon and Legitime, the latter of whom has been declared President. The age of Nord Alexis is said to be ninety-eight years, and a prominent Haytian who saw him a few weeks ago assured the writer that the "old warhorse of Hayti," as foreign residents call the President, was not only in full possession of his mental powers, but also clear-headed and active physically, and as able to go about his business as an ordinary man of fifty. Almost from childhood, Nord Alexis has been a fighter, taking part in the strife that has kept Hayti in turmoil, with rare intervals of tranquillity, ever since the former slaves of French planters won their independence. Nord Alexis led his forces in the latter part of seven years ago which ended in his capture of the presidency, and he is more dreaded by his enemies to-day than any of his generals. It is said that he does not know what fear is, and he would as soon be at the head of his troops as in his palace. Since the Venetian doge Dandolo, at about ninety years of age, took Constantinople by storm, there has been no previous example of warlike courage and energy, combined with years far exceeding the usual limits of old age, equal to that displayed by the nonagenarian President of Hayti.

Nord Alexis is a black negro. His administration has been that of the average Haytian president. It has been attended with the usual plots and insurrections, and these have been featured with the usual atrocities. When, a few months ago, General Lehardouin Leconte, Minister of the Interior to President Nord Alexis, caused more than a score of residents of Port-au-Prince to be taken from their homes and shot on the charge of conspiring against the government, he invited the retribution which came when, according to a report from insurgent forces, he was himself taken prisoner and summarily executed. The report of Leconte's death at the hands of the revolutionists has been denied, however, from Port-au-Prince.

The government of the United States, having established order in Cuba and compelled Dominica to recognize its obligations to its creditors and to civilization, may possibly be compelled to intervene to put a stop to despotism tempered by revolution in Hayti. There is no reason, except misgovernment, for Hayti's lack of prosperity. There is no richer land anywhere, and the agricultural possibilities of the republic are almost incalculable; yet agriculture is neglected, the roads are in wretched condition, and the industry of producers is burdened with a tax on exports. The government spends money in educating young men abroad to be lawyers and doctors, of whom there is already a supply more than sufficient for Haytian requirements, and it is the few of many enlightened Haytians that it would be wiser to expend this money in teaching agriculture and civil and mechanical engineering, and let aspirants for the legal and medical professions pay their own way. It may be added here that French is the language of the republic.

A great evil in Hayti is the excessive number of soldiers. The United States of America got along very well with a regular army of 25,000 men before the Spanish-American War, and now, with the Philippines and other foreign possessions to guard, has not more than 60,000 or 70,000. A force of 16,000 soldiers appears, therefore, too large for a small country like Hayti. It is too handy to fight with, and is more of a danger than a protection to the government it is supposed to defend.

The State religion is the Roman Catholic, many of the clergy being educated priests from France.

Nord Alexis, the Deposed President of Hayti

All religions are tolerated, however. The Haytian government appropriates about one million dollars annually for education, which is conducted under religious direction. That heathenish rites are practised in some of the interior districts of Hayti is probable. A former British minister to Hayti has asserted that voodooism is prevalent there. The late E. D. C. Bassett, for many years American minister at Port-au-Prince, informed the writer, however, that he had made careful investigation regarding voodooism, and had come to the conclusion that there was no evidence of its existence among the Haytians. Voodooism is negro witchcraft, which in its least harmful form is an imposition, like fortune-telling, on the credulity of its patrons, but which is also resorted to for the purpose of getting rid, through insidious poisons, of a person whose death is desired.

The United States, under the Dominican treaty, has controlled since May, 1907, the eastern and larger portion of the island of Santo Domingo, included in the republic of Dominica. Under the terms of that treaty, order is preserved so far as is necessary to safeguard the collection of the revenues, of which the United States is trustee for the benefit of the creditors and of the Dominican government. Hayti, although the smaller, is the more prosperous and populous of the two republics which occupy the island, and is in a much better condition financially than Dominica was before American intervention; but Hayti is now the only part of the West Indies in which disorder is chronic, and where peril to foreigners and their interests is continually present, not on account of any prejudice against foreigners, but because of the insecurity arising from constant internal broils and frequent civil wars between rivals for power. Across the line in Dominica, conditions are very different. It has not been necessary for the United States to interfere, beyond taking charge of the finances, in Dominican affairs, the very fact of the American government holding the purse being sufficient to prevent uprisings, which were often, if not always, prompted by a desire to grab the custom-houses and their revenues.

Haytians, having observed the experience of their Dominican neighbors, naturally look forward to the probabilities of American intervention at their own side of the island. So far as can be learned, Haytians are ostensibly opposed to American interference of any kind; but there is a feeling among the intelligent classes, with large business interests in railways, mines and plantations, for all of which American capital is desired, that present conditions of peril and uncertainty should not be allowed to continue.

HENRY MANN.

The Present Situation in Hayti

With startling rapidity great changes have taken place in Hayti within the last two weeks. The revolutionists have been successful, the venerable Nord Alexis has been driven from the presidential office and has sought refuge beneath the tri-color of France, and General Legitime has been declared President of the republic. As there are three factions which fought against Alexis, and do not want any of the others in power, it seems likely that more blood will be shed. On November 28 General Cyriaque was sent with an army to capture the forces of General Simon. The armies met in battle

Continued on page 1007

The American Pulpit

A SERMON BY
Rev. Frederick F. Shannon*

THE TWICE-BORN

TEXT—JOHN 3:7
“Ye must be born again.”

“YE MUST be born”—here is the law of every human being entering the world. “Ye must be born again”—here is the law of every soul entering the kingdom of God. Two births—born of the flesh, born from above of the Spirit; two worlds—the physical and the spiritual—these are the truths we face in our Lord’s conversation with Nicodemus. Neither world can be entered without the wonder, the mystery, the glory of birth. We do not always remember this fact. Though a teacher in Israel, Nicodemus did not know it, or else had forgotten. But we must not forget that it is just as imperative to be born again to enter the kingdom of God as it is necessary to be born at all to come into the world. Therefore, I ask you to study with me the majesty and mystery of the twice-born. Let us gather our thought about these four things emphasized in this chapter: The one kingdom, the one entrance, the one agent, the one drawing power.

Consider, in the first place, that these words of Christ to Nicodemus hinge upon one kingdom—the kingdom of God. When Nicodemus, in his timid, half-patronizing manner, informs Christ that he and his colleagues are convinced that he is a teacher come from God, Christ answers him almost abruptly, in the startling words, “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, except one be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.” That is to say, the realities of God’s kingdom are not discernible to the natural eye. As Paul expresses it, “The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God; for they are foolishness unto him; and he cannot know them, because they are spiritually judged.” A new kingdom, a new man, a new sight—these are Christianity’s fundamentals. God provides the new kingdom; the new kingdom demands the new man; the new man has the new sight to behold the things of the new kingdom.

Now, let us be Scriptural, and we will not be absurd. Why does not the once-born man see the kingdom of God? Is the kingdom unreal because intangible? Certainly not. Is not every man born with capacity for seeing that kingdom? Undoubtedly, else it would be mockery to tell him that he may enter into it. But kindly remember that natural capacity, as related to the kingdom of God at this juncture, is a passive something, is only the power of receiving—it is not the power itself. The power resides in God. Hear Saint John, who was probably present at this meeting of Christ and Nicodemus, in the first chapter of his Gospel: “He came unto his own and they that were his own received him not.” That is, they were unwilling to accept him as Messiah, as Saviour. “But as many as received him, to them gave he the right to become children of God, even to them that believe on his name: who were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the flesh, nor of the will of man, but of God.” While native capacity is essential, therefore, to enter into the joy of the twice-born, it is by no means the only essential, and it cannot go the full length of this mystic process. Blessed are they who have been born, not of blood, nor of flesh, nor of man, but of God!

Blindness of the Worldly

Let me ask again, Why does not the once-born man, even though he be as refined and cultured as Nicodemus, see the kingdom of God? For three reasons. First, the things of the kingdom are foolishness to him. Suppose you talk to your unregenerate friend of spiritual facts. You will soon discover that to him they are neither more nor less than bald, rank, unintelligible absurdities. You might as well talk to a child of the African jungle about the glitter of New York’s Vanity Fair and expect him to understand you, as to talk to an unregenerate person about the kingdom of God and hope to make him comprehend the mysteries of which you speak. If the old African reminded Livingstone that ideas made him sleepy, your unspiritual friend will assure you that your “good news” is absurd to the point of laughter. “That may suit old women, effeminate men and irresponsible children”—so runs his reply—“but it don’t impress me at all. You know I have to reason things out for myself. All of our people are given to a philosophic turn of mind, and of course I can’t deny my ancestry.” He wouldn’t say or do anything to wound your feelings for the world—he is too much of a gentleman for that; but at the same time he gives you to distinctly understand that the things of the Spirit of God are foolishness to him. And though, after all, he may appear a much bigger fool to you than you do to him, you must at least admit that his attitude is thoroughly Scriptural.

Second, he is unwilling to meet the conditions. He knows, by intuition, that there must be submission of his will to a higher will—a feat old and experienced Christians do not perform any too readily. Moreover, he knows that he will have to let go of some things to which he clings and which cling to him with a death-like grip. Concerning the unknown and the unknowable part of his life, it is literally true that “the lid is on,” and he is unwilling to have it lifted. And why? “Because the carnal mind is enmity against God; for it is not subject to the law of God, neither indeed can be.”

Regeneration the Door

But to say nothing of the foolishness of spiritual things and his own unwillingness, the third reason why any Nicodemus cannot see the kingdom of God is the utter and absolute impossibility of the task. According to the explicit teaching of Christ, there is no conceivable way of getting around this grand and solitary exception: “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.” “He cannot”—let the words sink into your soul. Through native endowment he can do many striking, even brilliant things—things that make us wonder and admire—but “he cannot see the kingdom of God.”

This, then, brings us to our second point—the one entrance into the kingdom of God. Only one door opens into it, and written thereon is the one word—Regeneration. “Verily, verily, I say unto thee, Except a man be born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God.” The longer Christ talks upon this vital subject the more intense and radical he becomes. He had told Nicodemus just a moment before that he “cannot see,” but he now tells him that he “cannot enter”—that is, become a partaker of—the kingdom, except he be born again.

The Important Question

Now, one thing seems to be certain—there was never a more unequivocal revolutionary doctrine proclaimed than the new birth. Like a flash of divine lightning, it strikes straight home to the centre of things. It is God’s axe laid at the root of human character. Therefore, we ought to make sure of our ground as professing Christians.

So the all-important question for you, for me, for every human being is: “Have I been born again?” Not, mark you, “Have I joined the church?” “Have I been baptized?” “Have I paid my pew rent?” “Have I given a tenth or four-tenths of my income?” “Have I a desire to go to church once a week?” No doubt these questions have their rightful place, but let it be remembered that they are secondary to this fundamental fact and privilege of Christianity, which is entrance into the kingdom of God through the divine process of regeneration.

I say the divine process, for let us not confuse the human side with God’s side of it. Perhaps I may help you to grasp my thought by stating what the new birth is not. Regeneration is not an awakening. Regeneration is not conviction of sin. Regeneration is not repentance. Regeneration is not conversion. Regeneration is not signing a card, and then denying your own signature. To be sure, these preliminary steps are involved in regeneration, but let us not confound preliminaries with the thing itself. These preparatory steps make the soul cry out, “Create in me a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within me.” But, my friends, be not deceived—all this is not regeneration. It is, according to Richard Watson, rather the effect of the full and painful discovery of the want of it. “Nor,” he continues, “will ‘fruits meet for repentance,’ the effects of an alarmed conscience, and of a corrected judgment; the efforts to be right, however imperfect; which are the signs, we also grant, of sincerity, prove more than that the preparatory process is going on under the influence of the Holy Spirit.” It may be quite true that he is “not far from the kingdom of God,” but it is just as true that he has not entered it—he is at best but a struggling slave, not ‘the Lord’s free man.’”

The Essential Conditions

Again: aside from the radicalness of the doctrine of the twice-born, we must not overlook the fact that Christ insists upon its universal application. Nothing is to be saved, trying to be good, or being just as good as the average run of folks, entertaining orthodox views, and so on through the whole category of easy-going substitutes—these all fall to the ground in the face of what Jesus said to Nicodemus. To put it frankly, did not Nicodemus understand these conditions, and many more besides? Did he not hope to be saved? He not only tried to be saved, but was he not, in fact, far above the average character? Can we doubt his orthodoxy? Surely not. He was the flower of the manhood of his time. And yet it is to just this man, with his sterling moral qualities and splendid attainments, that Christ insists upon the necessity of being born again. No man can escape regeneration and enter into the kingdom of God. He can easily elude it, just as men have done, are doing, and will continue to do, and miss the kingdom both here and hereafter.

Furthermore, I have a conviction that this imperal truth is being sadly neglected by the Church of our own time. While it is proclaimed in pulpits, yet I am within the facts when I say that for the most part the very word regeneration would have a hard time getting over the tips of many eloquent tongues, while the doctrine itself has been practically submerged in a continent of quibbling religious mud and unscriptural gush. And yet it is a doctrine which is almost universally accepted at least in theory, as forming the foundation of Christian teaching. We receive it, not because it is Augustine’s doctrine, or Luther’s doctrine, or Calvin’s doctrine, or Wesley’s doctrine, or Spurgeon’s doctrine, but because it is primarily the doctrine of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ. It may be insisted that the conclusion that it is neglected rests upon surface indications. Very well. “But,” says the editor of a leading financial paper: “We are obliged to accept the surface indications. These include a falling off in church attendance, the abandonment of family worship, the giving over of Sunday to pleasure and labor, the separation of religion from secular education under the stern demands of non-sectarianism, the growing up of a generation uninstructed in the study of the Bible, the secularization of the church itself, and its inability in a large way to gain the confidence of the working people. If these indeed are really signs of a decay of religious faith, then indeed there is no more important problem before us than either discovering some adequate substitute for faith or to take immediate steps to check a development that has with it the seeds of a national disaster.” All of which means that the Church can’t feed a generation up with sugar-coated pills, windy generalities and religious sweet-meats with good results.

The Holy Spirit the Sole Agent

As there is one kingdom, one entrance, so there is one agent in the new birth—the Holy Spirit. No man discount the rite of baptism. It is obligatory, but there must be “the presence and creative and informing energy” of the Holy Spirit, else there can be no genuine regeneration. “Baptism,” says Professor Marvin R. Vincent, “considered merely a rite, and apart from the operation of the Spirit does not and cannot impart the new life. Without the Spirit it is a lie. It is a truthful sign only of the sign of an inward and spiritual grace.” We cannot ignore the symbol, but we must not ignore the reality. I put it in this way because there is much greater temptation to depend upon the symbol than there is danger in insisting upon the reality to the exclusion of the sign. As the kingdom of God is also an economy, including and implying the organized Christian community, it is quite possible and no doubt thousands have been—to be baptized into the outward phase of that kingdom with no reference whatever to its inward and spiritual significance. Now, it may be possible for a man to be born again and not be aware of the exact time of his transition into the kingdom of God. Among other

Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, the great teacher at
Continued on page 1009

* Preached in Grace M. E. Church, Brooklyn.

Ministers Discuss Church Federation

Bishop E. R. Hendrix

Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman

IT WAS a historic occasion, in a religious sense, when the first meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America assembled in Philadelphia, December 2. The churches which approved the plan of federation and appointed delegates—some 300 in number—to the Council are:

The Baptist Churches
Christian Connection
The Congregational Churches
Church of the Disciples Evangelical Association
Evangel. German Synod
Free Baptist Church
Friends, Society of Lutheran Ch., Evangelical
Mennonite Church
Methodist Episcopal Ch.
Meth. Epis. Church, South
Meth. Epis. Ch. (African)
M. E. Zion Ch. (African)

Meth. Protestant Church
Moravian Church
Presby. Ch. in the U.S.A.
Presby. Ch. in the U.S.
Protestant Epis. Church
Primitive Methodist Ch.
Reformed Ch. in America
Reformed Ch. in the U.S.
Reformed Presby. Church
Seventh Day Baptist
United Brethren
United Evangel. Church
United Presby. Church
Welsh Presby. Church

Rev. Wm. H. Roberts, D.D., chairman of the Executive Committee of the Council, presided. Arrangements had been made for a six days' session. The programme was as follows:

Opening meeting of welcome on Wednesday evening, Dec. 2, in the Academy of Music, Rev. Dr. Roberts presiding. A chorus of one thousand voices, led by H. C. Lincoln. Addresses of welcome by Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D.D. (Baptist), and Rev. Stephen W. Dana, D.D. (Presbyterian), and responses by Rev. Wallace McMullen, D.D. (Methodist), and Rev. A. J. Lyman, D.D. (Congregational). On Thursday and Friday evenings, December 3 and 4, four simultaneous public meetings, at Witherspoon Hall, Holy Trinity Episcopal Church, Arch Street Methodist Church, and First Baptist Church, the general subject being "Church Unity in America and in the Foreign Field." Among the speakers are: Rev. S. Parker Cadman, D.D., of Brooklyn; Rev. Arthur S. Lloyd, D.D., of New York, of the Episcopal Church; Rev. Robert E. Speer, of New York, of the Presbyterian Church. Friday evening: Subject, "United Home Missions and Evangelical Work." Speakers: Harry Pratt Judson, LL.D., President of the University of Chicago; Charles S.

Goodell, D.D., of the Methodist Church; Bishop Bell, of Los Angeles, Calif., of the United Brethren Church, and Rev. Dr. J. Wilbur Chapman. Saturday evening: A meeting for young people of all denominations. Speakers: Charles B. Mitchell, D.D., of Chicago; Rev. R. H. Potter, of Hartford, Conn., and Bishop Bell, of Los Angeles, Calif. Sunday afternoon meetings: One at the Lyric Theatre in the interest of "Church and Labor," and an interdenominational brotherhood meeting for men at Witherspoon Hall, December 7: Meetings at Witherspoon Hall to discuss "Federation Work." Reception to the delegates, given by the Social Unions of the various denominations in Philadelphia at the Academy of Music. Co-adjutor Bishop Alexander Mackay-Smith, of the Episcopal Church, presiding, and among the speakers, Rev. C. F. Aked, D.D., pastor of the Fifth Avenue Baptist Church, of New York, Judge P. S. Grosscup, of Chicago, and John Wanamaker.

Dr. Roberts has made this statement regarding the work of the Council:

"The importance of the meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America is owing to the fact that there is great need for co-operation in Christian work on the part of the Protestant Churches in the United States, with a view to promote the moral and spiritual welfare of the nation. The ruling thought in our mind was that the objects could be best accomplished through action by the Christian churches as churches. There is great power in organized Christianity, which has not as yet been used to any large extent in a co-operative way. The generations come and go, but the Church continues through all the generations. There have been hitherto voluntary movements for co-operation in Christian work, such as the Evangelical Alliance. The Council, however, represents an advanced step in organization, the purpose of which is to give both direction and permanence to Christian work." The Federal Council has simply an advisory character, and cannot do more than recommend to the churches co-operation along certain great lines of action such as Foreign Missions, Home Missions and the Immigrant problem."

Rev. Geo. U. Wenner, D.D.

Rev. J. L. Barton, D.D.

THE TWICE-BORN ~ A Sermon by Rev. Frederick F. Shannon ~ Continued

teacher of London, does not know the date of his regeneration. He says: "If you put the question back on me to-night, 'How do you know you are born again?' I do not know how I am born again by any experience of thirty years ago, but by the present trobbing of God in my life and soul, his Spirit bearing witness with my spirit here and now." Ah! Mothers, here is the glorious experience, the present, up-to-date, moment-by-moment life of God in the soul. And if we cannot point back to a definite hour of spiritual birth, as untold thousands can; if we cannot testify to a present, conscious soul life with Christ in God, then it behooves us to get right with God, to seek the Great Physician until he imparts the divine life in quickening power to our atrophied spiritual pulse. Some of us may have been born in a spiritual ice-house; if so, there may be faint signs of life lingering in us yet, but it is hardly probable that we have gotten over the cold we caught there. Come, let us go up to the hills—the white, peaceful hills of God—where the heavenly winds are blowing, and then we shall go down to tread the valleys of life with the conscious power of the Eternal Father surging through our being! We must—oh, we must!—recognize the agency of the Holy Spirit in the mystery of the twice-born. That which is born of the flesh is flesh—our appetites, our faculties, our passions, that with which nature has endowed us for living in the world, and a royal equipment it is. But flesh can produce flesh, and nothing more. I was walking up Seventh Avenue the other afternoon and my companion said, "Oh, look there!" I looked, and what do you think I saw? A beautiful baby lying in its carriage, with its bottle in its mouth, was peeping forth from under the coverlet. There it lay, with the mystery of two worlds gleaming in its innocent eyes. I said, "That's worth one look, let's take another." Looking again, we discovered a little shoe pushed right up under the tot's bottle. "Why, hello, there must be another baby about here somewhere!" And sure enough, at the farther end of the carriage lay the other twin fast asleep. I don't know where the mother was—probably in the store—but she was not far away, I am sure. Men and angels witness no lovelier sight than a true mother with her babies. In a few months love will have taught them to prattle, "Mamma!" "Daddy!" And something like that occurs in the spiritual realm when a soul, through the agency of the Holy Spirit, enters the kingdom of God. Then, because we are sons, God sends forth the Spirit of his Son into our hearts, crying, Abba, Father! Then, also, do we grasp the other part of Christ's saying, "And that which is born of the Spirit is spirit."

But just then the Master saw a queer expression, a mystified, wondering look steal over the Rabbi's face, and he added: "Marvel not, Nicodemus, that I said unto thee, Ye must be born again. Listen! Do you not hear the night wind whistling through the streets of Jerusalem? That wind bloweth where it pleaseth, Nicodemus, and thou hearest the sound thereof, but knowest not whence it cometh nor whither it goeth; so is every one that is born of the Spirit. I know you are ready to ask, How can these things be? But the 'how' is not so important as that 'these things' are! Verily, verily, I say unto thee, We speak that we do know, and bear witness of that we have seen."

Very briefly, in closing, let me point out the one drawing power of the kingdom, which is the cross. Nicodemus calls Christ a teacher—even a teacher come from God. Christ hastens to show him that he is much more than a teacher, that he is the Saviour of the world. "As Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up: that whosoever believeth may in him have eternal life." We must have something more than instruction, my brethren. Mere knowledge cannot get us into the kingdom of God. "The worst man knows infinitely more than the best man practises." Vesuvius cannot be put out by a thimbleful of water. Only the blood of the cross can quench the fires of sin raging in the human heart. Classic knowledge can produce only a classic devil. We do not need revamping, but recreation. A corpse cannot be quickened by an electric battery, however brilliant. None but the Divine Spirit, who called order out of chaos, can speak a dead soul into life. The alienated wills, the putrid hearts, the darkened minds of men need more than mental rejuvenation—they need regeneration. A hungry man cannot be satisfied by a stone, but by a loaf; not by a serpent, but by a fish; not by a scorpion, but by an egg. Nor can sin-poisoned men swallow the pleasing draughts of knowledge and be cured. The cleansing fountains lie deeper—even up among the eternal hills. Philosophy offers an opiate. Calvary provides a birth-throe, a re-commencement, a new beginning. Therefore, let us give no heed to a bon-bon gospel. It may be dainty, but it is damnable; it may be pretty, but it is perilous. John Wesley said, "If we could once bring all our preachers, itinerant and local, uniformly and steadfastly to insist on these two points—Christ dying for us, and Christ reigning in us, we should shake the trembling gates of hell." The one kingdom, the one entrance, the one agent, the one drawing power, these are the vast potencies, the holy privileges, the immortal hopes of the twice-born. "Ye must be born again!"

The National Conservation Commission

1. Russell Smith, Utah, Chairman. 2. J. B. White, Missouri. 3. Henry S. Graves, Yale Forest School. 4. William Irvine, Wisconsin. 5. John Datzell, Pennsylvania, Chairman. 6. Philo Hall, South Dakota. 7. James L. Slayden, Texas. 8. Andrew Carnegie, New York. 9. Albert J. Beveridge, Indiana. 10. Newton C. Blanchard, Louisiana. 11. Joseph M. Dixon, Montana. 12. Charles R. Van Hise, Wisconsin. 13. Charles F. Scott, Kansas. 14. Charles I. Pack, New Jersey. 15. Frank P. Flint, California. 16. John Mitchell, Illinois. 17. Champ Clark, Missouri. 18. Gustav H. Schwab, New York. 19. Overton Price, Forest Service. 20. Irving Fisher, Connecticut. 21. Lee S. Overman, North Carolina. 22. I. C. White, West Virginia. 23. J. A. Holmes, Geological Survey, Secretary. 24. John Hays Hammond, Massachusetts. 25. Gifford Pinchot, Chairman. 26. Knute Nelson, Minnesota, Chairman. 27. N. B. Broward, Florida. 28. James J. Hill, Minnesota. 29. George C. Pardee, California. 30. Theodore Burton, Ohio, Chairman. 31. William Warner, Missouri. 32. John H. Bankhead, Alabama. 33. W. J. McGee, Bureau of Soils, Secretary. 34. Francis E. Warren, Wyoming. 35. Charles Macdonald, New York. 36. Francis G. Newlands, Nevada. 37. F. H. Newell, Reclamation Service. 38. Swagar Sherley, Kentucky. 39. Murdo Mackenzie, Colorado. 40. Jonathan P. Dolliver, Iowa. 41. Herbert K. Smith, Bureau of Corporations. 42. Herbert Parsons, New York. 43. Frank C. Goudy, Colorado. 44. George W. Woodruff, Interior Department, Secretary. 45. T. C. Chamberlin, University of Chicago. 46. Thomas R. Shipp, Secretary. 47. G. F. Swain, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. 48. W. L. Marshall, Brig. Gen. U. S. Army, Chief of Engineers. 49. Joseph E. Ransdell, Louisiana.

CHARLES WESLEY, POET AND PREACHER

TWO hundred years ago, on December 10, 1708, Charles Wesley was born at Epworth, England. His biographers differ as to the precise date, some giving the 18th of December and one the 10th. He was the next to the last in a family of nineteen children, his father being the Rev. Samuel Wesley, a clergyman of the Church of England and his mother, Susannah Annesley. It was this remarkable mother that Charles and his brother John inherited their great talents, which brought them into prominence in the religious life and thought of the age.

Charles' boyhood was spent on the home at Epworth, where the mother herself managed the earlier part of her children's education. The Spirit of God ruled in the quiet parsonage and the principles of the Christian religion were instilled almost from the first lesson in the primer. Samuel, the eldest, together with John and Charles, entered Westminster School, where Samuel ultimately became the teacher of his two brothers. In 1726, Charles was sent to Christ's Church College, Oxford, where after a few years, owing to his strict attention to his religious duties, he was given the title of "Methodist" by his less serious fellow-students. It was at first a word of derision, but it was destined in later years to become one of honor. With his brother John and two other fellow-students, he became one of the organizers of a club for mutual spiritual study and practical Christian service. This brother students flippantly called "The Holy Club," but its members were not discouraged by the taunts of classmates and steadily persevered in their self-appointed work, until even the mockers began to respect them for their courage in high principle.

Graduating at twenty-one, Charles took his degree of Bachelor of Arts, and became a tutor in the college. After the death of his father in 1731, he left the University, and, having been ordained a deacon by Bishop Potter of Oxford, he went with his brother John to Georgia, where he became secretary to General Oglethorpe, and did missionary work among the people. They sailed on October 21, 1735. Among the passengers of the ship were a number of Moravians. The two brothers by general consent were chosen to lead the religious services throughout the voyage. A storm arose and the Wesleys were surprised to find the quiet confidence of the Moravians, who showed no fear of death, even when the peril was greatest. On returning to London, Charles Wesley sought out the Moravians, and a leader among them, Peter Bohler by name, became his spiritual adviser, and brought him to a clearer view of the Gospel. His brother John also came into the light through the same spiritual guide. A year later, about 1739, Charles Wesley celebrated the anniversary of his conversion by writing the famous hymn:

O for a thousand tongues to sing
My great Redeemer's praise!

Charles now became a curate in Islington, near London, and developed an ardent passion for soul-winning. So intensely earnest were his ministrations and his insistence upon godliness and purity, that he gave offense to some of the people of his church. About this time, John, who had been traveling in Germany among the Moravians, returned and began to preach the Gospel with great vigor and earnestness. So vivid and direct was the presentation of Gospel truth by the two brothers that many churches were closed against them, and Charles was cited to appear before the Archbishop of Canterbury, on the charge of preaching where he had no canonical authority to do so. The Archbishop concluded a very heated interview by announcing his intention to forbid the clergy of the Church of England to permit the Wesleys to preach in their pulpits.

But although for conscience sake they were thus driven from the pulpit of their own church, they were not discouraged. George Whitefield had returned from America, where he had been conducting a great revival movement, leading thousands into the kingdom, and he now resumed his Gospel work in England, preaching wherever an opportunity afforded itself, among the miners, in the fields, on the mountain sides, in the open—anywhere. John and Charles Wesley, following Whitefield's example, took up the standard of evangelism and went possible to him that believeth. It was this marvelous faith in his life that led him to sing:

Earth lends its realizing light;
The clouds disperse, the shadows fly;
The invisible appears in sight,
And God is seen by mortal eye.

It is recorded that Charles Wesley's singing of his own hymn, "Lovers of Pleasure More than God," melted the roughest audiences to tears. But the Wesleys not only preached the justice but the love of God. Charles' famous hymn: "Love Divine, All Love Excelling," is probably the finest apostrophe ever written on the subject, as it is assuredly the best known and most popular. But the production of hymns was a prolific and spontaneous act with Charles Wesley. His burning soul sang within him of God's glory, of his love, of heaven, and of Jesus, his life, death and resurrection. Hymns of supplication, of promise, of pardon, and of blessing poured from his lips and from his gifted pen in a steady stream. The old hymns of Doddridge and Watts were superseded by these new lyrics, which throbbed and pulsed with religious feeling. Many of Wesley's hymns were ecstatic, like "Christ, Whose Glory Fills the Skies," "Depth of Mercy, Can There Be," and the greatest and grandest of all, his masterpiece, "Jesus, Lover of My Soul," which is sung to-day throughout the whole wide world. Volume followed volume, as the new hymns appealed to the hearts of the people. It is estimated that about 5,000 of Wesley's hymns were published and that nearly half that number more were found among his papers after he died. Charles Wesley was not only a poet but a singer as well. He believed, as his brother John had tersely expressed it, that "the devil should not have all the good music," so he adapted popular tunes unhesitatingly where he could make the melody fit his metre. Further, he frequently took for his spiritual theme something he had observed during his evangelistic journeys. Thus the well-known hymn, "Lo, on a Narrow Neck of Land," was suggested by a peculiarly shaped rock overlooking the English Channel at Land's End. "Jesus, Lover of My Soul" was inspired by an experience through the United Kingdom, preaching the Gospel of salvation through Jesus Christ. They were assaulted, mobbed, derided and put in peril of their lives on many occasions. The story of their persecutions is too familiar to need recital here. Those who were converted under their ministrations, being unable to secure admission into the established church on account of their connection with the itinerant evangelists who were under the church's ban, were organized by the Wesleys into bands or classes, under leaders who were men of experience in the Christian life and trained in the Wesleys' method of Christian work. This new organization ultimately became the basis of the Methodist Church.

The Brothers Wesley and their Friends Discussing the Scriptures

Charles Wesley is more especially known throughout the Christian world as the great hymnologist of the Cross. Many of the noble hymns he wrote in those years of peril and persecution are to-day the standard hymns, not only of the Methodist Church, but of the Protestant churches everywhere. His songs abound with faith, hope and love. Within his breast was the heart of a poet singing for the whole world. In his strains we are led as by one who has a mighty faith, and who knows that all things are of personal peril. The brothers, fleeing from a mob, found refuge in a little shed or spring-house, where Charles Wesley jotted down the famous verses precisely as we know them. It has been said by competent literary judges that at least two hundred of Charles Wesley's hymns might be chosen that are without an equal in the writings of any other sacred poet. That much of their literary quality and finish are due to the taste and judgment of John Wesley, who is said to have revised all that his brother wrote, does not alter the judgment of those who accord Charles Wesley the foremost place in English hymnology.

He continued his active Gospel labors until 1756, after which he lived quietly in Bristol with his family, his wife being a Miss Gwynne, whom he married after his fortieth year. From 1769 until he died, he dwelt in a handsome home in London, which a noble friend (Lady Manners) generously placed at his disposal. He passed away at the ripe old age of eighty years, on March 29, 1788, expressing with his last breath his firm confidence in God and in that Saviour whose praises and whose pardoning grace he had so often celebrated with voice and pen.

OUR FIRST "CONSERVATION CONFERENCE"

THE eyes of the nation will be turned toward Washington next week, when governors from States North, South, East and West will meet at the National Conservation Commission. The purpose of the conference will be to discuss the plan of the conservation of the country's natural resources, which was discussed by the governors at their memorable conference with the President at the White House last May. It is expected the assemblage will include, besides the governors and their advisers, representative citizens from many States, heads of great industrial and commercial organizations and some of the nation's most distinguished men, including Andrew Carnegie, James J. Hill, John Mitchell, John Hays Hammond, and a score or more of men whose names are familiar in connection with many great business enterprises. The National Conservation Commission was named by President Roosevelt last June. In the last six months it has accomplished much. It has made the first inventory of our country's natural resources ever attempted. The President in naming it divided it into four general sections—waters, forests, lands and minerals. Each section is headed by either a United States senator or a representative in Congress. To Gifford Pinchot, Chief of the United States Forest Service, was assigned the chairmanship. The inventory is being arranged for a report to the President, which will be in his hands by January 1, 1909.

Meantime, the governors have been appointing State Conservation Commissions, and practically all national organizations which are in any way concerned with our natural resources have created special Conservation Committees. These commissions and committees will come into joint session with the National Conservation Commission to decide on a programme that will result in the greatest amount of actual achievement. The Inland Waterways Commission, which has been a potent factor in this movement, is now serving as the Section of Waters of the Conservation Commission.

The conservation of the country's natural resources has become a practical problem, the solution of which is of vital interest to the whole country. The decision as to which phases of the problem demand immediate attention will be left largely to the joint Conservation Conference.

Ideal Christmas Gifts

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have received both The Inside Story of the White House and After Death—What? and can say in all sincerity that when I sent in my order for these books I did not know what I was buying. I had expected two splendid books neatly, even attractively, bound, but I received—not only the two splendid books, fully up to my most sanguine expectations, but so beautifully bound and exquisitely printed—in short, so ideal in every way as Christmas gift books—that I enclose herewith $2.00 for two additional copies of The Inside Story of the White House.

Yours with warm appreciation,

AGNES G. ROWE.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly.
Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner
available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside
the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the
wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time
to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN
HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Oct.

Our Agreement with Japan

AN AGREEMENT, which is tantamount to a treaty, yet without a treaty's binding force, has been entered into between this government and Japan, in which the policies of the two nations, with respect to their mutual interests in the Pacific and their attitude toward China, are distinctly defined. This agreement is understood to consist of five articles, binding both governments:

First. To the development of their commerce in the Pacific on lines of mutual, friendly encouragement, neither opposing the legitimate interests of the other.

Second. To preserve the existing status quo in the Pacific and to maintain the principle of equal opportunity for the commercial and industrial interests of both in regard to trade in China.

Third. Each to respect the present territorial possessions of the other in the Pacific.

Fourth. To maintain, by all the peaceful means at their command, the independence and integrity of China, and to support the principle of the "open door," with equal opportunities for all nations to share the same industrial and commercial privileges.

Fifth. To confer, through the respective State Departments at Tokyo and Washington, with the view of deciding upon a mutually satisfactory course of action, in the event of the status quo or the "open door" principle being threatened.

Although not a treaty, as treaties are defined in the language of diplomacy, this agreement has practically all the effect of one. It is signed by the representatives of both governments, but needs no ratification by the Senate. Moreover, as it provides for mutual conference in the event of possible complications, it is a reasonable inference that mutual co-operative action would follow. Other Powers, it is understood, have been informed of the nature and terms of the agreement, and are reported to have signified their approval. By this agreement, the United States becomes an Asiatic Power, with important interests to be safeguarded. While the new development gives Japan unrivaled prestige, with two powerful nations as her friends, it leaves to ourselves the greater responsibility and the far grander mission of leading the Asiatic races forward to a higher civilization.

To China, the American-Japanese agreement will mean that the ancient empire, freed from undue foreign interference, can now go forward with her programme of reform. With her integrity guaranteed and the principle of just and equal trade privileges firmly established, she will be freed from many of the dangers that have threatened her in the past, and will not be the helpless victim of unjustifiable foreign exploitation in the future.

The "Emmanuel Movement"

WITHIN the present year, a number of churches, representing different denominations, have taken up what is now commonly known as the "Emmanuel movement." It takes its name from the Emmanuel Church of Boston, the pastor of which, the Rev. Samuel McComb, and his associate, Rev. Dr. Worcester, were the first exponents of the new movement in this country. It is, in brief, a modification of the so-called science of "mental healing," and it draws a strict line between organic and functional diseases, the former being left to the treatment of regular physicians, while functional disorders of nervous origin are treated according to moral and psychical methods.

Advocates of the new school of psycho-therapeutics hold that the consecrated pastor may minister to the body as well as to the soul; he may ascertain what is wrong with the mind or sub-conscious personality of the patient and, by quickening his faith, restore his mental tone and balance, banish the thoughts that make him ill, educate his will and strengthen his powers of resistance. Worry, neurasthenia, neurosis, consumption, hysteria, insomnia, indigestion, alcoholism, and other disorders are treated by the new method.

That the Christian has a right to pray for bodily health and strength need not be questioned. It is his duty, however, to use all the human skill and intelligence at his disposal, wherever these can be utilized to advantage for that purpose. Jesus, the Great Physician, had no word of condemnation for the doctors of his day, although he more than once performed miracles where their science had failed. While the apostolic church taught the healing of the sick, it was altogether a miraculous healing. No attempt was made to include psycho-therapeutics and hypnosis in partnership with the divine Spirit.

The "Emmanuel movement," it is explained by its advocates, is both scientific and inspirational. It is simply spiritualized hypnosis. Very likely it will be asked whether the new movement is not a reversion to occult methods which have failed in the past. Is it an effort to make men whole, when the entire energy of the Church should be directed to making them holy? Are not the methods of the ministerial hypnotist allied to those of the sorcerer? Are we "harking back" to the miracle-working practices of the Roman Church, so long opposed and condemned by Protestantism, or has the movement been called into being to offset the advances of Christian Science, Mind Healing, Faith Cure, New Thought and similar cults?

But, criticism aside, there is a real danger. The Rev. Dr. Worcester, the Rev. Dr. Samuel McComb and Dr. James Jackson Putnam of Harvard University—all pioneers and founders of the new movement—have warned the churches against permitting "untrained and unqualified men" to assume the task of dealing with disease by the new method. They fear lest over-enthusiastic pastors should be drawn into the vortex unprepared and thus invite discredit and failure. There should be a special training before any minister attempts to employ it as an auxiliary to his spiritual work. The Rev. George F. Cutten, Yale lecturer on "Mental Healing," is convinced that psycho-therapeutics will not become a regular part of church work. He regards it as belonging to the domain of the physician.

It is yet too soon to form any definite opinion as to the real merits of the "Emmanuel movement." THE CHRISTIAN HERALD believes the Church should await further developments before giving its unreserved approval or condemnation. If the movement is of God, it will receive the seal of his approval before men as a mighty adjunct to the Gospel; if not of God, it will soon be forgotten.

Sowing Unbelief

ON SEVERAL occasions in the past, Chicago University has distinguished itself by its open advocacy of free thought and infidelity, disguised under the title of "higher criticism." Quite recently, it is said, one of the professors in the Divinity School achieved new notoriety for that remarkable institution, by instructing the theological students that religion is not of divine origin, but a human achievement; that man created his own gods; that people are giving up the idea that religion is inspired and are now cultivating it just as they cultivate music, language and other accomplishments.

Of course, the whole purpose of this foolish argument is to attack the inspiration of the Scriptures. For several years, the Chicago professors have been hammering at the old Book, but without making any visible impression. Last spring, they united in a symposium attacking the Gospel as an outworn superstition and urging the substitution of the scientist and the doctor for the missionary. These spiritually blind professors apparently do not comprehend that God has implanted religion in the heart of man. Even the heathen and the naked savage, worshipping their poor idols, are bowing before an adumbration that typifies, however dimly, the divinely implanted conviction within them of a God who rewards good and punishes evil.

One may reasonably question the value of theological training in a university where religious contention—which has been aptly called the "devil's harvest"—is so industriously cultivated. What brand of theology may one be expected to preach who has had his mind saturated with infidel doubts and suggestions and who is compelled to listen while the old Bible is mocked and derided as unauthentic, uninspired, and filled with superstitions and fables; who is taught to doubt the divinity of Christ, the genuineness of his work, and the efficacy of his sacrifice, and who now, as a fitting climax to such a curriculum, is asked to believe that God himself is a mere human invention?

If such be the mission of this particular Divinity School, it is well for the world to know it.

For Table of Contents see page 1019

DR. KLOPSCH APPEALS

FIFTEEN hundred and thirty-eight women and homeless men and boys stood last night in the Bowery Mission Midnight Bread-Line waiting for nearly two hours for a bowl of steaming hot coffee and one of the Bowery Mission's generous buns, equal to nearly half a loaf of sweetened toothsome bread. It was an extremely cold night, yet the great majority on the Bread-Line were thinly clad in summer clothes, very much the worse for wear, and 95 per cent. were without overcoats.

Most of these men and boys are from country homes. They had read the glowing accounts of the great opportunities which the many enterprising of the metropolis afford to able-bodied men, and were on in expectation of doing better here than they could at home. But, alas! the vast army of restless non-workers had anticipated them, and hence they met with dire disappointment.

Of course this is only a temporary condition of affairs, and sooner or later, with increasing prosperity, vacancies will occur into which they can enter and realize the hopes which started them from the country to the city. But in the meantime they must be cared for or go to destruction. Their money is given out; they are helpless and practically helpless. They have no friends, no relatives in this great city; they cannot appeal to mother or father, who are far away and have nothing to spare, and unless help comes and comes speedily they must become either criminals or suicides.

Just here the Bowery Mission steps in with its Bread-Line, its Bed Ticket ensuring for its hold-outs a night's rest amid comparatively respectable surroundings, its Free Labor Bureau, without charge, seeking and finding work for the workless, and its Memorial House, where men and boys inclined to do right can find temporary shelter, food and good company while looking for situations.

Then there are the nightly meetings of the Bowery Mission in a well-lighted and comfortable warmed hall—a veritable blessing on a cold, stormy winter night—in which kind and sympathetic people, including Superintendent Halliday and dear Mrs. Bird, take them by the hand and encourage them to be true to themselves, true to their early training, and true to their God, while waiting for an opening that will help them to become useful and self-supporting.

Ordinarily the generous contributions from friends in every part of the country suffice for the requirements of this National Clearing House for Unfortunates; but just now, when the number on the Bread-Line has swelled beyond all reasonable proportions, and Christmas, with its dinners that give to these desolates a touch of home and of sentiment, urgently demands recognition, we find ourselves sadly in need of funds.

So many of our friends have already contributed in former years that we hardly dare urge further contributions; but we must not altogether ignore this pitiful cry for help. Therefore we ask you, dear friend, if you have not already contributed this godlike charity, to do so now. Your own Christmas will be doubly blessed if you help these helpless ones, among whom may be the very boy your heart is yearning for. Surely we need not quote Scripture to urge you to be generous. Even though your boy be not among them, some other mother or father's boy is there. Make a thank-offering that yours is not among the number. Open wide your purse-strings, take out a large contribution and send it with your prayers to the Bowery Mission that it may bring sunshine and happiness into the loneliest of lonely lives, that of a man or boy homeless and desolate in this great metropolis of the Western world. Send help to-day. It will be acknowledged next month in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and later on by Him who shall say, "Inasmuch as ye did it unto the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me."

Please address your contribution to the Bowery Mission, in care of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 9 Bible House, New York, and bear in mind that "NOW is the accepted time."

Mrs. Klopsch

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

Appalling Mine Disaster

AN EXPLOSION in the Marianna mine of the Pittsburg-Buffalo Company on November 28, killed 138 men, only one, Frank Ellinger, making his escape. There are two theories as to the cause of the explosion. One is that a pocket of gas was struck by one of the miners, quickly filling the workings and then igniting from a lamp; the other theory is that gas from a well on the Fulm farm, on which the mine is situated, penetrated the workings. Ellinger remained for twelve hours pinned up with his 138 dead fellow-workmen. He says: "I was passing through one of the entries, about one hundred yards from the foot of the shaft, when something hit me. I had no time to think. I heard no noise. I must have been blown seventy-five yards through a passage by the air from the explosion, and the first wave of air must have knocked me unconscious, before the noise of the explosion reached me. I do not know what time I came to." It seemed like a million years from the time I gained consciousness until I heard them coming for me." There is no pen that can record or tongue describe the intolerable agony that little model mining town. John J. Ivill, Jr., a nephew of one of the owners of the mine, was among the victims. He was performing his first day's work since his honeymoon and the grief of his bride was pathetic in the extreme. Another bereaved wife, Mrs. George Acker, tried to throw herself down the mine shaft because her husband was among the ones missing. Her mind is gone beyond all hope of recovery, the physicians say. Mrs. Joseph Holmes was driven insane because her son was among the killed.

We who sit by our cheerful residences do not realize how much it costs in peril and sacrifice to secure us our fuel and other comforts. In the election of our life-work, there is peril enough everywhere; but there are many of the callings of life that are extra-hazardous and which require genuine heroism in the workers. This mine was supposed to be constructed with the most perfect scientific safeguards, but the deadly gas did its work in spite of them. This calamity should teach with tremendous force the lesson to which the world in its rush pays too little heed: that death is certain and often swift as a flash of lightning, and it behooves all to be ready for the coming of the messenger.

Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. (Matt. 24: 44.)

Six Stories Underground

There is to be constructed upon the corner of Broadway and New Street, New York City, a forty-three-story building. It will be of white enameled brick and terra cotta. Its height will be 536 feet and six inches, and it will cost $3,875,000. It will be the tallest single, compact building in the city, the towers of the Singer and Metropolitan buildings only being above it. A singular thing about the building is that it will have six stories underground. They have all been engaged at a total rental of one million dollars. The owner claims that, with the improved methods of lighting, ventilating and heating, the rooms below the water level will be just as healthful as the thousands of offices above ground where artificial light is used during the day.

There is nothing so important in the building of character as a solid foundation. The deeper down toward rock-bed it goes, the surer support it furnishes to the superstructure. In the erection of the structure of character which is to stand the storms of time, how important it is to build on Christ, the granite of eternal truth, the rock of everlasting ages.

For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ. (I. Cor. 3: 11.)

Japan Forgives Released Criminals

In olden times, when a Japanese committed a crime, they cut off his head. The punishment was cheap and efficacious; it cured crime to that extent and eliminated the criminal from society. With civilization, they adopted the jail and the convict. The prison system of Japan has worked no better than here. It shuts a man behind the bars, degrades him most of the time of his incarceration, and turns him out too often unregenerated and sometimes worse than when he entered, to be branded with the mark of a criminal in his forehead, to be shunned and hated by his fellowmen. There are exceptions to this prison life, but, in its best features, it is dreary and forbidding. There are a few charitable persons who befriend released convicts and try to help them in the world, but society as a rule turns a cold shoulder. Japan is setting us a good example.

The Wrecked "Tipple" and Shaft at the Marianna Mine

It has amended its penal code by providing that punishment shall be full expiation and, when the convict has served his term of confinement, his offense is wiped out. No one may ostracize him because of his crime; he cannot be refused employment because he has been a convict; he is not to be discharged except for other cause. No one is allowed to allude to his crime or his conviction or to insult him or his family.

The Saviour, when he was in this world, took great pains to command the visitation and tender treatment of those in prison. It will be well for us, in our treatment of released convicts, as individuals and as a society, to imitate the Christian spirit incarnated in the laws of Japan.

For the Lord heareth the poor, and despiseth not his prisoners. (Ps. 69: 33.)

International Tuberculosis Exhibition

Fully 5,000 people—men, women and children—attended the International Tuberculosis Exhibition in the Museum of Natural History in New York City during the opening week. The exhibition is to continue some six weeks. At the formal opening exercises, Robert D. de Forest presided. Dr. Abraham Jacobi, the distinguished specialist, made a notable address. It was a message of hope that tuberculosis can be cured, that death can be driven away from its harvest of 200,000 lives annually in the United States. Dr. Jacobi said:

Recoveries are either spontaneous or produced by accessible means. When they are spontaneous we attribute them to the existence of favorable circumstances—a vigorous constitution, the free enjoyment of fresh air and a proper climate, sufficient rest and ample and nutritious food. When not spontaneous recovery is due to the intentional creation, where they do not exist, of those very favorable circumstances in the home, in a foreign country, in a sanitarium; to a full supply of nutrient food, the requisite rest, personal hygiene, and such medication as relieves a disturbing cough, secures restful nights, improves the appetite and digestion, enhances nutrition, relieves fevers, stimulates strength, and occasionally removes injurious dead tissues by operative interference. All these are demanded, and though there be no evidence of a cure of tuberculosis by medicines alone, there is much evidence of their availability when combined with the measures of cure you will study in the thousands of exhibits under this hospitable roof.

The world hails this onslaught on the White Plague. Christ paid much attention to the cure of the diseases of the body. God's spirit is directing the science of to-day in the healing of diseases and in the preservation of physical life. The body is the temple of the soul and of the Holy Ghost, and too great care cannot be given to the preservation of its health and strength.

That the plague may be stayed from the people. (I. Sam. 24: 21.)

Wonderful Telegraphy

Mr. Antal Pollak, at a meeting held at the Royal Colonial Institute, London, to further the prospect of penny cablegrams, gave an exhibition of the Pollak-Virag system. The feature of this system is that the message when received writes itself in characters like handwriting. The message is sent on an ordinary Wheatstone transmitter, by first punching out a strip of paper with the perforations which represent the letters. This strip is then run through the transmitter, and its symbols are reproduced electrically at the other end of the line. At the receiving end there is a telephone diaphragm which is deflected both horizontally and vertically by the electric impulses received. Attached to the diaphragm is a small mirror, which moves as the diaphragm moves, and, with the help of a ray of light reflected upon it, records the movements on a roll of photographic paper. By this system 45,000 words an hour were sent between Berlin and Koenigsberg, over a distance of nearly 500 miles, and those words were recorded at the receiving end in a legibly written hand. But this improvement in telegraphy is not so wonderful as the wireless message which was received in San Francisco the other day from Japan, a distance of 4,700 miles. The scientific men of Japan have been ingenious enough to make us understand the message from their end, but as yet we have not been able to send back answers from San Francisco to Japan that they could understand; but devices will soon be so perfected that people will be able to talk by wireless around the world. By the discovery of all these mysteries in nature, it seems less a mysterious thing for the children of the common Father to communicate with him by prayer and by spiritual contact. However far away heaven may be, it is certain that our messages of love and need reach the ear of our heavenly Father, and answers of peace and thrills of joy come back in response.

Then hear thou their prayer and their supplication in heaven thy dwelling place, and maintain their cause. (I. Kings 8: 49.)

Delighted with the Book

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The Inside History of the White House came duly to hand by express on Tuesday morning, and I am delighted with it, and send thanks for your prompt reply. MATILDA E. PRICE.

REIGNS OF TWO KINGS

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

LESSON I. David Brings the Ark to Jerusalem from the house of Obed-Edom, where it had been for three months. It was brought with great gladness, with the music of harps, psalteries, timbrels, cornets and cymbals. Even Mount Zion was incomplete without the Ark altar. There should be a family altar in every Christian home. The Ark was a benediction in Obed-Edom's dwelling. God's presence always makes a happy and prosperous household.

Many of the busiest Christians keep up daily home worship as a daily joy and power. They believe that "prayer and provender hinder no man's journey." They neither hurry their eating nor their praying. They save themselves from heartbreaks by taking time for home Christian training as one of the necessities of life.

If they cannot get all the family together after breakfast, the best time of all, they put the daily worship after supper, or if the family cannot be gathered then, they put it just before bedtime, which is better than nothing.

They brighten the service with brevity and explanations—not exhortations—and with songs.

In a certain house there was never any blessing asked at table, and when once the minister was invited to dinner he begged that grace should be said, not only at that time but also in the future. This request caused some embarrassment, and a long silence, which the master of the house broke at length with the remark that the daily prayer at meal time was only a matter of custom, and that the repetition of the same words, year after year, must necessarily become monotonous and meaningless. The seven-year-old grandchild kissed his hand and said: "Dear grandpa, must I not come any more to you every morning and say, 'Good morning, grandpa,' or at evening, 'Good night, grandpa'?" Another silence ensued, which the clergyman interrupted, looking at the child with delight as he said: "Out of the mouth of babes and sucklings thou hast perfected praise." I believe in New Year's resolutions that have been put into practice a week or so in advance. Begin on this Sabbath of the old year to build or rebuild your family altar and keep it up persistently until January 1, and there will be some hope that New Year's resolutions on this point will not become broken vows.

LESSON II. God's Promise to David, sent through the prophet Nathan: "I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons. . . . He shall build me a house, and I will establish his throne forever."

God's Promise to Us. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." (John 3: 16.)

LESSON III. David's Kindness to Jonathan's Son. When Saul and Jonathan were dead, David remembered the kindness of his friend and welcomed his son to a place at his own table in the king's palace, for Jonathan's sake. As Mephibosheth was welcomed for Jonathan's sake to King David's table, so we are welcomed for Jesus' sake, who loved us, and died for us, to the Lord's Supper—the table of the King of kings.

During a recent war, a wounded soldier was told he could go home and get well. He had only a little money—enough to pay for only part of the way. But his captain gave the soldier a letter to his rich father, who lived in P—, asking him to help the soldier pay for the rest of his journey. "Do it," said the captain, "for my sake," and then he signed his name "James." The next week that rich father was busy with his letters in his office when the soldier came in; but there were so many soldiers and others who came to that office for help that the father did not pay any attention to him until he laid the captain's letter wide open, right under his eyes. He saw the words: "For my sake. Your son, James," and quickly read the rest. Then nothing was too much for him to do for the soldier. He bought him better clothes, dined him at his own home, drove him in his own carriage to the depot, and paid for his ticket to his far-off home—all for the sake of his son. For Jesus' sake God welcomes us to the Lord's Supper; for Jesus' sake he answers our prayers; for Jesus' sake he gives us the new robe of forgiveness; for Jesus' sake he helps us on our journey toward our home in heaven.

LESSON IV. The Joy of Forgiveness. David had committed a grievous sin. The enormity of it was shown to him by Nathan, the prophet of the Lord. Then David repented and sought God's forgiveness. And he was forgiven

A little boy once wandered away, and was lost for one day. He suffered during the day, but did not suffer as much as his father. He had disobeyed and thus was lost, but the father did not feel while looking for him that if he failed to find him, it would be sad for the child, but would make no particular difference to himself. He felt that he must find him, or he could not live. God loves his children as no earthly parent can. God does need his children, and if their souls are lost, not they alone will be the losers.

LESSON VI. David Grieves for Absalom. He grieved until it was said of him: "Thou lovest thine enemies and hatest thy friends." And Joab, the commander of his army, said: "If Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, then it had pleased thee well." And David, thus reminded of his duty to the living, arose from being prostrated by grief, and went out to meet his victorious people.

LESSON VII. The Lord Our Shepherd. David having himself been

"Ah, chums," said he, "it makes the difference whether a man has head or a heart religion. Head religion is like moonlight: that is pre and cold, and romantic like, but it has no notion of melting ice or warming the earth. It is just like that w head religion—there's no warmth, life in it. We should never dream holding out our hands to the moon warm them; but there are folks foolish enough to try and heal broken hearts and to warm their cold souls with head religion. Poor things! they are moon-blind or they would try to see it as God teaches all through the Bible that it is with the heart we believeth unto righteousness." He the good old man tucked his book under his arm and rubbed his hands together as he continued, "Hallelujah for the sunshine—God's sunshine, the joy of the Lord! Why, look here. The other night when that little chap was singing his ditty on the upper deck 'I'm the Merry Sunshine,' you remember how everybody clapped him and encored. I could not help wishing that a few of them would learn to love God's heart sunshine. Thank God that he has made it easy to have heart religion! Everyone has the power to trust, I believe!"

LESSON IX. Warnings Against Intemperance. "Twice a day the boatsmen on the River Trent, in England, send up the thirty miles of river a cry of warning that the great tidal wave or bore, is coming. The incoming tide from the ocean enters the Humber River, and when it meets the narrow Trent it can no longer spread out as it has been doing, and so it rises on to of the stream which is flowing in the other direction into the Humber. As it advances with a terrible roar the stream it rises higher and higher, a wall of seemingly angry water with foaming crests five or six feet high at Gainsborough. It comes so swiftly and with such force that any boat left unanchored are wrecked. The words of warning which the boatmen shout from one to another have a strange sound to us. They are 'Ware Aegir! Beware the Aegir! It is a cry that comes down from the times when the pagan Danes invaded England. They could not understand this fierce tidal wave; they thought it must be a god, and they named it Aegir. Three months ago we studied a warning cry of the prophet Isaiah against an evil which was to the people of that day a god far more terrible and dangerous than the Aegir of the Danes.'—Tarbell.

LESSON X. Solomon Chooses Wisdom. How bountifully God gave Solomon what he asked for! When the Queen of Sheba came from afar to prove what she had heard of the wisdom of King Solomon, and when he had answered all her questions, she testified: "The half was not told me; thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard" (I. Kings 10: 1-7). His building of the temple was a great witness to his wisdom, as were also his plans for improving the city of Jerusalem and for establishing commerce with other nations, particularly with Tyre. It is said of him that he had "wisdom and understanding exceeding much, and largeness of heart even as the sand that is on the seashore" (I. Kings 4: 29).

And Solomon increased in wisdom and in riches as God said he should.

LESSON XI. Solomon Dedicates the Temple. It was a grand and glorious time in Israel with God himself coming down from heaven and filling the temple with his glory. It is the privilege of each and every one of us to build a temple for the living God—even ourselves—and in the end, when the headstone is brought forth, to hear the shouting from angel voices: "Grace, grace unto it" (Zech. 4: 7). The holy place in this temple of myself is my mind. The most holy place is my heart.

King Solomon Finishing the Temple

because God loves to forgive those who truly repent of their sins. Then David knew the joy of forgiveness.

Near the end of the seventeenth century, a Turkish grandee in Hungary made a Christian nobleman his prisoner and treated him with the utmost barbarity. The slave, for such he was, was yoked with an ox, and compelled to drag the plow. But the fortune of war changing, the Turk fell into the hands of the Hungarians, who said to their enslaved fellow countryman: "Now take your revenge upon your enemy." This was in accordance with the customs of the age, and the Turk supposing, as a matter of course, that he would be tortured to death, had already swallowed poison, when a messenger came from his Christian slave, telling him to go in peace, for he had nothing to fear. The Moslem was so impressed with this heavenly spirit that he proclaimed with his dying breath: "I will not die a Moslem, but I die a Christian, for there is no religion but that of Christ which teaches forgiveness."

LESSON V. Absalom Rebels Against David. What a cruel stab Absalom gave his father when he rebelled against him, and even went into battle against him! But the father still loved his son.

a shepherd is able to interpret to us our relation to the Good Shepherd: "I shall not want." I shall not lack oversight, for "he maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters." Nor shall I lack ability to continue in well doing: "He restoreth my soul." Nor shall I lack guidance: "He leadeth me in paths of righteousness." Nor shall I lack sustaining power: "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." Neither shall I lack consolation: "Thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Neither shall I lack providential care: "Thou preparest a table before me in the presence of mine enemies." Neither shall I lack sympathy: "Thou anointest my head with oil, my cup runneth over." Neither shall I lack blessing: "Goodness and mercy shall follow me all the days of my life."

LESSON VIII. Solomon Anointed King. "Know thou the God of thy father." There was a Bible reading and prayer meeting on board ship among the sailors. The leader was an old sailmaker. "Listen to these words again, chums," said he: "Oh that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear me and keep all my commandments" (Deut. 5: 29).

* International Sunday School Lesson for December 27, 1908. GOLDEN TEXT: "Enter into his gates with thanksgiving, and into his courts with praise." Ps. 100: 4.

BY THE WINTER FIRELIGHT

Work or Pastime?

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

APASTIME may indeed be a task. It may involve considerable hardship and result in no little fatigue. But the task that is a pastime is in strong contrast with the task that is a grind. The work by which we earn our bread, work that cannot be shirked, that must be done at a fixed time and in a definite place, may be easy enough in the doing, yet it takes a good deal out of us by its very monotony. A pastime, on the contrary, being undertaken by way of recreation, wears a much more winning face than that of the labor that is paid for in money. I knew a man who was by trade a stone mason. He was an excellent workman and was always paid the highest wages in his line. Day by day he toiled at his trade, and his family lived upon his earnings. Aside from this, he had a pastime, perhaps it might better be called a hobby. He collected moths and beetles and butterflies, and by persistent study and application he had become an entomologist of no mean order. His collection of specimens was wonderful to see, and his occupation of butterfly catcher had brought him into correspondence with famous scientific men all over the world. More than one royal prince as fond of butterflies as the stone mason, was included among his correspondents. This man had an outlet for energy and an avenue to happiness by reason of his pastime that he could not possibly have had if his day's work had ended when he put away his tools at sunset. Every half holiday or whole one, every vacation and every country walk afforded him an opportunity for the indulgence of his hobby. His books were gradually specialized until he had a valuable library on his favorite theme. I thought of him when lately I read in the Autobiography of Mark Rutherford of a similar instance of a man's living beyond himself in a world of interest and delight through the pursuit of a hobby much like that of my friend, the stone mason.

Men are devoted to hobbies more frequently than women. I can think of several examples in proof of this assertion. A scholarly clergyman who ministered to one congregation more than fifty years, was an expert carpenter, turning out in his little workshop beautiful chairs and tables and other specimens of furniture. A physician, who might have been supposed to be sufficiently occupied in his exacting profession, never gave up his practice of the violin, and evening after evening played as finely as many a musician, forgetting the weariness of the day in the sweetness of the bow as he drew it over the strings.

The editor of a daily newspaper took delight in amateur bookbinding. A dry goods merchant used his leisure, such as it was, in the study of geology. Many a busy man makes a hobby of collecting rare prints or old coins or first editions, or if he have a bit of ground to cultivate, his passion is for raising a single flower or vegetable. A man's work is generally in one line all day long. It is limited, as a rule, to a single absorbing occupation. When he leaves it at eventide he drops it until the next morning. He thus has opportunity to turn his attention to something else. His hobby is a relief, and sometimes a safeguard.

A woman, on the other hand, is busy in her home in a hundred different ways. She has no time for a hobby, and she seldom has inclination for one.

Itinerant Venders

Mary E. Wilkins, in one of her early New England stories, told us of an itinerant pedler who drove about the country, his wagon filled with articles dear to the housewife's heart. It seemed rather a pleasant life, that of the pedler, as he made his leisurely rounds, stopping for a sociable gossip with a farmer's wife, or resting for a while under the shadow of a tree. Of late there seems to have been many such venders going about from house to house.

Most of these people have been walking. Sometimes a crippled man stops at the door to offer a little ware that is of daily use, but oftener the person who brings safety pins, silver polish, court plaster or iron holders, and asks one to buy them for

THE FIRST LESSON

Little one sitting at mother's knee, So many pages still to turn.
What does the white page say to thee? Lessons last longest, it seems to me,
What is she bidding thee try to learn? That the baby learns at mother's knee.

a trifling sum, is a woman. She may be old or young. She may have children at home dependent upon her or a husband lying ill. What she has to sell may be paid for with a nickel, a dime or a quarter. Can we not give such a one a little more than the change that pays for the articles offered? A word of cheer, the repression of impatience at the interruption, a look of sympathy, will send these itinerants forth to the road with greater courage. It may happen that their calls are inopportune, that they oblige us to drop a task that needs attention, and that we go with reluctance to the door. Suppose we put ourselves aside and see in the inopportune call an opportunity for helping a brother or sister who is in need, and to whom we can give something more than mere material help. The itinerant vender is not a beggar, and should not be treated as if asking for alms. Treat him as a human being, kindly and graciously, even if you buy nothing.

How to Set a Table

THE setting of a table for any meal except dinner may be very informal. It may also be very pretty. The elaborate centre-pieces, the hemstitched and eyeleted squares, the doilies of embroidery, lace and drawn work that are prized by the average housekeeper, lend themselves gracefully to the setting of the table for luncheon, high tea, Sunday evening supper, or any festivity to which guests are invited. Something less elaborate and more easily laundered is more suitable for the ordinary table of the family. The woman does not live who has not in her inmost heart a liking for fine linen, unless indeed she has lost the feminine element and has grown mannish. In giving a linen shower to a prospective bride every article of household linen and napery may be included and will be welcomed. In setting a breakfast table all that is necessary is to consider whether or not the meal is to be served in courses or in a single course. In the first instance, finger bowls are needed with the fruit course that begins the meal, and they may be removed before setting on the table the cereals with their appropriate bowls or soup plates. A soup plate is quite as convenient as a bowl for the serving of cereals. The third breakfast course should be of bacon, eggs, hot rolls and toast, or whatever one pleases, and at this time coffee or tea should be brought on the table. Many people are now limiting their breakfast to fruit, coffee and rolls, and for those who do not have to work hard or who are sure of an early or sufficient luncheon, this plan offers excellent fare.

Set the dinner table with more formality. Place plates that may be removed after the soup has been served, should be on the table when the family and guests are seated. On the right of each plate the knives and spoons to be used throughout the meal are placed in their order, with the forks on the left. The spoon to be used first is usually the farthest removed from the plate. At present it is customary to offer most dishes from a side table, so that on a properly set dinner table for company the only dishes permissible at the beginning of the meal are those that contain olives, radishes or bon-bons. An arrangement of flowers in the centre of the table should never be omitted, and if the dinner is formal there should be place cards with the name of each guest, so that there may be no confusion in seating them around the board.

About Postage Stamps

When writing a letter on your own business, if a reply is expected, the proper thing to do is to inclose return postage. A self-addressed and stamped envelope puts upon your correspondent the minimum of trouble. When writing to a firm and ordering supplies for which you expect to pay, it is unnecessary to send a postage stamp. Neither does one do this in friendly correspondence. If writing to friends abroad be careful that your letter is fully stamped, as, should it exceed the legal weight, its recipient will be compelled to pay double postage. Use thin paper for foreign correspondence, and if you are in doubt have your letter weighed at the postoffice before dropping it into the box. Postal cards lack the privacy of sealed letters, although it is highly improbable that they are read by any one except the one for whom they are intended. The picture postal cards so much in vogue at present are striking a blow at the custom of friendly correspondence. It is so easy to buy a pretty picture, write a brief message and be rid of bother, that these cards often convey as much disappointment as satisfaction.

at Anse-à-Veau, and the loyal troops were defeated and driven back in disorder twenty miles. Cyriaque sought an asylum in the German consulate. It was a great blow to Alexis, but undismayed he prepared to send three veteran divisions to stop the onward march of General Simon, and, if need be, lead them himself. Large quantities of arms and military stores fell into the hands of the insurgents, but a large supply was expected soon from firms in the United States to make good the loss.

At Port-au-Prince the news of the battle was the beginning of the end for the government, as it could not muster the day following more than five hundred men to bar the road to the capital, and the greater part of these were needed to keep order in the city. The foreigners and better class of the people dreaded lest the place be pillaged either by the defeated or the victorious troops, so when the American cruiser Tacoma nosed its way into the harbor there was a great feeling of relief. The same day the French training ship Duguay Trouin came in and cast anchor. The two were a powerful restraint on those who thought of starting riots in Port-au-Prince within range of the warships' guns. If necessary the United States would probably have intervened to save the city from pillage, as England, Germany and other countries were looking to it to protect their citizens.

Haytian Troops in the Streets of Port-au-Prince

It was the well-planned revolt of the rebel sympathizers in Port-au-Prince that finally drove Alexis from power. He had refused to resign and opposed any other plan than fighting the rebels in the open field, though several involving the participation of the revolutionists in the government had been proposed. "What is one defeat to an old soldier like me?" he demanded sturdily. A committee of safety was formed in the city which sent word to Simon to moment later the ex-President and a few friends were rowed to the French ship. The Tacoma and Trouin fired a last salute in his honor.

In the capital General Legitime was declared President at the request of the committee of safety, but before this reaches the eye of the reader either General Simon or General Firmin may be struggling for the office. The former, however, has declared he does not want it if the latter does.

march on Port-au-Prince. He would encounter no opposition. On the second of December, deserted by soldiers and cabinet, and the populace declaring against him, Alexis gave up and prepared to take refuge on board the French man-of-war.

Alexis' departure was a dramatic scene long to be remembered. A few faithful troops guarded the palace, while a general went about the city to quiet the people. Alexis formally abdicated, went down the palace steps and entered a carriage over which flew the French flag. Faithful to the last, his guards fired a volley in salute. At the dock a mob had gathered; a woman lunged with a knife at Alexis, but a soldier beat her back with a musket butt. The crowd surged up menacingly; quickly a French flag was thrown across the old man's shoulders, and the crowd stopped, as to strike him now meant to insult France. A sorry if you are displeased, but I did the best I could."

THE LITTLE DOCTOR

Serial Story by AGNES LOWE ELLIS. Continued from page 1015

"I believe you, my child," he said; "but I am, as you know, very particular to know all about my visitors before I give them the privileges of my home. Henceforth, if you should meet these young men again, do nothing more than recognize them, at least Mr. Verner, of whom you really know nothing, except that he is Mr. Hunter's friend."

"Then it will be best for us to make an early morning call at Mrs. Hunter's. James, I have promised to visit this invalid lady and carry some little delicacies to tempt her appetite, and to take Marian with me so that she may become acquainted with Miss Sanborn. Do you object?"

"Not at all, Aunt Phoebe. Life's journey is rough and hard enough for us all and it is our duty to smooth the pathway for those who are feeble. Marian, will you come to my study for a few minutes?"

As they entered the Squire's library, he took Marian's hand and drew her gently to a seat by his side on the old sofa where she had been used ever since her babyhood to sit by the hour, in the evening, after lessons were over, listening to stories and songs from his lips.

Anxious that, with a good solid education, she should also possess that culture, ease of manner, and good common sense which are best acquired from constant association with those possessed of sterling qualities, Marian had been taught at home under the care of a highly-gifted governess, who for years was an inmate of their home. During that time and the two or three subsequent years, she had gained much also from reading with her father and from travel.

"My child," he said, as he fondly stroked her hair, "you do not remember your mother at all, do you?"

"No, father, you know I was only two years old when she died."

"True, dear. Well, she was a lovely character, and I have rejoiced in seeing that many of her traits are re-appearing in her child. I have tried," he continued, with a quiver in his voice, "to fulfil in some small measure the promise made on her dying bed, to train you to be like her. You have ever been a dutiful child, and now I must tell you that in order to carry out all her plans, I have suddenly made up my mind to go abroad. You remember the dear relatives in Scotland, with whom you spent the first few years of your life. I think that a journey to that country would be a real pleasure and profit to you. Could you be ready to start in a week?"

"I will try, father; but is not this a sudden move?"

"Yes, dear, it is; but it seems to me best that we should go."

Fondly twining her arms around his neck, she said, "Surely I will go, if you wish it, father; and is Aunt Phoebe to go with us?"

"Most assuredly. I could not think of leaving her here," he said, quickly. "Now run, dear, and persuade her to begin her preparations for the journey as soon as possible."

As he looked after the retreating figure, he murmured: "I wonder if I should tell her all? Oh, Nellie, darling, I will try to shield your child from all harm and danger."

CHAPTER III

GREAT was the surprise of Mrs. Langdon when she learned of Squire Danforth's plan for going abroad. She declared that she never knew anyone who took such sudden notions as he did.

"What put the idea into his head, Marian? Do you know?"

"No, auntie, I do not. I have so much faith in my father's judgment that I never question whether a thing that he proposes be right or wrong. I am sure something important must have decided him to make such a sudden departure, and I think the only thing for you and me to do is to try and be ready at the time he has named. We are to sail from New York one week from to-morrow."

"One week! How does he ever expect us to be ready by that time! I think it is dreadful to be hurried in that way, but I will make the promised call to-morrow morning, for I do not care to break my word; and surely, Marian, you will go with me."

"Of course I will. Did not papa tell you he would like to have us go? I should have gone long ago, if I had known that Mrs. Hunter was an invalid, and that that sweet girl was her constant companion, and so cut off from nearly all outside society."

The next morning the carriage was at the door at nine o'clock and the two ladies were soon driving rapidly toward the home of Mrs. Hunter. It was a lovely June morning, and all nature seemed in a happy mood. The sky was calm and serene. The roses and lilies which bordered each side of the drive for a considerable distance from the house filled the air with their perfume, while the birds were singing in every hedge.

"Really, Marian, I think it is too bad to leave this delightful place and go away to be seasick, and meet with all sorts of discomforts, just for the sake of seeing Europe. I cannot imagine why people want to travel when they have so many home comforts. While my John lived—your great-uncle John Danforth, you know—I thought more of my own home than anything I ever found on a journey."

Poor Marian! She had heard so often of the virtues of "Uncle John," and the delights enjoyed in Aunt Phoebe's home, that it had become a very old story to her; but now, as ever, she listened with praiseworthy attention and patience.

"Dear Aunt Phoebe," she said, "I have no doubt your home was very dear to you, and so is mine to me; but you must remember that we are not traveling merely for pleasure. I have told you that my father has special reasons for going abroad, and most persons would be delighted to have an opportunity of taking the sea voyage at this season of the year. You know there are seldom any bad storms in June. Of course, I was very young when I returned from my stay in Scotland, but memory of that ocean trip, and the pleasant people we met, is a bright spot in my life. I love to look back to it."

"Well," returned Aunt Phoebe, "I shall be sure to get seasick—I never could bear the water—and then you will have to get along the best way you can."

"Never fear, auntie," answered Marian, with a smile. "We shall, I have no doubt, do famously. My father and I are both good travelers and very fond of the sea, and we shall take the best of care of you."

(To be continued)

A Last Word on Premiums

WE WOULD call attention to a letter just received from one of our subscribers, which appears elsewhere in this issue, expressing her surprise at the unusual attractiveness, from an artistic and typographical point of view, of two of our Premium Books, After Death—What? and The Inside Story of the White House. It is true that these books are not only far handsomer than our announcements might have led you to expect, but they surpass even our own expectations. After Death—What? has not the rather gloomy purple cover that appeared in the advertisement, but, instead, a cover of the most dainty and delicate violet hue, which, with the bright gold stamping, makes a most beautiful and artistic binding and a volume that will prove a rich addition to any library.

The Inside Story of the White House is likewise far more attractive in its outward and external appearance than our original cover sketch; the rich, olive green cover, appropriately stamped with an emblematic design in the same soft tone, is burnished and brightened with the pure gold of the lettering. The illustrations in this superb book have the softest photogravure finish, and each and every one of the many subjects is particularly interesting.

Nor is Stories and Legends behind the others from the publisher's viewpoint; a book that will surely delight every one who turns its fascinating pages. All in all, our premium books this year are in every respect, and as always, better than advertised, and the low price at which we can offer them to CHRISTIAN HERALD readers makes them doubly inviting and desirable as Christmas gifts.

THE PASSING OF OLD ST. JOHN'S

TRAVELERS who ride uptown in New York, on the Sixth Avenue elevated, notice off to the left, just before they reach Canal Street, a high and graceful spire, rising above the surrounding masses of brick warehouses and unpleasant looking tenements which have kept them company for many blocks. The city guide-book gives the information that it is "St. John's Chapel on Varick Street," one of the most historic of New York's Episcopal churches and an offshoot of old Trinity, and still under the control of that parish. Turning down into Varick Street, there is much to tell of the past importance of the neighborhood. The old houses which have been allowed, by some miracle, to remain, are of brick with brown stone stoops with wrought iron railings leading upward to the doorways. Several of these doorways have small colonial pillars inset at the side, but with their former white and glossy surfaces covered with black or dark green paint. When the church is reached, the visitor feels as if he had been suddenly dropped into London and is standing before one of the churches built by Sir Christopher Wren. Visions of St. Mary le Bow and others come at once to mind. St. John's, though called a chapel, is a large church. It sits in a wide space with a paved court on either hand, closed in with an ornamental iron railing and high grilled gates. The building itself is of a dark red stone, softened and mellowed by the passage of the years. Above the roof a tower of stone supports a spire of hewn oak whose metal peak pierces the smoke and low lying clouds at the height of 214 feet above the street. The hurry and din of the streets dies away as one enters the wide portal and comes to the worshippers within as but a distant murmur. Old St. John's seems a very haven of worship and rest and peace, as it has indeed proved to many a weary wayfarer within the gates of the metropolis for many years past. It is with great regret New Yorkers of all denominations have heard that Trinity Parish has decided to sell St. John's and combine its work and congregation with that of St. Luke's Chapel on Hudson Street, the reason given being that a large number of the families which formerly filled the pews have sought homes elsewhere and that the work of the two chapels may well be combined in one without detriment to the work; yet there are many who firmly believe that, aside from sentimental reasons, and they should count for much, the old church is doing much good in the neighborhood, and its destruction would be a distinct loss to the city. Its clergy have carried on an active preaching campaign for a number of years and have made themselves familiar with the needs and conditions of the people who fill the tenements which have taken the places of the old-time mansions. Its clergy and guildworkers have been most active in their ministrations to all classes in the neighborhood, and from far and wide come those in trouble for advice and the help so gladly given by the men and devoted women who have given their lives to this work.

It is understood that a petition will be presented to the next meeting of the vestry of Trinity in hopes that the present plan of union between St. John's and St. Luke's may be abandoned. Letters asking for reconsideration poured in from North and South.

St. John's had its beginning as far back as 1792, though the church itself was not built until the dawn of the nineteenth century. During the first twenty years after the evacuation of New York by the troops of King George the Third, the city grew rapidly along what is now known as the lower West Side. Trinity, ever active in planting chapels along lines of expansion, decided to secure some place for conducting public worship in this new suburb. A committee in 1792 sought a location, but it was some years before services were begun. They were first conducted in a single room which had been rented personally by the rector of Trinity. The other congregations at first considered the locality as too far out and as too sparsely settled to plant a church. The story is told of one congregation which refused the offer of a gift of land in the vicinity of Canal Street on the ground that the land was not worth putting a fence around. Nevertheless, the plan of Trinity was justified by the results. In 1803 the foundations of St. John's were laid and five years later the structure was completed. There had been some delays during its construction, but the beautiful church did much for the neighborhood, attracting a good class of citizens to the locality. The church edifice cost well toward two hundred thousand dollars and it is said that after the lapse of all these years the price at which it has been sold does not much exceed that figure. Several times additions or alterations have been made, but its general appearance is practically unchanged from the earliest plans.

The district became one of the most fashionable in New York and its pews were filled with prominent men and women in the days when blue dress coats with brass buttons were worn in the day time and the ladies appeared in yards of crinoline. Its charm still holds for a number of old parishioners who come from long distances on Sunday mornings to bow in prayer in the same pews in which their fathers and grandfathers sat before them. To them it is a church of sweetly haunting memories, and they will mourn its loss as much as do the tenement dwellers who love it as no other spot in all New York. As one workman said recently to a visitor, "It's the finest church in the city," and the visitor, who had just been listening in the twilight while the notes of the historic organ rolled softly to the vaulted roof, felt heartily inclined to agree with him.

The organ was built in Philadelphia, and, while being brought here during the war of 1812, it was captured by the British and quite a large sum was paid for its ransom.

Among the distinguished clergy who have ministered within its walls should be mentioned Dr. Philip A. H. Brown, who was in charge for twenty-five years and whose preaching attracted large numbers. He believed strongly in good music in religious worship and the choir was second to none in the city. Others were Rev. John F. Young, who later became Bishop of Florida, and Bishop Wainwright.

R. S. B.

Courtesy of The Churchman

St. John's Chapel, New York City

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 16, 1908

	PAGE
Charles Wesley (Portrait)	Cover
OUR MAIL-BAG	1006
Unveiling the Sheridan Monument (Illustrated)	1006
Hayti's Successful Revolution (Illustrated)	1007, 1018
The Twice-Born, Sermon	1008, 1009
By Rev. Frederick F. Shamm
Ministers Discuss Church Federation (Portraits)	1009
Our First Conservation Conference (Portraits)	1010, 1011
Charles Wesley, Poet and Preacher (Illustrated)	1011
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1012
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	1013
A Convention on the Zambesi (Illustrated)	1014
Hero Who Saved Seventeen Lives (Portrait)	1014
The Little Doctor (Illustrated)	1015, 1018
Serial Story by Agnes Lowe Ellis
Reigns of Two Kings (Illustrated)	1016
Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
By the Winter Firelight (Illustrated)	1017
By Margaret E. Sangster
The Passing of Old St. John's (Illustrated)	1019
Esperanto Lesson No. 25	1020
Two Kings Contrasted. By Mrs. Baxter	1020
Bowery Mission's Thanksgiving. (Illustrated)	1021
New Life in China. Christian Endeavor Topic	1022
Song of the New Kingdom. Epworth League Topic	1022

All Six Are Free

These are the famous Lily Butter-Spreaders which you can procure only from Armour & Company.

They are the rage of today. The most popular piece of silverware ever produced by a silversmith.

The price, if you could buy them, would be $3 or more for the six.

The only mark on them is "Wm. Rogers & Son AA"—the mark of the Rogers Extra Plate.

We are going to supply to our customers, for a little time, six of these Spreaders free.

Our offer is this:

Send us the top from a jar of Armour's Extract of Beef. Else send the paper certificate under the top.

Send with it ten cents, to pay the cost of carriage and packing. We will then send you one of these butter-spreaders.

Send us more of the tops as you get them, and send ten cents with each to pay the cost of carriage and packing. We will send one spreader for each top until you get the six.

Thus this beautiful set—the very fad of the day—costs you only our carriage and packing cost—60 cents for the six.

That means that we return to you—for a little time—more than you pay for the Extract of Beef.

One reason is this:

We want you to learn the hundred uses that every home has for a real extract of beef.

Not merely for beef tea—not as a sick-room food. That is the least of its uses.

We want you to know what the Germans know—what the French know about it. This is one of the secrets of their fame as good cooks.

We ask you to use it in soups. Note what a difference it makes.

Add it to gravies—both for flavor and color.

Armour's EXTRACT OF BEEF

Add it to left-overs. Note how appetizing, how delicious it makes them. See how it enables you to utilize things that now go to waste.

Any meat dish that lacks flavor always calls for extract of beef. When you use six jars you will use a hundred. You can't get along without it.

Another reason is this:

We want you to know the difference between Armour's Extract of Beef and others.

Armour's goes four times as far, because it has four times the flavor and four times the strength.

The directions are always, "Use one-fourth as much."

Armour's is concentrated. It is rich and economical. It gives one a new idea of extract of beef. We want you to prove these facts.

There are two ways to tell you the worth of this Extract of Beef. One is to supply you a few jars free. But that would cheapen the extract.

The other is to give you back—for a little time—more than you pay for the extract.

That is what we offer to do.

Then you will have a silver set that will remain in your home for a lifetime.

And then you will know what Armour's Extract of Beef means. And that knowledge, in the years to come, will better a thousand dishes.

Order one jar now—from your druggist or grocer. Send us the top, or certificate, with ten cents. Then judge by the spreader we send you if you want the rest.

Send it today to Armour & Company, Chicago, Dept. AB.

ARMOUR AND COMPANY

Into Still Waters

AND

Transformation of Margaret

These Two Stories, which appeared in The Christian Herald, have been published in Book Form, under the titles of

PRICE

Cross Currents, $1.00

Turn of the Tide, $1.25

Cloth Bound and Handsomely Illustrated.

W. A. WILDE COMPANY, BOSTON

There's no more appropriate holiday gift, than a nice Calendar. There's no Calendar quite so appropriate as the

KEEP SWEET
Calendar for 1909

It is an unique combination of Calendar, Year Book, Library of Poetical and Prose Quotations, Scripture Selections, and lists two of the choicest Gospel Songs ever published. Just the thing for a Pastor to present to his church members, or for Sunday-school Superintendent and Teacher to their scholars.

Price, 50 cts., postpaid. Special prices in quantities to Pastors, S. S. Superintendents and Teachers.

TULLAR-MEREDITH COMPANY
57 Washington St., Chicago 150 Fifth Ave., New York

THE FAMOUS EVANGELIST'S NEW HYMN BOOK

GIPSY SMITH

Edition of HALLOWED HYMNS

NEW AND OLD

By I. ALLAN SANKEY

35c, a copy, postpaid. $25 per 100

Returnable Sample mailed to Pastors, etc.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,

CHICAGO NEW YORK

$10 PER EASILY EARNED AS A DAY PIANO TUNER

The Tune-a-Phone Does It.

We will teach you Piano Tuning, Voicing, Regulating and Repairing quickly by personal correspondence. New Tune-a-Phone Method. Mechanical aids. Diploma recognized by highest authorities. School chartered by State. Write for free illustrated catalogue.

Niles Bryant School of Piano Tuning,
53 Music Hall, Battle Creek, Mich.

PATENT YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 for one invention. Book, "How to Obtain a Patent" and "What to Invent" sent free. Send rough sketch for free report as to patentability. Patents advertised for sale at our expense in fourteen Manufacturers' Journal. Patent Obtained or Fee Returned.

CHANDLER & CHANDLER, Patent Attorneys
Established 19 Years
1003 F. Street, Washington, D.C.

WHY NOT BE AN ARTIST?

Our graduates are filling High Salaried Positions. Good artists EARN $25 TO $100 PER WEEK and upwards, in easy fascinating work. Our courses of Personal Home Instruction by correspondence, are complete, practical. Eleven years' successful teaching. Expert instructors. Positions guaranteed competent workers. Write for Handsome Art Book, Free.

SCHOOL OF APPLIED ART (Founded 1898)
N 98, Gallery Fine Arts, Battle Creek, Mich.

15 CENTS trial 13 wks.

In this illustrated national weekly all the important news of the world is stated clearly, fairly and briefly, for busy readers. Many special features of great interest. It is sincere, reliable, entertaining—THE paper for the home. $1 year; takes place of 33 to 34 papers. Try it 13 weeks for 15c, Pathfinder, Wash., D. C.

BLMYER BELL CHURCH BELLS.

Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

CHRISTMAS POST CARDS

25c per doz. New Years, Birthday and Flower cards. 50c per doz. Lord's Prayer series, 8 cards, 14 cards. 6 Stock cards, 10 cents. All postpaid. THE POST CARD CO., Dept. 15, FREMONT, NEBR.

LADIES

We will mail, postpaid, three beautifully EMBROIDERED COLLARS for $1.00.

LIFE OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, splendidly bound, 200 pp., sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. The Unexcelled Novelty Co., 399 Clinton St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

"KNAP" SCRIPTURE POST CARDS.

A Christmas Bell scene on each. Beautifully designed. Handsomely printed in colors. Each set of 12 for 25c. Francis Thompson, Pub., P.O. Box 8, Stat'n L, Dept. C6, Brooklyn, N.Y.

AGENTS

Portraits 35c. Frames 15c. Send business to stores for 25c. 30 day trial. Samples and Catalog FREE. Consolidated Portrait Co. 290-155 West Adams St., Chicago

NEW YEAR

Postals 20 Gold Embossed "Greetings" 25c. $5.11 Write at once. You will want more. NEW ENG POST CARD CO., Dept. 86, Springfield, Mass.

BIBLE COLLEGE AT HOME.

Graduate Course. Write Pres. C. J. Burton, Ph.D., Oskaloosa, Iowa.

A COURSE IN ESPERANTO

LESSON No. 25—By Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

Esperanto in Commercial Relations

Nov-JORKO, 30an de Novembro, 1908.
KONTINENTA KOMERCA SOCIETO, ROMO, ITALUJO.

ESTIMATAJ SINJOROJ: Ni volas enporti por la privata biblioteko kaj artgalerio de unu el niaj Nov-Jorkaj klientoj proksimume cent elektitajn pentraĵojn kaj mil ĉefverkojn skribitajn de kontinentaj aŭtoroj, romanistoj, poetoj, filozofoj, scienculoj, kaj historiskribantoj. Apenaŭ ni povos ricevi iajn originalajn pentraĵojn de antikvaj majstroj por la prezo kiun nia kliento povas pagi. Ni volas havi du el la plej bonaj pejzaĝoj de modernaj artistoj, la tuta kosto ne devas superi kvincent dolarojn.

Ankaŭ ni deziras havi la plej bonajn kopiojn de la grandaj pentraĵoj en Romaj galerioj, precipe de Aŭrore, mezuranta longe kvar futojn kaj larĝe du kaj duono da futoj, tia kiam ni vidis kiam ni vizitis Romon. Sendu afable al ni katalogojn havantajn prezarojn kaj diskontojn.

Via lasta sendo per vaporŝipo Orio alvenis en bona kondiĉo, kaj trapasis la impostodomon. Ni kredas al vi kvincent frankojn kaj enfermas kambio por cent frankoj por rebonigi la saldon.

Respekte,

A. C. FARRAR, Administranto.

Vortareto for Translating the Esperanto into English

Import. Private. Art gallery. Customers. Approximately. Choice. Standard works. Continental. Authors. Novelists. Poets. Philosophers. Scientists.

tists. Historians. Hardly. Original. Old Masters. Price. To pay. Landscapes. Modern. Cost. Exceed. Dollars. Measuring. Long. Feet. Wide. Two-and-one-half. Catalogues. Prices. Discounts. Consignment. Steamship. Arrived. Condition. Passed through. Customhouse. Credit. Frances. Enclose. Draft. Make up. Balance. Respectfully. Administrator.

It is gratifying to note that in the Daily Consular and Trade Report No. 3318 there is a report on the Esperanto Congress at Dresden by the United States consul at Chemnitz.

Decido por Ĉiu Mateno en la Jaro

Mi penas hodiaŭ vivi simplan, sinceran, kaj trankvilan vivon, repuŝante rapide ĉiun penson de malkontenteco, maltrankvileco, senkuraĝeco, malpureco kaj memplaĉeco, kulturigante gajecon, grandamecon, bonfaremon, kaj la kutimon de sankta silento; ekzercante ŝparemon en elspezo, zorgecon en konversacio, diligentecon en devo, fidelecon en ĉiu komisiio, kaj infankoran konfidon en Dio.

The above translation of Bishop Vincent's Gem is the best that has been received. The translator requests the name to be withheld.

Those deserving honorable mention are given in the order of excellence in their translations: Mrs. L. C. Randolph, F. L. Buells, R. D. Atwater, Alvan E. Johnson, Mrs. Ella F. Smith, M. H. Cole, Miss Sarah L. Phillips, Kate Symonds Seavey, E. W. Watson, Lillian Burdette, Fred C. Markert, Sarah E. Wetherell, John R. Bennett.

TWO KINGS CONTRASTED

By MRS. M. BAXTER

DAVID, the "man after God's own heart," lived in constant contact with God. There is no other way to keep our heart with all diligence. He prays, "Preserve me, O God, for in thee do I put my trust." This was his only plea, no word of merit, no self-satisfaction; it was just utter, child-like committal of himself to him on whom he could always count; and this manner of life was after God's own heart. It is what he seeks for us.

And it satisfied David. "The Lord is the portion of mine inheritance and of my cup: thou maintainest my lot." It was a perfect portion; he asked no better; in joy or sorrow, he was never deprived of this, his rightful portion. Thus he could say: "The lines are fallen unto me in pleasant places; yea, I have a goodly heritage." No grumbling, no self-pity; he was rich under every circumstance with such a heritage as the eternal God. And when in perplexity he knew not which way to turn, he had an unfailing resource in his God. "I will bless the Lord which hath given me counsel; my reins also instruct me in the night seasons." Oh, the rest of having God for our Counsellor! Oh, the peace of going forward without a doubt or a fear! This life of trust is to keep the heart with all diligence; for truly out of it are the issues of life.

David began his reign in adversity, and ended it in glory. Solomon began his reign in glory, and ended it in adversity; finding that the end of all his earthly glory was "vanity." "It is good for a man that he bear the yoke in his youth" (Lam. 3: 27). This David did in his own home, and as one of Saul's retainers. David's first public act was to reverse the godlessness of Saul's reign, by bringing back the Ark and re-establishing the public worship of Jehovah in his kingdom. Setting God always before him, he reckoned himself only as a deputy, reigning under him whom he owned as his King (Ps. 5: 2; 44: 4); and therefore the true King of Israel, whom the people had rejected, should be honored by David, the king after God's own heart. David's heart went out in great desire to do something more to honor his God, and he conceived the idea of substituting for the tabernacle a permanent structure, which should surpass in beauty and in value any of the idolatrous temples of the heathen. But he would have the building of the temple carried out by another—David's son—while God would make known to David how much more he had to give him than David would ever dream of bestowing upon his God. Thus Jehovah unfolded to David not only the near future, the birth of Solomon, and his choice of him to build the temple, but also the future of his people Israel.

The consequences of David's "great sin" (although that sin was forgiven), were continually cropping up, and he had to see one of his children after another going in the way of sin and death; his own sins repeated by them, and his paternal power over them gone. But his Psalms do not commemorate his sin, but his pardon, and the wondrous mercy of God. How different the writings of Solomon! Full of divine wisdom, but how little the touch of divine compassion! Solomon's was never, as far as we see, a broken heart like David's. We can get direction through Solomon; but when we want pardon, comfort, restoration, when we want to get near to God, it is not to the book of Proverbs or Ecclesiastes we turn, but to the Psalms of David.

Absalom's rebellion, the crowning trial in David's family and royal life, teaches us how God cannot spare even his own children tests which show them the utter depravity of their own hearts, that they may learn to know the exceeding sinfulness of sin, and understand the love which "passeth knowledge."

Music Lessons Free
At Your Home

Impossible? Let us see! In the first place, this magazine does not accept fake advertising. We have been investigated. This idea of music lessons free in your own home is now eleven years old. Over hundred thousand people ranging from 7 to 70 have taken our course and recommend it. Don't conclude one way or the other. Write us for names. You must know some of our students. Write to-day before you forget it.

We teach Piano, Organ, Violin, Cornet, Guitar, Mandolin, Banjo, and Sight Singing. Why pay a teacher? Investigate. U. S. School of Music, Box 7, 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City, N. Y.

YOU need never worry about your boy's company when he is chumming with

The American Boy

It supports by able contributors. Fascinating articles and fine pictures; department of Photography—Collecting—Mechanics—Electricity—Sports, make this the cleanest, brightest publication for boys, inspiring higher and nobler ideals.

Send $1.00 to-day and get this valuable periodical for a year—12 big books of high class reading. Sample copy 10c.

SPRAGUE PUBLISHING CO., 52 MAJESTIC BLDG., DETROIT, MICH.

The Metropolitan Training School for Nurses

Blackwell's Island, N. Y.

Offers a three-years' course of training. Applicants must be over 21 and under 35 years of age, and have had one year in high school or its equivalent. The school is registered and connected with a hospital of over 1,300 beds. Allowance is made for current expenses as follows: $10.00 per month the first year, $12.00 the second, and $15.00 the third. Classes are formed every two months. The new Nurses Home is located on one of the finest sites in New York City. The rooms are all single, with spacious entrance hall, library and sitting-rooms.

AGNES R. WARD, R.N.
Superintendent.

Convenient, Safe—
Sound Investments at 5%

POST OFFICES and Postal Routes make it safer and easier to send and receive money by mail than to carry it short distances. Our LOCATION is the advantage that enables us to pay 5 PER CENT on sums employed in safe, Sound Real Estate Mortgage Loans—and the mails enable every distant patron to share this advantage.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.

Supervised by the New York Banking Department, secured by ASSETS OF $1,800,000, strengthened by the prestige of more than fifteen years' success, this Company is a reliable medium for the investment of your capital, however small or large. Write for full information.

Industrial Savings and Loan Co.
2 Times Bldg., Broadway, New York

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"

Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set!

From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM.

AGENTS

are coining money. Claude H. Rogers sells 500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $3 to $10 a day. OUT-FIT FREE to workers.

THOMAS MFG. CO.
423 Home Bldg.
Dayton, Ohio

PULPITS

Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only.

C112 Church Furniture School Desks S112 L112 Lodge Furniture Opera Chairs O112 B112 Bank Furniture Office Desks D112

E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

Bowery Mission's Thanksgiving

THIS year's Thanksgiving Festival at the Bowery Mission was more interesting than any of its predecessors—although the famous old building at No. 55, where so many such celebrations were held, is now no more. It is an old story now how, a little over a year ago, like a bolt from the blue, there came from the city authorities a notice that "55" must be vacated and torn down, to make way for the Plaza approach to the new Manhattan Bridge over the East River. Then began a prolonged series of negotiations, searches for new premises, consultations with architects, contractors, etc., which occupied many months. The final choice fell upon No. 227 Bowery, near Rivington Street, and there workmen are now busy erecting what will doubtless be, when finished, the most beautiful and commodious Rescue Mission Hall in the world. The architects employed are Messrs. H. G. and A. L. Emery, who have done such living all alone, was on her knees with her Bible open before her, when Brother Mullen, the messenger, knocked at the door. Rising, with a shining face, she opened the door, and her first words, when the messenger explained who he was, were, "I knew God would answer prayer." With each basket that was given were words of sympathy and help, and in many a home the kindly readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD were remembered with sincerest gratitude. An immense crowd of men gathered for the evening meeting and dinner. Again the kindly captain of police was to the fore. After the hall was filled to the last seat, the remainder were lined up in the street and marched in orderly fashion into the basement, where dinner was served. The meeting itself was of a most interesting character. "Mother" Bird was in her place as the head of the family. Visitors from many distant parts, as well as from the city, were crowded on the platform. The converts from the Memorial House, the members of the Brotherhood, and the workers, numbering about two hundred, were packed in wherever an inch of space was available. Miss Sophie Ridley, of the Gospel Settlement, was discoursing sweet music from the violin, when Dr. Klopsch entered, accompanied by Rear-Admiral Sigsbee. They were instantly recognized and greeted by the men with thunderous applause.

The Thanksgiving spirit mightily prevailed. Hymns and choruses, full of enthusiasm, rang out exultantly. The testimonies of the redeemed men were never more thrilling, while the addresses of Admiral Sigsbee, Dr. Klopsch, Senator Gledhill, Alderman Caygill, and others were listened to with eager delight and interest. It was the admiral's first visit to the Bowery Mission, and his straightforward talk, full of rugged force and honesty, will not soon be forgotten.

Dr. Klopsch told the story of his personal connection with the Mission, and gave a glowing account of the beauties and effectiveness of the new Mission Hall at "227." Senator Gledhill, one of the regular leaders of the Mission, and Alderman Caygill, for many years one of its workers, have both won political and civic honors at the recent election and were duly congratulated. The great swarm of men on the Bowery still come to the Mission in the most dire temporal and spiritual need. There are the "Bread Line" at 1 o'clock every morning; the Free Labor Bureau every day from 10 to 3, and the preaching of Christ's Gospel of hope, regeneration and joy every night at 8. God is with us in what is probably one of the darkest corners in his great harvest field. He upholds us by his presence, and the clouds and rain, the crashing thunderstorms, the chill airs, and the cleansing winds all contribute to the wealth, and ripeness, and glory of the harvest! J. G. HALLIMOND.

Distributing Dinners to Poor Families

endid work on the buildings of the Children's Home at Mont-Lawn. In the meantime, temporary quarters have been secured at No. 37 Bowery. The meetings have been held for several weeks, whilst the spacious basement, 170 feet long, has been prepared for the early morning breakfasts. Punctually at 1 A.M. on Thanksgiving morning the doors were opened, and the line of homeless, hungry men were served with steaming hot coffee and satisfying rolls. The captain of police and his staff were in attendance and rendered valuable and sympathetic service. When the full complement of one thousand men had filed inside, and whilst they were partaking of their breakfast, Mr. Long, the assistant superintendent, who has charge of this department, mounted a small platform, and gave the men some kindly, hearty, and wholesome advice, and closed the proceedings with a fervent prayer on behalf of these homeless guests. Then, with wistful eyes but grateful hearts, they passed out, to continue their weary nocturnal perambulations of the streets. At 9 o'clock A.M. there came a great crowd of women to the distribution of baskets containing family dinners. The greatest possible care had been exercised in selecting those who were to be the recipients of these timely gifts. Mission workers had visited most of the homes, and some of the ones witnessed there were touching beyond description. One old woman, is naturally a small and unimportant thing—you shouldn't have to devote much of your thought to lamp-chimneys.

A Lamp-Chimney

But a poor lamp-chimney makes itself exaggeratedly and obnoxiously important through smoking and cracking and frequent replacing.

By devoting my mind to the making of good lamp-chimneys, I have succeeded in producing chimneys that the user doesn't have to think about.

MACBETH lamp-chimneys fit, never break from heat, and are clear as crystal. My name is on every one of that sort.

My Lamp-Chimney Book insures getting the right chimney for any burner, and gives suggestions about lamps, chimneys, wicks, oils, and tells how to keep lamps in order. I gladly mail it, free, to any one who writes for it. Address

MACBETH, Pittsburgh.

CORNISH Sent To You For A Year's Free Trial

Name Your Own Price and Terms.

Why Shouldn't You Buy As Low As Any Dealer?

More than 265,000 people have saved from $25 to $150 in purchasing a high grade organ or piano by the Cornish plan. Here is our offer. You select any of the latest, choicest Cornish styles of instruments,—we place it in your home for a year's free use before you need make up your mind to keep it. You state your own terms, taking two years to pay if needed. That's the Cornish plan in brief. You save one-third to one-half what any other maker of high grade instruments must charge you—you buy as low as any dealer. The New Cornish Book shows the choicest of 50 latest beautiful and artistic Cornish styles and explains everything you should know before buying any instrument. It shows why you cannot buy any other fine organ anywhere. Let us send it to you free.

Save one-third—buy on the Cornish plan.

CORNISH CO. Washington, N. J. Established Over 50 Years

DIRECT from FACTORY at Wholesale Prices, Freight Paid

We sell to you at the same price we would sell to the dealer—pay the freight besides. Stove polished, ready to set up, safe delivery insured. Then, after

ONE YEAR'S TRIAL

We refund your money if you are not satisfied.

Gold Coin

Stoves and Ranges

standard for fifty years.

Our Illustrated Stove Book, free, tells all about stoves, drafts, chimneys, etc. Send for it.

Gold Coin Store Co. 22 Oak St. Troy, N.Y.

You Save from $5.00 to $20.00

These trade-mark crosscross lines on every package

CRESCO FLOUR DIET FOR DYSPEPTICS

And Cases of KIDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES AND OBESITY

Makes delicious foods for everybody.

Unlike other foods. Ask grocer. For book or sample, write

FARWELL & RHINES, WATERTOWN, N. Y., U. S. A.

GOVERNMENT POSITIONS

46,712 Appointments were made to Civil Service places during the past year. Good life positions at $840 to $1,500 per year. Excellent opportunities for young people. Thorough instruction by mail. Write for our Civil Service Announcement, containing full information about all government examinations and questions recently used by the Civil Service Commission. COLUMBIA CORRESP. COLLEGE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

PATENTS that PROTECT

Our 3 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 6 cts. stamps. R. S. & A. B. LACEY, Rooms 20-30 Pacific Bldg. Wash. D. C.

THE LAW OF FINANCIAL SUCCESS

This book should be the seed to a fortune to the man or woman with brains and earnestness of purpose. Money is the best partner a man or woman can have. The book tells you in plain language how to develop and utilize the qualities necessary to succeed in accumulating money through personal application or investment. More individuals owe their financial success to the laws contained in this book than to any other known source. You cannot afford to be without it, as it places within your own hands the means of starting you on the road to a broader career and clean prosperity. Regular edition, limp leather bound, silk lined, $1.00 per copy. 6th special paper bound pocket edition, 16 chapters, 104 pages, published in response to popular demand to sell at 10 cents per copy, 5,000 copies sold. Mailed postpaid on receipt of 10 cents (or $1.00 for leather bound copy, stamps or silver. Send for it NOW. JUSTITIA 596 Lenox Building Chicago, Ill. Publishing Company

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure

The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles stimulates agents. V.C. Gleibner, Co., O., send 22 years of Positive Tension Shears in 2 hours, made $11.50. We guarantee to show ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $4 to $10 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents that are not found in stores than any other house in the U. S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address Thomas Mfg. Co., 156 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required. Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

PATENTS SECURED OR FREE RETAINED. Free report as to Patentability. Book and List of Inventors. Write to EVANS, WILKINS & CO., WASHINGTON, D.C.

YOU CAN AFFORD

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL," for $3 for 100. Words and music, 83 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

"If at first you don't succeed," Try

SAPOLIO

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOVELTIES

GREAT INTRODUCTORY PACKAGE ONLY 10c

We want you to get acquainted with our new and helpful things and so we make this generous offer. Send TODAY. For TEN CENTS we will send postpaid this remarkable package.

4 beautifully illuminated cards, 5x7 inches, one each of Lord's Prayer, 10 Commandments, Beatitudes, 23rd Psalm. 1 Christ-Head Calendar, 1902, very dainty. 1 1904 Golden Text Book, with full schedule of Int. S. S. Lessons, Daily Bible Readings, etc. 1 Embossed Bible Book Mark, telling where to find principal things in the Bible. One of Celebrated Wilde's Bible Pictures. One of Famous Tissot Colored Bible Pictures. 1 set of 5 Life of Christ Illuminated Christmas Post Cards. 1 new Universal Birthday Card in blue, red and gold. 1 copy The Business End of a Sunday School, 72 pages with illustrated Holiday Catalogue of Sunday School Novelties.

HAMMOND PUB. CO., Dept. F. Milwaukee, Wis.

BORDEN'S

EAGLE BRAND

CONDENSED MILK

Proven the Best for NURSERY & HOUSEHOLD

X-RAY

Stove Polish

Trade Mark
Free Sample. Write Dept. B-11
Lamont, Corliss & Co. Agts. 78 Hudson St. N.Y.

SHINES BRIGHTEST

Deafness

"The Morley 'Phone'"

A miniature Telephone for the Ear, invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.

Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO., Dept. E, Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia

SPRAY

It will pay you to spray your Fruit Trees and Vines for protection from scale and all insect pests and fungus diseases. FREE Instruction Book shows the famous Garfield, Empire King, Orchard, Monarch, Leader and other sprayers; also gives a lot of formulas and other valuable information.

Field Force Pump Co., No. 75-11th St., Elmira, N.Y.

NEW

LIGHT, Incandescent KEROSENE OIL BURNER

Fits any lamp, gives 3 times light, costs 1/6 cent, 1/2 doz. 1 doz. electricity. Everyone likes it. Agents wanted. Send for booklet and price list No. 7. U.S.A. Light Co., Springfield, Mass.

FENCE

STRONGEST MADE. Bull-tough chicken-wire. Sold to the farmer at wholesale prices. We pay freight. Catalogue free. COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 37, Winchester, Indiana

15 CENTS A ROD

For a 2 1/2 in. Hog Fence; 2 1/2 for 4 inch Farm Fence; 3 1/2 for 6 inch Country Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. Catalogue and prices. Write for it today. KITSelman Bros. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

AGENTS

NINE IN ONE

5¢ monthly. Combination of Nine different medicines. Lactation Seller. Rolling Pin. Nine different medicines. Lactation Seller. Sample free. FORBEE MFG. CO., Box 206 Dayton, O.

Strainer Spoon. Rapid Seller. Large capacity. Free. Catalogue free. RICHARDSON MFG. CO., Dept. G, 1111 N. Y.

* Young People's Societies *

New Life in China*

THE recent visits to this country of Dr. Smith, Miss Vaughan, and other missionaries, and the strong utterances of prominent Chinese officials and of President-elect Taft upon the standing of our workers in China and elsewhere, have deeply stirred all the churches of America. To win this mighty Eastern empire for Christ is a dream so sublime that it must fire the imagination of even the dullest among us. The thought of having a part in the work, of weaving even one small thread into the great cable which may save a powerful empire, is enough to spur each one of us to larger efforts than ever.

When one thinks of the position of woman in China, one perhaps realizes more keenly than in any other way, the degradation of the people. We hear much of the noble qualities of the Chinese. Dr. Hartwell and Dr. Smith have dwelt strongly upon the beauty of their devotion to the aged; their loyalty; their honesty; their generosity.

All these delightful traits may be granted. We are glad that the Chinese have them, for they form a fine foundation upon which to rear the Christian faith; but as long as woman in China is so utterly ignored and so wretched as now, much progress is impossible.

In Manchuria, where the late Empress was born, women are more considered, it is said, than in any other part of the empire. Their feet are not so often bound, and they are somewhat educated. These statements account largely for the wonderful career of Tsi-An, one of the most extraordinary rulers in all history. The mere fact that her feet were never bound would largely account for her intellectual grasp and acumen.

Miss Vaughan's description of the wretchedness of the women in her field in North China is heartrending. The girls in many families are not considered worth naming, but are known simply by numbers. They are usually married when they are from eleven to fourteen, never having seen their young bridegrooms. The little bride is taken to her husband's home to live, and becomes the slave of his mother and himself. On her poor, tiny, maimed feet, she is often expected to toil all day, until she weeps and groans in her awful pain. Both the husband and the mother-in-law may beat her at will. Not scores nor hundreds, but actually thousands, of these unhappy little child-brides commit suicide every year, rather than endure the almost unrelieved torture of their lives. They usually throw themselves into the wells, or they soak lucifer matches in water and drink the poisonous solution.

"It is impossible to conceive of a more pitiable object," says Miss Vaughan eloquently, "than the woman-child of North China."

The romantic history of missions in China, with its long list of Christian martyrs and heroes; the long period during which leading Chinamen branded together "missionaries and opium" as the two great curses of their nation; the slow process of introducing reason and religion into a country where no women and less than ten per cent. of the men can read; all these form a story which every Christian should eagerly study. It is truly like the prophet's parable of the enslavement of the dry bones. The wonderful stability of the native Christians during the Boxer uprising is still fresh in every mind. Of the 16,000 who perished, it is computed that most might have been saved by a very slight denial of their faith. The records of heroism contain no nobler examples.

* Christian Endeavor Topic for Sunday, December 27. Text: Ezek. 37:1-14.

Song of the New Kingdom*

THE religious aspect of Christmas has been almost lost sight of in the merrymaking which has become associated with it—and which is all very well, so long as it does not obscure the original meaning of the day.

A young girl, a member of an evangelical church, who was once reminded of this neglect, and was urged to spend a quiet period of prayer and of Scripture-reading in her room on Christmas Day, replied, "Indeed, no. For one day, I am not going to be bored. I am not going to do anything that is religious or that is a burden."

Now, the hasty words of young people must not be taken too seriously. The girl, perhaps, was not thoroughly in earnest. If she really meant what she said, was she a Christian? On a holiday, one usually can pursue one's train of thought less hurriedly than on work-days. If we love prayer and the reading of the Word as we ought, we can not, even jokingly, call it "a bore." Some of the newer sects gain their great power in this—that they never stint the time which they devote to the reading of their sacred books. They say, and rightly, that they lose their grip on truth just as soon as they neglect the study and thought upon that which is, indeed, the chief "means of grace."

And in the midst of the laughter and joy, let us not forget that this is, of all days, that on which love should reign triumphant. As God gave us on Christmas Day the transcendent demonstration of his love for men, so let us then give love full sway in our hearts. Let us lay aside old grudges, and heal, so far as our power goes, old dissensions. "Peace and good will" is the dominant chord of the day.

It may be that the giving of your hand to an old enemy—the granting of forgiveness to one who has wounded your soul—may cost you bitter pangs. It may tax you more heavily than the price of all your Christmas presents, but God will give you a full reward.

Think of the story of King Amariah. He set forth to conquer the Edomites. It was an investment. He proposed to enrich himself and his nation with the lands and the goods of Edom. He raised an army of nearly half a million men, and expended a hundred talents of silver, and then descended upon him. A prophet of God told him that no good would come of his deep laid schemes; that if he should go forth to war with Edom, he would be defeated.

The king trusted the seer's word, but he grieved over the money that he had spent to no purpose. When he complained of this to the prophet, he answered promptly, "The Lord is able to give thee much more than this."

It is not a high motive, that we are to get more pay for being good than for being bad; but it is one of those facts which must be admitted. Even the worldly see the truth of the proverb that "honesty is the best policy," but they see, too, that, as Wayland puts it, "he who is honest simply because it is the best policy, is not an honest man."

So, though you may spend much in humiliation and sorrow of soul, in making your peace with your enemy, God will give you far more than this. The reward may not come in wealth or glory. It will surely come in peace and inward joy—the best gifts of our Maker to erring men. He saves us—we have waited for him. Let us rejoice. The best part of this great salvation is peace and inward joy.

The peace of well-doing—the joy of faithful service—these are the rarest pleasures of the gay Christmastide.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, December 27. Texts: Isa. 53:9; Luke 2:11.

Your savings are not endangered by panics or business depression if protected by good real estate mortgages. This is the security afforded by the Industrial Savings and Loan Company, and you can invest $25 to $3,000 with equal advantage. Their advt. appears on page 1020.

Do not be satisfied with an indefinite "emulsion" which may disguise impurities but which does not exclude them may be obtained of any good druggist. It is made and bottled in Norway, thus teaching you without possibility of adulteration that it is so pure that it is entirely

Peter Moller's Cod Liver Oil

Free From All Disagreeable Taste or Odor

Digests completely—no nauseous "repeating." Never sold in bulk. Take only the flat, oval bottles bearing name of

Schleifelin & Co. New York Sole Agents

St. Elmo, By Augusta J. Evans, FREE

To Every Subscriber to "The People's Home Journal."

St. Elmo, by Augusta J. Evans, the greatest and most popular of American novels. Millions of copies of it have been sold, and never was the sale so great as in recent years. The secret lies in its wonderful hold upon the reading public. It is probably due to the fact that it is a novel of intense dramatic interest and extraordinary power, united with the element of human interest; it is permeated with a deep spiritual tone and inculcates an absorbing moral lesson. Every man, woman and child should read St. Elmo; no home should be without a copy of it. Until very recently the price of this great book has been $2.00 per copy; now, however, by reason of the fact that the copyright is about to expire, and of the further fact that we desire to aid the circulation of our popular illustrated literary and family paper, THE PEOPLE'S HOME JOURNAL, we are enabled to make the following special and extraordinary offer:

Upon receipt of Thirty-five Cents (the regular subscription price) we will send The People's Home Journal for One Year, and to each subscriber we will send Free of cost, a copy of St. Elmo, published in a large and handsome 12mo. book of over 500 pages, printed in large type on good paper, attractively bound in cloth, stamped in colored ink, and containing the entire novel complete, unchanged and unabridged.

THE PEOPLE'S HOME JOURNAL is a large and handsome literary and family paper, handsomely illustrated. Each issue contains from 24 to 36 large 4-column pages, including a beautiful cover printed in colors, and containing Serial and Short Stories by famous authors, household, juvenile, humorous, needlework, fashion and puzzle departments, etc., etc. We guarantee satisfaction to all who accept this offer or will refund money paid on application. Our house has been established more than thirty-three years, and there is no question of its entire responsibility. Address: F. M. LUTTON, Publisher, No. 27 City Hall Place, New York.

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS

BUNS EASY
No Backache
weighs only 41 lbs.
EASILY CARRIED
SAWS DOWN TREES

BY ONE MAN, with the FOLDING SAWING MACHINE. It saws down trees. Folds like a pocket knife. Saws any kind of timber on any kind of ground. One man can save more timber with it than 2 men in any other way, and do it easier. Send for FREE illustrated catalog, showing latest IMPROVEMENTS and testimonials from thousands. First order secures agency. Address: FOLDING SAWING MACHINE CO., 158-164 E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

CUT PRICES!

240-Egg Incubator, $10.00.
120-Egg Incubator, $7.50.
100-Chick Outdoor Brooder, $5.50.
100-Chick Indoor Brooder, $4.50. Why pay double these prices for machines that are no better? Get our Free Book—learn how we can sell at such low prices. Book is full of pictures; tells how to raise poultry.

Reliance Incubator Co., Box 520, Freeport, Me.

INCUBATORS Hot Air or Hot Water

MILLER'S IDEALS

The Lowest Priced Standard Machines. Certain results instead of experiments. Send for great, free book, "Poultry for Profit." Finely illustrated and covers every poultry topic. Worth dollars but mailed free, postpaid. Don't wait—SEND NOW to

J. W. Miller Co., Box 179, Freeport, Me.

HOW TO GET EGGS

Feeding is everything. Hundreds of leading poultrymen continue to buy and use Darling's Laying Food year after year. Rich in egg making material, no waste, highly balanced. $2 per 100 lb. bag. Scratching Food, $2. Beef Scraps, $2.75. price, $2.25. Forcing Food, $2. Oyster Shells, 70c. Mic. Crystal Grit, 65c. F. O. B. Chicago or New York. Cash with order.

DARLING & COMPANY

Box 36, Union Stock Yards, CHICAGO Box 36, Long Island City NEW YORK

CORNS

To really weed out a corn you must go for the roots. That's what A-CORN SALVE does. Does it quickly and painlessly, without danger of cutting. 15c. at druggist's or by mail. GIANT CHEMICAL CO., Philadelphia

The Fashion Authority of the World

In Paris the FRENCH EDITION of THE DELINEATOR has the largest circulation of any magazine of its kind. This is the tribute of Paris to BUTTERICK FASHIONS.

In America THE DELINEATOR is the one style authority. It is made so by its association with the great fashion autocrats of Paris and the creators of style in this country, and by its own unsurpassed staff of fashion artists.

Special Features in the January Delineator

Why a Hundred Sunday-Schools Have Succeeded:—A study of the methods of Sunday-School work, which should be read by every Sabbath-School teacher and Church worker.

What is the Matter With the Public Schools?—A presentation of the results of modern education together with conclusions that are of vital interest to every Teacher, Educator and Parent.

$1.00 per year

Subscribe now with any merchant selling Butterick Patterns or any newsdealer, or send direct to

15 cts. a copy

THE BUTTERICK PUBLISHING CO.

Butterick Building

New York

Don't let this Christmas go by without getting a
Victor

There is a Victor for every purse —$10 to $300—and easy payments can be arranged if desired.

At all leading music stores and talking-machine dealers.

Victor Talking Machine Co., Camden, N. J., U. S. A.

Berliner Gramophone Co., Montreal, Canadian Distributors

To get best results, use only Victor Needles on Victor Records.

Victor

CHRISTIAN HERALD

COPYRIGHT, 1908, BY LOUIS KLOPSCHE

SUBSCRIPTION, $1.50 PER ANNUM
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

New York, December 23, 1908

VOL. 31-NO. 52. PRICE 5 CENTS
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Drawn for The Christian Herald by L. F. Berneker

HIS FIRST CHRISTMAS

EQUAL TO ANY FIFTY DOLLAR MUSIC BOX

A Revolution and a Revelation in Home Music! Same Powerful Sustaining Volume of Sound as a Pipe Organ, yet an Instrument that Can be Played by Any Child! Five Indestructible Tunes Go With Each Instrument FREE. The Best, Most Lasting, Joy-Giving Investment You Can Make is OUR GREAT

Concert Roller Organ

THESE beautiful instruments are the result of many years' experience in the manufacture of organs, and are confidently offered to the public. The music is obtained from a roller furnished with pins. These pins operate upon valve-keys made of hard steel. All the working parts of the instrument are easily accessible, and are made of solid metal, the rollers and keys being mounted on metal castings. Nothing has been omitted to give these grand instruments their crowning qualities of extreme simplicity and durability. They will play hymns and popular airs with a clearness and accuracy and degree of execution which but few performers can equal. They will play tunes as long as desired, without any break, instead of stopping to change the piece, as must be done with organettes.

The reeds are organ size, and the volume of tone will fill a hall. Beautifully finished in Solid Walnut, delicate and exquisite in its decorative design, this organ is the most simple, perfect, marvelous, instructive, enjoyable and amusing musical instrument in the world. FOR SUNDAY SCHOOLS, it is just what is wanted. It will play all sacred music, as many verses as desired, without stopping to replace the music roller. This great advantage no other instrument has. A result is attained that was never reached before.

$12 ON EASY INSTALMENTS—or $10 Spot Cash!

LIST OF SACRED TUNES

Rollers for the following Sacred Tunes can now be supplied at 30c each, delivered:

- | | |
|------------------------------------|-----------------------------------|
| 1 The sweet bye-and-bye | 38 Warwick |
| 2 Nearer, my God, to Thee | 39 Abide with me |
| 3 I need Thee every hour | 40 Dennis |
| 4 From Greenland's icy mountains | 41 I hear Thy welcome voice |
| 5 Duke Street | 42 Even me |
| 6 Onward, Christian soldiers | 43 Watchman, tell us of the night |
| 7 Ariel | 44 St. Martin's |
| 8 Sweeping through the gates | 45 Federal Street |
| 9 I'll stand by until the morning | 46 Hursley |
| 10 The shining shore (Nelson) | 47 Mozart |
| 11 Sicilian hymn | 48 Webb |
| 12 Hold the fort | 49 Bowen |
| 13 Just as I am | 50 Geneva |
| 14 America | 51 St. Catherine |
| 15 Antioch | 52 Luton |
| 16 Oh, to be over yonder! | 53 Brownell |
| 17 What hast thou done for me? | 54 Hummel |
| 18 He leadeth me | 55 Paradise |
| 19 I love to tell the story | 56 Wilson |
| 20 The home over there | 57 Repose |
| 21 Is my name written there | 58 In the silent midnight watches |
| 22 Almost persuaded | 59 Portuguese hymn |
| 23 Where is my boy to-night? | 60 Wellesley |
| 24 Bringing in the sheaves | 61 Rathbun |
| 25 Let the lower lights be burning | 62 Come, ye disconsolate |
| 26 Only an armor bearer | 63 Belmont |
| 27 I will sing of my Redeemer | 64 Finnish national hymn |
| 28 He will hide me | 65 What a friend we have in Jesus |
| 29 Pull for the shore | 66 Church |
| 30 Precious name | 67 Rock of ages |
| 31 Christmas | 68 Sweet hour of prayer |
| 32 Hark, the herald angels sing | 69 Beautiful valley of Eden |
| 33 Harwell | 70 Greenville |
| 34 Hendon | 71 Old Hundred |
| 35 Manoa | 72 Pass me not |
| 36 Playel's hymn | 73 Jesus, lover of my soul |
| 37 Zion | 74 Beulah Land |
| | 75 I'm a shepherd of the valley |

Length, 18 inches; Width, 15 inches; Height, 12 inches; Weight, boxed, 30 lbs.

LIST OF SACRED TUNES

Rollers for the following Sacred Tunes can now be supplied at 30c each, delivered:

- | | |
|------------------------------------|-------------------------------------|
| 80 Shall we meet beyond the river | 620 Draw me closer to Thee |
| 81 We shall meet beyond the river | 621 Seeking for me |
| 82 Fisk | 622 Lebanon |
| 83 Mendebras | 623 The garden of the Lord |
| 84 Aletta | 624 Duane Street |
| 85 I am praying for you | 625 Saul |
| 86 More love to Thee, O Christ | 626 Walk in the light |
| 87 Go bury thy sorrow | 627 Sabbath |
| 88 Whosoever will | 628 Balerma |
| 89 Softly and tenderly | 629 Marlow |
| 90 All the way my Saviour leads me | 630 The prodigal child |
| 91 Rescue the perishing | 631 Autumn |
| 92 Follow on | 632 Leighton |
| 93 Come, great Deliverer, come | 633 When Jesus comes |
| 94 Onward go | 634 Shall we gather at the river |
| 95 We're marching to Jesus | 635 Happy day |
| 96 To the work | 643 Coming to-day |
| 97 Only a step to Jesus | 644 Come to me |
| 98 Knocking, knocking | 645 In the shadow of His wings |
| 99 Thy servant I will be | 646 Safe to land |
| 100 From heaven I am coming | 647 Will you meet me |
| 101 Be joyful, O my soul | 648 The story never old |
| 102 It is now time | 649 Stand on the Rock |
| 103 Thank Almighty God | 650 My Sabbath home |
| 104 Carried by the angels | 651 At the door |
| 105 Move forward | 652 Little children, you may come |
| 106 Some sweet day | 653 Sunshine in the soul |
| 107 Somewhere to-night | 654 More about Jesus |
| 108 Wait and murmur not | 655 Wonderful story of love |
| 109 Come, Spirit, come | 656 Everlasting arms |
| 110 Hiding in the Rock | 657 Blessed Rock |
| 111 When my Saviour I shall see | 658 Hark! 'tis the song of angels |
| 112 God be with you | 659 Will there be light for me |
| 113 Anywhere with Jesus | 660 Lead, kindly light |
| 114 Trust and obey | 661 Jerusalem the golden |
| | 662 It is God's way |
| | 663 President McKinley's last words |
| | 664 The Glory Song |

Eight Hundred Sacred, Popular and Patriotic Tunes

By means of new and automatic machinery, the manufacturers are enabled to produce music rollers in large numbers so that we can offer them to the public at the average price of sheet music—30 cents each, delivered—and a roller will give a much better performance, besides Outlasting a Thousand Paper Sheets.

The Concert Roller Organ has a fuller volume of tone and far more sustaining power than any two pianos. At the same time it is so fully under control, by means of a swell attachment, that the softest passages can be rendered with exquisite delicacy. For evening entertainments, and when otherwise musicians would have to be engaged, it will save its cost in one night, and is perfect in mechanism, design, operation and effect. The case is strongly made of solid black walnut, and is elegantly finished, forming a handsome parlor ornament.

EVERY MAN, WOMAN AND CHILD CAN PLAY IT!

Special Offer!

Good Only to Jan. 15, 1909

With Every Organ Purchased for SPOT CASH Before January 15, 1909, we will send—FREE—Ten Additional Tunes of Your Own Selection (15 in all), constituting a Free Gift of THREE DOLLARS' WORTH of MUSIC!

Remember:

$1 Down

and One Dollar a Month for Eleven Months, or Ten Dollars Spot Cash, purchases this Organ and Five Music Rolls of Your Own Selection from above list. Full list of Sacred, Secular and National Airs accompany each instrument. Extra Tunes, delivered, 30 Cents Each. We send the instrument by Freight, charges collect at your end. ADDRESS TO-DAY:

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD BOOK DEPARTMENT, Bible House, NEW YORK CITY

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

Squaws Setting Out on a Journey

Freighting Wool on the Reservation

Visiting an Indian "Hogan"

CIVILIZING THE NAVAJOS

It would be difficult to conceive of a more monumental labor than that involved in the reduction of an aboriginal language to literary form. This is the task that has been essayed by Rev. L. P. Brink, of the Christian Reformed Church, for the Navajo Indians. Mr. Brink is still a young man, being only thirty-two years of age, but he has abided among the Navajos as a missionary for eight or nine years, being stationed at Tohatchi, in the Navajo reservation. He is well fitted for the undertaking of writing a Navajo dictionary and translating the Bible into that tongue. His work so far advanced that a printing press has already been ordered for installation at the Rehoboth Mission, near Gallup, N. M., for the printing of the Navajo Bible. The Gospels, the Book of Jonah and a selection of familiar hymns have been translated, and a small hymn book has already been printed in the language of his tribe.

The translation of the Navajo vernacular involves peculiar difficulties. As an illustration, there are no less than twelve verbs meaning "to give," each depending upon the nature of what is given. Similarly, there are nine different and unrelated verbs meaning "to eat." For several sounds in the Navajo language there are no equivalents in English, or any other known language. For these, new characters had to be invented, although the letters of the English alphabet are employed as far as possible. To listen to a conversation carried on in the Navajo vernacular, one unfamiliar with it would think that it consisted largely of inarticulate grunts; but a difference in sound so slight that the unpracticed ear cannot detect it frequently makes a vast difference in the speaker's meaning.

At the Rehoboth Mission school there are accommodations for thirty-six children. Strangely enough, the mission people experience no difficulty in obtaining boys, but have great trouble in inducing parents to send the girls. The girls are wanted at home, to take care of the sheep and goats. As to the boys, this is considered beneath the dignity of the embryo warriors.

The Navajos are estimated at approximately 22,000 souls, only a very small proportion of whom can speak any language excepting their own. The first missionary endeavor among them dates back to 1746 and 1749. The undertaking was a complete failure, and the Spaniards made no further efforts to convert the nomads. Not until after the transfer of the territory to the authority of the United States were any further missionary endeavors made. There are at the present time but four small missions devoted to the reclamation of the whole tribe, which is scattered over an area (including their own reservation, the Moki reservation, and public lands in Arizona, New Mexico and Utah) of considerably more than 20,000 square miles.

At Ganado, about 80 miles from Gallup, a Presbyterian mission has been conducted for six years by 5,000,000 acres, but the Navajos pay little attention to boundaries. There are more Navajos than Hopis on the Hopi reservation, a large number on the Southern Ute reservation in Colorado, and several thousand scattered over the public lands of Arizona, New Mexico and Utah. The policy of the government is to do away with the reservation system as rapidly as possible; induce the red men to accept individual land allotments; prepare them for citizenship, and transform them from semi-nomads into farmers and stock owners. This policy will probably soon be put into effect with regard to the Navajos, and an effort will be made to induce them to accept individual allotments, while the remainder of the reservation may be thrown open to settlement.

The reservation is not desert in character, as has been represented. Vast forest belts contain billions of feet of valuable timber. There are great coal deposits, indications of oil, and districts rich in gold, silver and copper. There are large areas better adapted to dry farming than those portions of Utah and Colorado upon which scientific agriculture has scored its most conspicuous successes. Other portions are traversed by perennial streams. Even grazing is not carried on to one-fifth the extent that it might be.

The Navajos are superior to most other tribes in industry and intelligence. Practically all labor at home is performed by the squaws; but large numbers of the men seek employment on railroad grading, irrigation projects, and in the sugar beet fields of Colorado. The Navajos have always been self-supporting, receiving no rations nor other help from the government.

At Ganado, in the desert heart of the reservation, may be seen a good example of the agricultural possibilities of this land of sage and sand, that so many have ignorantly pronounced worthless and irclaimable. A more unpromising situation for an irrigated ranch or farm could not easily be found; yet a reservoir was constructed years ago and has made a green oasis in the heart of a desolate waste.

It is the only cultivated farm within a radius of more than one hundred miles, and the only patented homestead included within the boundaries of the reservation.

J. L. C.

Navajo Weavers Carding Blankets

the Rev. Mr. Bierkamper. He made the statement to the writer, in August last, that as a result of six years' labor he claimed but three real converts.

At Ganado, work has been begun on the construction of a stone church, with a seating capacity of 200. The Indians travel for long distances to attend services, and many set an example of faithful and regular attendance that might well be emulated by their white brethren. Much of the work on the new church is being done by the Indians, and by the missionary himself. It will be the first church ever erected on the Navajo reservation.

The Navajo reservation now embraces more than

IF CHRIST HAD NEVER COME

☆ A Christmas Sermon ☆

By Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D., Topeka, Kansas

"I came that they may have life, and may have it abundantly." John 10: 10 [R.V.]

THIS is a fable or an allegory, and those who have the understanding for it will know where to place the emphasis, and they will understand that in every allegory there is the largest possible freedom allowed the imagination provided it does not go outside of a certain range of well-defined fact. This is all that need be said by way of preface.

It is only once or twice in the course of a year that I have what may be called a waking dream. In that unsurveyed territory between being wide awake and fast asleep I very rarely find my mind at work, and perhaps the rarity of the occasion explains the exceptional vividness of the impression. Whether, therefore, in the spirit or out of it, it chanced that once upon a time within this present year I found myself living in Jerusalem in the reign of Tiberius, a year before the birth of Christ, with all my Christian training and faith and experience as real to me as it is now. In order to explain what follows I must repeat the situation in which I found myself. It was simply this: I was living in Jerusalem with my family a year before Christ had been ushered into the world, and with my life saturated through and through with all the experience that has entered into the world since the birth of Christ. In other words, I had become transported back to a period 1908 years previous to the present date. This must be understood clearly in order to understand what follows in this waking vision somewhere between sleep and awakening.

The Beginning of the Vision

The morning of a certain day had come and we were seated at the table for the morning meal. As had often been my custom, I said this morning, "We will repeat together the Shepherd Psalm," and we did so, and then I said, as I had often said for years at home, "Let us join in the Lord's Prayer." Then it seemed to me that my wife and child looked up in amazement across the table and asked me what I meant. I said, "Let us say the Lord's Prayer: 'Our Father who art in heaven.'" And again instead of a unison of voices there was not only silence, but consternation so great that I was obliged to cease, and one said, "What is that thou art saying?" It was as difficult for me to make explanation as if I had spoken in an entirely new tongue, and I said, "Bring me the New Testament." And again there was the same astonishing reply, "We have no such book in the house."

Now you will all understand that in a dream matters do not go with any certainty of logical sequence, but pass rapidly through one scene to another. Rarely is any tableau perfect, even in the most vivid dream. The utmost absurdity may attach itself with the speed of light to the end of a scene during a vision, and, without following to the end the astonishing feeling which came over me at the words, "We have no such book in the house," I thought I was saying, "And now we will sing one of the old hymns which mother taught us, 'My Faith Looks Up to Thee.'" And again there was the same astonishing interruption, voiced in the spoken word and eloquent in the bewildered look, when one said, "What is it thou art talking about?" Then I thought I said in my dream, "Bring me the book," and one in the family said, "We have no such book in the house." The two impressions made upon me as the day began were the impressions which grew with it. "We have no such book as the New Testament in the house." "We have no such book as a Christian hymn-book in the house." Later on there was thrust on my mind the thought, "We not only have none in the house, but there actually is none in the whole world," and then I thought to myself, "Am I the only person living who knows anything about the priceless book called the New Testament, or is able to sing those hymns which have comforted and cheered souls for centuries, 'Jesus, Lover of My Soul,' 'Rock of Ages,' 'There Is a Fountain Filled with Blood,' 'From Every Stormy Wind that Blows,' and the like?" And with this thought growing on me I went out to my day's work.

On my way I was met in the street by a young man who was seeking for employment. I had nothing in view for him, but I handed him a card in my pocket, asking for his name and address and sending him to the Provident Association. I thought he took the card and read it, and the same bewilderment crept over his face which I had seen in the family circle, as he said, pausing in the street, "But what is this to which thou hast sent me?" I tried to explain to him, but he seemed not to understand, and finally he said to me, "There is no such thing; there is no such place in the city." Then with the rapidity which characterizes the vision I simply said, "Thou hadst better go to the Young Men's Christian Association. Very often they can secure employment for young men like thyself. In any case they will give thee a kindly welcome and relieve thy immediate wants." Again the answer came back, "I know of no such institution." Then in my bewilderment I called to a passing acquaintance and said, "Direct this young man to the Y. M. C. A. building." He, in his turn, looked on me with sheer astonishment and said, "There is no such institution. Of what art thou speaking, my friend?" Then I thought in my dream I passed on, leaving that scene also unfinished behind me, and still on my way to work I came on one in the street, who had suddenly been overtaken and wounded in an accident. I

"Let the door be on the latch"

stooped over him and relieved his immediate suffering, and then, looking about me to those who were gathered, asked if any one knew the person. No one was acquainted with him. He was a total stranger in the city. Then I said, "Here is one, a stranger unknown to everyone. He should be taken to the hospital." Then in my dream I thought there was the same look of surprise on the faces of all those who were standing about, and then one said, "What is that thou speakest of?" and I repeated, "He should be taken to the hospital." Then said another, "What institution is that?" I said, "To the hospital, to the place where the unfortunate and the stranger may be taken for Christian treatment." Then, to my surprise, there came the same statement already made three times this same morning, "There is no such place in the city." Then said I, "Shall this stranger be left here to lie in the streets uncared for?" "Nay," said one, "but I will take him into my house," and I afterwards learned that it was done, but the stranger died that same evening for lack of proper care.

What the World Would Have Missed

Still on my way to my morning work I passed by several groups of blind people. Some of them were little children, groping in alleys, seeking for morsels of food which had been thrown out from the people's houses. An indignation arose in me at the sight, and I summoned one who was passing by and said, "Why are these people allowed to suffer in the city? They should be taken to the asylum for the blind." And this one passed on, simply stopping to look in amazement and say, "What! There is no such place!"

Then as the events of my dream moved swiftly found myself confronting in the midst of the several persons who had lost their reason. They shouted and wept, and attacked the passers-by, were altogether hideous and frightful in appearance. Then again I said to the passers-by, "Why should these people be allowed to range at will, unrestrained and uncared for? They should be taken to the insane asylum, to the hospital for the insane where their minds could be treated and their bodies healed." And still the same answer came, spoken with amazement and wonder, "What is this institution of which thou art speaking? We have none in the city."

Inhumanity and Selfishness

Still passing on to my work, as one scene succeeded another, each scene broken and imperfect, I thought I saw one who was white belaboring one who was black, and I interfered, even as Moses with the Egyptian, and said, "Why beatest thou brother?" And he, looking up in astonishment, said, "Brother?" "Yea," said I, "brother." Then said he in reply, "Nay, he is my slave." "Slave?" said I in amazement. "He is no slave. Slavery is abolished." With that he who had been beating the black man retreated several steps, and looked at me as if I was one of the insane, a group of which I had just gone by, and with a look of amazement he said, "Slavery abolished? It is a part of every-day life. I may not only beat my slave, but I may kill him, and no man will take any offense or interfere." Then said I, persisting yet, "Nay, but he is thy brother." With that, I thought the scene suddenly changed and I was at my place of work, going on but slightly the events which had already occurred during a part of the day. But, on returning to my home after a lapse of time which recorded nothing that I can remember, I thought it was the Lord's day and the streets swarmed with neglected children, and walking along with constant amazement and confusion of mind, I said to one and another, "Why are these children playing in such swarms the streets on the Lord's day? Let us gather them into the Sunday School. Why are these young men and women sitting idly here or engaged in foolish and harmful amusement and vice, uncared for? Let us gather them into the young peoples' societies of the church." And then one and another, replying, eyed me with looks of intense astonishment. "What are these institutions of which thou art speaking? There are none here! Where should these children be sent, and these young people find interest in their growing lives? We know no such names as thou dost mention—the Sunday School, the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, the Church!"

It Would Be a Heathen World

Then as I pursued my journey homeward I thought groups of men and women passed by, of the different nations of the world, singing heathen songs, worshiping idols which they held up in their hands, and even sacrificing their children so that the blood ran down in the streets, and in great anguish I asked of one and another, "Why do you not send the Gospel to these benighted persons and give them life abundantly, and prevent all this horrible waste of human life?" And again came back the reply, which by this time in my dream was becoming an old story, "Missions! Of what art thou speaking? We know of none such. The world is foreign to us. These people are but brutes of the field or forest. They were made for beasts of burden. Let them alone. We have naught to do with them."

Then methought on my way, still going through the streets of the city, I came to a man and woman who were intoxicated. They were wrangling together, and finally the man, with a drunken curse, smote the woman so that she fell down and died, and with great indignation I called out to the officers of the watch and to the officers of the city to see that his great crime against society should be punished according to the law of the land. And one and another said there was no such law in existence, and with rapidity I noted all about me the places where liquor was sold. Men, women and children transformed themselves into beasts and worse, while liquors flowed unrestricted, and with absolutely no protection for the people, and I said, "Why does not the temperance society take notice of these things? Why is the church so dead to the welfare of humanity?" And again answer came back from a multitude of voices, "There is no temperance society. There is no church to care for the welfare of humanity."

Continued on next page

Then I thought again in my waking dream that I had returned home, and my spirit being sore within me I had called for some of the pictures which had adorned the walls of my home in my previous life, and again the answer came back, "There are no such pictures in the house." I said, "I am weary from the disappointment and excitement of the day. Read to me some of the beautiful and cheering chapters of Christian literature. Read to me from Whittier the 'Eternal Goodness.'" I wish to hear the stanza,

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond his love and care.

But in answer to my request there came again the same incredulous answer, "We have no such poems in the house. We have no such literature to comfort and inspire." And then I thought that in my grief and disappointment I suddenly became ill, and my illness was nigh unto death, so that I felt the chill of it passing over me as a wind that blows out of some unexplored cavern; and I called my family and friends about me, and in my deep anguish asked them to read for the comfort of my spirit the thirteenth chapter of First Corinthians, the fourteenth chapter of John's Gospel, and the chapter which records the glorious resurrection, and I thought that on the faces gathered about there was no mark of hope. There was absolute despair and cheerlessness and amazement. And then it dawned upon me that of all the loved ones about me there was not one who had a conscious or sure faith in a future, and that while my soul was slipping over the brink into another world, there was almost nothing which the dearest to me could say which could strengthen my fainting soul and assure me of a hereafter, and in the midst of this great despair which settled on me like a cloud of impenetrable gloom, my vision was dissipated in a moment, and I was once more in the waking land of every-day reality.

Then I said to myself, "Verily, it is good to live after Christ instead of before, and it is astonishingly true what he said, that he came to give life abundantly—for the birth of Christ has meant to the world the extension of life in every direction. Before Christ came there was no New Testament. There were no Christian hymns. There were no organizations to speak of for the relief of the neglected. There were no efficient hospitals. There were no temperance societies. There were no young people's societies. There were no asylums for the blind or refuges for the insane and the aged. There were no Sunday Schools. There were no missionary societies. There was no art which had breathed into it the inspiration of Christian genius. There was very little literature which had for its motive the bettering of life. There was no sense of brotherhood by which a man had hold of another's hand, whether he was white or black, where one helped another up into a common heritage of light. There was no real ground for hope in the future. There was no firm assurance of a resurrection. Truly he came that men might have life and have it abundantly, and it is no myth or allegory in the midst of which we stand to-day when we try to remember the things which fill our lives which we have received from the Christian centuries, which we unconsciously accept because they are so common; but let us not forget as we draw near to the time of his birth that if we were suddenly deprived of all the abundant life which he came to give we should be poor indeed. There would be taken out of our daily lives the most beautiful, the most important, the most necessary things, which make us happy and strong and beautiful as a people to-day. There would be almost nothing left, as we count life, that would be worth while. We might still be in possession of physical life and its enjoyments. We might still know something of human affection. We might still enjoy the labor of our hands. We might still love our children. But the great things which make our lives worth while to-day would practically all be gone if Christ had not come into the world. We have a right, then, at this time of the year, to say, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace among men in whom he is well pleased." Truly, he came to give life abundantly. The birth of Christ has meant just that to the world—"life abundantly"; and just so far as we honor him and obey his teaching and spread his Gospel we are increasing the real life of the whole world. "Thanks be to God for his unspeakable Gift."

OUR MISSION BOATS IN CHINA AND THE PHILIPPINES

OPPORTUNITIES of spreading the Gospel in the Philippines seem to multiply. Now that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD mission boat is doing the work of some three missionaries in these islands, the workers strangely enough realize that there is more work of evangelization yet to be done than they had ever believed.

Three weeks ago Mr. Jansen returned from a trip to a large island. He visited five coast villages. Three of these he found had for some time been hoping that some one would come to them with the Gospel. One family alone had waited nearly eight years to be visited by the evangelist or missionary. Their joy was extreme when he arrived. They accompanied their guest to the next village. All went in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD mission launch, and the unwonted visit of a boat of its size brought many down to the beach to see what was to be seen. That they must have an evangelist was very clear. But who could be given them? There was only one way, and that was to give one of the evangelists on Cebu Island the work. The man chosen for this new field is an evangelist who is supported by some of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

"El Heraldo Cristiano" in Cebu Harbor

Then Mr. Jansen went to visit an old Bible-woman and her fellow worker, who lived on another island. He was taking them supplies, for there is great scarcity of suitable food on the island where they live. He hoped to take them to a town in another island, where not only could they get the necessities of life, but they would find a welcome from many people who for some time have been pleading most earnestly for Gospel workers. The Bible women seemed to have forgotten all their own hardships and lonesomeness. They begged to be left among their poor people some months longer.

On this island, one woman (the wife of one of our helpers on the mission launch) had for twenty years been bringing gifts of corn, fowls, fruit, and even young pigs, to the priest in order to purchase her future happiness. The poor woman many a time on her visits to the priest's house, bearing the tokens of her toil and sacrifice, would ask him if she had not paid enough, but she was always told that "as we never could be sure, it was wise to continue giving."

Some weeks ago, the British and Foreign Bible Society sent one of their Manila workers to Cebu to sell Scriptures. The man sent is an earnest Christian. His work took him out to a village some miles from Cebu city, where he soon won the confidence and friendship of the people. One family made him a feast, and amongst others they invited the village priest. The feast had begun with cheerful hospitality when the priest asked to be introduced to their Tagalog friend. Then followed a scene which will not soon be forgotten. Springing to his feet, and confronting his host, the priest demanded why he had sought to insult him by inviting him to dine at the same table with a Protestant Filipino, and not only that, but a Protestant who sold the Bible to the people. The priest left the house.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD mission boat has not only been used to take the Gospel to the Filipino, but last week it was hastily called out of an improvised drydock (where it was being scraped and painted) to take the Cebu medical missionary, Dr. Graham, and his wife to the island of Leyte, to help a fellow-missionary who was seriously ill. In the severe weather which visits these island coasts during the present months, we have frequently been reminded, by the marked care and providence of God, of the many who pray for us, and for the safety of the mission launch.

FREDERICK AND ELIZABETH JANSEN.

Cebu, P. I., September 30, 1908.

[Contributions in aid of the mission boat are needed. Every contribution will be duly acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.]

Mission Work in Central China

ON September 24 Dr. Klopsch sent me $50 for our work here, and it reached me two days ago. It came at an opportune time. One of our native evangelists living at Lin Teo, an out-station fifty miles from Wuhu, had just come in to tell me we had to give up our present building there and that there was no other building to be rented, and he did not know what to do. He said, however, that there was a house and out-buildings that could be bought, if we only had the money.

Yes, the money is the hitch very often, not only at home but out here on the mission field. I told him to go back to his work, but to quietly find out the lowest price and also to pray that God would send the means. He had just gone when in came this special gift from an unknown friend. It is about half enough to pay for this house, but we can mortgage it and keep on praying that God will send us the balance to complete the purchase.

The mission station has been opened here over a year, and many of the townspeople and farmers are coming regularly to the services. This year we have baptized eleven persons. There are also now many inquirers, and this fills us with hope and faith for the future.

This town is on the banks of the Chao River.

The Christian Herald Gospel Boat on the Yangtse

We opened it first by means of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD house-boat. By visiting it from time to time, the natives became friendly and in time we were able to rent. Now, with this new set of buildings for the work, our mission will receive a great uplift. We thank God for these gifts from home friends toward the work, and we only wish they could realize how much a very little money will do here in China.

The native evangelist at Lin Teo is one of the "substitute" men, and a most earnest worker. We are always glad to write to anyone who has a "substitute" working under us on this field. These substitutes only cost about $60 or $70 per year, but only eternity will tell how many they will lead out of darkness into God's light. This is one of the best parts in mission work. These workers are going by boat and foot telling the news of a Saviour's love. Pray for them that they may be kept and mightily used of God.

Z. CHARLES BEALS.

Wuhu, China.

Evangelist Sin

The White House Christmas Marketing

Copyright by Waldon Fawcett
Robert Anderson
The White House Messenger

CHRISTMAS marketing for the household of the President of the United States is inevitably something of a task. Although the Roosevelts, like all their predecessors in the White House, have observed Christmas as distinctly a family festival, this does not mean that there is not a rather numerous company gathered around the mahogany table on Christmas evening when President Roosevelt takes in hand his favorite carvers to apportion the toothsome bird. On the contrary, there are seldom less than a dozen persons at a Roosevelt holiday dinner, and on some occasions the number is nearer a score. In addition to the five unmarried Roosevelt children, there is his son-in-law, Congressman Longworth, and his wife, and a few chosen intimates from the President's list of close personal friends, such as Gifford Pinchot and Senator Lodge.

Now, the mere quantity of eatables needed to satisfy the Christmas appetites of such a company is a matter for some forethought on the part of the White House steward, the cooks, and others concerned with culinary welfare; but vastly more important is the consideration of quality. It is a matter of pride with the White House domestic staff to set before the Chief Magistrate on the principal holiday of the year a repast that typifies perfection in every dish. To that end considerable time is devoted to the marketing.

The powers that be in the White House kitchen are more fortunate than the average housewife in that they do not have to bestow a thought upon that most important item of the Christmas menu—the turkey. For more than a third of a century past, Mr. Horace Vose, a generous and public-spirited citizen of Rhode Island, has each year donated a Christmas turkey to the President of the United States. Long experience has proven that Farmer Vose can be depended upon to send to the White House each December the very choicest product of a State famous for its turkeys. They are confident that this Rhode Island Christmas gift, which never weighs less than twenty-six pounds, will fulfil all requirements; so no turkey quest is part of the Christmas marketing.

By WALDON FAWCETT

Another respect in which the White House Christmas marketing is simplified somewhat is in the matter of vegetables. Superintendent Noah Seaman, who has been in charge of the President's "farm" at Oyster Bay, Long Island, for about twenty years, never fails to send to the White House a very acceptable Christmas present in the way of vegetables. Some of these, such as the famous "Roosevelt potatoes," come from the storage bins at Sagamore Hill, as the President's estate is called, but there are also toothsome morsels, such as asparagus, etc., which bespeak careful culture in a hot-house. However, for all that the President receives these remembrances for the Christmas menu, he has to go down in his pocket, like the average citizen, for holiday marketing.

Indeed, there has probably never been a President of the Republic who spent as much in Christmas marketing as Theodore Roosevelt. This is explained by the circumstance that, though he receives as a gift the turkey for his own Christmas dinner, President Roosevelt purchases from his private funds each year several dozen of the best turkeys the market affords. These birds, which are selected with great care, are delivered at the White House, and on the day before Christmas one of the fowls is given to each married man employed at the White House or in the Executive offices. The turkeys constitute the President's Christmas gifts to his helpers at the Presidential mansion, and most acceptable presents they are, too.

Of course, the President is far too busy a man to give any personal attention to the White House marketing, although he lives in a capital where it has been the fashion for prominent men and women to go to market in person ever since the days when Daniel Webster strode down Pennsylvania Avenue with his market basket on his arm. Even Mrs. Roosevelt, good housewife though she is, can exercise only a general supervision over the purchases for the kitchen. For all that there are women cooks at the White House, almost all purchases—be they for the larder or the linen closet—are made by one of three men. Much of the marketing is done by Henry Pinckney, the steward—a trustworthy colored man who has been in the service of Theodore Roosevelt ever since he was Governor of New York State. Although one of the steward's chief functions is to spend the President's private funds on eatables for the White House table, Pinckney's salary of $1,800 a year is paid not by Mr. Roosevelt but by the government.

Steward Pinckney when he needs assistance in the marketing can call upon Robert T. Anderson, another colored man, who might be termed "President's errand boy." One of Anderson's ties, which, along with the marketing, keeps him especially busy at Christmas time, is to carry from the Washington city postoffice to the White House all the mail addressed to the President or members of his family. The third member of the trio purchasing agents at the White House is Colonel W. H. Crook, the Disbursing Officer of the White House—a veteran who has served continuously

Copyright by Waldon Fawcett

Colonel W. H. Crook

The Major-Domo or Disbursing Officer of the White House, who buys all the china, tableware, linen, etc.

the White House ever since the days of Lincoln. Colonel Crook makes all purchases of china, table linen, cooking utensils, etc., needed. Whereas the President of the United States must pay for his food, Uncle Sam provides him with all the necessary equipment for preparing, cooking and serving.

The White House marketing is done at whatever stores or market stands offer the most appetizing wares. Patronage is not bestowed, as it is by royalty in Europe, upon certain favored tradesmen and, so far from being allowed to boast of the fact that they serve the White House, grocers and others are cautioned not to send purchases to the Presidential mansion in other than unmarked boxes devoid of advertising.

GIPSY SMITH'S GOSPEL TOUR

GIPSY SMITH, the famous evangelist, arrived in New York last July, making his seventh visit to the United States. He visited twenty Chautauquas in Illinois, Nebraska, Iowa and Indiana during August, delivering his Gospel lecture, "From Gipsy Tent to Pulpit." Sometimes as many as ten thousand persons attended the meetings.

In October, he commenced a series of extended missions, lasting sixteen days at each place, which will take him up to the 26th of next May. His first mission began in Baltimore, and was followed by Washington and Cleveland. He is at present holding a mission in New York.

The mission at Baltimore was a wonderful success. The Lyric Theatre was crowded every night, and thousands were unable to gain admission. He had, during his mission at this place, a midnight march, as many as fifty thousand persons taking part. The service ended in his addressing a theatre full of outcasts, with wonderful results. One of his greatest meetings at Baltimore was that held for men, on a Sunday afternoon. Two hundred and fifty men in the hall marched to the front, to signify their intention of leading a Christian life. At Washington, the meetings were held in the Convention Hall, seating 6,000 persons. Even this was too small, and as many as 4,000 were clamoring for admission outside, after the hall had been filled to its utmost capacity.

During his visit to Washington, he was sent for by President Roosevelt, who spoke appreciatively of his work in Washington and heartily thanked him for it. At the men's meeting, British Ambassador Bryce was present, and said he was very much charmed in listening to his fellow-countryman, and wondered "how any man could sit under such a man and remain unconverted." At this place also the Gipsy had a midnight march, when 35,000 persons followed him through the streets and "Tenderloin" of the city.

His visit to Cleveland was also a tremendous success. Gray's Armory being totally inadequate to accommodate the crowds which nightly heard him, the result was that he had to go in the street to address the people who were unable to gain admission. The number of converts reported up to the present time is large. About 2,000 professed conversion at Baltimore, and the same at Washington, whilst probably three times that number stood up for prayers.

Gipsy Smith, Evangelist

Gipsy Smith's preaching is very simple. "Jesus Only" is his theme, and he nearly always takes his texts from the sayings of Christ. In the first part of his sermon he usually storms the soul with argument and then brings to bear upon it a tremendous power of sympathy and eloquent appeal.

His mission now in progress in New York is of a unique character. Unlike the other towns he has visited, it is not a union meeting of all the churches, but of six fashionable churches—such as the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian, the Baptist Church at Forty-fifth Street and Fifth Avenue, etc.—and it is the first time a mission of this kind has ever been undertaken in this fashionable part of New York. His preaching here, as elsewhere, is meeting with remarkable success. As many as eighty persons rise and go to the inquiry room at one meeting in the Fifth Avenue Church, and he is being cordially welcomed by the millionaires of Fifth Avenue, who seem to enjoy his preaching and the very modest way in which he is conducting the revival. His future engagements are: Pittsburg, St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, ending at Toronto on May 26, 1909, when he again sails for England.

The Independent's Anniversary

SIXTY years ago, The Independent was founded by Henry C. Bowen and began its existence as a national literary, political and philosophical magazine. In the current issue of The Independent, Dr. William Hayes Ward, for forty-one years a member of the editorial staff, reviews its long and brilliant history. Among its editors and contributors have been many of the most distinguished writers and thinkers of two generations, including Dr. Bacon, Dr. Leavitt, Dr. Storrs, Joseph P. Thompson, Theodore Tilton, Henry Ward Beecher, Oliver Johnson, Charles F. Briggs, William Lloyd Garrison, Professor Franklin W. Fisk, Harriet Beecher Stowe, Bret Harte, Julia Ward Howe, Dr. Edward Eggleston, Rev. Washington Gladden, and a host of others eminent in the world of letters. The Independent took a leading part in many of the great questions of the last half century, notably in the movement for the abolition of slavery. The sixtieth anniversary number contains many interesting reminiscences of notable persons and leading events of those early days, including many valuable fac-similes of the handwriting of Longfellow, Whittier, Bayard Taylor, Stedman, Bryant, Stoddard, Holmes and others, and it is enriched with many portraits and other illustrations. As a historical, political, biographical and literary souvenir, the number will be in great demand.

THE TUBERCULOSIS EXPOSITION

A Lecturer Explaining the Photographs to Visitors

A Lecturer Making Up a Party

IT HAS often been the complaint of medical men that they could not get the general public interested in a campaign for the prevention of disease, and that people only are stirred up when a sudden epidemic sweeps over the country. The crowds of earnest people who are attending the exhibition of the best methods for preventing and curing tuberculosis, now being held in the Museum of Natural History in New York City, shows that a great change is taking place and that the campaign of education to improve the public health is succeeding. The press and pulpit have urged people to attend, and the results have astonished the charity Society and other organizations who are educating the people to fight the White Plague, which in New York alone takes 10,000 lives every year. It was not supposed that such a multitude would attend, but on the first day over ten thousand came; the numbers increased rapidly, and the managers thought that the limit must be reached when, on the sixth day, nearly thirty thousand passed the gate, but the next day over forty thousand tried to see the exhibition in five hours.

A visit to the exhibition, although it shows with startling clearness the awful ravages of tuberculosis, yet is more cheering than depressing, for it shows how the disease may be cured; and the announcement is made that some day it will be altogether stamped out.

Entering the basement floor of the museum, with a throng in which are workmen, professional men and men of business, and hundreds of women and children, the double-armed red cross, the emblem of the world-wide battle against the Great White Plague, greets the eye from every wall. A large bulletin board announces the time and place of assembly for lectures and meetings, which are held every day. The names of the speakers are not confined to medical men, though these are the most famous in their profession, but there are names of great preachers, who are active in this great crusade and are preaching it from their pulpits; philanthropists, and officials of city, State and nation. A long black arrow points the way, and the visitor, as he enters the first exhibition hall at the left, hears a voice giving advice on the best way to prevent the catching or spread of tuberculosis, and practical advice on the way to cure the disease when once it has been contracted. After looking a moment in vain for the speaker, a large phonograph is seen at the side of the room, before which is an attentive crowd of listeners. At the end the phonograph says, cheerily: "With plenty of fresh air, good food and rest, tuberculosis may be cured"—a statement which science would have hesitated to give a few years ago, but which is now being proved. The phonograph gives its lecture every few minutes, and never lacks an audience.

This first floor of the exhibition is devoted, for the most part, to showing what the cities, and especially New York City, is doing to fight the disease. There are photographs and models of the different public hospitals, diagrams showing what races are most affected, and large cards and illus-even if a trip to the country is out of the question. A canvas hood-screen allows the patient to sleep with his head on a rest outside the window while the body is kept warm within the room. Again, heeding the injunction, "follow the arrow," the visitor sees various exhibits by societies which are fighting the disease by getting children out of doors, such as the Children's Playground Association, which illustrates with models what is being done to utilize the few open spaces left in our great and congested cities.

A great many model rooms are shown, actual size, first as ordinarily arranged in many homes, and then the way they should be. One section has a bedroom as it appeared before a trained nurse was called to attend a consumptive, and as it appeared after. The first was uninviting enough, the shutters closed and fixed to prevent any air and sunshine from getting in. In the second, the window was open, and the patient, well bundled up, was sitting by it. Superfluous decorations and draperies—nests for dust and germs—had been removed, giving an air space to the once crowded apartment. It would make an invalid improve just to see the change, and the best thing about most of the new arrangements for fighting consumption is that not so much money is needed by the sufferer, or the sufferer's family, as good sense. The ideas are easily adopted and are not costly.

On the second floor are the exhibits sent by the States which are taking up the fight against tuberculosis, and the exhibits sent over by various European countries to the recent Tuberculosis Congress in Washington. Guides, both young men and women, start here with parties every fifteen minutes. These guides wear badges and carry long wands to point out the various charts and objects of interest, telling their story in simple language and with very few medical terms. The tour and lecture are most instructive, and as thousands hear the words of warning and helpful suggestions, as they do much toward stamping out the disease in the near future.

Schools, labor unions and other organizations are setting aside days to attend, and on Ministers' Day some of the most noted pastors in the country came to give their support to the cause. Dr. Hutchinson told them that if New York would establish sufficient sanatoriums the disease would disappear from within its boundaries in five years.

Interested Listeners at the Phonograph Lecture

trations detailing briefly some word of warning which will linger with the beholder. For example, under a picture showing a window raised six inches are the words, "This is not opening a window." Another shows a window open as far as it will go, to show the greatest remedy known—fresh air. Other placards give warning that to waste money on consumption medicine is a loss of time, and then repeats the rules given by the phonograph as the successful remedy. It is shown that even in flats and tenement houses an invalid may make progress,

WHAT CHRISTIAN HERALD READERS SAY ABOUT OUR PREMIUMS

Far Beyond Expectations

Dear Dr. Klopsch: A few days ago I received the premiums which you sent me in connection with a year's subscription. I was prepared to receive something very nice, but wholly unprepared to receive such handsome premiums. The Bible is far beyond my expectations and so is the picture. Both are worth many times the cost of the paper. The Bible would cost me at our local book stores not less than three dollars. The picture would be priced at the fancy of the dealer. I am very much pleased with both, and have no hesitancy in exhibiting them to my friends.

G. L. HOULE.
Helena, Mont.

A Beautiful Gift

Dear Dr. Klopsch:
Accept my sincere thanks for your pretty gift, "The Art Gallery De Luxe," which is certainly something worth having; each one being so pretty, it is hard to choose from.

New York. MISS ANNIE BENSON.

Well Pleased With It

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I received the Red Letter Bible, and I am well pleased with it.
Kalamazoo, Mich. JACOB HOEK.

Twenty-Seven Years a Subscriber

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Inclosed find the renewal of my subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. This is to begin with the fourth issue of January, 1909. This is twenty-seven years' subscription for me to your most excellent paper. I think THE CHRISTIAN HERALD the very best family paper I have ever read.
Yale, Mich. NORMAN B. HERBERT.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly.
Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner
available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside
the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the
wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time
to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN
HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

More Peace Triumphs

AS the year draws to its close, there is peace throughout the world. In the Balkans, and even in Hayti, the warlike tumult has ceased. Turkey's revolution has been peacefully accomplished. In India the "unrest" gives indications of subsidence. Testy little Venezuela, too, has become quieter of late. Our new bond of international amity with Japan has been followed by treaties of arbitration between our government and those of China and Peru, which have just been ratified by the United States Senate. Naturalization treaties with Brazil, Uruguay and Honduras are almost completed.

It is impossible to escape the conclusion that these triumphs of peace and international good will are due to the spread of the principles of Christianity. Christ's influence increases with the ages. The spirit of His teachings is pervading all the nations, even in heathen lands, and rulers and people recognize in the principles of human brotherhood and mutual love and helpfulness, which He inculcated, the world's brightest hope.

Points in the President's Message

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S last annual message was read to both Houses of Congress on December 8. It makes a number of recommendations of vital importance, some of which will probably be enacted into law before this Congress makes way for its successor. Some of the important points are given herewith:

"The financial standing of the nation at the present time is excellent, and the financial management of the nation's interests by the government during the last seven years has shown the most satisfactory results. But our currency system is still imperfect, and it is earnestly to be hoped that the Currency Commission will be able to propose a thoroughly good system which will do away with the existing defects.

"I believe that under the interstate clause of the Constitution, the United States has complete and paramount right to control all agencies of interstate commerce. I believe that the national government alone can exercise this right with wisdom and effectiveness, so as both to secure justice from, and to do justice to, the great corporations, which are the most important factors in modern business.

"The railways of the country should be put completely under the Interstate Commerce Commission and removed from the domain of the anti-trust law. The telegraph and telephone companies engaged in interstate business should be put under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commission.

"There should be national as well as State guardianship over mines and forests.

"Postal savings banks will make it easy for the poorest to keep their savings in absolute safety.

"There must be prohibition of child labor, diminution of women labor. Industrial education should be encouraged.

"Stock watering should be prohibited, and stock gambling, so far as possible, discouraged."

Mr. Roosevelt at this point in his message again favors a progressive inheritance tax, which he has before advocated.

In regard to the courts, the President urges that the judges be paid more, so that the acceptance of a judgeship will not be such a sacrifice on the part of the individual taking the position. He also says that some method should be devised for doing away with the long delays in the administration of justice, which fall with peculiar hardship on the man of small means. He strongly defends our courts and judges from recent attacks made upon them. "Our judicial system is sound and effective at core, and it must ever be maintained."

In discussing Naval affairs he says: "There is no excuse whatever for continuing the present bureau organization of the Navy." Special attention is called to the need of four (additional) battleships. He recommends "the immediate admission of New Mexico and Arizona as States. This should be done at the present session of Congress."

The message is well worth the reading by every thoughtful citizen, as it contains explanations of recent acts of the government, and will enable him to understand the reason of much future legislation.

Your Shield?

IN THE old chapel at West Point there are in the walls memorial shields to Washington and his generals, bearing record of honorable service for their country and God. Among them is one which is blank, showing no achievement or name. It was intended for Benedict Arnold, the traitor, who, through wounded pride and covetousness, sold the plans of and agreed to surrender West Point to the enemy.

Posterity may forget; the surge of a mighty nation may leave behind this incident; but Arnold's mistake was not more irreparable than that of the multitudes who are choosing this world with its allurements instead of the life eternal. Arnold's shield may remain blank; but your shield in the Halls of Judgment cannot. You will reap exactly what you sow here. If to the flesh, you will reap bitter disaster; if to the spirit, eternal life shall be yours. Be not deceived, as multitudes are being deceived by the father of lies. Arnold awoke too late. Detested by those who bribed him, deserted by all, he died a miserable death. Tom Paine awoke too late. His last words were, "I would give worlds if I had them, if The Age of Reason had never been published. O Lord, help me! Christ, help me!" These words will do for his shield. What will be the record upon yours?

 If you have not already renewed your subscription for the coming year, please do it to-day.

Woman Suffrage in England

AFTER a most strenuous campaign, the cause of Woman Suffrage in Great Britain has at last been officially recognized by the government, which has given notice of the introduction in Parliament at an early date of a measure which, it is believed, will be acceptable to the leaders of the movement. This news is all the more remarkable because it was almost wholly unexpected. A considerable section of the women's party, believing the government unalterably opposed to them, had adopted tactics which, to say the least, were not calculated to bring about favorable results. What is now known as "The Violent Sisterhood"—the militant wing of the suffrage army—began a movement, the active and tantalizing aggressiveness of which would have put a Pyrrhic phalanx to the blush. They stormed Parliament, chained themselves to the "grill" or railings of the ladies' gallery, invaded the House of Lords, forced their way into the residences of Cabinet ministers, button-holed them on the public streets, and did not permit even the good-natured Premier, Mr. Asquith, to escape their importunities.

While a wing of the suffrage army behaved in this impolitic fashion, jeopardizing the whole issue by their foolish conduct, the great body of women who were heart and soul with the movement were conducting a more pacific campaign on legitimate lines. As the movement grew apace, the government began to understand that it had behind it many of the best women in the United Kingdom, and that these had no share in the doings of the militant suffragettes and should not be held accountable for them.

This was the situation when, at a meeting of the Women's Federation in London recently, the Hon. David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, appeared and made an authoritative statement for the government. The organizers of this meeting were opposed to the militant wing and desired to give the government's representative a fair hearing; but the suffragettes speedily turned the gathering into a pandemonium. It was only after a great effort that the Chancellor was given the opportunity to tell the news for which all the women of England had been waiting and praying for months, viz.: that a bill granting the franchise to women would soon be introduced in Parliament. He warned the women against the folly of violence, which might result in throwing away their chance to get what they so much desired.

Should the women of Great Britain win the suffrage, even though the victory be yet an incomplete one, their success cannot fail to exert a powerful influence on the movement here. We believe, too, that the women of America, profiting by the experience of their sisters abroad, will frown down any militant demonstrations. There is no room for a "Violent Sisterhood" in the suffrage ranks here. When the women of this country get the suffrage, they will receive it as a right, gallantly conceded and loyally given by those who respect their principles, and who would not frustrate their laudable ambition to have a voice in the affairs of this Republic, to whose glory and honor they have been such large contributors.

An Admiral on the "Bread Line"

DEAR DR. KLOPSCH: I must send you a few words about my visit to the Bowery Mission Thanksgiving night. I was amazed at the number of very intelligent faces in the audience. The audience, of course, was composed of men who form the "Bread Line." The most noticeable expression of those faces was indecision and loss of "grit." There was also much of habitual dissipation.

A few faces were stolid with hopelessness. There were so many faces so unmistakably amiable and intelligent in type that, considering these also, the value of the work done by the Bowery Mission soared above all question in my own mind. I had controlled and commanded many men, and have had opportunity to see dissipation in varying stages of recklessness, especially in my earlier days in the Navy. A most pitiable stage is that in which a man has reached the point where he has not only lost self-command, but has not even enough moral firmness to wish to reform. That man is lost, if he is not taken in hand by a stronger will, working in his behalf. Even at this point, the leaders and workers of the Bowery Mission, with their untiring sympathy and activity, and their organized conferences, have shown immense success. Undoubtedly the Mission coaxes attention, gains an influence, re-establishes self-esteem and induces the downright wish to reform. After that, reformation is never hopeless.

Haphazard effort, to reform the dissipated man can reach but few cases. It is the persistent, organized work, always ready and equipped, an always accessible, that has the power to score. The Bowery Mission, by its record, has become a center of effort radiating further effort. It was a pleasure to meet again Dr. Hallimond and Mrs. Bird, this time on their own ground of action, and to see the good will of that audience expressed in their favor.

It was a novel experience for me, my dear Doctor, and a very valuable one. I demurred, as you know when you asked me, a man who had never lacked a meal, to address the man of the "Bread Line." To my surprise the men not only showed the heartiest good will, but they immensely strengthened my faith in the possibility of really reaching the hearts of the majority of the men who compose the "Bread Line." I wish you success in your further efforts and will try to be present when you dedicate the new Mission.

CHARLES D. SIGSBEE,

Rear Admiral, Retired, U. S. Navy.

Washington, D. C.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 23, 1908

	PAGE
His First Christmas	Cover
Civilizing the Navajos (Illustrated)	1027
If Christ Had Never Come (Illustrated)	1028, 1029
Sermon by Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, D.D.
Our Mission Boats in China and the Philippines (Ill.)	1029
The White House Christmas Marketing (Illustrated)	1030
Gipsy Smith's Gospel Tour (Portrait)	1030
Tuberculosis Exposition (Illustrated)	1031
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM	1032
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated)	1033
Christmas in Homes of Poverty (Illustrated)	1034
Christmas Eve at Sunny Point (Illustrated)	1035
OUR MAIL-BAG	1036
Philadelphia's "Christmas Dinner Line" (Illustrated)	1036
The Little Doctor (Illustrated)	1037, 1041
Serial Story by Agnes Lowe Ellis
Christ Not Far From Any of Us (Illustrated)	1038
Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Home Joys at Christmas Time (Illustrated)	1039
By Margaret E. Sangster
Marching Under a Cross of Fire (Illustrated)	1040
Aunt Jerushy Marier's Christmas Present	1040
The Ascension of Our Lord. By Mrs. M. Baxter	1040
Gems From New Books	1042
Revelations of God. Epworth League Topic	1043
Noble Purposes. Christian Endeavor Topic	1043

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

The Ballot in Turkey

THE Sultan of Turkey, driven partly by the progressive demands of the Young Turk party and partly by the demands of the time, promised his people a Constitution and Parliament. Recently the people cast their vote for the first Parliament. This action wipes the last absolute despotism from the soil of Europe, the Duma of Russia having modified the only other despotic authority that was razed-faced enough to attempt to remain in Europe. For 6,000 years, government has moved in a circle—first an absolute despotism, then a limited monarchy, then a democracy, and then anarchy—to be followed by a despotic revival again. It looks now as though the wheel had stopped, and that a democracy is not to be followed by anarchy and a return to despotism; that the representative form of government is the one to which all nations are tending, and at which all nations are likely to stop. There is not a king or queen to-day in the western hemisphere, not a throne that rests anywhere in one-half of this world. There are dependencies of monarchies, but no throne in the western half of the world. There is not an absolute despotism in Europe, and the monarchies that exist are becoming more and more limited by the will of the people. The struggle between the Reichstag and the German Emperor is an illustration of this tendency.

The democratic idea has spread even to Asia. Japan is a limited monarchy and the Mikado has greatly added to his authority in proportion to the manner in which he has given away his power to his people. Even the people of China have been promised a Constitution and Parliament, and they are wild over the prospects of having a voice in their own government.

The people of the various nations of the earth, as a rule, have had liberty in proportion to the extent to which the ideas of Christ have been disseminated. Christian nations are the free nations. The Babe of Bethlehem came to bring "peace on earth, good-will toward men." The government is on his shoulders, and he is administering it in the interests of his dear children—the common people. Purity of heart, integrity of life and strength of intelligence, produced by the Christ character and Christ life, are the surest guarantee of individual and of national liberty.

The government shall be upon his shoulder. (Isa. 9 : 6.)

Homes for Deserted Children

The Emigration Branch of the Children's Aid Society in New York has a marvelous record of practical benevolence. During the last twenty years, more than 50,000 children have been transferred from the charitable institutions of New York City to comfortable homes in the West. Eighty-seven per cent. of the boys and girls thus shipped West have done well; eight per cent. have been returned to New York as "unsuitable"; two per cent. have died before developing any particular tendencies; one-fourth of one per cent. only have committed petty crimes and have been arrested; two and three-fourths per cent. have run away from their adopted home. In other words, only three per cent. of the number proved unworthy. Three of these little emigrant waifs have become Governors of States: John Green Brady, Governor of Alaska; Andrew H. Burke, Governor of North Dakota, and Thomas McDonald Waller, ex-Governor of Connecticut. Besides these Governors, two boys are in the House of Representatives at Washington. Other public offices and professions are represented as follows: Two sheriffs, 2 district-attorneys, 1 city attorney, 4 members of State legislatures, 21 clergymen, 81 teachers, 27 bankers, 34 lawyers, 17 doctors, 22 merchants, 15 journalists, 3 county commissioners, 1 judge, 8 postmasters, 460 business clerks, 1,000 enlisted in the Army and Navy. And the record of the girls, as far as it has been kept, is as good as that of the boys. Some who were left as little babes on a door-step or under a bush in the park, have turned out to be the most fascinating leaders of society in some of the great cities of the West.

It is the followers of the Babe that was born in Bethlehem, who have made this stupendous charity possible. There is much in heredity, to be sure; but the record of the success of this benevolent society shows that a healthful physical, mental, moral and spiritual environment, such as the average home of the West is, is potential in the formation of character and in the promotion of a successful and happy life.

Thou art the helper of the fatherless. (Ps. 10 : 14.)

A Deserted Mining City

The most noted ore deposits in this country are in Western Nevada, on the eastern slope of the Virginia Mountains. From the Comstock vein, over three hundred millions of dollars worth of gold and silver have already been extracted. In the height of the gold fever in that region, Virginia City grew to be a large and thrifty city of 30,000 people. To-day there are less than one-tenth of that number of people in its precincts. Ruin is everywhere. Buildings in good repair are scarcely to be seen; there are tottering fences, rickety walls, broken roofs, broken window-panes. "The chief streets lie along a great hillside. Farther up the slope are wastes of sage-brush growing in stunted clumps that half hide the earth with their twigs and foliage. Down below is a valley where the mines have dumped vast heaps of waste. The entire region is a wild upheaval of hills, and around the horizon are seen ranges of snow-topped mountains. The only trees are an occasional gnarled scrub pine, or a dwarfed cedar, a few feet high. Everywhere among the hills can be seen the prospector's holes and deserted shafts.

The First Voting in Constantinople Under the New Constitution

The people went there for gold and silver, and when they were disappointed in their search, or when the veins were exhausted, they left the place for other regions which promised a better return. There is no material wealth that will last forever. Rich as the mountains are in gold and silver, their treasure will be exhausted by the greed and arts of men. The hand of civilization is stripping the earth of its forests in an alarming degree. Science calculates that the supply of coal will be exhausted in this country within a hundred years. Vast plantation districts in the South have been impoverished by careless farming, by overburdening the soil with crops. Few are the mines of the world of any kind that are not being impoverished by strenuous operations, but mental and moral treasures are inexhaustible. The more ore that is taken out of the brain and heart, the richer the veins become.

Christ, who came to Bethlehem, brought with him wealth which is inexhaustible, and there ought to be thrift and light and joy in the streets of the city of our God.

Set your affection on things above, not on things on the earth. (Col. 3 : 2.)

St. Luke as a Law Reporter

Professor Francis M. Burdick of the Columbia Law School delivered an address the other day on St. Luke as a law reporter. In analyzing the apostle's account of the trial of Paul and pointing out the care and accuracy with which he narrated the legal steps involved, Professor Burdick said:

"I don't know of any historian who has embodied in his narrative an account of a judicial trial so satisfactory to a lawyer as is this by St. Luke; one in which the various stages are accurately followed, and in which matters of procedure as well as of substantive law are presented with the certainty of him who spoke from personal knowledge. It is equally remarkable, I think, that the sacred writer preserves perfect coolness throughout his report. While his abstract of Paul's addresses is much fuller than that of the prosecutors, he indulges in no tirades against them, nor does he show any irritation over the timidity of Festus and the itching palm of Felix. The tone of the entire narrative is that of serene confidence in the ultimate victory of the cause impersonated by Paul."

For if I be an offender, or have committed anything worthy of death, I refuse not to die; but if there be none of these things whereof these accuse me, no man may deliver me unto them. I appeal unto Caesar. (Acts 25 : 11.)

Destructive Ants Destroyed

A few months ago, a visitor to the Panama Canal stood on the edge of the Culebra Cut and, looking down, saw two armies busy—one composed of men digging away and the other composed of ants marching from a jungle across the cut to the gardens of the farmers. The gardeners fight these ants with arsenic and Paris green. These insects were destroyed by the thousands, but the survivors came back with stronger reinforcements. Chemical fumes were generated by which greater numbers were destroyed; but the ants, unchecked by these chemicals, still devastated the gardens and invaded the homes. It remained for Edward Schildhauer, an electrical and mechanical engineer of Colonel Goethals' staff, to stem the tide of ant invasion by electricity. He observed that the ant army entered his garden from one point and he found the path. He laid across it two parallel steel files and connected up each on the circuit. As the ants stepped from one file to the other, they were electrocuted. Discovering that something was wrong, they held a council of war and determined to march around Schildhauer's electrical dam, but the man's associate, H. F. Tucker, smoothed off the ground around his garden and made a level path for about fifty yards of copper wire and protected it from short circuits. He connected the wire with a powerful battery and the moment an ant army approached it, the leaders were killed. With their generals, majors and captains gone, the army shifted to another route, but the electrical destruction was repeated. Greater armies came immediately and actually stormed the copper wire, but in vain. By this process, the gardens are saved from destruction, and the homes from this dreaded pest. This army of ants marching against the gardens, is a type of the spiritual foes that are constantly attacking the soul. They are brave, persistent, destructive. By the Holy Spirit's power they are checked and destroyed.

Fire proceedeth out of their mouth, and devoureth their enemies. (Rev. 11 : 5.)

CHRISTMAS IN HOMES OF POVERTY

THERE may be grumbling about the "burdens" of Christmas time among the rich and the well-to-do, as they buy their gifts for each other, but not so among the poor. The charitable societies have made their appeals, and their rooms are full of warm clothing, food and toys, to be distributed at the discretion of the managers. The pitiful have opened their hearts, and for one day in the year, at least, many wretched ones are to be made glad.

Bella Cooke is gone, and thousands miss her at this joyous season; but the good Lord raises up others to fill the places of those whom he translates unto his own place. The outside of many a brownstone palace in the fashionable quarter of New York may look cold and forbidding, but within beat warm and loving hearts. Thousands—literally thousands—of noble men and women there, without saying anything to others, without the knowledge of any outside their own family circles, have denied themselves luxuries and have given up cherished dreams, within the last few weeks, in order to aid the charities which brighten the Christmas day of the poor.

One such has just died, whose name should be remembered—Miss Julia Osgood, who lived on Central Park West, in upper New York. Into homes of want and suffering she glided week by week, carrying cheer and comfort with her beautiful presence. At her funeral, a few days ago, her pastor read her life-motto, which had been found written in one of her note-books. It was:

Ask God to teach thee comfort's art,
That thou mayst consecrated be and set apart,
Unto a life of sympathy.

And such a life she lived, spending by far the larger part of her income for the needy, and denying herself almost to the point of privation, in order that the sick and unfortunate might know love and life. That this beautiful and useful life should have been crushed out by a passing automobile is one of those heart-breaking mysteries which only eternity can explain.

By KATE UPSON CLARK

Few lead such a self-sacrificing life as did Miss Osgood, but there are many, many generous souls among our wealthy and well-to-do classes; and the number is constantly increasing. As Professor Charles Zueblin has eloquently phrased it, "the fortunate members of society are no longer willing to enjoy the good things of this world while they see their brethren and sisters in want."

Thank God that this spirit is growing on every

"I like this one the best"

side, and that at the Christmas-tide it shows forth in heavenly beauty.

It shines upon the face of yonder poor woman as she carries her laden baskets from the relief rooms. The mother who has had to carry her heavy baby in her arms, in order to get her Christmas turkey, bears the load cheerfully. The old woman with her basket of neckties knows the scores, who do not care for her wares, will buy them to help her, because Christmas Day is at hand. The poor little Italian children throb with expectation as they finger over the glittering toys of the push cart man, who has had to step aside for a moment to make change for a customer. They are all going to receive gifts from one or another, perhaps more than one, of the various Christmas trees of the different organizations. In Brooklyn, Mrs. Lena Littig has organized a great Christmas Tree Association at whose annual meeting thousands of toys are distributed among the worthy poor, and a delightful entertainment is furnished by one of the best amusement managers.

There is still left much that is sordid and grasping among the poor; there is still something of vanity and the love of notoriety among the rich; but the spirit of Christ is more and more permeating and uplifting society. The feeling of brotherhood is growing. The millennial hope, which includes unity, fraternity, the reign of peace and good will everywhere, waxes stronger and stronger among mankind. The isles of the sea and the great heathen empires are crying unto God; and most touching of all, to us of America, are the signs of uplift among the vast foreign colonies in our great cities. The "slum section" in every large town, and especially in the metropolis, is engaging the loving and helpful attention of hundreds of devoted settlement workers. They are gaining the confidence and relieving the sorrows of the ignorant, the superstitious, the poverty-stricken, who crowd those fetid streets; and it is at the blessed Christmas season that the sweet blossoms of such charity open widest to the sun and give forth their sweetest perfume.

AMONG THE WORKERS AT HOME AND ABROAD

—EVANGELIST JOHN H. ELLIOTT has recently closed a most successful campaign at Kingston, N. Y.

—EVANGELISTS ATKINSON AND FITZGERALD have just concluded a series of successful meetings in the Methodist Episcopal Church, Elmhurst, L. I. Many have been added to the church.

—MISSIONARY Z. C. BEALS of Wuhu, China, with a gift from a CHRISTIAN HERALD reader, now dead, has just completed the Laura B. Ward Memorial School at Wuhu. It is a Christian school for native girls.

—IN WINCHESTER, ILL., four local churches have united in one of the best evangelistic efforts ever held there, under the leadership of Rev. W. L. Alexander, of Wheaton, Ill., and singer L. W. Breaw, of Freeport, Ill. An excellent work is reported.

—THE SOUL-WINNERS' SOCIETY has opened an "Orphans Home" in the highlands of the Alleghenies and the Cumberlands. With a gift of $6,000, a large brick building and thirty acres of good land were purchased near Clay City, Ky., and will be used as a home for girls exclusively.

—MISSIONARY A. S. PAYNTER, of Ellore, East India, writes that he has just completed a tour of the East Coast villages. After the recent floods, many natives were stricken with fever. There have been many conversions at a place called Siyadapadu, and also at Ligaranguden. Some of the villages have chosen "Church Councils," to hunt up absentees at service, secure discipline, etc. At one village during the tour there was a great outpouring, and fifty persons were baptized.

—MR. GEORGE W. COLEMAN, publisher of the Christian Endeavor World, Boston, Mass., a member of the Social Service Commission appointed by the Northern Baptist Convention at the meetings in Oklahoma, desires information concerning out-of-the-ordinary Sunday evening popular meetings for people who do not ordinarily attend Sunday evening services and for non-church-going people generally. He asks those knowing of such work to send him a brief outline of it, together with any printed literature relating to it.

—MISSIONARY W. P. ELWOOD, Dindigul, South India, who has been trying lately to raise money for additional native pastoral help, writes: "Returning home after an absence of several days, I found at the bottom of a pile of letters one from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and I knew that the end of my anxiety had come." It contained a generous gift from two CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, which enabled the missionary to do all that was needed.

—EVANGELIST GEORGE N. BAKER, who is a resident of Decatur, Ill., is superintendent of one of Decatur's large manufacturing companies. He is a member of the Decatur First M. E. Church, and has taken an active part in revivals there. He was elected chairman of the Macon County evangelistic workers. Sixty confessed Christ in five meetings, which he conducted, assisted by the local Y. M. C. A. workers. These meetings were the beginning of his evangelistic work. He has the indorsement of ministers and of the people wherever he labors.

—MISSIONARY HERBERT C. WITHEY, of Angola, Africa, now here on furlough, writes from Clifton Springs, N. Y.: "The general theme this year was the Missionary Progress of a Quarter of a Century. Under the topic 'Mass Movements,' Rev. Thomas Moody, from Congo, represented Equatorial Africa; Dr. Nichols, from Burma, the great work among the Karens and hill tribes in that country, and Bishop Harris, Korea, which is said to be forty per cent. Christian and bidding fair soon to become entirely so. The great changes taking place so rapidly among the four hundred millions of China were brought out at another time. A stereopticon exhibition, with interesting and original African views, was given by Rev. H. C. Withey. Bishop Warne gave an inspiring discourse on the great revival in India. The most impressive service of all was the farewell meeting when twenty-four missionaries who expect to go out during the coming year sat on the platform, and each in turn spoke briefly what was in his or her heart."

Christmas Eve at Sunny Point

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

SUNNY POINT, on the New Jersey shore, had been happily named for summer days. In calm June weather or when the August skies were blue and tranquil the waves rolled in from the great Atlantic with thunder and roar indeed, but they finally spent themselves in a soft murmur as they caressed the shore. In the summer the Point was gay with parties of excursionists, nurses in white caps and aprons walked slowly back and forth with baby carriages and go-carts, and young people strolling together in pairs or chatting in merry groups played at the old game of love-making just as all their forebears have ever since the Garden of Eden. Hannah Armstrong had always visited Sunny Point in June, and her memories of it were fragrant with the roses that bloomed in door-yards by the sea, and through them in and out were woven little snatches of melody haunting and wistful from the duets that she and Francis Dilworth had often played together. In the last year Francis and she had almost touched heaven in the keenness of their enjoyment. Their marriage had been set for October, and day by day they lived in a Paradise all their own. Hannah's Aunt Phoebe, who stood to the girl in the place of mother, had shaken her head and sighed over the absorption of the two.

Six weeks before the wedding day Francis had been sent West by his firm to investigate some trouble in a mining camp. He had reached his destination, had brought the business to a satisfactory conclusion so far as he was concerned, and had started on his return journey. From the instant that Hannah had received a long, delightful letter telling her when to expect him, and adding that he would telegraph when he reached Buffalo, not a word had been heard from him. It was as if the earth had opened its mouth and swallowed him. Every effort had been made to discover the missing man, his father and his partners had gone over every inch of the ground, but nothing could be ascertained about Francis Dilworth after he had left the train to change at a terminal this side the Rockies.

Everybody, except Hannah, had abandoned hope, the theory being that the man had been attacked by highwaymen, robbed and murdered. It was known that a notorious gang had infested a section which the train crossed. Francis was so well able to take care of himself, was so temperate in his habits and so stainless in his integrity that speculation halted, and only accident or fatality could be made to account for the strange thing that had happened. Hannah alone, as has been stated, continued to hold fast her hope, although with despairing clutch. The invitations to the wedding ceremony were, of course, recalled, and all the beautiful new garments were folded up and put away. Hannah moved about like a ghost in the house where she had been such a spirit of joy. As Christmas drew near she felt that she could not remain there, and she said to Aunt Phoebe, whose gentle ministrations had never been more tender, "You must let me go somewhere. I can endure this suspense and watching no longer; this listening for a footfall that never comes will make me insane."

"I'll go anywhere with you, my dear. We'll cross the ocean, and spend the winter in Italy."

"No," answered Hannah, "that would not do. Francis must know where to find me when he comes back. If I am not here he will understand that I have gone to one of the places where he and I have had our best times. We were engaged summer before last at Sunny Point. I'd like to spend Christmas there quite by myself. The good people who keep the lighthouse will take me in and give me shelter. Don't oppose me, Aunt Phoebe, and let the cousins come as usual for Christmas. I want to go again to the shore and to feel the salt spray blowing in my face."

She had her way. She would never have known for the place of her summering Sunny Point in December, when the billows rushed landward in tumultuous haste, like an angry, invading army, when the clouds hung low and the wind whipped one with keen lashes that cut and stung. But it suited her mood. The wilder it was the better, and wrapping her long cloak around her she became a companion of the storms and watched the coast guard patrolling up and down, or the lifeboats going out, with a feeling that at least here was something to be done, some misery to be alleviated. She helped in the preparations for relief when a ship was wrecked and threw herself with zest into hard work in the effort to forget her trouble.

Twelve days had gone by when the 24th of December dawned icily cold, with a blast and chill that crept through the thickest clothing, though inside the lighthouse there was warmth, and flowers bloomed to reward the loving care of the keeper's wife. Hannah did not try to go out that day. She sat hour after hour in dumb apathy, thinking of past days and dreading the future. For the first time the shadows of death enveloped her and she felt that her loved one would return no more. There was only one train a day that late in the afternoon stopped at Sunny Point, or rather at the station, two miles away. It brought the mail, and with the mail came a packet of letters and several out of herself into another sphere. For here, flinging out of the sleigh in wild haste, was a fur-clad figure, not old and white-bearded like Santa Claus, but young and strong, though as Hannah saw presently, pale and thin and gaunt as she had never expected to see Francis Dilworth.

He had been attacked and plundered and left for dead, but the robbers had been frightened before they had time to give the final coup de grace that would have finished him. When sensation returned, a blow on the head had so injured the man that he had lost his identity. He had been picked up and taken to a hospital in a strange city. Every scrap of paper, his watch and chain and whatever would have shown who he was had been taken from him by the miscreants who had meant to be murderers. When he finally came to himself, in the first glimmer of knowledge he had been too bewildered to know what to do or decide where he was. One of the doctors in the hospital reported the case to a medical friend. The friend had been a classmate of Dilworth at Princeton and had been interested in the search for him. With a faint hope that this might prove to be the lost man, he had gone to the hospital on the very day that Dilworth was to leave it—leave it not yet able to tell his name or discover his bearings. The friend had not left Francis for an instant until he had brought him safe back to New York, restoring him to his own people and placing him under the care of the best specialists he could find. Still more, he had accompanied him from Aunt Phoebe's home to Sunny Point, and he stood in the background a silent spectator of the meeting of Francis and Hannah. "Joy does not kill," he said, "but after all you had suffered, Miss Armstrong, I did think that maybe you might need the services of a doctor. I didn't feel that I could let Francis go till I saw him safe with you."

That was a Christmas eve to remember. The lighthouse keeper's little daughter hung up her stocking, and it was crammed from heel to toe and up to the top with presents, chief among them a home-made doll that her mother had dressed. That doll was not supplanted later in the little maid's affection by the beautiful creature who could open and shut her eyes and who had a box full of lovely dresses, the doll that Hannah sent her from New York. That Christmas doll the little girl called for the lady, but the other had a warmer place in her loyal heart.

There was a quiet wedding during the holidays and a Southern journey to follow it, with loitering in orange groves and listening to the mocking bird under the brooding skies of Florida. The reunited lovers felt as if they could never be separated for a day. The period of anguish had been so acute that the succeeding time of rapture was heightened in its perfection of bliss. Yet the memory of sorrow, even of tragedy, is soon overlaid by placid contentment and unshadowed joy. Hannah Armstrong felt that she must in some way tangible and enduring do something to show her gratitude to God for saving her dear one from the jaws of death. She had wealth of her own, and she decided that she would build on Sunny Point a home for children, to which little waifs and strays of the city and little ones who could never know anything beyond the streets might come in summer days. Francis was ready to help her. Nowhere except at Sunny Point should this home find its location. "We must," said Hannah, "do something to prove to ourselves that we are really grateful to our Heavenly Father, and oh, Francis, let us try to spend every June at that dear place by the sea."

"And every Christmas eve?" he asked. If the little maid had been there, the little child of the lighthouse, she would have pleaded for the promise to come on Christmas eve, but until she shall be a woman grown, she, at least, shall never have a Christmas eve at Sunny Point when she will not be remembered by her old friend Santa Claus, whose messengers will be Mr. and Mrs. Dilworth.

"Flinging out of the sleigh in wild haste was a fur-clad figure" presents from home for Hannah. There was a great box filled with violets, Aunt Phoebe's effort to send her a message of comfort. She looked at everything with indifference, until the lighthouse keeper's little daughter climbed into her lap, saying, "Don't cry, lady; Santa Claus is coming. I hear him a long way off. I hear his sleigh-bells. Listen, lady! They are making music all across the snow." The words at first hardly struck on Hannah's ear, but presently she did listen and then her eyes grew bright, her cheek flushed; she lifted the child in her arms and went to the window. "Dear little one," she said, "maybe you are right. I think I hear something. Surely Santa Claus would not drive so fast as that, and the bells would not jingle so gayly if there were not good news."

"I shall hang up my stocking," said the child, positively. "Santa Claus knows the way to this house. He never forgets it."

What else she would have said was lost a moment later in a confusion of greeting and gladness that seemed to Hannah to catch her up and whirl her

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

G. G. Owego, N. Y. 1. To whom shall I send some samples of soil to be examined, to learn whether it would make good brick? 2. Who can inform me why lightning should strike the ground around some trees seven times in the course of ten years, and always in the same place?

1. Send to the State Geologist, or write to the Scientific American, New York City. 2. Write to Chairman Pinchot, Department of Forestry, Washington. It may be that the reason of the repeated attraction of electricity is that there are iron or other metallic deposits below the surface. Subscriber, Mass. When did Mohammed live, also Confucius? At what period were the Dark Ages?

Mohammed lived from 571 A.D. to 632. Confucius lived from about 550 B.C. to 478 B.C. The "Dark Ages" are held by many writers to extend from the fall of the Roman empire, A.D. 475, to the revival of literature in the twelfth century, but often the term is given a much more extended meaning. Brewer says it was between the death of Charlemagne and the close of the Carolingian dynasty, which was "an age the most barren of learning of any age in history."

C. L. Norfolk, Va. I would like some facts about the Gothenburg system of liquor regulation.

It is a Swedish plan to limit the sale of intoxicants. It was started by the city authorities of Gothenburg. It at first limits the licenses and plans to gradually secure to the city itself the monopoly of the sale of all alcoholic beverages and shut out from the traffic anyone who derives profit from it. It has been advocated in England by Mr. Joseph Chamberlain and has been discussed in the United States.

Mrs. R. G. S., Martin, Mich. Who first signed the temperance pledge?

Probably the first recorded pledge, in the modern sense, was that taken by R. Bolton, of Broughton, Northamptonshire, England, April 10, 1637. John Wesley, in 1743, prepared "General Rules" on temperance, which may be construed as equivalent to a pledge. In 1651, the people of East Hampton, L. I., had a "moderation pledge." In 1789, the farmers of Litchfield, Conn., had a pledge against the use of distilled liquors. The first formal pledge was issued by the Temperance Society of Moreau and Northumberland in Saratoga County, N. Y., in 1808, a doctor, it is said, being the first signer.

Reader, N. Y. What is the nature and object of the organization known as "The Single-handers," which originated in Idaho, and is spreading rapidly in the West?

From Mr. B. M. Rice, State Organizer, Caldwell, Idaho, we have received some facts concerning this vigorous young organization. Its members are placed under covenant obligation of secrecy on one point only. There is a Grand Lodge in each State and a National Supreme Lodge. The organization is based on thoroughly Christian principles. It seeks to help the poor, to teach men, women, boys and girls how to live rightly and purely, to supply homes for the destitute, to fight the liquor traffic, to teach hygiene, to make war upon obscenity and profanity, to improve the schools, to work against the cigarette habit, and to agitate for pure literature. Mr. Rice explains also that an additional object is the writing of letters of sympathy and helpfulness to those who are in affliction or suffering through sin, privation or disappointment. Write to him for further information.

Mrs. G. W., Indiana. What does Rev. 1:14 mean?

The passage in Revelation should be compared with Dan. 7:9. It describes the "Ancient of Days" and the figure of speech employed in describing garments, hair, etc., is intended to show the judicial purity of the Judge and all things around him.

J. McM., Detroit, Mich. 1. This question was recently discussed in the Mail-Bag. 2. Jesus said to his disciples, "I will send you another paraclete (helper, teacher, monitor or advocate), John 14:16, implying that he himself had been such to them; but it would also be a "Comforter" or "Consoler," which they had not needed while he was with them. All he had been to them, or more, the Holy Spirit would be after he had gone. "Even the Spirit of Truth," he adds, in the next passage. They had already had the substance; now they were to have the further experience of the great promised blessing. 3. The "meekness" of Moses is translated by some authorities as "most afflicted." He was long suffering and forbearing with the turbulent people, and took little or no personal notice of their angry reproaches. This is the only reasonable explanation of the passage.

G. H. R., Shiremanstown, Pa. Is it essential to salvation that women wear a head covering? Please explain I. Cor. 11:5, 6.

The head covering was the Jewish emblem of maidenly modesty before men (Gen. 24:65) and chastity (Gen. 20:16). To uncover the head in Hebrew society indicated withdrawal from the husband's power and protection. Thus it will be seen that the point of view from which we must judge the passage is the Jewish one exclusively. It dealt with Jewish customs in a Greek city, where the position of a certain class of women in Germany, in four years, has declined from 35.7 to 34.1. By contrast, the Japanese increase of 17 to 31 per thousand is extraordinary. It has also fallen in France, and, we believe, in Italy and Spain, although the exact figures are not available.

Subscriber, Conn. Were Robert Ingersoll and William Payne atheists or infidels?

Ingersoll was an infidel. William Payne was a worthy and orthodox divine of the seventeenth century. We presume you mean Thomas Paine, who believed in God and a future life, but repudiated the Scriptures and Christianity.

S. E., Spring Mills, Pa. Did the emigrants register their names, town, and country whence they came, when they came to New York, in about the years 1740 to 1760? Are those records preserved still, and where?

People who came from England, Ireland, Wales and Scotland, as subjects of the British Crown, tailors, and the work or parts of it was let out to contractors and subcontractors, who had to do the work as cheaply as possible. The namesweat shop is usually applied to certain shops in the clothing trade when four evils are present: "long hours, stress of work, low wages, and crowded and unsanitary workshops." In 1849, the Morning Chronicle, of London, published letters detailing the fearful sweat-shop conditions in the London clothing shops. Charles Kingsley's "cheap clothes and nasty" was brought out by the same evil. In the United States since 1890, strong legislative action has been brought to bear to lessen the evil. See chapter on "Sweating System," in the book Labor Problems.

Reader, Ardmore, Pa. What is the national emblem of the Welsh?

The leek. It was first used by David, late archbishop of St. David's in 519, who, on the day when the Saxons were routed by King Arthur, commanded his Welsh troops to put leeks in their helmets as a recognition badge. The leek in connection with Wales is frequently mentioned by Shakespeare, notably in King Henry V.

F. McD., Dubuque, Ia. What will be the approximate cost to the United States of the Panama Canal?

Experts vary greatly in their estimates. One recent calculation places it at $211,300,000, which is far in excess of the original estimate of about $140,000,000.

M. K., Riverside, Ill. Can you give me the name of some book that will help me study the Bible? There are so many things I do not understand.

A Bible Commentary (Jameson, Fausset & Brown's preferably), will be found very helpful; also a Bible Dictionary and a little volume called Helps to Bible Study.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. C. McK., Pittsfield, Mass. We never heard of it.

S. E. P., Durango, Colo. Do not know the book, so cannot express opinion.

A. J. S., Granite Falls, Minn. It is not specifically mentioned in the Scriptures.

Mrs. J. P. S., Washington, Ia. Verse you mention has already been explained in Mail-Bag.

Mrs. D. H. M., Voorheesville, N. Y. Same question answered in another part of the Mail-Bag.

M. A. O., Aurora, Neb. We regard chain letters, as a general thing, as an impertinence, and usually throw them in the waste-basket. There may be certain cases in which a chain letter is excusable, but the reverse is generally the case. Bishop Lawrence has repeatedly denounced the circulation of a chain letter which was said to have originated with himself, and which was a forgery from the beginning.

T. C. P., Hamilton College, N. Y., and Mrs. E. A. T., Fostoria, Ore. The questions you ask are among those that cannot be answered definitely. There is nothing beyond what is revealed in the Scripture. In God's own good time, these and many other things that now seem hard to understand, will be made clear.

The Only Proper Attitude

BEFORE concluding this writing (says The National Advocate in its December issue, discussing the publications that decline liquor and quack medical advertising) we feel that it is only proper that we should give the honor to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which is its due in this connection. That noble publication refuses to insert anything that has the slightest connection with the liquor traffic, tobacco, theatres or patent medicines. In doing this THE CHRISTIAN HERALD does not go to the length of condemning in toto every patent medicine. But that it may be on the safe side, it has declined to open its pages to any announcement of anything that belongs to this class, so that it may not be in any sense blamed as an ally of that which might be considered even questionable.

We have interviewed THE CHRISTIAN HERALD on this subject, and we have learned in response to our question that last year the office declined $30,000 of money because of this stand. We are not surprised that it has so completely the confidence of the religious and general public.

We are quite sure that we could include in this list the names of all the church and religious periodicals, weekly and otherwise, so far as the liquor advertisements are concerned. We could also refer to a large number of them as refusing to have anything to do with patent medicine announcements. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's attitude is the only proper one for a public journal, especially religious, to take. We hope that we shall be able to very soon announce that such is the fact.

The "Christmas Dinner Line" Among the Philadelphia Poor

PHILADELPHIA has several excellent charities which make a special feature of free dinners at Thanksgiving and Christmas. Among these, the Sunday Breakfast Association is probably the best known. In this photograph, the faces of the men and women at the table are a study that carries its own story. It is one of the most pathetic pictures of its kind. It can be seen that many of the guests are people who have seen "better days."

public was not to be envied. In our own day, and in this country, it has no special application.

L. M., Ontario, Can. Can you tell me why the Quakers do not believe in baptism, or the taking of the sacrament?

They hold that the "washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost" is the only baptism essential to salvation, and quote Eph. 4:5, 6. That baptism in Christ is inward and spiritual they claim to prove by Matt. 3:11, 12; Acts 1:5; 18:25, 26; 1 Cor. 12:13; 6:11; Col. 2:20-23; 1 Peter 3:21. These passages also cover their belief concerning the Lord's Supper.

R. B., Bloomington, Ill. Can you give me any information regarding the East Indian opium cure plant, mentioned in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD some time ago? Where can it be procured?

The British Journal of Inebriety says it was discovered near Seremban, China, and that 14,000 people in the district of Kuala Lumpur were cured of the opium habit by its use. It is a tropical plant known as combretum sundaicum. It is soon to be put on the market in England, and will probably be heard of here also.

Reader, Decatur, Iowa. Is it true, as has been stated lately, that the birth rate in the larger European countries, as well as that among native Americans, has fallen materially in late years?

It has apparently fallen among a majority of the white races. In Britain, it has fallen in fifteen years, from 30 to 27 per thousand, and to an even greater extent in the British Colonies.

were not registered. Those coming from non-British countries had to take the oath of allegiance, consequently, the names of these may often be found preserved in the records of the Secretaries of State, in States representing the original thirteen colonies. The Secretary of State or State Librarian of Pennsylvania, we believe, has such a list. Write to the latter at Harrisburg, Pa. For information in regard to New York, write to the State Librarian, Albany, N. Y., and the information, if it exists, will be supplied.

E. H., Oaktown, Indiana. What is meant by "Armageddon?"

Armageddon (R.V.: Har-Magedon). The name as used in Rev. 16:16 is probably derived from Megiddo, an important Canaanite fortress in Issachar (Josh. 12:21, etc.), placed by most writers at Lejjūn (Legio), west of the plain of Esdraelon. The association of Megiddo with many battles probably suggested it as the scene of the culminating conflict between good and evil referred to in the Apocalypse. In the language of prophecy, the mountain of Megiddo is taken to represent the Church, and the events which take place there typify the sorrows and triumphs of God's people under the Gospel.

L. J., Uhrichsville, O. Will you kindly answer through THE MAIL-BAG where sweat-shops originated and something about them?

It would be impossible to give any date, as it is not really a particular system of labor but a condition of labor which grew up as clothing was made in large quantities instead of by individual

The Little Doctor

A New Serial Story Written for "The Christian Herald"

By AGNES LOWE ELLIS

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

George Hunter and Dudley Verner were college chums and were stopping at the country home of the former, before George is about to start practice as a lawyer and Dudley as a physician. George is introduced to Miss Danforth, daughter of Squire Danforth, who lives on the fine estate called "Paradise." Dudley is most anxious to meet her. A village character, Jack Green, takes them to see "Paradise." He says that they do not receive much company, but spend much time in the village. They there meet Miss Danforth at the house, and Dudley is introduced. A thunder storm comes up and the young men are invited to take shelter in the house, where they stay to dinner. As they leave, the Squire drives by on the way home. His daughter is surprised at his sudden return. She explains why the young men had been there. He says he is particularly proud of his visitors, and asks her not to do more than recognize them hereafter. He says that he is going abroad and will take her and her aunt.

CHAPTER III—Continued

IT WAS in vain for Marian to talk to Aunt Phoebe in her present state of mind, for she ended the conversation as she began it, by lamenting their proposed ocean journey. The call at Mrs. Hunter's proved to be delightful. Miss Sanborn was kindly, thoughtful and cordial; and Mrs. Hunter, clad in her white morning gown and reclining in her invalid chair, was delicately lovely. Aunt Phoebe's gifts of fruit and jellies were received with gratitude, and Mrs. Hunter folded her arms around Marian at parting, saying, "God bless and keep you, dear, in your journeyings."

Marian obtained permission to come for Miss Sanborn in the afternoon, to give her a drive and show her the grounds of "Paradise." Then they took their departure, Aunt Phoebe loud in her expressions of pleasure at the meeting, and again lamenting their proposed trip.

True to her promise, Marian called later for her new friend, and the two girls drove for miles in the country surrounding the town, and afterward through the grounds of "Paradise." A dainty tea was prepared and served on the veranda, where Squire Danforth and Aunt Phoebe joined them, and the conversation drifted to the contemplated journey and the prospective sightseeing.

A longing was expressed by Miss Sanborn that she might share the delights of the coming days of travel, and that she might herself see the Old World. This led to the offer by Marian, warmly seconded by her father, to write frequent letters to her, thus giving to herself and her invalid aunt a taste of the pleasures that the travelers themselves were enjoying.

Lily's eyes sparkled at the thought of the delight thus in store for her and she said, "How Aunt Theodora will enjoy that! She spent some years abroad in her girlhood, and has told me much of the beauty of the scenery in the Scottish Highlands. I love them especially because I have come to know them through Scott's novels and poems, which are my favorite books."

"My dear," said the Squire, "what was your aunt's maiden name? 'Theodora' recalls to my mind a very dear friend of my early manhood, one who has long since gone from this earth. I always associate her name, 'Theodora,' which means, as you probably know, 'a gift from God,' with a gentle and loving nature."

"Her name was Theodora Bynan. Her father was a government official, and was at times sent abroad. It was during one of those journeys that she visited the places I mentioned."

"What a strange coincidence! That was the name of my friend also. For the sake of an old memory, I should like to see your aunt, if she would grant me the privilege."

"Oh, yes, I am sure she will, when I tell her the circumstances, although she is usually averse to meeting strangers."

After waiting to gather a bouquet of the choicest roses and lilies for Mrs. Hunter, they started, the Squire accompanying the young ladies.

Something of restlessness and impatience was noticeable in the old gentled me you were dead, and I have mourned for you for years."

The interview, which seemed long to the young girls but all too short to the reunited friends, was ended by the appearance of Lily, who came to bring Miss Danforth to say good-bye, as the next few days would be full of preparations for the departure of the travelers. As Lily entered, she was startled to find her usually quiet and listless invalid aunt, with flushed face and sparkling eyes, eagerly engaged in conversation.

Squire Danforth said, "I have found an old friend, young ladies. This is my Dora Bynan, the friend of my youth. She was also a dear friend of your mother's, Marian, and by some dreadful mistake we supposed for years that she was dead. The story of the truest and best of women; whose friendship to you will be, if her precious life should be spared, of incalculable value. Now I can see what so strangely, and unaccountably to myself, drew me to George Hunter. It was his mother's calm, earnest, truthful gaze, looking at me through those eyes of his, so like her own. Of course, not knowing her to be alive and married, the name 'Hunter' told me nothing."

Just as he was concluding these remarks, the two young men, Dudley Verner and George Hunter, came into view.

With a start and something like a frown, the Squire was about to pass them. Then he appeared to change his mind, and calling out to the driver to stop, he spoke pleasantly to both. His eyes rested in a kind look upon George as he said, "We are about to start for a tour abroad, Mr. Hunter, and have been performing a delayed duty, which proved a great pleasure, in calling upon your family."

"I am delighted to know you have called, although, of course, you did not meet my mother, as she never sees strangers."

With an exultant ring in his voice, the Squire replied, "Yes, I did see her, and she will tell you when you get home that we found we were old friends."

"Ah, indeed! is that so?" exclaimed George. "That is delightful news. My friend, Mr. Verner, and I are just returning to New York, where we both expect to begin our lifework, he, as a physician; I, as a lawyer."

"Come over and see me before you go. You will come, too, I hope, Mr. Verner. If your mother can spare you, Mr. Hunter, come to-morrow morning. We are early folks in the country, so that you can come as early as you please."

Both young men thanked him cordially for the invitation, which they accepted with evident pleasure, and after a little general conversation they departed.

"Marian," said the Squire, "I have invited Mr. Verner, though I am not at all prepossessed in his favor. On the contrary, you know I have requested you to be careful not to take more notice of him than is absolutely necessary; but I am favorably impressed by young Hunter, and for his sake I invited the other. It may be a wrong feeling, but this young Verner reminds me so forcibly of one who caused me much sorrow years ago, that I can hardly look upon him without a shudder. I owe you this explanation now. If the time should ever come when it seems best, I will tell you the story that this young man's presence brings forcibly to my mind. It would pain you to hear it, dear, so for the present I forbear."

"It is all right, father. I will be civil to him, but no more; and you know I am always pleased to have you tell me stories, whether they are painful or not, whenever you think best. I have great faith in your judgment."

"Thank you, dear; and, Marian, one thing more. You will never blame me, will you, dear, for withholding knowledge that I thought best to conceal for

Continued on page 1041

"'Why, auntie,' she said, 'why are you not in bed?'"

tleman's manner, and when at last they were seated in the parlor, awaiting the return of Miss Sanborn, who had gone to acquaint her aunt with their presence, he was apparently lost in deep thought.

When she came, saying, "Aunt Dora will see you, Squire Danforth," he immediately arose and followed her.

The invalid's easy chair had been drawn to a vine-covered porch opening from her room; and here, after introducing them to each other, Lily left them to join her young companion.

"Dora! Oh, my friend, is it indeed you? You, whom I have for years thought of as an angel in heaven!" exclaimed the astonished man. "They our early friendship would perhaps not interest you two—at least I will not wait to tell you more of it now. Good-bye, Dora; I trust we shall see much of each other when our journey abroad is over and we are again established in our own 'Paradise.'"

As soon as they were on their way home, Squire Danforth turned to Marian and said, "My dear, strange things sometimes happen in this world, and now we have another proof, if we had needed any, that 'no kind act ever fails of its reward.' But for your kindness to those two strangers, I should not to-day have discovered the fact that there is living, almost at my door, one of my earliest friends, one of

CHRIST NOT FAR FROM ANY OF US

Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

IT IS well to put here a foreword on the Sunday School lessons for 1909. The lessons selected by the International Lesson Committee for the year 1909 are in the Acts and the Epistles. When pursuing a similar course several years ago, a Sunday School teacher pronounced them "Christless lessons." Let us look at the Acts and Epistles and see if they are "Christless."

They surpass even John's Gospel in the emphasis they put on the Deity of Christ, which is proclaimed especially in the divine titles that are repeated with most significant frequency—"Jesus Christ," "The Lord Jesus," "Our Lord Jesus Christ." It is in the Epistles that Jesus is declared to be related to God in "the effulgence of his glory" (Heb. 1:3). It is in the Epistles that it is written, "God sent forth his Son, born of a woman, born under the law, that he might redeem them that were under the law, that we might receive the adoption of sons" (Gal. 4:4; cf. 3:13). It is in the Epistles that it is written, "If thou shalt confess with thy mouth Jesus as Lord, and shalt believe in thine heart that God raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved" (Rom. 10:9; cf. I. Cor. 12:3). It is in the Epistles that it is written: "Have this mind in you, which was also in Christ Jesus: who existing in the form of God, counted not the being on an equality with God a thing to be grasped, but emptied himself, taking the form of a servant, being made in the likeness of men" (Phil. 2:5-7).

A careful analysis of the references to Christ's visible ministry in the Acts and Epistles shows that this last and fullest Gospel puts the chief emphasis where the earlier Gospels did, only more so, as the people were now able to accept it.

It is in harmony with this growth that the miracles of Christ in the material world have but five verses in this last and fullest Gospel.

Those who make Christ's example the central fact of the Gospel, more than the incarnation and the cross and the resurrection put together, will do well to ponder that in the last and fullest Gospel there are but four verses about him as the perfect example, while there are about three hundred verses about the Incarnation, the Cross, and the Resurrection. Paul is often spoken of as a philosopher. He had the ability for that, but he and his fellow apostles were mainly heralds of these three great facts. Faith was to rest on these historic facts and upon corresponding experiences in one's own soul. Everything else about the life of Christ these apostles treat as subordinate to these three great facts, which are three parts of the one fact, that the Christ of infinite love came down from heaven to the cross to save us from the guilt of sin by dying in our stead, and then rose from the dead and returned to heaven to save us from the power of sin and the love of sin by his life above and within. Let us keep this aspect of the truth in mind as we study the Acts and the Epistles during this year 1909.

"He took himself from the sight of them that loved him well, that he might hide himself in their very hearts."—George Macdonald.

"The former treatise I made, O Theophilus." This refers to the Gospel of Luke, who is also the writer of the Acts. Note that he was not one of the twelve apostles, but is elsewhere spoken of as the "beloved physician." Nothing definite is known about Theophilus. "Concerning all that Jesus began to do and to teach." It has been said that the Gospel of Luke and the Book of the Acts are parts of one connected life of our Lord—one, his life in the body, and the other, his life in the church.

Teaching After the Resurrection

"Until the day in which he was taken up." There was only a brief interval in his teaching, on those days when he lay in the tomb. The teachings which he gave his apostles before his death were continued after his resurrection until his ascension. I. Cor. 15:5; Mark 16:12, 13; Luke 24:13-25; Mark 16:14; Luke 24:36-life from the beginning to the end, as God sees it, would be more than we could bear of joy, perhaps, or of sorrow.

"Ye shall receive power, after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you." "They were unbaptized in soul," says Dr. Joseph Parker; "the symbolic water had done its initial work, but they stood there without the sacred fire, the inspiring effluvia, the presence of heaven in the heart." Also, he says, "know that you have the Holy Ghost, not by your narrowness or dogmatism, or pertinacity or selfishness, but by your glowing love, your redeeming hopefulness, your continued charity, your indestructible patience."

"And ye shall be my witnesses." Where? Jesus mentioned, first, in Jerusalem as the inner circle; and then a broader circle, Judea; and still broader, Samaria; and then the world circle, "the uttermost parts of the earth." And it was so. The apostles began at Jerusalem (Acts 2:46; 4:1; spirit, shall 'ascend.' We shall very deed rise with Christ."

"Two men stood by them in what apparel." We have God's own word for it that angels are always just hand (Ps. 34:7). Oh, the loneliness of that hour for those loving apostles but for the ministry of angels, who gave to them the assurance that Jesus would come again in like manner they had seen him go. The apostle Paul, taking up the strain, says: "The Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout, with the voice of the archangel, and with the triumph of God" (I. Thess. 4:16).

"Then returned they unto Jerusalem," as Jesus had told them to do to wait in that upper room for the coming of the Holy Spirit. Not the apostles alone; the mother of Jesus was there, and other women, and other friends.

How We Can See Jesus

A cultivated lady was once heard to say that she thought it selfish and ignoble to pray. "It is nobler and more disinterested to meditate on God and forget self." On the contrary, we believe that whoever thinks that way is cherishing the root of all selfishness, namely, pride. But everything depends upon what kind of a prayer is offered, and the manner of it as well.

Jacob said, "I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." And the record is, "And he blessed him there" (Gen. 32:29). Take hold on God in prayer!

Shall we try the telescope? Yes, but not one of ordinary make. Dr. Joseph Cook said: "To-morrow the sun is rising. I put upon it a telescopic tube. If I look this way there will no image spring up in the instrument. The sun ascends while I am looking in some oblique way. By and by, I resolve to do my part toward producing the sun inside my telescopic tube. What is my part? Not to produce the sun. God moves the sun through the heavens; God arranges the line of light; but what I can do is, turn toward the light; and yet the sun helps me to adjust my telescope and I can direct my instrument. Suppose I adjust the lens but do not direct the instrument on the sun; then I have no light. Some men think that by furnishing the intellect they can produce sun in the telescope tube of the human spirit. It would be against all natural law to suppose that burnishing could make the sun shine in the spirit. We must adjust the lenses and turn with the sun; and that instant, and not till then, there does spring up in the soul the image of the Sun of Righteousness." And that is how we can see Jesus, who has passed into the heavenlies. It is only with the eye of the soul that we can see him. Once Moses essayed to see God with his natural eyes; when on Mount Sinai, alone with God, he said: "I beseech thee, show me thy glory." And God replied: "Thou canst not see my face; for there shall no man see me and live." But one must see God with the soul's eye in order to live.

Some day we shall see him face to face! (I. Cor. 13:12.)

Beautiful in Every Way

Dear Dr. Klopsch:

I received the Red Letter Morocco Bible. It is beautiful in every way. Accept my kindest thanks for the same. I will surely show it wherever I have an opportunity.

Courtland, Calif. A. C. OSTMAN.

Courtesy of the Sunday School Times

The British and American Sections of the International Sunday School Lesson Committee

From left to right, standing: Mr. T. G. Ackland (England), Secretary Foreign Missions and Statistics; Dr. Geo. W. Bailey (United States), Chairman Executive Committee, World's Sunday School Association; Mr. Marion Lawrance, General Secretary International Association; Mr. F. A. Wells, Treasurer International Association; Mr. E. K. Warren; Mr. W. N. Hartshorn, Chairman International Committee; Rev. A. Rowland, D.D., Chairman British Lesson Committee; Mr. A. B. McCrillis, Treasurer World's Association.

49; John 20:19-23; John 20:24-29; John 21:1-24; Matt. 28:16, 17; Matt. 28:18, 19; Mark 16:15-18; Mark 16:19; Luke 24:50-53; Acts 1:3-12. "Thus appearing unto them by the space of forty days, and speaking the things concerning the kingdom of God."

"Being assembled together with them," probably in some room in Jerusalem. There is a legendary location pointed out to-day as the place.

"Lord, dost thou at this time restore the kingdom to Israel?" The Jewish feeling was uppermost in the minds and hearts of the apostles. They had not yet received the baptism of the Holy Spirit, enabling them to be broader minded and larger hearted, that they might appreciate the length and the breadth of the kingdom of Christ, which was for the whole world, and not for Israel alone.

"It is not for you to know the times or seasons which the Father hath set within his own authority." Men have always been trying to pry into the future by fair means or foul, mostly foul, as by spiritualism. One of the greatest blessings that God gives to us is the mist that is before our eyes, hiding our future from us. To see our

5:42), and then they went throughout the land (Acts 8:4; 11:19). Philip preached in Samaria (Acts 8:5), Peter went as far as Babylon (I. Peter 5:13); Paul, it is thought, carried the Gospel as far as Spain. The commission given by Jesus has been fulfilled only in our generation, when the Gospel can be said to have been preached to "the uttermost part of the earth."

The Ascension

"When he had spoken these things, he was taken up," up from the place to which he had led them: Mount Olivet, over against Bethany, which must ever be one of the sacred spots of earth. As he ascended his hands were raised in blessing. A cloud was his chariot. And then they saw him no more, but stood earnestly gazing up into the sky, as though they would see him again. Dr. Parker says: "If your life is a life of faith in the Son of God, marked by, at all events, the desire to be Christlike, then you shall 'ascend.' All that drops away from you will be the flesh and the bones that have been a distress to you for many days. Your self, your liberated

*International Sunday School Lesson for January 3, 1909. The Ascension of our Lord. Acts 1:1-14. Golden Text: "And it came to pass, while he blessed them, he was parted from them, and carried up into heaven." Luke 24:51.

HOME JOYS AT CHRISTMAS TIME

The Christmas Markets

ONE of the prettiest sights in the world and one of the most familiar to those who live in the country is a flock of turkeys walking in tately pride across the summer fields. As every one is aware, there is a wild strain even in the domesticated turkey. The bird is hard to raise and requires the most careful tending on the part of the farmer or the farmer's wife. As a rule it is she who takes care of her turkeys along with the rest of her numerous family of young things that need watching and tending. A beautiful bronze turkey or a superb white one outrivals the peacock in its air of distinction. Fortunately for ourselves when last August we watched the progress of these beautiful American birds as they marched in procession day by day across the meadows, we thought little about the fate that awaited them, their destination being the Thanksgiving feast or the Christmas dinner. They may have had magnificent banquets in ancient Rome, and the monarchs of Persia may have been served with the best that their wealth could buy, but neither Persian despot, Roman Emperor, nor Solomon in all his glory had the gastronomic satisfaction of those who taste an American turkey fattened for an American table.

The Christmas markets are well worth a visit, if one be a stranger in the city, a little before the Christmas holidays. Town residents have seen the markets so often that the amazing amount of their provisions for the feeding of hungry thousands, and the beautiful order of their arrangement, have ceased to excite comment. Yet the uptown shops with their glitter of gold, silver and gems, the shimmer of their silks, the softness of their wools, the variety of their attractive display, are not in reality more interesting than the markets. As a rule, market men are hale and hearty, with a cheerful decision of manner and a cordial fashion of greeting that are peculiar to themselves. At this season the markets have sought contributions from the forests, and not only fowls, vegetables, meat, butter, eggs, cheese and products of every kind are in evidence, but there are wreaths of holly, garlands of fir and Christmas trees that have the clean scent and deep verdure of the woods whence they came. If ever the country clasps hands with the town, if ever we realize how dependent the city home is on the home of the farmer, if ever we understand how the railways ply unceasingly for the benefit of us all, it is when we stroll through the Christmas markets.

Kitchen Conveniences

The housewife would be less fatigued at the end of the day if she had in her kitchen conveniences for doing her work with ease. The number of steps that some women are obliged to take from the table to the sink and the sink to the pantry, if measured on the floor, would appal them. Often the place where the dishes are washed is in a poorly lighted corner while the sink is either too low or too high for the comfort of the woman who stands beside it. There are to be found to-day numerous small appliances that lighten the work of the household from the kneading of bread to the washing and ironing of clothes. Where cooking can be done on a gas range there is greater ease to muscles of arm and back than where coal is laboriously brought from the cellar to the kitchen, the scuttle requiring to be filled, a shovel full at a time, and then carried up a flight of stairs to the kitchen range. A woman who prizes her own strength as one of the assets that should stand her in stead for a long life will insist on having conveniences in her kitchen, although she may forego luxuries in other portions of the house. In homes where women do their own work, and the kitchen is sufficiently large, it is certainly better to make it much of the time a living room, just as our grandmothers did in days that were simpler as to the everyday management than those in which we are living at present.

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

What Do We Talk About?

WOMEN are constantly accused of limiting their ordinary conversation to housekeeping, dress, the management of children and the difficulty in these days of securing good help in the kitchen. Another subject which is prominent in the talk of friends when they meet is health or the want of it. "Who is your doctor?" "What remedies are you taking?" "Are you getting over your nervousness or is it getting the best of you?" "Why don't you try this course or that?" "What about the New Thought?" Possibly these latter topics have the right of way beyond the former ones that are surely feminine enough, and, on the whole, important enough to furnish good raw material to be woven into our common talk. What should we talk about indeed if not of ourselves, our neighbors, our children, or the course of events in the great world? The trouble is that the large majority of womankind gleans its knowledge of current events from a very cursory reading of the daily newspaper. The young girls have their civic clubs where they are supposed to give serious study to the politics of the globe, the behavior of the German Emperor, the versatility of the President, the conduct of affairs in the Philippines, and so on with variations. Occasionally a little conscientious study bearing fruit in intelligent comment goes on at these informal clubs, but the question of large hats or small, long skirts or short ones, and the trip of a friend to Europe or her staying at home may throw the club off the track and obliterate attention to the business in hand. Dear friends, let us talk about what we like to think about, avoiding only, so far as our neighbors are concerned, whatever is inquisitive or uncharitable. Let us be natural. Stills are the bane of conversation. House and the children are legitimate subjects, are they not?

A Plea for Our Boys in the Navy

A mother calls attention in a pathetic letter to what certainly seems a lack in Uncle Sam's management. She feels deeply and writes bitterly, for she has a boy who is one of the marines and who has gone forth to service with the fleet on far away waters. She says, "If my boy should be ill, there is no hospital ship attached to the fleet. Should he die his body would not be embalmed and brought home, but buried at sea." The thought of burial at sea is to her, as it would be to nearly every mother, a deeply distressing one. This mother complains that there is unjust discrimination between the officers and the men, and says that in her view the life of any lad who serves in our navy is valuable and precious to his home people, whether he be officer or marine. She is undoubtedly right in this statement. Yet there may be difficulties in the way which she does not comprehend. If any reader has a suggestion to make, we shall be glad to hear it. In fairness, it should be said that our battleships are provided with medical attendants, and that the sick are not neglected. The boys in the blue uniform, as we have often seen them, are a merry, rollicking set of fellows. Shore leave would seldom tempt them to desertion could they keep clear of that emissary of Satan, the saloon.

CHRISTMAS EVE MEMORIES

By ROSE C. WEBB

CHRISTMAS EVE! The clock strikes midnight,

Ere I lay me down to rest;
Little stockings filled, all ready,
And the tree in beauty dressed.
In their little beds my children,
Dream and smile the night away;
That mysterious night of all nights—
Which precedes our Christmas Day.

I remember well that evening,
When in our old home I met
Santa Claus in all his glory;
And I never shall forget
Those mysterious bags he opened,
And the gifts he passed around;
And how grieved I was that father
Could not anywhere be found.

Said Old Santa, "Here's a dolly!
For whichever little miss
Wants it most; and so is willing
Just to come and give me a kiss."

So I kiss him; lingering speechless
In Old Santa's fond embrace;
Wondering at what looked like flour,
Smeared all over beard and face.

Dear Old Santa! How the children
Over all this land to-night
Dream of thee; and what surprises
Wait the morning's rosy light!
There are those who fain would banish
Thee from out our homes; but how?
When we love thee so, Old Santa!
But I'm growing drowsy now.

Earthly cares and dreamland faces
All in sweet confusion rise;
Angel voices sweet are singing
Christmas anthems in the skies.
And the years are rolling backward,
With a noiseless, dreamy grace;
And again I kiss Old Santa,
With the flour still on his face.

MARCHING UNDER A CROSS OF FIRE

ONE of the strangest sights New York has witnessed in many a day was presented a few evenings ago, when 700 men and lads marched through the streets on the East Side, led by a standard-bearer who bore aloft in his strong arms a large white cross, from which radiated a stream of dazzling light. A brass band, in the van of the procession, played stirring hymn tunes and the seven hundred paraders marching behind took up the strain and sang "Onward, Christian Soldiers!" in perfect time and harmony and with a vigor that made them heard several blocks away.

The paraders had just come from a Gospel service in the old Church of St. George, in Stuyvesant Square, where the famous London preacher-evangelist, Rev. William J. Dawson, has been conducting special Advent mission services, with marked spiritual results. St. George's is an old, conservative Episcopal church, and among its members are some of the city's wealthiest and oldest families. Beside these descendants of the early New Yorkers one may occasionally find worshipping the day laborer, the mechanic, and the lame, halt and blind of the big parish, which reaches out into the heart of a populous section where there are many homes of poverty and suffering. There are large numbers within the parish boundaries who rarely if ever enter a church door, and to these it was decided to carry the Gospel in this spectacular form, in the hope of arousing their interest and getting them to church and possibly awakening them to the need of the Gospel in their daily lives.

The Procession of the "Fiery Cross"

In forming the parade column, Rev. Dr. Dawson and the rector, Rev. Hugh Birkhead, with assistant rectors, took their places at the head of the line. Next came the boys' choir, headed by band, and then the rank and file, marching fours, with military precision. Great crowds gathered along the route, which was through Sixteenth Street to Fourth Avenue, around Union Square, through Fourteenth Street to Second Avenue and back to the church.

As they filed past the cathedral, the church band played "Stand Up, Stand Up for Jesus!" while the whole band sang lustily and the great cross of fire, illuminated scores of incandescent electric lamps, kept alight by a store battery carried in the parade shot forth its brilliant rays, if to challenge the attention of the worldly, the pleasure seeker, the trifler and the different.

When the procession entered the church, the newcomers who had accepted the invitations scattered broadcast by the paraders were warmly welcomed. A stirring Gospel address was delivered by Dr. Dawson. This was followed by an after-meeting, at which several came forward and expressed a desire to begin a new life and enter the fold of the Christian Church.

Aunt Jerushy Marier's Christmas Present

"WHAT be you goin' tu du 'bout the rest of your Christmas presents this year?" sez I tu Sary Lizzy t'other day, as we sot a knittin' away fur deer life, she at a mitten, I at a sock, which we waz a-hurryin' tu finish a pair each fur a Christmas present fur Tommy and Celie Danfer, two poor little orphings a stayin' at their uncle's a short distance from here.

The uncle and also the aunt is very kind tu them, but they have a surprisin' number of little mouths to fill, havin' no less than ten young children under fourteen; and a fambly like that would satisfy the heart of even President Roosevelt (in number, I mean), 'specially if he had no more to feed them on than Tommy's and Celie's uncle has fur his'n.

"Well," sez she, "I waz a goin' tu consult with yu and see if yu could suggest sumthin'. I hain't got much money tu spare fur presents, and I'm not goin' tu give no foolish ones, nor give tu the whole town nyther, but there is a few people I du want tu have sumthin' for, if I can only manage it."

"Well," sez I, "I hain't got many dollars tu spend nyther, but I'm a plannin' tu make it go as fur as possible, and I'll tell yu jest what I'm a callin' tu du and see if yu don't think 'tis about the best investment we can strike. Fust and fo'most, there's Mary Ellen Louter whose a thinkin' tu git married somewhere about Christmas time. I want tu make her a little present and want it tu be sumthin' useful; so I'm jest a goin' tu kill two birds with one stone by makin' a weddin' present and Christmas present all in one, and fur it I'm a goin' tu git one of them beautiful Red Letter Bibles fur her, which THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is a givin' jest now as a premium.

"Then there's my fust cousin Jemmy a livin' way out in Manitobey, she doesn't have much readin' and besides they have growin' up girls, three of them, and four large boys a gittin' along in their teens and a workin' on a large farm a clearin' and plantin' and harvestin'. Of course they don't raly git very much time fur readin' so what they du have should be good, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD's a paper I ain't afraid tu put into anybody's hands. So I'm a goin' tu send the paper tu them fur the year. I'll git the paper and the Red Letter Bible fur the year fur three dollars and besides these there is an Art Gallery de Luxe. This extra fine Art Gallery is consistin' of six beautiful pictures, and them I'm a-goin' tu give two tu Cousin Jane Sibley and t'other four tu the Croton family—one fur old Mrs. Croton and the remainin' three fur the children.

"Then, there's another combination of Red Letter Testament, paper and picturs fur only two dollars. I'm goin' tu git that tu, and divide up as follers, namely, the Testament tu little Sally Perkins, who can read purty well but hasn't a Bible nor Testament.

"The paper I'm a-goin' tu send tu our old neighbor, Mrs. Grohan, who yu know moved down tu Newfoundland about two years ago. I'm sure she'll be glad tu have sech a visitor as that CHRISTIAN HERALD a comin' in every single week fur the year. They don't have much company, I guess, only a few neighbors and they air poor and don't take no papers, so she will have a chance tu lend them THE HERALD when she's done readin' it and 'twill du them all good. The picturs with this subscription I'm agoin' tu give tu Uncle John and Aunt Sophia.

"That'll be five dollars. Now, I waz a plannin' tu spend six dollar altogether but I'm a goin' tu add enough tu the other dollar tu pay on more subscription tu THE HERALD and that I'm a goin' tu send with two of the picturs tu that boy out in Injia that we've ben a sendin' tu school and a educatin' tu preach the Gospel. He's a git tin' along fine they say and a little stear of light like THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a comin' tu him week after week will keep him in touch with some things that'll be a help and inspiration tu him. And then when he's done with the papers he can pass them along to some of his friends and neighbors. The remainin' four picturs from the Art Gallery de Luxe I'm agoin' tu jes distribute around 'mong a few friends.

"I expect that's about all I can du this year and I know 'tisn't much."

"Well, Aunt Jerushy," sez Lizzy, sez she, "I hain't got quite as much money as yu air a goin' tu spend, but I believe I'll jest take what I have got and foller your example."

JERUSHY MARIER.

The Ascension of Our Lord

By Mrs. M. BAXTER

JESUS had called his little band of disciples—these poor, illiterate ones—to "go . . . into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." The very men who had forsaken him and fled in the hour of his apprehension, the very women who had followed him "afar off" received this commission to do a supernatural work. Was Jesus mocking them? Never; for he said, "All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth. Go ye, therefore (Matt. 28: 18, 19). That which cripples and paralyzes men and women of God is yielding to the temptation to look within for power, and then, in the consciousness of their incapacity, to say that the call of God is too great and too high for them.

These disciples had learned to know themselves. During the time of our Lord's agony, his trial, his death and resurrection, their love and service had been a miserable failure. Prayer had failed them in Gethsemane, their love for their Master had given way to the instinct of self-preservation, the most zealous among them had denied his Lord, the last remnant of self-dependence must have hidden its head in shame. Instead of the glad, exulting cry, "Lord, even the devils are subject unto us through thy name," they were now brought down, emptied, humbled to the dust. And only thus was it possible that they should be endued with power from on high. It was thus that they were ready to listen to the blessed teachings of their risen Lord. Knowing now how ignorant they were, they became apt to learn; knowing how their own power and zeal had completely broken down, they were ready to yield themselves entirely up to Another. Oh, how many seek the baptism of the Holy Ghost, thinking to obtain a consciousness of power which shall be at their disposal, under their command, and exercised by them for the work of God! But the very word "endued," or clothed upon, contains the idea of being under and within the power of God from on high, of man being subject to the Holy Ghost, at his disposal, at his command; not of the Holy Ghost being subject to man. The necessary qualification for being filled with the Holy Ghost is to be willing to be nothing; to be nothing even in the eyes of those who expect something of us.

The charge of Jesus was not a dying charge, but a parting one; and "when he had spoken these things, while they beheld, he was taken up; and a cloud received him out of their sight." He had led them to expect this. As long ago as when he was teaching in the synagogue in Capernaum, a full year before, he had said, "What and if ye shall see the Son of Man ascend up where he was before?" (John 6: 62). And it was this which Mary Magdalene was commissioned to announce to the disciples (John 20: 17).

They lost sight of him, but he had left them a precious assurance, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world" (Matt. 28: 20). But Jesus sent them a message. From that moment, the coming of the Lord has been the hope of the Church.

Pictures to Grace His Study Walls

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I thankfully acknowledge the receipt of the collection of Fine Art Pictures you have so kindly sent me. They are, to say the least, beautiful, taken from life, and extremely natural. They afford us real pleasure, and will always remind us of your generosity toward the subscribers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I will give them their proper places in my study.

Again thanking you for this loving token of your great and good heart, as also for the kindly compliments of the season, with heartfelt good wishes for the coming year, I am, etc.,

Nazareth, Pa.

D. KUNTZ.

THE LITTLE DOCTOR

Continued from page 1037

our happiness, whatever happens?" His sudden earnestness almost startled her, but she answered steadily: "I cannot tell what you mean, father, but you know I trust your judgment always."

Just then they arrived at the house and were summoned by Aunt Phoebe to dinner.

An animated discussion arose at the table in regard to Mrs. Hunter's family. In the course of the conversation, Aunt Phoebe spoke in high terms of young Mr. Verner, and his attentions to her on the day when he was driven into their home by the storm.

Squire Danforth mentioned casually that he expected the two young men to call the next morning, when Mrs. Langdon at once began planning for an elaborate luncheon, supposing that, of course, they would remain to partake of it.

The Squire told her at once that he expected only a call from them. Then he added, "Aunt Phoebe, when you are at leisure, I would like to see you in my study, to talk over some little matters before we begin the final preparations for our journey."

CHAPTER IV

THE interview between the Squire and Aunt Phoebe was unaccountably prolonged. Marian began to wonder what could have come over them, especially Aunt Phoebe, who usually retired early, that she should be willing to lose her rest for the sake of talking over a journey that she really cared so little about.

It was well for her that she could not overhear a single word of the conversation, although at times the old lady's tones waxed loud and stern.

"I tell you, James," she exclaimed, "it is your duty to explain this mystery before we depart. Who knows what may occur to either you or me? Suppose we should die. Then who would there be to see to this business but Marian? Why was I never told all this before?"

"Because it was not necessary. I did not think it best, and but for these unforeseen circumstances I should still have kept silence."

"Do you not trust me?" she almost screamed at him. "What have I ever done that you should fear to tell me your family affairs? Are not your interests my interests?"

"Yes, in a measure, I suppose they are; but still, the circumstances of this unhappy affair concern only my own immediate family."

"Well, I'll tell you what I think. If I trusted any friend as you do Mrs. Hunter, I should tell her my story."

"What!" he cried, "are you mad? Why should I trouble her with all this? She would only grieve for us, and what end would be served by it? I almost regret telling you already. Drop it from your mind and go to rest."

"Drop it from my mind, James Danforth! Why, it will be always in my mind now. Oh, poor Nellie! poor Nellie!" she repeated, as she accompanied the Squire back to the parlor, where Marian was impatiently awaiting their return.

"Why, Aunt Phoebe!" she exclaimed, "do you know how late it is? Eleven o'clock! What becomes of your old maxim, 'Early to bed and early to rise?'"

"Oh, well, child, never mind for this time; it is not often that James and I talk over old times as we did to-night."

"Old times! why, I supposed you were talking over present times, and perhaps trying to frighten father, as you tried to frighten me, by your pictures of the horrors of seasickness."

"No, no; I did not think of seasickness at all to-night; there are things much worse than seasickness."

A quick glance from the Squire caused her to finish her sentence by saying hurriedly: "But we are in happy circumstances, are we not, dear? Come, let us go to rest. Good night, James. Come, Marian, come."

Long after they had both retired, Marian was awakened by sounds from her aunt's room, which adjoined her own. At last, she arose and tapped lightly on the door. Hearing no answer, she entered and was shocked to see the old lady, who had evidently not undressed nor gone to bed at all, pacing the floor, the picture of distress.

"Why, auntie," she said, "why are you not in bed? Are you ill?"

To be continued

A MAGIC CALENDAR*

Good will and good cheer
For each day in the year.

A CALENDAR has come to our attention that calls forth our instant and unanimous appreciation and warmest praise. This is the Keep Sweet Calendar, just published by the Tullar-Meredith Company. The unique arrangement as well as the rich contents of this Calendar and Year Book lift it at once out of the ordinary class of short-lived, though often costly, Christmas novelties put on the market at this season. Securely pasted on a large mount of art cardboard is a most attractive pamphlet measuring some 5 1/4 x 3 1/2 inches, which is fairly bursting and running over with good things. Every right-hand page marks a week and is neatly ruled off into seven sections, with the days of the month printed in large red numerals. Below each date is a Scriptural reference, and opposite this is the Key Thought for the day; quotations that are trite sayings and sparkling inspirations from the master works of a long succession of poets, philosophers and thinkers. So wisely and well have these quotations been chosen that the irresistible influence of those magic words, "Keep Sweet," pervades every page.

*Keep Sweet Calendars—size 11 1/4 x 14 1/4 inches—may be had from the Tullar-Meredith Publishing Company, 150 Fifth Avenue, New York, and will be sent postpaid and securely packed upon receipt of 50 cents in stamps or coin.

On every left-hand page in this compact little volume is a hymn—aggregating fifty-three in all—with words and music, and printed in a way that fairly makes one want to sing and play them. Around the art mount for the Calendar and Year Book is an artistic border design charmingly executed in two colors; and, by an ingenious device, a large green leaf on the one side and the red petal of a flower on the other are so cut that they hold open the pamphlet at any desired place. Across the top runs in bold letters the wholesome motto, "Keep Sweet," while below the small volume is clearly printed in full the famous "Keep Sweet" hymn composed by Grant Colfax Tullar, and which has met with such tremendous success wherever sung. Finally, on the back of the calendar pad is a brief but worth-while sermon by Mr. Tullar on the same theme.

A generous bow of red-and-green Christmas ribbon at the top allows one to hang the Calendar where all may see and catch the inspiration of its golden text, "Keep Sweet." "The potent suggestiveness of these two words," writes Mr. Tullar, "exerts everywhere a cheerful influence that is not only external but internal and eternal;"—and we are strongly inclined to agree with him; for, wherever in these offices the calendar has been hung for a few days, or even for a few hours, the contagion of good will and good cheer has quickly spread.

If your rugs are dirty, DIRTY through and through, send them to a cleaner. But if they are only dull from dust and soot settling upon the surface, use Ivory Soap. It will make them look like new.

DIRECTIONS.—First, thoroughly sweep, or better still, beat and shake the rug until all dust is removed. Make a stiff lather of Ivory Soap and warm water (one-half cake of Ivory will make a bucket of lather) and scrub the rug with this lather. Wipe with a clean, damp sponge. Do not use much water.

Ivory Soap
99 1/100 Per Cent. Pure

SAFETY 6% PROFIT

Why Shouldn't You Get the Benefit of the Full Earning Power of Your Savings—

especially if it can be done without the sacrifice of safety? You shouldn't sacrifice safety under any condition.

This Company issues
Certificates of Deposit

running for 2 years and bearing 6 per cent. interest. They are backed by first mortgages on improved real estate and are absolutely sound and secure.

On Savings Accounts, withdrawable on demand, we pay 5 per cent.

Write for Booklet giving full information.

Calvert Mortgage & Deposit Co.
1046 Calvert Bldg., Baltimore, Md.

LANGUAGE OF FLOWERS

POST CARDS FREE TO YOU

In order to introduce our large illustrated monthly, THE WOMAN'S WORLD which is of interest to every member of the family, we make this big offer to you.

Send 10c for a special five months' trial subscription and we will send you, prepaid, twelve beautiful flower post cards absolutely FREE. These cards are strictly high-class and are something entirely new. Each card represents a scenic view and has The Language of the Flowers worked out most beautifully in mottoes in flower designs. For instance, in this series the Violet spells out the word "Faithfulness," Sweet Peas, "Wish You Joy," Chrysanthemums, "I Love You," Roses, "Love," etc. You won't be disappointed, for these cards are not like any you ever saw, and remember, we have a surprise for every one that sends for these cards. There are only a limited number, so send today if you want them.

WOMAN'S WORLD, Card Dept. 25, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS

SEYBOLD REED-PIPE ORGAN

Style No. 125. 2 Octaves. Dark Golden Oak. Standard Patent Reed-Pipe Action. Expressions of harmonious, melodious and grand music. Height, 40 in.; Width, 18 in.; Depth, 12 in. Blows by hand or foot. Catalog of tone-manual and combination, and complete list of accessories and organs FREE. Send for it now.

Seybold Piano and Organ Company,
213 River Street, Elgin, Ill.

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"

Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set

AGENTS

AT 10c PER SET
You can make money selling this 7-piece kitchen set. It is a complete set of kitchen utensils, including a knife, fork, spoon, butter knife, and a set of spoons. It is a beautiful set and sells at a profit of 100%.

THOMAS MFG. CO.
300 Home Bldg.
Dayton, Ohio

Books Received

The Red Skull. By Fergus Hume. A story of mystery and adventure. Illustrated by Louise Rogers. Cloth covers. Pp. 319. Price $1.50. Dodge Publishing Company, New York.

Man's Day, by Philip Mauro. A work of sermon-essays. Cloth binding. Pp. 267. Price $1. The Patmos Letters, Applied to Modern Christendom, by J. L. Campbell, D.D. Decorated cloth binding; illustrated. Pp. 208. Price $1.25. The above two books are published by the Gospel Publishing House, New York, and Morgan & Scott, Ltd., London.

Long Life and How to Attain It, by Pearce Kintzing, M.D. Cloth covers. Pp. 285. Price $1. The Lure of the City, a book for young men, by David James Burrell, D.D., LL.D. Cloth covers. Pp. 284. Price $1.00. Mind, Religion and Health, with an appreciation of the Emmanuel movement, by Rev. Robert MacDonald. Cloth covers. Pp. 368. Price $1.30. The above three books are published by Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York.

The Legalized Outlaw, by Samuel R. Artman, Judge of the Twentieth Judicial Circuit of Indiana. Published by the author. In this little book, the student of the so-called temperance question may find condensed statements of arguments and decisions in many cases of saloon prosecution in the State of Indiana. For seven years the author has been industriously gathering statistics upon this subject. He believes the saloon license of Indiana to be unconstitutional, and presumably that of every other State which has one at all. To prove his contention, he adduces case after case in which the contradictory statements of the judges certainly give strong support to his opinion. He makes the saloon a thorough "outlaw."

Vapo-Cresolene
(ESTABLISHED 1879)
for Whooping Cough, Croup, Sore Throat, Coughs, Bronchitis, Colds, Diphtheria, Catarrh.

"Used while you sleep."

Diphtheria, Catarrh.

Vaporized Cresolene stops the paroxysms of Whooping Cough. Ever dreaded Croup cannot exist where Cresolene is used.

It acts directly on the nose and throat, making breathing easy in the case of colds; soothes the sore throat and stops the cough.

Cresolene is a powerful germicide, acting both as a curative and preventive in contagious diseases.

It is a boon to sufferers from Asthma.

Cresolene's best recommendation is its 30 years of successful use.

For Sale By All Druggists.

Send Postal for Descriptive Booklet.

THE VAPO-CRESOLENE CO., 180 Fulton St., New York
Leeming-Miles Building, Montreal, Canada.

Gipsy Smith, Campbell Morgan, A. C. Dixon
Cork, Moorehead, Moule, Steidle, Trotter, Mullins, Gray, Mott, Torrey, Orr, Erdman and Speer are among those whose addresses have recently appeared in our Three Months Trial 25 Cts
CHRISTIAN WORKER'S MAGAZINE
For a copy $1 a year. Practical Bible courses, helpful articles on Bible themes, methods of work, and deeper Christian life, reports from evangelists, practical and inspiring suggestions, world news at a glance, notes and letters from our subscribers and others. Nothing like it in the country. SPECIAL—From now thro' Dec. 1919 for $1. THE INSTITUTE TIE, 80 Institute Place, Chicago, Ill.

THE FAMOUS EVANGELIST'S NEW HYMN BOOK

GIPSY SMITH
Edition of
NEW AND OLD
HALLOWED HYMNS
By I. ALLAN SANKEY
35c. a copy, postpaid. $25 per 100
Returnable Sample mailed to Pastors, etc.
THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO.,
CHICAGO NEW YORK

50 ENGRAVED CARDS OF YOUR NAME $1.00
IN CORRECT SCRIPT, INCLUDING PLATE
THE QUALITY MUST PLEASE YOU OR YOUR MONEY REFUNDED

SOCIAL STATIONERS HOSKINS PHILA.
905 CHESTNUT ST.

Angel's Lullaby: "Only Asleep"

One of the sweetest songs ever written. Ideal for Church or Home. Bring this advertisement to the notice of your churchmaster or clergyman. SENT POSTPAID FOR 25 CENTS (Silver). The Bright-Hayford Co., Minneapolis, Minn.

LADIES We will mail you, postpaid, three beautiful EMBROIDERED COLLARS for $1.00.

LIFE OF PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT, splendidly bound in cloth, sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00. The Unexcelled Novelty Co., 399 Clinton St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

PATENTS THAT PROTECT
Our 18 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 6 cts. stamps
R. S. & A. B. LACEY Rooms 20-30 Pacific Bldg., Wash., D.C.

25 RICH Colored POSTALS 10c

Illustrations of famous historical figures, landscapes, and scenes. Each set includes a booklet of 25 postals. Price 10c. The Unexcelled Novelty Co., 399 Clinton St., Brooklyn, N.Y.

"ASTRONOMY AND BIBLE COURSE", Cloth Book, $1. Write Pres. C. J. Burton, Ph.D., Oskaloosa, Iowa.

THE PEOPLE'S HISTORY

SINCE Ridpath's History of the World was first introduced to the American public, it has won for itself such a remarkable and well-deserved popularity that it may fairly be regarded as the premier History of the great reading public of this country. It is now to be found not only in colleges and libraries everywhere, but in a steadily increasing multitude of American homes, where it is looked upon as the standard source of information on all subjects historical and biographical. Thousands of writers, teachers, students and professional men have tested its value and found it both comprehensive and accurate. The appreciation of American readers is duplicated in other lands, for there is probably not a civilized community in the world where Ridpath's History is not accorded the first place as a popular source of information.

Dr. Ridpath was a born historian, and more—he had a wonderful talent for narrative, which enabled him to present, in the most pleasing and attractive literary form, a thousand things that would suffer at the hands of a less talented and versatile author. In this consists much of the peculiar charm of Ridpath's History, which is one that all classes can thoroughly understand, appreciate and enjoy. The great men and women of all the ages, and in all lands, are seen in these pages, pictured with rare literary fidelity; the great events in war, statesmanship, adventure, science and invention are fully described; the judgment is that of a trained and impartial mind, competent to grasp the thousand problems history presents. There is not a nation since the world began whose records cannot be found carefully set forth in these comprehensive and scholarly volumes. They are a perfect library of information, combining all the past has given us in the various fields of human activity.

It is not difficult, when one has become familiar with Dr. Ridpath's work, to understand the secret of his popularity as a historian. He leaves no vital thing untouched. The presentation in all cases is complete, picturesque, entertaining, instructive—a mine of information for those who would be classed in the category of the well-read and intelligent. To American readers he has given his best efforts, and has lovingly expended upon the history of our own country the most painstaking research, with the happiest and most complete results.

Dr. Ridpath was an ordained minister of the Gospel. In all of his work there is the recognition of that Divine hand which guides the world. Wherever this History is read it cannot fail to have a powerful influence, not simply educational, but moral and spiritual as well. The History of the World has been warmly commended by our leading college professors, preachers and teachers, and by thousands of those who are foremost in all that makes for human progress and enlightenment. We cannot commend it too highly as a work that deserves a permanent place in every American home.

Tunneling Great Mountains

AMONG the world's greatest electrical projects at the present time, there is probably none vaster in extent or more interesting, especially to Americans, than the electrical work now going on in connection with the Pacific coast extension of the St. Paul road. In this great undertaking more than $100,000,000 is being expended. No promoter or land agent is needed, so rich are the natural resources, in timber especially. The St. Paul management has been given assurance that not less than 50,000 carloads of timber will be given it the first year after the work is completed.

This new transcontinental line will stretch from Chicago and the Twin Cities by the way of Butte, Mont., to Seattle and Tacoma, Wash. There is perhaps nothing to equal the thoroughness with which it is being constructed. Over the eight hundred miles of mountain stretches, electricity is to be used as the motive power, and the engines will be 200-ton electric motors. The Bitter Root Mountain streams will furnish abundant power for all of the electric motors needed for trains over the mountain division. These streams are to be harnessed at the cost of millions. Through the mountain range a tunnel 8,750 feet long is being constructed by electrical power, and through it will be operated trains hauled by motors. One end of this tunnel will open in Montana and the other in Idaho, and its grade will nowhere exceed .02 of one per cent.

Work on the west end of the road between Butte and Seattle is nearly finished on some divisions, but the long tunnels and heavy fills are still under construction. Rails are now laid in five different sections, but the track is not continuous for more than 120 miles. The tunnel will cost probably $75,000 a mile. It is the largest engineering enterprise of its kind, and the work as a whole is regarded by experts as a marvel in the annals of railway construction.

THE WISE MEN

BY JOHN M. MORSE.

LO! the starry heavens o'er us
Ever tell God's wondrous love:
Worlds on worlds spread out before us

Speak His message from above.
See! another star is shining,

With a radiance all its own:
All its brilliant rays combining,
Peerless, there it shines alone!

CHORUS.

Let us follow where it guides us,
Follow, though it guide afar:
O'er the mountains and the valleys
That shall be our guiding star.

Matchless glory is impelling—
As a bird on swiftest wing.
Let us haste! that star is telling
Where to find the new-born King!
Hear the voice of God, commanding—
"Let no foe your progress stem."
Onward! See! the star is standing
O'er the plains of Bethlehem.

CHORUS.

Now our search is almost ended,
We will worship at His feet.
By our gifts, our souls commended,
'Tis with joy this King we greet.
Now the journey ends in glory!
Down before that Child we fall.
Oh, the wondrous, wondrous story,
Bethlehem's Babe is Lord of all!

CHORUS.

Let us follow where He guides us,
Follow, though He guide afar:
O'er the mountains and the valleys
Christ shall be our guiding star.
Passaic, N. J.

Delighted with the Premiums

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have renewed my own subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and also had one sent to my nephew at Yonkers. We are both delighted with our book premiums. With prayers and best wishes for you and all connected with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, AGNES LOWE ELLIS.
New York City.

On Every Dollar

of your savings or surplus, every day while in our care, subject to your withdrawal upon short notice at any time without loss of earnings of a single day. No safer security than our mortgage loan upon New York and Suburban Real Estate. Always subject to your control; always certain and prompt payments.

Under Supervision of
New York Banking Department.

Est. 16 Years. Assets, $1,800,000

Write us for full particulars.

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.,
2 Times Building, New York

The Metropolitan Training School for Nurses

Blackwell's Island, N. Y.

Offers a three-years' course of training. Applicants must be over 21 and under 35 years of age, and have had one year in high school or its equivalent. The school is registered and connected with a hospital of over 1,300 beds. An allowance is made for current expenses as follows: $10.00 per month the first year, $12.00 the second, and $15.00 the third. Classes are formed every two months. The new Nurses Home is located on one of the finest sites in New York City. The rooms are all single, with spacious entrance hall, library and sitting-rooms.

AGNES R. WARD, R.N.
Superintendent.

A Fine Lyon & Healy Organ, $1.00 a Week

Think of the pleasure and satisfaction you would get from owning one of these beautiful instruments. Possess a far sweeter tone quality than other makes, as countless testimonials received during the past 45 years amply attest. Write for our new illustrated catalog today.

LYON & HEALY,
70 Adams Street, Chicago

FOWLER'S FLORIMEL LOTION

gives a clear, fresh, youthful complexion; banishes redness, roughness, tan and sunburn; quickly heals chapped hands, face and lips. Its purifying and emollient properties make the skin exquisitely soft, smooth, white, and in its natural healthy condition. A fragrant, enjoyable toilet necessity of felicitous combination, appearance and quality, giving pleasing results and rare satisfaction. Ask for it, and take no substitute. There is nothing "just as good." Artistic booklet and generous sized sample bottle free by mail. Address FOWLER, Manufacturing Chemist, New London, Conn.

PARKER'S Arctic Socks

Registered in U. S. Patent Office.
Healthful for bed-chamber, bath and sick room. Worn in rubber boots, absorb perspiration. Made of knitted fabric, lined with soft white wool fleece. Sold in all sizes by dealers or by mail, 25c a pair. Parker pays postage.

Catalogue free. Look for Parker's name in every pair.
J. H. PARKER CO., DEPT. K 25 JAMES STREET, MALDEN, MASS

Better Bred Birds

Your choice from 100 strains, the paying kind. Bred from prize winners. Booklet on "Proper Care and Feeding of Chickens, Ducks and Turkeys." 10c; Poultry Paper, 1 year, 10c, Catalog Free.

ROYAL POULTRY FARM
Dept. 237, Des Moines, Iowa

DEATH TO HEAVES Guaranteed
NEWTON'S Heave, Cough, Distemper and Indigestion Remedy. A veterinary remedy for wind, throat and stomach troubles. Strongly recommended. $1.00 per can, of dealers, or exp. prepaid, The Newton Remedy Co. Toledo, Ohio.

WEDDING INVITATIONS

100 for $3.50
Announcements, etc. engraved & printed
Latest styles, best quality, sent prepaid anywhere.
Visiting Cards 100 doz. with case 75c. Monogram stationery. Write for samples.
The Estabrook Press, 27 Head Bldg., Tremont St., Boston, Mass
High Grade Post Cards, Historic, Marine, etc. 100 assorted $1.00

AGENTS Portraits 35c, Frames 15c.
sheet pictures 1c, stereoscopes 25c.
views 1c. 30 days' credit. Samples and Catalog FREE.
Consolidated Portrait Co. 290-155 West Adams St., Chicago

* Young People's Societies *

Revelations of God*

WELL said the poet:

More things are wrought by prayer
Than this world dreams of.

Too many of us think of prayer sorrowfully, selfishly. We are apt to feel that its chief use is to get the earthly blessings that we most need.

It is true that we should go to God as children to their father, and children will naturally tell their father their longings and desires; but the truest result of honest, loving prayer must ever be spiritual. As association with noble men and women insensibly elevates and refines, far more does the association with God in humble prayer elevate and refine him who prays.

A part of this elevation is felt in the gaining of the fine quality of courage. Even Christ, in the midst of his most successful work, felt the need of more strength and courage. He had sailed many. He had cast out devils. Crowds were following him. He must have been weary, but he was not too weary to rise very early, and go into a solitary place to pray. Then he was able to go forward. He seemed to rise once upon the coming of Simon, ready again to preach and to heal. Courage, humility, patience, gentleness, love—all the perfections with which we have been taught to invest divinity—must come, in some measure, to him who lingers prayerfully in God's presence; and growth in such virtues is the sweetest and finest consequence of prayer.

Regular prayer is good. Our lives must generally be governed by routine, and we must introduce into that routine times for prayer. As we make up our New Year schedule, let us increase the number and length of such times. But there is no need to confine our prayers to set times. God always hears. In the moment of temptation, cry to him. On the train, on the boat, wherever you can in thought isolate yourself, pray.

Gipsy Smith tells us that during his strenuous South African mission, he was often too tired at night to pray. Then, he said, Satan was ever on the watch to whisper to him, "Where is your joy now? Why don't you shout? Your happiness is all gone." The tempter was intimating that such religion could not be very deep, but the godly preacher would reply, "I cannot pray. Christ understands. I am in his care and no one can pluck me out of his hands." It was the result of an attitude of constant prayer, in which one may come to feel that one is close beside the mercy-seat, even when the lips are too weary to utter words of prayer.

Tennyson is reported to have said: "Prayer is like the opening of a sluice-gate between the great ocean and our little channel, when the great sea gathers itself together and flows in at full tide." This is a beautiful simile. If "our little channels" are low or dry, it is because we are not opening the sluice-gates of prayer, and letting in God's greatness.

One of the resolutions of Jonathan Edwards was: "Resolved, never to count that a prayer which is so made that I cannot hope that God will answer it." This is a plea for faith, for the "effectual, fervent prayer" of which James writes, and without which we have no right to expect a revelation of God.

Dr. Worcester tells us that a great English newspaper has recently advised sufferers from insomnia to engage in prayer. The passive, receptive attitude into which the mind naturally falls during honest prayer is, indeed, soothing and quieting. It has a therapeutic value which has probably never been fully realized since apostolic days.

Noble Purposes*

IT IS the time of the year when we turn a page. The date changes; we have come, as it were, to an epoch in our little lives; and it is fitting that our souls keep step with the march of events. Therefore the New Year's Day has become the period of resolutions, or, as we might call them, resolutions in character. There should be such a time. It is good for the soul, when it sees the path it ought to travel, and yet does not wish to travel, to say to itself, "I will go that way, God helping me." And New Year's Day is a good time to say it.

Many great sermons have been preached upon the subject of translating resolution into life. Too many people imagine that when the resolve has been made the battle is substantially over. Really it has only begun, and it will last throughout all time. In every little outer act, the deep inner change must show itself. When this is so, a life will be, as a great man has said, "full of music, full of God, a sermon unanswerable."

It is a comfort to the honest soul that God judges us by our purposes, in spite of the terrible proverb that good intentions pave the way to the kingdom of darkness. Men look on the outside, but God seeth not as man seeth; he looketh on the heart. Provided we have done our best, he counts not against us our failure in the battle. Browning has written:

'Tis not what man does that exalts him,
But what man would do.

And, again,

What I aspired to be,
And was not, comforts me.

In his Child Harold we have, in an allegory, a character which may well stand for a dauntless soul in pursuit of its object, the fulfillment of its high dream, "pursued," says Dr. King, "with enthusiasm and confidence even after hope has died; after companions have been defeated and have perished; pursued still alone when

Just to fail as they, seemed best,
And all the doubt was now—should I be fit?"

The early Christians were very hard upon those who failed to live up to their vows. One failure might be condoned, one penitence was accepted, but one only. The Shepherd of Hermas teaches that the gravest sin may be forgiven a Christian, but that a second offense is well-nigh fatal; and this in the face of the Gospel direction to forgive seventy times seven grievances. If man can forgive so many, how many can God forgive?

But any resolution made in the strength of the flesh alone will almost surely fail, while "one with God" is the majority which will win in the conflict. Henry Drummond tells a story of a man who had given way to a passion for strong drink, and whom he was trying to reform.

"Suppose," he said, "that you were on the box, and your horses ran down hill, and you lost all control over them, what would you do?"

"Oh," replied the man, "I could do nothing."

"But suppose there were someone beside you, stronger than yourself, who could control them."

"Then I would hand him the reins, sir."

"Your appetite is running away with you," pleaded Drummond; "your own strength cannot control it; but there is one beside you who can. What will you do?"

Then the spirit of conviction is said to have seized upon the man, and he broke down and cried, "Sir, I will give him the reins."

It is only by giving to God the reins of our lives that we can keep our resolutions.

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor for Sunday, January 3, 1909. Texts: Acts 11: 19-23; Josh. 24: 14-25. (Consecration meeting.)

Early Morning Comfort

Open your sleeping-room windows—let in the crisp fresh air—what matters it if your room does get cold—you will sleep better and feel brighter in the morning. But your room need not be cold while dressing—a touch of a match and the welcome heat is radiating from the

PERFECTION Oil Heater

(Equipped with Smokeless Device)

The Automatic Smokeless Device prevents all smoke and smell and makes it impossible to turn the wick too high or too low.

Cleaned in a minute—burns 9 hours with one filling. Finished in Nickel or Japan. Every heater guaranteed.

The Rayo Lamp is the safest and best lamp for all-round household use. It is equipped with the latest improved central draft burner—gives a bright light at small cost. Absolutely safe. All parts easily cleaned. Made of brass throughout and nickel plated. Every lamp warranted. If you cannot get the Rayo Lamp and Perfection Heater from your dealer, write to our nearest agency.

STANDARD OIL COMPANY (Incorporated)

SUN PASTE STOVE POLISH

MAKES OLD STOVES LOOK LIKE NEW

It produces the most beautiful black lustre, with little labor and absolutely no dust. It is the best in the world; TRY IT AND BE CONVINCED. Put up in large boxes, filled full, ready mixed for use. We recommend it as far superior to any other paste stove polish on the market. It can be applied with a wet cloth, and polished quickly with a dry woolen cloth or brush, it is a labor saver; polishes with a brilliant lustre, which gives great satisfaction.

Made by MORSE BROTHERS, Proprietors RISING SUN Stove Polish, Canton, Mass., U.S.A.

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure

The money made selling our Shears and other useful patented articles antedated agents. V.C. Giebert, 1012 O. and 22 pairs of Posture Tension Shears to 3 hours, made $10.00. We guarantee to show ANYONE HOW TO MAKE $10.00 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents that are not found in stores, than any other house in the U.S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Postal will do. Address Thomas Mfg. Co., 125 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

THE "BEST" LIGHT

MAKES it possible for everyone to own their own light works. Better than electricity—less expensive. If you can afford kerosene lamps you can afford the "Best" Light. Full guarantee. Over 300 styles. Catalog free. Agents wanted Write. THE BEST LIGHT CO. 3-70 E. 5th St., Canton, O.

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Built strong chicken-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue free. COILED SPRING FENCE CO., Box 11 Winchester, Indiana.

Print Your Own Cards, circulars, book, newspaper Press—$5. Larger $15. Save money. Print for others, big profit. All easy rules sent. Write factory for press catalog, type, paper, etc. THE PRESS CO. Meriden, Connecticut.

Memory the Basis of All Knowledge

Stop forgetting You are no greater intellectually than your memory. Easy, increases income; arrests memory failures; names, business, studies, conversation; develops will, public speaking. Write today. DICKSON MEMORY SCHOOL, 701 Auditorium Bldg., Chicago

"Jubilee Year" of Page Fence

Page Fence is woven just the same today as 25 years ago. A real tie knot—not a simple twist! Page Fence is made of High Carbon Steel of double the tensile strength and elasticity of common fence wire. Page Catalog—Jubilee Edition—SENT FREE! Box 13/X. Page Woven Wire Fence Co., Adrian, Michigan 15 CENTS A ROD For a 22-inch Hog Fence; 27c for 40-inch Farm Fence; 37c for 48-inch Building Fence. Sold on 30 days free trial. Orders paid and shipped. Catalog free. Write for it today. KITSILMAN BROS. Box 297 MUNCIE, INDIANA.

BLYMNER BELL CHURCH BELLS. UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICES. SUBSCRIPTIONS BELLS WENT. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

YOU CAN AFFORD

to have a new Song Book in your Church or Sunday School, and one for every person when you can get "FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL" for $3 for 100. Words and music, $3 very best songs. Sample copy 5 Cents. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, January 3, 1909. Texts: Mark 1: 35; Acts 10: 9.

ADVANCE OF THE GRAND ARMY

NAPOLÉON'S NAME fills more pages in the world's solemn history than that of any other mortal. The advance of his Grand Army from Russia is the turning-point in his career and marks the beginning of his downfall. The picture shown herewith, from Ridpath's History, the original of which was displayed at the World's Fair at Chicago, marks but one event out of thousands which are fully described and illustrated in the world-famed publication

Ridpath's History of the World

THE PUBLISHER'S FAILURE placed in our hands the entire unsold edition of this monumental work. BRAND NEW, down to date, beautifully bound in Half-Morocco, which we must sell immediately. We are offering the remaining sets

At LESS than even damaged sets were ever sold

We will name our price only in direct letters to those sending the coupon below. Tear off the coupon, write name and address plainly and mail now before you forget it. Dr. Ridpath's family derive their income from his History, and to print our price broadcast for the sake of more quickly selling these few sets would cause great injury to future sales. Send Coupon To-day.

The Christian Herald says:

"Ridpath's History of the World may be regarded as a complete library in itself. No other work of its kind has ever supplied a History so well suited to the needs of all classes and conditions of men. We mark the marvelous influence of Christianity upon the world's progress. He would be a blind reader of history indeed who did not discern, throughout all, the influence of a great Omnipotent hand, guiding and developing all things. We cheerfully commend this most popular and complete of all world histories to our readers. These nine handsomely bound volumes will make the very best nucleus for a family library, and will be a potent educator of the young and a mine of valuable information for readers of all ages."

9 Massive Octavo
Volumes
4,000 Pages
2,000 Illustrations

RIDPATH'S enviable position as an historian is due to his wonderfully beautiful style, a style no other historian has ever equaled. He pictures the great historical events as though they were happening before your eyes; he carries you with him to see the battles of old; to meet kings and queens and warriors; to sit in the Roman senate; to march against Saladin and his dark-skinned followers; to sail the southern seas with Drake; to circumnavigate the globe with Magellan; to watch that thin line of Greek spearman work havoc with the Persian hordes on the field of Marathon; to know Napoleon as you know Roosevelt.

RIDPATH in your home means you need never spend a lonely evening. You can associate with the world's heroes; you can cross the Rubicon with Cæsar, after which Rome was free no more. You can sit at the feet of Socrates, the loftiest genius of the ancient world. You can kneel at the shrine of Lincoln, "the greatest character of all time, the gentlest memory of our world." It is ennobling to commune with these children of destiny. To be associated with great men is to be great one's self, and you will add to your store of knowledge which is power, and to the richness of your life.

Send Coupon To-day

RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence; of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendor; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written by man.

RIDPATH throws the mantle of personality over the old heroes of history. Alexander is there—patriot, warrior, statesman, diplomat, crowning the glory of Grecian history. Xerxes, from his mountain platform, sees Themistocles, with three hundred and fifty Greek ships, smash his Persian fleet of over a thousand sail, and help to mould the language in which this paragraph is written. Rome perches Nero upon the greatest throne on earth, and so sets up a poor madman's name to stand for countless centuries as the synonym of savage cruelty; Napoleon fights Waterloo again under your very eyes, and reels before the iron fact that at last the end of his gilded dream has come. Bismarck is there—gruff, overbearing, a giant pugilist in the diplomatic ring, laughing with grim disdain at France, which says "You shall not." Washington is there, "four-square to all the winds," grave, thoughtful, proof against the wiles of British strategy and the poisoned darts of false friends; clear-seeing over the heads of his fellow-countrymen, and on into another century—the most colossal world-figure of his time!

200,000 Americans Own and Love Ridpath!

$1
Brings
Complete
Set.
Balance
Small Sums
Monthly

12
25-08

FREE COUPON

WESTERN NEWSPAPER
ASSOCIATION

Christian Herald Bureau
204 Dearborn St., Chicago

Please mail, without cost to me, complete set of Ridpath's History of the World, containing photographs of Napoleon and Queen Elizabeth, engraving of Socrates, Cæsar and Shakespeare, map of China, and 11 maps, diagram of Panama Canal, and write the full particulars of your special offer to The Christian Herald readers.

NAME.....

ADDRESS.....

No letter necessary. Just sign Coupon, or copy on Postal and mail.
THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

CHRISTIAN HERALD

Copyright, 1908, by Louis Klopsch

$1.50 A YEAR — 5c. A COPY
PUBLISHED 52 TIMES A YEAR

NEW YORK, DECEMBER 30, 1908

VOLUME 31 — NUMBER 53
OFFICES: BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

Copyright, 1888, by Fishel, Adler and Schwartz

See page 1052

SITTING OUT THE OLD YEAR

Our Wonderful Art Gallery De Luxe

The Opinion of Three Art Critics

TWO well-known miniature painters of the Philadelphia Academy of Fine Arts, upon seeing our Art Gallery De Luxe, agreed that the pictures were the finest reproductions of canvas oil paintings they had ever seen. Another connoisseur of art, and a noted clergyman, who had studied the originals of two of our masterpieces in the art galleries abroad, assured us that the reproductions were almost perfect and the finest he had ever seen. All three critics expressed the greatest surprise that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD could give such a costly and rare collection of pictures as a premium absolutely FREE.

Worth a Hundred Times its Value

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I write to express my gratification on receipt of the beautiful pictures you are sending as a premium with THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I am sure I voice the sentiment of every CHRISTIAN HERALD reader in saying that it is worth a hundred times its value in good literature alone, and, with the beautiful pictures, this year should find its way into many new homes. W. JAY MEILY.
Mechanicsburg, Pa.

Better and More Interesting Every Year

Dear Editor: Accept my thanks for the lovely Art Pictures of your Art Gallery De Luxe. They are all beauties, every one of them, and I cannot understand how you can afford to give such beautiful premiums as you do. Your paper grows better and more interesting every year, and I wish every family in the land would take it. MRS. O. ROBBINS.
Warren, Ill.

An Ornament to Any Home

Mr. Klopsch, Dear Friend: The very beautiful pictures have reached me in good condition, and your Art Gallery De Luxe is an ornament to any home. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is not only a welcome visitor in our home every week, but we prize it more and more each year. Cortland, N. Y. A. M. WATERBURY.

WHAT OTHERS SAY OF IT!

Extracts Chosen at Random From the Hundreds of Letters Received Every Day in Appreciation of "Christian Herald" Premiums

As Usual, Better Than Advertised

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Many thanks for the beautiful premiums we received from our dear friend, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. As usual, both the book and premiums exceed our expectations. C. F. CARROTHERS
Washington, D. C.

OTHER SUBJECTS

Included in Our Art Gallery De Luxe

THE above miniature reproductions of two of the pictures included in our superb Art Gallery De Luxe, give only a faint and crude idea of the beauty of these two subjects. Other subjects are:

HIDE AND SEEK: by Wilhelm Hasselbach. A quaint home scene with a wonderful wealth of interesting detail that makes it altogether charming.

SAVED AT LAST—THANK GOD! By S. Paulus; a dramatic presentation of the dangers of the sea and the rugged heroism of the men who brave its perils for their livelihood.

WASHINGTON'S MARCH THROUGH THE JERSEYS: By J. L. G. Ferris; full of stirring patriotism and the cry of victory. The central figure of the Commander breathes an inspiration.

THE FOUNDLING: By Abbott Graves; perhaps the most widely admired of all the masterpieces in this collection. The aged couple, the tiny foundling, the glow from the lamp, the tender appeal in every line of the painting, all make it irresistible.

Every Picture Measures 12 x 15 Inches

Framed as Christmas Gifts

Dear Christian Herald: We are in receipt of your beautiful De Luxe pictures, and have framed them for Christmas gifts. Many thanks. Salisbury, Mo. S. Y. PITTS.

An Enthusiastic Admirer

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The Red Letter Bible and the Art Gallery De Luxe both received in good condition, and they are, in a sense, like your splendid paper, much more than one could expect. Every member of our family looks forward to the coming of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as to that of some dear friend. Altoona, Pa. J. W. GAINES.

Opinion of One and All

Dear Editor: I have received the Art Gallery De Luxe, in perfect condition, and it is certainly a beautiful work of art. All to whom I have shown the pictures agree with me on this point. W. H. STRIPE.
Chicago, Ill.

Every One Beautiful

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Your collection of Fine Art Pictures I received yesterday, in good condition, and we think them all beautiful. Allegheny, Pa. M. J. SMITH.

Again Exceeds Expectations

The Christian Herald—Dear Editor: The Art Gallery De Luxe just received, and it is much more beautiful than I had expected. Delta, Colo. W. M. HASTINGS.

Well Worth Framing

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I wish to thank you for the splendid pictures I have received from you. They are all beautiful, and I am delighted with them and mean to have them every one framed. West Newbury, Mass. MRS. A. CURRIER.

Pictures of Great Value

Christian Herald—Dear Editor: I received the six Fine Art Pictures in your Gallery De Luxe, and am very much pleased with same. I consider them of great value—as well as THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. MRS. L. MEAD.

FREE to All New and Renewing Subscribers!

Remember: Every Subscriber to The Christian Herald for 1909 Receives—absolutely FREE—as a Personal Gift from the Publisher, this superb Art Gallery de Luxe, 6 Exquisite Pictures, aggregating 1,000 Square Inches, and reproduced in all their Original Colors.

Moreover, these Beautiful Pictures—Exclusively Reproduced by us from the famous originals—can never be duplicated by any art dealer or publishing house in this country, as The Christian Herald has secured the sole right to distribute these Masterpieces within the boundaries of North America, Cuba, Porto Rico, Mexico and the far-away Philippines.

It is wholly impossible for us to picture in words the Beauty, the Richness, the Tone Values, and the Marvelous Coloring of these Exquisite Gems of Art. Suffice it to say that we made a supreme effort this year to send to our subscribers the Handsome Premium Ever Offered by Any Magazine, and after months of diligent thought and labor we can now say that our Art Gallery de Luxe measures up to—yes, even exceeds—our most sanguine expectations. Send in your order to-day.

Do You Want Your Pictures Mounted

AND SENT BY EXPRESS? If so, send us 50 Cents extra, and we will promptly send you by express, all charges prepaid, the Six Pictures Handsomely Mounted on Art Paper, Cream Tint, 15 x 20 Inches. The pictures are then ready to frame, and, even without framing, every one makes a truly beautiful Christmas Present.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91 to 115 BIBLE HOUSE, NEW YORK

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

A "Devil Dance" by Tibetan Lamas

Mrs. Greet's Traveling Chair

The Moravian Mission at Leh (in an Ancient Castle)

A HIMALAYAN HEATHEN FESTIVAL

IT IS now a little over half a century since the first Moravian Mission was established in the Western Himalayas, on the borderland of Tibet. In that period, many faithful workers have labored there, and a number of the pioneers have gone to their reward. At the present time, there are five Moravian mission stations and one out-station in the mountain region in and around Ladak, with a working force of eight ordained preachers, eight missionaries' wives, five white helpers, twenty-one native missionaries and three helpers.

This year there have been many evidences of spiritual life among the Tibetan Christians. Several earthquakes occurred, but they were not of a serious character. The Gospel has been proclaimed in the Mission churches, and in the open air, to native Christians and the heathen. Medical mission and zenana work at Leh have prospered in spite of losses in the missionary ranks. The staff of white workers is very inadequate. Dr. Adolf Bauer, a medical missionary, will soon be added to the staff at Leh. Further reinforcements are now on the way.

At the towns of Kyelang, Poo and Leh new mission houses have been built. Native assistants have rendered valuable help, especially Ga Puntsog, Chompel and Paulu, three most faithful workers. A little weekly publication, issued by the missionaries at Leh, was stopped for a time by order of the government, which suspected the journal of political tendencies, but the prohibition has now been removed.

The Gospel of Mark, translated into the Ladaki dialect by Missionary A. H. Francke, has been printed and published. He has also rendered Mark into Bunan, a dialect of the Lahoul people around Kyelang, and a Tibetan Gospel hymn book has been completed. Various books of the Tibetan Bible are also ready and will be issued soon.

In a letter to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, dated at Leh, November 4, S. H. Ribbach, one of the missionaries, writes:

"Our progress is slow, as is the case with all these hill people; but from time to time the Lord shows us that his servants are not laboring in vain. Before leaving my station at Kolotse, in Lower Ladak, I was privileged to baptize Rasul and his wife, Roema, who, after long acquaintance with the missionaries and much hesitation, have now decided to follow Christ. I had to leave Chompel, our catechist, in charge of the work there, as we are very short-handed, several workers being ill. All the workers here are grateful to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for the kind gifts of its readers. May God bless your and our united efforts for his cause!"

The mission at Leh has in connection with it mission farms at Kyelang and Poo, but these are not profitable, although from the missionary standpoint it is desirable to carry them on. All the workers at the stations, far from being discouraged, are hopeful and even enthusiastic as to the spiritual future of the Himalaya Mission, believing that God in his wisdom will yet make the power of the Gospel manifest among these strange heathen hill tribes, and bring them into the light.

Another mission in the Himalayas is the Tehri Border Village Mission, at Landour. It is an inde-side the village bounds, unless we were prepared to await the expiration of the eight days of sacrificial purification of the village, before the people could engage themselves as carriers for our next stage. During the past year, an unusually large number of deaths had occurred; so it was decided that the serpent god Nig must be appeased. One rupee per house was levied by the village council, at the direction of the priest, and half a rupee on each serf's house, to pay for the sacrifice and the priest's fees and perquisites, including a new turban and a quilt. Holy water was sent for from a distance of several days' journey; a sheep, a goat, a pig, and various other animals and inanimate things were brought to be sacrificed, and the god of the next neighborhood was invoked to be present with that of their own.

The ram drum was beaten, men worked themselves into a frenzy, but the initiated declared that the god had retreated up the hill. However, they drummed on and after a most barbarous procession had beaten the bounds of the village, brandishing gorkha knives, swords, axes, and various fantastic weapons over the sacrificial animals that they led, they took them back to the shrine to smite off their heads, amid united wailing and drumming. What foolishness! Yet much religious foolishness in European countries resembles it in some ways, and those who take part have some reason, real or supposed, for all of it. What great enlightenment of the Spirit is necessary, both there and here, to free men's hearts and minds from the chaos of error!

"Among the most prominent in that heathen procession were some who came nightly to our tent or called us to their homes to inquire the Truth, and they showed much more than usual interest. We do not know just how much one of them meant when he said: 'We may see much truth and accept it, yet what we are bound to with our people we are bound to.' In the meantime we struggle on preaching and praying, praying and preaching.

"And now we are occupied with translating the Gospel into their dialect. How shall we write of the Spirit when 'body' and 'spirit' are interchangeable terms between them and the people of the neighboring district? But we have found one man in four years who can help us a little, and we must give all time to it while we have him. This winter we camp below the snow line, where we hope to be able to sit close at this task."

Photographed specially for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD

Guests of Honor at a Tibetan Wedding Feast

pendent work in a lonely mountain section, and is carried on amid many difficulties and personal perils. An idea of the dangers of mountain travel may be gathered from one of the photographs above. Missionary William Greet, who is in charge, writes to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

"Thank you for your gifts sent to us, with your kind letters of September 24 and 30, both of which reached us in camp at the most distant village we have yet included in our area for touring. We reached that place, Manji, as a family, and our two or three weeks there were the most interesting, both sadly and pleasantly, that we have yet had among the Himalayan villagers. Here the reign of demons is seen in some of its most hideous forms.

"During our stay, we had to move our camp out-

THE American Pulpit

A SERMON BY

Rev. J. M. Schick, D.D.*

A Thought for New Year's Day

TEXT—Mal. 3 : 6

"I the Lord change not" (R. V.)

THE closing year suggests that the days of our life are passing away, and makes us take note of the experiences and incidents which crowded the days as they passed. The thoughtful are impressed with the constantly changing character of the things which belong to the life we are living, and it will do us all good to contemplate, for a little while, the fact that, amid all the changes we are made to see, there is One who changes not, as is brought to our attention by the passage quoted from the last of the Old Testament prophets, whereby God himself declares his own unchanging character.

When we actually realize that our days are passing so fleetly away, we are almost forced to recognize our responsibility for the right use of the time, the talents, the opportunities of life, as they come to us in the days of each changing year. Every day brought its particular duty; and there has never been a time without its obligation, or when there was not some purpose to be worked out by personal effort.

Reviewing the Past

The closing of one year and the opening of another seems to be, of all times, a time peculiarly adapted to reviewing the past and for contemplating the prospects of the future. The very change of dates suggests the flight of time, and raises the question of the right use of the portion which is beyond our recall. Now, men settle accounts and open new pages in their books. Old conditions are everywhere renewed in preparation for considering the possibilities of new endeavor. In the world of business, the wise firms take stock of all their assets, and by this procedure learn to know their exact standing as compared with the beginning of the former years. Profits are computed and losses accounted for. Note is made of past efforts and ventures, in a careful endeavor to definitely determine their ability to enter on new investments. They measure results of their business engagements and seek to establish a basis for a right estimate for future progress. From the facts, gathered by reviews of the past, the prospects of next year's enterprises are made clear. The year's end is generally, thus, a time for inquiries about the past and for calculations of the probabilities of the future.

So, too, it has become customary for the earnest minded to seriously review past conduct and to prayerfully inquire into the moral possibilities of the time ahead. New Year's has come to be the time for reading the lessons of experience, and for determining the aims and purposes which shall henceforth govern our actions. We then call our past to account and resolve to avoid the mistakes of the former year, by following more closely the better ways and means determined upon in advance.

We find ourselves actually standing on the threshold of the new year, peering into the possibilities before us. We recall the failures of past efforts and contemplate, with anxious heart, the weaknesses which our review has disclosed, and we pray, now, for grace and strength to improve on the past. In the light afforded by our careful examination, we consider the contingencies of the coming year. It is not to be wondered at, if, led by this knowledge, we find ourselves inquiring anxiously whether we have reason to expect our little wisdom and strength to be sufficient for the varying emergencies which are sure to arise for us in the new year of grace.

The Christian's Faith in God

But, with all our effort, we are unable to look very far ahead. With all the powers of eye or mind, we are unable to see one step before us on life's way, or to know a single opportunity ere it comes. We cannot determine what a single day will bring forth. We are entering on the duties of the new year without the least intimation of what our lot is to be or what trials will present themselves as the year passes on. And it will be a good thing at such a time to feel safe in the fact that God is sure, and unchangeably for us what he has, in all time, been for his chosen people. He does not change.

We do not walk by sight; we are not governed by knowledge; God has endowed his children with the precious gift of faith, and faith can see where vision fails. The believers may not see or know more than the unbelieving, but they know by faith, without seeing, that the future can bring them no immeasurable misery or unbearable trouble. They believe that, for every day of darkness, they will have a constant guide over all the way they go; and that, in every hour of doubt, they may feel the faithful hand that leads them through all the dangers which they may have to meet on the journey of the year. The child of God is always sure that, in all possible vicissitudes of this life of change, no real evil can befall him, because God changes not, and, in all time, he has made all things work together for good to them that love him. He changes not, wherefore no darkening gloom can loom up to fill the heart with fear so long as it trusts the daily leading of that Father who has never failed his troubled people, and who does not change. Dark places on their way are all made light; crooked paths are ever made straight for them that walk in the Lord. They are sure that the Ruler of all things and the Governor of all times is, through Jesus Christ, their God and Father, and consequently they know that every seeming evil will be turned to good for them, and they enter the new year with faith and confidence, without fear or dread.

Now, with the year all before us, with all its trials yet to come; with all its work as yet to be begun, and with all its responsibilities wholly undefined, it will strengthen our confidence to realize that our God never changes. He is the same from generation to generation, and every glance into the past sees that his love and his care have never failed his people. We enter bravely and without question upon the duties of the new year, relying on his fatherly direction and help, forever sure.

Good Resolutions

However, in the midst of this very confident assurance, we must greatly humble ourselves when we look back over the year we have lived. We are bound to recognize the weaknesses and inefficiencies of our past endeavors. We remember our failures, and are very strangely conscious that the resistance we offered to temptation was all too weak to overcome the tempter, and altogether the year leaves us much to lament, for none of us have accomplished what we meant to do in the resolutions of last New Year's Day. We have not used our powers as we should have done, and humility overcomes us and we acknowledge, as we must, how little good use we have made of our opportunities.

We should surely despair, except that we are permitted to believe in the unchanging character of our God and helper. We may take heart, even while we recognize our weakness and confess our shortcomings, for that God who has in all ages helped the weak and made them strong does not change. He helps us still. He never fails. We will again actively enter upon the life of the new year, and, in spite of all past failures, go forward in most real confidence, and earnestly determine to try again. For God always helps. We will not even allow ourselves to resolve less, but rather we will undertake more, in the very hour when we acknowledge our frailty. We will take up our duty, relying on the help forever sure. Our God has always manifested strength in his people. He has triumphed in every conflict. He does not change, and we may be assured he will be with us, to conquer through us.

Unless this year shall be different from all others, we will find difficulties to overcome when we try to do the work our hands will find to do. There will be hindrances all along the way. There will be burdens to bear, trials to suffer, foes to face. For we may be very sure that the enemy of all good will bring all his might to bear against us. This world will not be found a friend to grace. It will not help us on to God or the ways of God. So we may be sure that our wrestling will not be against flesh and blood, and that all progress will be at the cost of conflict, and likely also at the price of pain. But we are not striving alone. Our unchanging God works through us. He in us and we in him, makes every one of us confident of the issue. In him is no real defeat. He has constantly revealed strength where his servants were weak. He has often turned loss to gain and apparent defeat into triumph; and, with these facts in mind, we can be bold to try again where we failed before, and expect to stand strong on the same ground where once we fell. His help forever sure is our hope, and his support unfailing is our trust. He does not change.

It is helpful, too, to keep in mind that the things we most deplore and of which we are most afraid belong to the changing. Our losses and our pains, our griefs and our sorrows, arise from our earthly temporal relations which are changing. Our comforts and consolations belong to the things of God and in the assurance which comes out of these very comforts we enter upon the new year with unfailing confidence.

God's Love for Us

The review of the past might prove a discouraging exercise for all but them who have faith in God who does not change. All history is full of failure but in all the same history is the evidence of God's unchanging providence, which always rights the wrong and triumphs over the bad. The very first step in human history was the fall into sin by our first parents. God had made man good, and after his own image in righteousness and true holiness, an object of divine love.* But man failed in his first trial and obeyed the voice of the tempter. Instead of loyalty was disloyalty, and the wrath of God awakened by transgression, and our race was exposed to the condemnation of the disobedient. But with all the effect of man's iniquity, God did not change. He never ceased to love the creature his hands had made. He found no pleasure in condemning the offenders. When our race thus turned from God, God did not cease to be its God. He sought them when they turned from him, and found Adam and Eve hiding from his presence and trembling in hopeless fear. The consciousness of their sins drove out all hope. But God remained unchanged. He who loved them first loved them still. He pitied them in their distress, and offered them help. He came to them in their despair and held out a hope. In their calamity he promised them the deliverer, who at the cost of the bruised heel should crush the serpent's head. Even though He sent them forth from the Garden into an unfriendly world, he had them go with the assurance of deliverance and help. And this is the God who changes not; and, as his children, we enter on the labor of the new year with hope, even though we do have abundant reason for disquietude and even despair. In every hour of transgression we will in penitent faith remember that he provided a full pardon from the very beginning of transgression and that he revealed himself as the source of all hope, in the very hour when despair first seized our first parents. Sin and Satan could not change God's love toward his erring creatures, even though they brought man into hopeless separation from God. God was faithful when man was unfaithful. When man strayed God sought him. When lost in sin, God found and saved him. This is a blessed fact to dwell upon when our personal review of the year now closing compels us to recognize our shortcomings; when the memory of broken resolutions almost fills our heart with dismay; when the record of failures drives us to discouragement. This God of ours does not change. He loves us now, even while we hesitate. He is as forgiving now as he has been from the beginning. He follows us with his Word and Spirit to encourage us, and with his grace to help us. In the power of this truth we may acknowledge all our past, and yet boldly assume new duties in humble dependence on that real help which comes to us to aid in times of need, and this we will do.

Inspiration and Encouragement

It is also very assuring to us, as we contemplate the work to be done and wonder what the new year may have in store for us, to realize that from the beginning God works with a plan and purpose. It is not hard to see design in all his universe. Everything his hands have made; all the strange creatures his fingers have fashioned have had their peculiar place in the life of the world, in its progress, and since he does not change we may believe that whatever shall befall us in the coming year is a part of his design and purpose. We are inspired to faithful service, because we know that in all the experience of the new year God will be working in

Continued on next page

* Of Grace Reformed Church, Washington, D. C. Dr. Schick is President Roosevelt's pastor.

LITTLE TALES OF THE CUMBERLANDS

Farmer Students

A View of Picturesque Cumberland Gap, Looking North

Young Mountaineers

THESE "Tales of the Cumberlands" are not given with any intention of criticising the mountain people, but to show with what rapidity they learn, and what a wonderful transformation takes place when these young men and young women have an opportunity. They are of good ancestry—English, Scotch, Irish, German, French. It is not a question of capacity, but a lack of opportunity, that has militated against these capable, pure-blooded Americans. June Tolliver, the heroine in John Fox, Jr.'s, latest book, The Trail of the Lonesome Pine, is an excellent example of the development and culture these mountain girls may acquire.

Some five years ago, when I was dean of an institution near by, at the opening of the second term a young man walked into the office and said:

"I come to git in school."

"All right," I said.

"But I want to tell you all about myself right now an' here. Some time ago, at a big meetin' that was held in the Beech Grove Meetin' House, I professed religion and joined the church. Soon after this I felt burdened to preach the Gospel. Knowing my like of larnin' an' the like of means to go to school on, I said, 'It's out of the question for me to make a preacher.' My father died when I was a little boy an' left my mother with a fam'ly of ten children—five boys an' five girls—an' it was awful hard work for her an' the oldest childern to keep the wolf from the door; so I begged mother to sell my part of the little farm, and she did. I took the money, went West, where I thought to git away from the thought of preachin', an' spent what money I had; but instid of gittin' away from the burden, I felt more an' more that I must preach, an' after a long night of werryin' and prayin', I made a firm resolve to come back to Tennessee an' go to school some place wherever I could git a chance to work an' study an' ejicate myself as best I could to preach to my people. Now I'm here, and want to git in school, but haven't got but little money."

"How much money have you?" I asked.

"I will show you every cent I have got in the world." He reached his lean hand deep down into his home-made jeans pants and brought up what coin he had. We counted the money. He had $2.35.

"How do you hope to go to school on that amount of money?" I asked him.

"Well, I've a little cottage rented with two rooms

By DR. W. L. STOOKSBURY

President Lincoln Memorial University

here nearby, and my sister an' me aim on stayin' in them rooms an' doin' our own housekeepin'." I will work when I can git a chance to work, an' by it I hope to git a ejication."

I handed the money back to him, and told him to keep it for his own use. Out of my own meager salary, I bought books and loaned them to him. He was very appreciative and often thanked me. I wrote a friend in Washington, Pa., who sent me a contribution of $50, and on that $50, with the work that boy did, he and his sister got through the school year; just what they subsisted upon I cannot say. Their progress was exceptionally good. At the end of the second year, he went out during vacation into evangelistic work, and has been at that kind of work ever since. He is now one of our strongest mountain boys, preaching the Gospel.

While Lincoln Memorial University is non-sectational and non-sectarian, it is strictly Christian. All the Protestant denominations are represented in its faculty and board of trustees. This year we have six young men who are studying with a view to taking up the Christian ministry later. These young men will go out next summer, through the mountains, to establish Sunday Schools and distribute Bibles wherever needed. There are a great many families in the mountain country without even a Bible or a Testament, and these always hail with delight the man who brings to them the Scriptures.

In the mountains of Tennessee, away over in one of the deep coves, hemmed in by high cliffs on all sides, it is said, lived a widow eighty years of age. Her home was a little log cabin, with one room, and a stick-and-clay chimney.

She had never traveled, in all these eighty years, farther than ten miles from this home, and for the last five years of her life had not been one mile from home. Quite a number of coal mines had recently been opened about two miles away, and in the opening of these mines a good lot of blasting by the use of dynamite is carried on. The "dynamite" was of considerable interest to the mountaineers.

This old lady had never been sick more than twice in her life, and then she had called in the "yarb doctor," who gave her considerable doses of bone-set tea and white walnut bark ooze. (The bark must always be skinned downward from the tree before boiling.) As civilization progressed and education became more prevalent, one of the young men in her neighborhood went away to the medical school. After spending four years in a good medical school in Chicago, he returned and began practicing. The old lady was a little shy of his "new-fangled way of docterin'."

Falling sick one day while the "yarb doctor" was away (his circuit is usually ten to twenty miles on foot), she felt she would try the young doctor. The young man came, made a thorough diagnosis of the case and proceeded to take medicine from his pill bags. The medicine he prescribed was quinine, and this he put in capsules. Before leaving he gave directions that the old lady was to take a capsule every hour for five hours.

By and by, the old lady took one capsule, then the second, but was extremely careful not to move about any or that no one should give her arm-chair a "jair." The daughter gave her the third dose and went out to do the milking. While away the mother moved her chair from near the "fire-place" to the back end of the cabin. When she came in she said:

"Mother, how air you?"

"Mighty poley, chile."

"What can I do fur you, mother?"

"Oh, nothin' a tall; I'm jist tryin' to keep still."

"Is your medicine doin' you any good?"

"Oh, goodness knows, I'm so afeard of a jair."

One of the mountaineers came in, and proceeded to fill a pipe. When the mother saw the pipe being lighted with a live coal of fire, she almost convulsed, and shouted:

"Mercy, chile; don't you fetch that fire near me, fur you don't know when them danymites I took may go off."

But of late years, the mountaineers have grown accustomed to modern medical treatment. Our medical department in Knoxville is doing splendid work. We had one hundred young men in the medical department last year, and about twenty-five young ladies taking the Trained Nurses' Course. We graduate yearly about twenty-five from the medical department of Lincoln University.

The young ladies of the mountains are perhaps the best adapted constitutionally for trained nurses of any girls in the country. They have good health, splendid training morally, are sympathetic in nature and faithful to any trust committed to them.

A THOUGHT FOR NEW YEAR'S DAY ~ Sermon by Rev. J. M. Schick, D.D. ~ Continued

us to do his will, and accomplish his work. And we are ready to endure all hardness that need be when we know that by so doing we are used in the plan God is working out for the well-being of the world. Any individual part may seem small, and really insignificant, when considered alone. But when it is viewed as a part of God's great whole, the weakest endeavor is mighty.

Especially helpful is the fact that we go forward under the revelation of his Word, which shines on the path of the new, untried year. Those who accept the revelation of his word are never in doubt as to what they should do. In olden days he gave his people his laws to guide them on their way. These laws never added a single obligation to the duty of his people. They merely made clear to God's people what was right and wrong, so that they might be able to direct their lives with assurance. To illustrate, the giving of the law at Sinai did not make it a duty to Israel to abstain from theft. It was wrong to steal before the Eighth Commandment was given in the Decalogue, but by this commandment God's people were directed to keep the fact in mind. God helped his children by declaring in his revealed law what was right for them to do, and so he helped them on their way in life. So, too, he, unchanging, helps them now. He gives us no new law to tell us what is right, but infinitely better, he does not change, and the old law reveals to all ages the same and only right measure of duty for all time; and so he helps all his people to know the right, and by his Spirit guides them to do the right for his glory. And we will be governed by him.

So we stand at the opening of the new year. We have learned from the old year, and our past lives, what we cannot do. We realize in some sort what possible trials may be in store for us in the new. The measure of an ability does not satisfy us, and until we look upon God, our helper, there is nothing to encourage us. Really our review of the past only demonstrates the weakness of our very strongest powers and the vanity of our best endeavors, and only as we can see God, so helpful and sure, as leading and directing us, can we have any hope at all. But it is certain that he has revealed himself to us as wholly unchanging. He has helped in ages past, and will not fail now. He has loved from the beginning and will love to the end. He does not change, and under the impulse of this assurance all of us can enter on the life of the new year with the determination to do whatever our hands may find to do, to the glory of an unchanging God. If a hard work presents itself, we are sure of the grace that will aid us. If sore trials reveal themselves, we can bravely bear them, because our God, who has ever been a very present help in time of trouble, does not change, but invariably speeds every good work and furthers every right impulse in his service.

So let us who trust him enter the new year relying on him, and consecrate our best efforts to his service, with full determination to do all good things and to engage in all good works, in such a spirit as will testify to our faith in an unchanging God.

Then will our new year be a blessed one, for the glory of God is the hope of this year and of all time, and we may well take up with joyful resolution what he has given us to do.

Los Angeles' Spiritual Tidal Wave

I WAS to have conducted a mission in Los Angeles in January of the present year. Three weeks before the meeting was to begin, the building inspector condemned the building. It was too late to make new arrangements, and the mission was given up.

In February, a number of prominent business men of the city were taking dinner together. One of them—the vice-president of a leading bank—said, "I would rather have given $1,000 out of my own pocket than to have had the Torrey mission fall through." Another prominent business man said, "So would I." Then some one suggested that they form a Laymen's Evangelistic Council. John Willis Baer, president of Occidental College, was made the chairman of the Council. In a few hours, a guarantee fund of several thousand dollars was secured. The matter was afterwards taken up by the Federation of Churches, composed of 150 churches and pastors, and the Laymen's Evangelistic Council was made a Committee of Ways and Means. A tabernacle was erected in the heart of the city, at a net cost of $4,600, and arranged to seat 4,500 people.

At the first meeting, Sunday afternoon, November 8, thousands of people were jammed together in the space outside an hour before the doors opened. The building was too small to accommodate even the week-day crowds. After the first Sunday, audiences were divided, women being admitted in the afternoon and men at night. The audiences were composed of all classes, some of those accepting Christ being well-known society leaders. One of the happiest converts was the wife of a prominent man in the city. She says the day after her conversion "the whole world seemed different." There was "a new beauty in the flowers and in her home (one of the loveliest homes about Los Angeles), and she had a new love for her children."

Ministers and evangelists flocked to the city from different parts of the State, and from adjoining States, to catch the impulse of the meetings. Thousands of professed Christians said that they had a new conception of the Christian life. Many who have been carried away with the present trend toward worldliness were led to renounce the theatre, the card table, dancing, and similar things that interfered with the highest spirituality and largest usefulness. Hundreds were led to see their responsibility for the salvation of others. Many who have never identified themselves with any church since coming to the coast came forward, and gave their names to the pastors. Hundreds arose to confess worldliness in their lives, and to renounce it; others to confess that they had wronged others, and would do everything in their power to set it straight. No record was kept of them. A record, however, was kept of those who for the first time accepted Christ and publicly confessed him. There were 1,624 of these. There is reason to think, however, that, even of this class, there were many whose names and addresses were not secured. All whose names were secured were referred to the different churches of their own choice in the city.

By Dr. R. A. Torrey

Perhaps the most interesting day of the mission was Sunday, November 30. It began with a "Midnight Sweep." A procession of several thousand

Y. M. C. A., headed by Edward Spencer, the hero who rescued seventeen from the wreck of the Le Elgin; Mr. Emmet, religious director of the Y. C. A., and by one of the councilmen of the city. Following them came the "Los Angeles Examining Band" of newsboys, dressed in white. Following them there was a procession of men and boys. They marched eight blocks to the tabernacle. At the close of the meeting, ninety-three young men and boys came forward and made public confession of accepting Christ. At 7:30 P. M. the tabernacle was filled again with adult men, no women being admitted. Fifty-eight men came forward to confess acceptance of Christ.

Many of the conversions were of the most interesting character. One night, during the preliminary song service, a man, very much intoxicated but well-dressed and intelligent looking, walked down the middle aisle and fell on his knees at the foot of the platform steps. I went down and knelt by his side. He was under deep conviction, and the light somehow got into his darkened heart. He remained through the meeting. He accepted Christ and came radiantly happy.

On the first Sunday evening, I was asked to go and speak to a man who had served terms in various prisons. He said he was "beyond all hope." Next day, I received a letter from him telling how he had been unable to sleep, and asking prayer that he might be saved. He felt if he was not saved that night he must end his life. He was converted that night, and has been a happy Christian ever since.

One evening, two children came forward to accept Christ. They said: "The worker, 'Pray for father. We want him converted, too.'" The worker asked if she should go down and speak to him. They said no, they were afraid he would say something awful to her. In a few moments, the man came down without any more speaking to him. He was weeping, and said his two little girls had talked with him and led him to decide for Christ.

One child brought her father and mother, and all the family, to Christ. There have been a great many husbands and wives converted. There have been far more men converted than women. I almost every meeting there has been a great preponderance of men at the front, and in some meetings there were ten men to one woman. Both the Y. M. C. A. and the Federation of Churches are taking definite steps to follow up and conserve the results.

The Great Choir at the Los Angeles Revival Meetings

Christian people, headed by the Salvation Army band, had paraded the streets for about three miles, going through the slums. They picked up the drunkards and outcasts by the way, and brought them to the tabernacle. Many a worker entered the tabernacle with a sinner on each arm. The audience was most orderly. At the close, many men from the slums accepted Christ. The next meeting was for women at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon. At this I spoke on "Heroes and Cowards." Many women from the middle and upper classes of society arose to publicly confess their acceptance of Christ. This was followed at 4:15 by a meeting for young men and boys up to thirty-five years of age. A procession formed at the

A Talented Indian Visitor

MISS LILAVATI SINGH, professor of literature and philosophy in the Isabella Thoburn College, at Lucknow, India, and chairman of the Women's Section of the World's Student Christian Federation, is now visiting in this country.

Miss Lilavati Singh

Born of Christian parents (her grandfather also having been a convert), Miss Singh is a good illustration of what a third generation Christian should be. Her highest ideal is to help Indian girls make the most of their opportunities. While her time is given almost wholly to the Christians, yet her sympathies are ever seeking help for the non-Christian women and girls, with whom the great problem is to learn that religion and morality are inseparable.

"India presents the worst state of degradation for women, on account of child marriages, the zenana system and enforced widowhood," said Miss Singh, at a meeting at the home of Miss Helen Gould in the interests of Young Women's Christian Association work among Oriental women. "We women of India love you women of America, because you have shown such love to us. Help that comes to us from America we know is unhampered by any possible selfish interests. When the offers of relief came to us from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD in our time of famine, I wrote an account of it for the women's papers in Hindi and in Urdu, emphasizing the fact that such help sprang from motives of pure sympathy and Christian love."

Miss Singh is editor of the Urdu Women's Friend, a little paper which goes among the women of the zenanas.

"There are in India to-day 40,000,000 women shut up in zenanas," she said. "I have a Sunday School class made up of such women. One day, promising them absolute privacy, and guaranteeing no possible intrusion, I sent them forth into a protected garden. They fluttered about in ecstasy. One of them exclaimed in delight, over a yellow lily: 'Are lilies yellow? I thought they were always pink!' What does outdoor life mean to you American women? And what right has anyone to shut 40,000,000 women away from it all?"

"Only seven out of every thousand women are literate. According to the last census there are yet in India 26,000,000 women living in enforced widowhood; of these, 100,000 are under twenty, 20,000 under ten, and 6,000 are babies only a year old."

"There is a great feeling of unrest in India, but until Christ comes to India there can be no peace."

The India government inspectors have recently pronounced some of the buildings at the Isabella Thoburn College unsafe, and have directed that a new dormitory and high school building be erected. Miss Singh has given up her vacation to visit America in the interests of the new undertaking. The present dormitory was built thirty years ago. There are 175 students in the high school department of the college. The new dormitory will accommodate 150.

"Of all things, I do hope we can have a gymnasium," said Miss Singh. "I have seen your American girls, with their splendid physiques, and have coveted for our girls of India such opportunities for gymnastics. Imagine the physique of the daughters of women who became mothers at the age of twelve or thirteen. No provision is made for this essential part of the young woman's development."

"Graduates of our school and college are found in charge of government schools and as inspectresses of schools," she added. "There is hardly a mission school of North India that has not obtained its principal teachers from Lucknow. It is impossible to meet the demand for teachers. No only as teachers, but as evangelists, doctors, and as wives and mothers, the girls educated at Lucknow are the leaders of the women of North India."

M. K. H.

A Famous Authoress' Home

MRS. AMELIA E. BARR, the famous author, has decided to give up her beautiful residence on Storm King Mountain, near Cornwall, overlooking the noble Hudson. The house is a most picturesque one of thirteen rooms, stable and carriage house. She has four acres fenced and hedged, and there is an abundance of fruit and fine water. The place is a little over an hour distant from New York by rail and two hours by steamer. "Cherry Croft," as the house is called, has views of the river and mountains that are unsurpassed, and the fine mountain air is an intellectual and physical tonic. Here Mrs. Barr has written all of her popular stories for the last twenty years. Anyone who wishes to know more about "Cherry Croft" and its attractions may do so by writing to Mrs. Amelia E. Barr, at the Hoffman House, New York City.

McKINLEY'S MEMORY HONORED

PRESIDENT-ELECT

William H. Taft, with his family and his two brothers, worshipped in the Metropolitan Temple, 7th Ave., near West 14th Street, New York, on Sunday morning, December 13, and Mr. Taft was also present at the evening service, when the great McKinley memorial organ was dedicated. The Temple is one of the leading Methodist churches in the metropolis, and the pastor, Rev. John Wesley Hill, one of the best known. Attracted by the presence of the President-elect, enormous audiences attended both services. With his family, Mr. Taft sat in General Grant's old pew in the forenoon, and gave close attention to a sermon by the Rev. James M. Buckley, editor of The Christian Advocate. In the evening, the platform was filled with a number of distinguished people, including Secretary Taft, his brothers, Horace D. and Henry W. Taft; Andrew Carnegie, Ex-Secretary of the Treasury Lyman D. Gage, Immigration Commissioner Watchorn, President Finley, of the College of the City of New York; Judge Gary, Colonel John J. McCook, Samuel W. Bowne, the pastor, Rev. John Wesley Hill; Dr. Louis Klopsch and others. Every seat in the great Temple was filled, and crowds outside were unable to gain admission. Brief addresses, suited to the place, the time and the occasion, were delivered. Mr. Carnegie spoke of the gentleness and innate goodness of President McKinley. Colonel McCook held the late President to be "the best representative of service in American history. He was the embodiment of service in the highest sense—to the Gospel, to his country, and to humanity." Mr. Taft told of his personal relations with President McKinley.

The Scene at the Dedication of the McKinley Organ in the Metropolitan Temple, New York

"The thing that came over one most," he said, "was McKinley's sweetness and lightness. There are times in most of our lives that we would like to wipe out—husbands have said things to their wives that they wish they hadn't said, and we wonder sometimes how the good women stand it to live with us—but it was not so with McKinley. I knew him well and never knew him angry but once.

"He was a great judge of men. He always got own feeling," added Mr. Taft, "is that as we extend the government of the islands, the people take a deeper interest in their own affairs. It is a burden, of course, and will continue to be, but we must bear it. Where Providence has thrust upon us responsibility for a people like that we are just as much charged with the duty of looking after them as persons with great fortunes are charged with the duty of helping those less fortunate about them. The moment we let exploitation enter into our keeping them we have departed from the faith and destroyed the promises on which President McKinley based his beliefs."

the man he wanted. It was his persuasive-ness and gentleness that accomplished what others failed to bring about. He would give a man a card, send a kind word to his wife, and many a man seeking an office and not getting it would feel more gratified than visitors to other Presidents who departed with commissions in their pockets. He breathed out the sweetness he had toward the whole world. He was always ready to forgive. He had more success than any President I have known in dealing with Congress. Members of both houses were anxious to do as he wanted and if they couldn't do it they were sorry."

Mr. Taft's remarks were characterized by reverence throughout. He told of his mission to the Philippines, whether he went under McKinley's direction. The President's hope he said was to help and improve the people of those islands. "My

BRITISH AND AMERICAN SUNDAY SCHOOLS CONTRASTED

THE Rev. J. Williams Butcher, the London secretary of the Wesleyan Methodist Sunday School Union, during the past several months has been investigating Sunday School conditions and methods in Canada and the of the Tweed than any Methodist preacher before or since. He is to-day regarded as one of the foremost Wesleyan ministers in Great Britain, a man of many parts and great gifts. He has filled some of the leading American pulpits during his stay in our larger cities.

Rev. J. Williams Butcher

Mr. Butcher is the grand-nephew of John Williams, the famous "Martyr Missionary of Erromanga," one of the first sent by the London Missionary Society to establish mission work in the South Sea Islands.

Mr. Butcher has been visiting schools of various denominations throughout this country, among them being the Hyde Park Baptist and several Methodist Sunday Schools in Chicago; Calvary Baptist, in Washington; and the two largest Sunday Schools in the world, the one commonly known as "Wanamaker's School" at the Bethany Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia, and the Bushwick Avenue Sunday School in Brooklyn, of which the superintendent is Frank L. Brown. Each of the two last mentioned schools number from 4,000 to 5,000 pupils. However, the one school above all others to impress the visitor from abroad has been the Methodist Sunday School in Brazil, Ind., where the enrolment of 2,600 or 2,700 represents one-fourth of the entire population of the town. The average attendance is 1,116. The school claims the largest "Cradle Roll" in the world. Rev. Dr. Greene, the pastor, and Mr. J. E. Carpenter, the superintendent, agree that the church membership is in great measure increased from the Sunday School.

"I notice," said Mr. Butcher, "that the schools on this side the Atlantic have better premises and equipments than are usual with us. Your schools, too, are more highly organized; graded schools are, however, slowly winning their way with us. I thoroughly approve of special training for teachers, and that those so trained should have precedence. I hope, however, we may not find it necessary to introduce a system of paid teachers, unless in cases of very large schools.

"I have noted the close connection between school and church in this country. Your prominent church members seem to be also prominent in the Sunday School. This is not so frequently the case with us. In nearly every school I have visited, I have found the pastor present and often actively associated with the work of the school. The circuit system in England prevents our pastors generally from close identification with the schools.

"I have been very pleased with all that I have seen. I notice in some instances, however, that the machine is too highly elaborated and apt to be regarded as an end in itself, rather than as a means to an end.

"One thing in which England distinctively leads is in hymnology. I hope," said Mr. Butcher, with decided emphasis and characteristic British conservatism, "that it will be many years before we teach our children to sing the jingle and doggerel here mis-called a hymn."

The Sunday School Union represented by Mr. Butcher numbers 7,866 schools in Great Britain, with 125,000 teachers and officers and 1,000,000 scholars. This number of scholars does not include those enrolled in the Home Department, on the Cradle Roll, or in the Brotherhoods, the Adult Bible Classes, or the Pleasant Sunday Afternoons. The last three departments make up another 200,000.

"In the English Sunday Schools," says Mr. Butcher, "we find a very considerable proportion of our enrolment consists of those whose parents are not connected with the church. Not so many of these, naturally, join the church in later years, but among those children of our own membership by far the majority come into the church. I have no doubt that it is the seed sown in the Sunday School that led them to their decision."

That Mr. Butcher understands child nature has been demonstrated by his work in connection with the Boys' Brigade movement.

"While in Glasgow," he said, "I found that the boys' side of the Sunday School of my first church was very low. I tried a company of the Boys' Brigade and found it from every standpoint a great success. The school grew rapidly on the boys' side; we got into close touch with boys of ages twelve to seventeen, and the experiment so pleased me that I sought the acquaintance of the founder of the movement, Colonel W. A. Smith. We have become close friends. I have taken one of the three simultaneous annual parade services, when 2,500 boys were present. M. K. H.

Fascinated with the Book

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The expressman has just left the beautiful premium, Inside Story of the White House, with which I am perfectly fascinated, and I consider it one of the best premiums you have ever issued. Another evidence of your marvelous generosity to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD family. Please accept my grateful thanks for the same.

MINNIE B. TITUS.

L. L. B. H. N. J.

OUR EDITORIAL FORUM

LOUIS KLOPSCH, Editor and Proprietor

GEO. H. SANDISON, Managing Editor

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is published weekly.
Subscription price, $1.50 a year, in advance.

Remittances should always be made in the safest manner
available to the remitter. Register cash remittances.

Foreign Postage.—For each copy to be mailed outside
the U. S., Canada, and Mexico, add one dollar a year.

Change of Date.—It takes at least two weeks to change the date, after your subscription is renewed.

Expiration of Subscription.—The date on the
wrapper indicates when your subscription ends.

Change of Address.—It requires three weeks time
to make the change. Give both old and new address.

Subscriptions may commence with any issue.
Letters should be addressed, THE CHRISTIAN
HERALD, Bible House, New York.
Entered at Post-office, New York, as Second-class Matter
Entered as Second-class Matter at the Post Office Department, Ottawa

Sitting Out the Old Year

YOUTH and age, parent and child, regard the passing of the old year with equal interest. The girl and the boy look forward with confidence to the future. Youth fears nothing. Having never encountered the storms which shake the soul, why should they be dreaded?

He whose gaze is toward the sunset knows that they are coming, but experience gives poise and calmness. Especially does the aged Christian meet the New Year with a welcome which is akin to joy. The bonds of earth for many years have been growing lighter. One by one the heart's treasures have been gathering in the home beyond. He whose temper has been chastened by the ministries of pain, whose dearest ones have been torn from his side, may, through the grace of God, say with the poet:

What matter though I stand alone?
I wait with joy the coming years;
My heart shall reap where it has sown,
And garner up its fruit of tears.

In one of George Matheson's beautiful "meditations," he warns the young to be grave. "Youth," he says, "is the most solemn of all seasons—more solemn than the hour of death. My cry to thee, O youth, is to enter upon thy battle with reverent fear. Life is more dangerous than death. Thy wayward heart misguides thee. Thy brother's hand misleads thee. When thou standest by the beautiful gate of life's temple, it is thy time to pray."

And as the New Year comes in it is well that the man who has left youth far behind should also face his especial perils, and reflect upon what is for him the duty of the hour.

Let him remember that Jacob caroled in his age the first song of his life, sweeping the harp-strings that in his youth were silent. The days of climbing, of sleeping on the pillow of stone, of wrestling with the angel, were overpast, and he might well rejoice.

It is so likewise with the aged man of to-day. His hardest fight is over, but let him beware of the dense conservatism and apathy of age. In the words of an eloquent preacher, let him cry, "Write my name among the sons of this young century! Interest me in their problems; inspire me with their aims; inflame me with their larger view. Not as a leaf would I fade, but as a dawn, losing myself in the greater light. Let my heart catch the glow of the coming sun."

The young may well take for their motto this paraphrase of the poet as the New Year dawns:

We must march, we must bear the brunt of danger,
We the youthful, sinewy ones—all the rest on us depend.

And let the aged man hug to his heart the brave words of Emerson:

Lowly, faithful, banish fear,
Right onward drive unharmed.
The port, well worth the cruise, is near,
And every wave is charmed.

An Uplifting Influence in Literature

AT HIS quiet home, in the suburbs of New Haven, there has recently passed away a writer and a poet who has been read and admired by two generations of readers—Donald G. Mitchell, better known under his pen name of Ik Marvel. Few Americans there are with interests of a literary nature who do not treasure among their books well-thumbed copies of Reveries of a Bachelor and Dream Days. The former volume is the one which placed his fame on a permanent basis. He was reared in the atmosphere of culture, his father being a highly educated clergyman of the Congregational Church. A course at Yale and European travel added to his store of information and breadth of view. He served his country for a time in the consular service, his station being at Venice—a post held later by William D. Howells and others who have made their mark in the world of letters. Literature, however, had too strong a claim upon him to be denied, and he returned to America to devote his life to writing.

Mr. Mitchell wrote but little during the last twenty years, but his books are still called for among the books of the day at the public libraries.

The reason for it is not far to seek. His work was always clean, always uplifting, always interesting. He disdained to reach his effects by cheap theatrical methods or to seek a momentary popularity by catering to the lower instincts of mankind. It was not his ambition to have his work among the "best sellers," but among the best books. They strike one like a breath of fresh air after reading the much-extolled products of some of our present-day writers who, under the impression that they are giving a description of life as it really is, only show its sordid and immoral aspects. As were his books, so was his life. Visitors to Edgemere, even when the shadow of death was lengthening across the threshold, found a man who believed that there was more good than ill in people and in life. Surely the influence of such a writer will last long after the close of his earthly career, and far beyond that of many of his contemporaries who are now having their brief day of triumph on the fickle wave of literary popularity.

Invading the Lord's Day

BALTIMORE has begun a crusade against the Sunday afternoon newspaper project. Citizens, irrespective of religious denomination, are uniting to fight the innovation, on the ground that it would be "a wholly unnecessary disturbance of the character of the day, a disturbance not warranted by any public need, since the operations of government, business and sport are alike suspended on Sunday."

This is good, sound common sense, and will find an echo in every community where the Sunday evening newspaper experiment is attempted. We believe those editors who are planning this new invasion of the Lord's Day have made a mistake in concluding that the public would welcome such ventures. They have apparently misinterpreted popular feeling on the subject. Even in cosmopolitan New York the Sunday evening newspaper could not hope for a living clientele. The only experiment ever attempted here in that direction resulted in failure, advertisers and readers alike giving it the cold shoulder. The truth is, that our people have no desire to see the American Sabbath further Europeanized, and however indifferent they may seem at this stage of the matter their ultimate protest would be unmistakable.

A Noble Christmas Gift

A READER of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who had intended to leave legacies to a number of benevolent enterprises, changed his mind and concluded that he would put his good intentions into active operation while he was yet alive. He accordingly sent to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD a draft for $500, asking that the money be apportioned in accordance with certain general instructions laid down in his letter.

This sum has been divided into twenty equal parts, and the apportionment submitted and approved by the donor. Checks for the amounts placed opposite their names have been forwarded to each of the worthy causes on the following list:

McAuley Mission, New York City.....	$25.00
Kimball Bible Training Home, Tappan, N. Y.....	25.00
Daisy Field Home for Crippled Children, Englewood, N. J.....	25.00
Cremorne Mission, New York City.....	25.00
Soul Winners' League, Wilmore, Ky.....	25.00
White Door Settlement (Mrs. S. J. Bird), New York.....	25.00
Rev. Thomas A. Bailey, Edinburgh, Scotland (for Mary Reed's Work among Lepers of India).....	25.00
Pacific Garden Mission, Chicago, Ill.....	25.00
Tennesseetown Mission, Rev. Chas. M. Sheldon, Topeka, Kan.....	25.00
Sunday Breakfast Association, Philadelphia, Pa.....	25.00
Weaver Orphan Home for Colored Children, Hampton, Va.....	25.00
Steele Orphanage, Chattanooga, Tenn.....	25.00
Taylor University, Upland, Ind.....	25.00
Deaconess Home, Mrs. Lucy R. Meyer, Chicago, Ill.....	25.00
Florence Crittenton Mission, New York City.....	25.00
Lepor Colony, Surinam, Dutch Guiana, South America.....	25.00
Rev. Z. Chas. Beals, Advent Mission, Wuhu, China.....	25.00
Rev. R. H. Bender, Independent Mission, San Salvador, Central America.....	25.00
Five Points Mission, New York City.....	25.00
Rev. Frederick Jansen, Presbyterian Mission, Cebu, P. I.....	25.00

Total$500.00

This donor, who prefers to remain unknown, through his timely generosity brings joy and gratitude to thousands who are engaged in the Lord's work at home and abroad. He reaches and helps Foreign and Home Missions, Rescue Work and humanitarian efforts among white and black needy ones; he aids worthy educational enterprises where many of the students are too poor to pay their way; he helps the hopelessly crippled the orphans, and the outcasts of both sexes. He helps to give the Gospel to the heathen of four distinct races. May his example be an inspiration to others who are seeking to do good with their abundant means at this Christmas season.

Turkey's First Parliament

WHAT a scene it must have been at the opening of the first Turkish Parliament—a scene historic in the last degree, and long to be remembered. It met in the magnificent Palace of Justice overlooking the Sea of Marmora, the use of which the Sultan had granted for that purpose. All Constantinople went wild on that forenoon of December 17. Deputies and dignitaries arrived by noon, in gay equipages. All the ladies of the palace, beautifully dressed and without veils, graced the occasion. It was like a national holiday, but such a holiday as the nation had never yet witnessed. Enthusiasm and rejoicings filled the air as the strange gathering of deputies of different races and religious beliefs assembled for the first time in history, to legislate for the subjects of the Sultan. Moslems, Greeks, Jews, Armenians, Arabs, Syrian Druses, dignified Khojas in their imposing turbans, and Ministers of State brilliant with decorations, mingled together in the friendliest manner. When all were seated in the magnificent chamber, the scene only lacked the presence of Abdul Hamid himself to make it complete. Amid the flutter of flags, the fanfare of trumpets and the cheers of the multitude, the Sultan came, and, entering the palace, faced the people's Parliament. It was a moment and an occasion worthy of being immortalized on canvas by a great historical painter.

Turkey enters upon its new constitutional era with the best wishes of all the civilized nations. May its Parliament be guided by wise and temperate counsels, as by these alone can it hope to succeed. Meanwhile, who shall say the world is not advancing?

The Best Religious Journal

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I believe it to be your good fortune to own and edit the best religious journal in America; at any rate, it is the only one that always makes me drop my work (unless very pressing) and look through it, whenever it comes.

S. H. P.

Contents of this Number

Wednesday, December 30, 1908

	PAGE
Sitting Out the Old Year.....	Cover
A Himalayan Heathen Festival (Illustrated).....	1047
A Thought for the New Year. Sermon.....	1048, 1049
By Rev. J. M. Schick, D.D.
Little Tales of the Cumberlands (Illustrated).....	1049
Los Angeles' Spiritual Tidal Wave (Illustrated).....	1050
A Talented Indian Visitor (Portrait).....	1050
McKinley's Memory Honored (Illustrated).....	1051
British and American Sunday Schools (Portrait).....	1051
OUR EDITORIAL FORUM.....	1052
THE BIBLE AND NEWSPAPER (Illustrated).....	1053
May Change Panama Canal (Illustrated).....	1054
The New Primate of England (Portrait).....	1054
The New Year in Martin's Alley (Illustrated).....	1055, 1056
By Margaret E. Sangster
Descent of the Holy Spirit. By Mrs. M. Baxter.....	1056
The Old Year and the New (Illustrated).....	1057
By Margaret E. Sangster
OUR MAIL-BAG.....	1058
The Turkish Parliament Buildings (Illustrated).....	1058
The Little Doctor (Illustrated).....	1059, 1062
Serial Story by Agnes Lowe Ellis
Work of Church Federation Council.....	1060
Millionaires See the "Bread Line".....	1060
Beecher Memorial Window (Illustrated).....	1060
God's Spirit Our Helper.....	1061
Sunday School Lesson by Dr. and Mrs. W. F. Crafts
Esperanto Lesson No. 26.....	1062
For Us Who Are Lost. Epworth League Topic.....	1063
Living for Eternity. Christian Endeavor Topic.....	1063

THE BIBLE AND THE NEWSPAPER

World's Greatest Bank Building

LARGER than the Bank of England, or the Bank of France, is the home of the National City Bank, just finished in Wall Street, New York. In 1891 the United States Government sold the old Custom House to the National City Bank for $3,265,000. It has been remodeled, at a cost of $2,500,000, and is the most complete banking institution in the world. "The complete harmony of sober tones of the exterior of the building is matched by the tone of the interior. There is not a suggestion of gingerbread about the building. Gilt, plush, onyx and the like will be sought in vain. There is a restful monotone of creamy stone, broken here and there with a glimpse of bronze and mahogany."

When the building was in contemplation, an officer of the bank spent a whole year of travel, inspecting the various institutions of the country to find the latest inventions and conveniences, and as nearly a perfect building for the purpose as can be made has been the result. The main room is entered through two bronze doors, which are twenty feet high and weigh 3,300 pounds—the largest ever cast in this country. The cage for the workers is easily observable. The safe is a marvel of simplicity and safety. It is a strong-box, made in two stories. Its two doors weigh sixteen tons apiece. The sides of the strong-box, besides being made of railroad iron and armor-plate, are protected furthermore by wire gauze, electrified so as to give an immediate alarm in case the safe is touched. The quarters and devices for the 400 employees are as near perfection as human ingenuity can conceive. There will be a complete telegraph and cable equipment in the building, and a private telephone system, with seventy-two telephones. There will be completely equipped kitchen and dining room for the accommodation of the employees of the bank. The National City Bank was founded in 1812, and is the strongest banking institution in America. The capital of the bank was increased from $1,000,000 to $10,000,000 in 1900. Two years after, it was again increased to $25,000,000, and the surplus from $7,500,000 to $15,000,000. On November 2 of the present year the total assets reached $372,849,000, enough to pay all the national debts of Mexico and all the South American Republics. On the same day the gross deposits were $308,728,000.

These mammoth institutions are necessary for the employment of capital, for the payment of wages, for the promotion of the great material enterprises of the world, but they are small when compared with the wealth of right thoughts, pure sentiments, and holy deeds, which it is the purpose of good men and women to accumulate. Material wealth, in the hands of honest and upright men, is a mighty power for good and a bulwark against the waves of panic in the dark days of adversity. This great model institution, founded in the early days of our country, has witnessed our struggles and shared in our growth and wonderful prosperity. Many names famous in statesmanship and finance have been associated with its management, and its long record has been distinguished by unwavering adherence to a wise conservatism and an inflexible integrity. Without these as a basis, no great enterprise can hope for enduring success.

Seest thou a man diligent in his business? He shall stand before kings; he shall not stand before mean men. (Prov. 22: 29.)

Mountain Sinks in the Sea

Officers of the revenue cutter McCulloch, which returned from a cruise in northern waters, report that Mount McCulloch, which last year thrust its head up from the centre of Bugaslov Island, sixty miles west of Unalaska, has disappeared in another volcanic convulsion. In its place, it is said, is a land-locked bay, three miles wide, into which the cutter Bush sailed and made soundings. It was found that the water showed a depth of from eight fathoms at the edge to twenty-five fathoms in the centre. Mount McCulloch, which was first seen a year ago when the cutter, after which it is named, arrived off the coast, had a height of 300 feet. Amidst the changes of land and sea there is the immutable One to whom the children of men may fasten themselves in safety.

Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea. (Ps. 46: 2.)

"Fake" Masterpieces

Dr. G. H. Degrott, assistant director of the Art Gallery at The Hague, who has been inspecting

The New Home of the National City Bank, New York City

private galleries in America, sailed for home the other day. He created a great sensation by declaring that most of the art galleries of America are honeycombed with spurious "old masters." He declared that he was staggered at the "fake" copies he saw hanging on the walls of leading connoisseurs. Most of these imitations, which sold for $10,000 to $100,000 each, are in reality not even old. They are modern copies painted on old canvases. In Paris and Brussels, scores of manufactories of these "old masters" exist, which are once in a while raided by the police, and the conductors tried and sent to prison. New York is the hotbed and gaming-ground for these swindlers, whose methods and consciences are on a par with the professional gambler's. They are up to every trick to win the confidence of the wealthy, and the yarns they spin to the credulous collectors are simply amazing. In the collection of Mr. Francis Bartlett of Boston, Mr. Carter found a picture which had cost the owner $50,000, and which proved to be such a fraud that Mr. Bartlett compelled the dealer in England who had practised the deceit on him, to return his $50,000. Mr. Carter said: "When I first entered the famous Corcoran Gallery in Washington, I was staggered by the number of copies and 'fakes' which hang on its walls." Of the many pictures belonging to former United States Senator W. A. Clark which are exhibited in the Corcoran Gallery, three of the most prominent ones he pronounced manifest frauds.

Love of money will prompt to every conceivable kind of deceit and fraud.

Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely. (Lev. 19: 11.)

Japan's Empress Breaks Tradition

During the royal reception given to the American fleet in Tokyo, the Empress of Japan shattered the tradition of a thousand years in touching the hands of foreigners, as she shook hands with Admiral Sperry and his captains. Ever since Japan had a history its rulers, who were invariably deified and were always the centre of the nation's worship, were the recipients, but never the offerers, of bows. To approach them was a trespass for common people; to see them in person was the greatest honor of a lifetime. The Empire of Nippon was considered a holy land, ruled by divine sovereigns, and no foreigners were expected to pollute the land or people by their touch. Hence, what a mighty revolution has been effected in Japan when such a picture could be witnessed as that of the sacred Empress taking the hand of a foreigner! But it was not a greater surprise than joy to the Japanese people to see their Empress give this expression of good-will to Americans, and it voiced, in the most impressive way possible, the desire of the Emperor and people of Japan to maintain the most intimate relationship to America, which will be the strongest guarantee of peace for the Orient.

By how swift a step is Jesus, the real King, ushering in the era of "peace on earth, good will to men," which was promised at his advent!

Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men. (Luke 2: 14.)

Escape from Cannibals

Dr. George A. Dorsey, curator of anthropology in the Field Museum of Chicago, who has been making a tour of the Far East in search for relics of various races, had a thrilling adventure in one of the Solomon Islands. In company with Governor Hahl, he walked across the island of Buganville, and among the villages of the cannibals. At his approach, people ran like wild animals; they were at the lowest stage of savagery. This visitor went into regions never before pressed by the feet of a white man. When the travelers undertook to cross a mountain, 6,000 feet high, they found that the natives had cut down the trees and set traps for the foreigner, and expected to have a rare dish of white man's flesh; but, by the greatest caution and celerity, he made his escape from danger, and will be permitted to return to his work in Chicago.

It is only by contrasting such barbarism as this with the condition of islands heretofore sunk in the lowest savagery and cannibalism, which have yielded to the teaching and preaching of the missionary and have become Christian in their faith and habit, that we discover the tremendous revolution effected by the Gospel of Christ.

When the wicked, even mine enemies and my foes, came upon me to eat up my flesh, they stumbled and fell. (Ps. 27: 2.)

Thousands Will Welcome This Book

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The "White House" book is a dandy! I have read nearly all of it, and find it to be a most excellent book. It gives any amount of valuable information, that I had not the remotest idea about, and I think there are thousands of people that feel as I do. I thank you most cordially for this book.

M. W. W. S.

T. R. RENKEMA.

MAY CHANGE PANAMA CANAL

GREAT interest is being manifested by Congress in the discussion that has recently been opened by prominent engineers in regard to the stability of the Gatun Dam, on the Panama Canal, and the best method for carrying on the excavating work. M. Philippe Bunau-Varilla started the dispute in Paris by declaring that the canal was dammed at the wrong place, that a sea-level strait would be better, and that sections should be dredged instead of dug out, as at present. M. Bunau-Varilla was chief engineer of the Panama Canal in the days of the old French Company, which once attempted to cut through the isthmus. His interest in the project has never faded, and he has recently written a book on the subject.

M. Bunau-Varilla said that if the canal was continued in accordance with the plans of the American engineers it would cost, before the first ship could go through, at least $280,000,000. This is about twice the original estimate. He said that numerous landslides of the foundations of the retaining walls of the Gatun Dam would be inevitable. It would be, he concluded, the biggest engineering disaster ever recorded in the history of great engineering projects. The great expense of rock excavation from under water defeated the plans of the foreign engineers. This he now claims is the cheaper way with the newly discovered methods. In 1901, the price was $4.75 a cubic yard. Now it is $2.50 a cubic yard.

"In addition," he said, "the practicability and enormous advantage of creating an open strait at Panama has since been approved in the highest quarters. The International Consulting Board, therefore, made a mistake so far as concerns the project of the Strait of Panama, as its minority made a radical error in recommending the construction of a dam at La Boca, which it has not been possible even to begin to execute, and as it again made an error in recommending the Gatun Dam, as has just been proved by the giving way of a rock pile."

The foregoing statement of the French engineer at once raised intense interest in Washington and among American engineers. Secretary Wright, of the War Department, cabled to Lieut.-Col. Goethals, the chief engineer, for information. His official report had not been received as this number of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD was going to press, but he made an advance statement, showing his belief in the present plans and the safety of the great dam. He said that the only place where the ground had settled was in the bed of the Chagres River, and that the amount of water under the site could be diverted by running it off into a pit, six by eight feet, below sea-level. The preliminary borings showed what he considered as a satisfactory natural foundation. The colonel says that there has been really no sinking of the dam. What sunk was a heap of rock and dirt which had been dumped off of a trestle into the river on the spot where the dam was to cross. The river bottom is soft and the weight had made it sink to one side. "It has also been proved," says Major Harding, in his report, "that under a great part of the dam there is below the upper earth a layer of soft sandstone which is difficult to break up with a pick. This will serve as the foundation for a large section of the retaining walls."

A dam very much like the Gatun Dam is already in existence in this country, having been constructed within the last few years, near Clinton Mass., in connection with the new Metropolitan Water Works system. It is fully as large, and, as one engineer said who has worked both in Panama and on the Massachusetts dam, "no one has ever worried about its breaking, and there are hundreds of people who live just below it who are not losing any sleep over the matter."

President-elect Taft, who already has a firsthand knowledge of affairs on the isthmus, is to sail for Panama shortly, on board an American warship, to see again just how things are going on on the Canal. Both the President and Secretary Root are anxious to get his opinion in the matter. Several Senators wish to reopen the question whether a sea-level canal is possible. All recognize that it would be desirable, but the great cost and great length of time necessary for construction have stood in the way.

Just at the moment when the Canal question was foremost in the minds of the American people a disaster occurred at Bas Obispo Cut, showing the dangers which always exist in such great undertakings, where powerful explosives are used.

Before the work closed for the day a man was at work drilling holes for a blast, which was to be set off the following morning. A large number of the holes had already been filled with explosives. The man is said to have been careless, the dynamite in one hole was exploded, setting off the rest—twenty-two tons in all.

When the smoke and dust settled it was found that ten men were killed outright and sixty-five injured. Only two were Americans. The wounded were taken to the hospital at Ancon Hill.

One of the "Cuts" in the Panama Canal in the Rainy Season

THE NEW PRIMATE OF ENGLAND

By WILLIAM DURBAN, London

THE conditions which regulate the status of dignitaries of the historic Anglican Church in its motherland are most peculiar and complicated. For instance, the Archbishop of Canterbury is "Primate of All England," and the Archbishop of York is "Primate of England." The country is divided into two great ecclesiastical provinces, North and South, of which Canterbury and York, ancient rival capitals, are the centres of convocations. The Primate of All England takes the precedence and crowns the King; the Primate of England walks two yards behind him, and it is his privilege to place the diadem on the head of the Queen at her coronation.

The resignation of the venerable Dr. Maclagan has created a vacancy which the King, on the advice of Mr. Asquith, the Prime Minister, has filled by the choice of Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang, Bishop of Stepney, in which office he succeeded the present Bishop of London, Dr. Winnington Ingram. Like Dr. Maclagan, Dr. Lang is a Scot, and like him, too, he comes of Presbyterian parentage, for the father of the new northern archbishop is Dr. Marshall Lang, principal of Aberdeen University. This celebrated Scottish preacher and professor was for many years minister of the noted Barony Church in Glasgow, where he succeeded Dr. Norman McLeod, a favorite preacher of Queen Victoria.

The new archbishop was born in 1864, and is the youngest man who ever attained to English archiepiscopal dignity. He was educated at Glasgow University and subsequently went to Oxford, entering Balliol College. His original intentions were towards the law, and he came to London and entered as a student in the Inner Temple; but he altered his purpose in life, was ordained a clergyman and appointed a curate at Leeds. He rose rapidly, for in 1896 he was Fellow and Dean of Divinity at Magdalen College, Oxford, and also Vicar of St. Mary's. This was a very high distinction, but Dr. Lang soon reverted to work among the masses of the people, for he became Vicar of Portsea, an immense parish in the borough of Portsmouth. Here he did a most extraordinary work. He engaged a larger number of curates to aid him than any clergyman in England was ever known to gather about him—seventeen in all. They displayed the warmest sympathy with the poor and struggling classes, and the parish church became a very popular spot. In 1901 Dr. Lang was made a Canon of St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and soon afterwards was appointed to the suffragan bishopric of Stepney, that enormous eastern section of London which is the constant problem of Christian philanthropists and ministers.

This prelate has been a true bishop of the East

Dr. Cosmo Gordon Lang
Recently appointed Archbishop of York.

End. Preaching to a congregation of porters, he one day said, "Every hardworking man, whatever his task may be, has his own place of honor in God's world." He is a dreaded foe of the brewers and distillers and is one of the foremost advocates of temperance reform. In this respect, as in several other directions, he has much in common with his intimate friend, the Bishop of London. Both have so far remained celibates. On one occasion, when he was dining with Queen Victoria, she asked him if it was true that he had seventeen curates—he was then Vicar of Portsea. He replied that it was true. "Would it not be wise to discharge three and marry, Mr. Lang?" asked the Queen. His answer was, "Well, ma'am, if I disagree with my curates we can part; but if I were to disagree with my wife, it might end in my having to leave my parish!"

Dr. Lang is one of the "preaching bishops," and everywhere can draw a vast audience. The new archbishop was offered the Bishopric of Montreal only a few weeks since, but declined this promotion. It is a point worthy of notice that not only has a Scotsman succeeded a Scotsman at York, but also that at the present time both the English Archbishops are Scotsmen.

For the titles and stories of the six beautiful pictures that constitute our superb "Art Gallery De Luxe," see back of each picture.

THE NEW YEAR

WE may not see the New Year's death,
Who hail it at its birth;
But we shall help to make or mar
The harmony of earth.

All through this cycle, and beyond,
The influence of each soul
Shall still be felt for good or ill,
And help to mould the whole.

MARY B. WINGATE

The New Year in Martin's Alley

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

YOU would never in the world have found Martin's Alley, had you been searching for it, without previous familiarity with that section of a great city in which it was hidden away, much like a needle in a haystack. All cities have a certain family likeness, and the one where Martin's Alley was located was not very different from New York or Chicago, although geographically it was distant from each of these big towns.

Martin's Alley was a tiny court, narrow and dark, for the sun was hidden from it by large adjacent business buildings. Long ago it would have been effaced, and the place it occupied taken up by lofty structures devoted to trade, but for the fact that it was a fag end of an estate, which could not be sold until the youngest heir came of age. Even then, by an eccentric will, made many years ago, when the thriving city was merely a cluster of farms, the ground on which Martin's Alley was built could not be disposed of. Foredoomed the Alley seemed to be to habitations of squalor and want, and the conditions of dirt and disease obtaining there made it a real menace to the community.

However, everything in this world of ours reaches an end at last. The day dawned when Isabel Frazer, twenty-one, beautiful and accomplished, set her foot on the deck of a Cunarder and sailed away swiftly over the great ocean to look at her inheritance. From her sixth year Isabel had lived in England, receiving her education there, and spending her summers in the Scottish highlands, where there were numerous relatives who loved and cherished the little American cousin. She was not only the youngest of her family, but its last survivor, her older brothers having died while she was still a child. Her people in London and Aberdeen were willing that she should visit her native land, but they claimed that as her ancestry had been wholly British there was no occasion for her to feel the least regard for the United States. Except as her income might be derived from investments and rents on this side of the water, they saw no reason why Isabel should do more than cross the ocean, accept her responsibilities and return as soon as might be to themselves. They were all gentle folk, living in conservative ways, with old homes and settled habits. They were a little annoyed that Isabel showed so much persistence in wishing to live in America, and they could not understand her enthusiasm for the Republic. Nevertheless, she had enthusiasm, and, accompanied by an aunt and a former governess, she reached the city of her great possessions, established herself comfortably in a large hotel, and began without delay to enjoy the crisp and stimulating atmosphere of this magnetic country.

On the steamer coming over, Isabel made the acquaintance of a group of people, who, as it happened, lived in the city to which she was bound. Among them were a clergyman and his wife and a brother, a young civil engineer, a trio who had looked beneath the surface of society and who were deeply impressed with the sadness and hopelessness of certain modern conditions. It is natural for acquaintance to mature rapidly on shipboard, and the ladies accompanying Isabel being accustomed to impose no constraint on her independence, she and Ralph Halstead knew one another better at the end of the fifth day on the Atlantic than they could possibly have done after six months of ordinary life on the land.

One evening they were pacing the deck in the moonlight, the man, as his wont was, talking with animation and energy on his favorite theme, and the girl listening with the sympathy that kindles conversation to a glow. After a while Isabel said, "Pardon me, Mr. Halstead, for hinting that I think the weak point in your argument is that you want to reform everything by wholesale. What a woman would do would be to clean house, to get at some little point where the need was great and the gloom dense, and let the light in there, and make a beginning in that way. Socialism, if I understand it, is making the mistake of attacking evils all along the line, instead of starting at foundations and quietly working up to improvement. The pick-ax would do more good here than the battle-ax."

The young man looked at her with admiration in his eyes. She was tall and slender, with a deep rose color in her cheeks and the charm of sweet expression that changed with every wave of feeling that passed over her face. He said nothing for a moment, and then replied, "If you will permit me, Miss Frazer, when we arrive at St. Francis, I will escort you to Martin's Alley. I don't know who owns the forlorn place, but I fancy anyone who likes may go in there and start a little missionary work. I happen to know about the spot because the firm that employs me has its headquarters not far away. The Alley is perhaps two blocks in length, and it has the most awful condition of affairs one can imagine, as bad as anything in East London. Misery, want and destitution reign. You have been so interested in the problems that beset us in America, and you are going to be, we hope, a permanent resident, so why should you not see what is to be seen in the city where you are going to live?"

Isabel's Visit to the Alley

"I accept your challenge," Isabel replied. "I will certainly go with you to this laboratory of wretchedness, and if I can I'll make a demonstration of what a woman can do when she is in earnest and is willing to try what may be done by lending a hand. Don't think for an instant that I underrate what you wish to accomplish, but when I hear the plans that you and some other of my friends urge so trustfully I feel as if you were dipping up the ocean with a bucket at the end of a rope."

"I'll show you Martin's Alley," he replied, and they said good-night.

Little did Isabel dream that this Martin's Alley was her own property. Quite as little did Ralph suspect the same fact. Had he done so, delicacy would have kept him silent. Of Isabel's wealth he, of course, knew nothing, and she herself had still to learn its extent and the possibilities it would put into her possession. But before she visited Martin's Alley in the company of Ralph Halstead, her eyes were opened. She was in haste to learn all that was incumbent upon her, and before she had been a month in St. Francis her lawyers had taken her all about the city and had shown her every bit of real estate that stood in her name. Last of all, they passed Martin's Alley. "You will not need," said the elderly gentleman, who in his courtly fashion was showing her about the city, "to spend any time in looking at that little court. Now that you are here, we shall lose no time in tearing down those rickety buildings and turning out the wretched set that have burrowed there. They are too poor to pay any rent to speak of, and have really been living on sufferance. The ground is valuable, and it will sell for a magnificent sum."

"What did you tell me the place is called?" asked Isabel.

"Martin's Alley. It isn't down on the map; the name somehow fastened on it ages back."

"Please stop the carriage," said Isabel, decidedly. "I must see this for myself. It is horrible to think that all along it should have belonged to me."

The old lawyer shrugged his shoulders. "Another of these modern girls," he said, under his breath, "full of ideas and hard on the bit. Evidently she will have her own way."

She said very little that afternoon, as with a friendly word asking pardon for the intrusion, she stepped from one dingy tumbled-down home to another, feeling that home was strangely misapplied to these noisome dens where men, women and children, discouraged, degraded and dirty, were closely crowded together; where crime and intemperance were in ambush. Her heart ached with pity. She grew paler and paler, and as they emerged into the open street, where the air was better than in the close court, the lawyer said, "Now you have been here once, you need never come again. It is positively not safe to visit that Alley without a policeman at your elbow."

Ralph Halstead had already called upon Isabel since her arrival in St. Francis, and the two elderly gentlewomen who chaperoned her were noticing with a little apprehension that she seemed pleased to have him come often. Aunt Evelyn had already satisfied herself as to his thorough respectability. The evening after Isabel's visit to Martin's Alley it happened that he called. Before he had time to utter more than the usual commonplaces of greeting, Isabel said to him impulsively, "I have seen that dreadful place that you told me of on the steamer. I have been there to-day. I went with my lawyer, not knowing anything about it. I am ashamed to tell you that the place belongs to me, but I am not to blame. I inherit under my grandfather's will, and I have never known, never, anything about such sin and misery, such want and anguish as I saw there to-day. I did not know that little children could be such spectres, or women look so starved." She sat down, burying her face on a cushion. Ralph knew that she was weeping. A moment he stood irresolute, then, bending over her, drew her hands from her eyes. He had never called her by name before, but now the barriers of custom and convention were suddenly broken, swept away on the tide of emotion. "Isabel," he said, "Isabel, it has not been your fault. You are an angel, and you shall do angel's work. You shall do it there. Oh, if only you would let me help you."

"Isabel!" exclaimed a shocked voice from the doorway, "what in the world is the matter?" Aunt Evelyn stood transfixed. The young people, however, aroused from their preoccupation, looked at her with a smile. Isabel's tears fled before the surprise in her aunt's glance. Ralph wisely said nothing, but his look showed no embarrassment. "I have been heart-broken, Aunt Evelyn," said Isabel, "over an appalling situation that has been at my door ever since I was born. Mr. Halstead knew the situation, but neither he nor I knew till to-day that I had anything to do with it. He has been trying to comfort me, to help me."

"But I still don't understand," insisted Aunt Evelyn, "why Mr. Halstead should—"

"Because," said the young man, boldly, "I am daring to hope that Isabel will let me help her in this and everything else during the rest of our lives." He had ventured all at a stroke. It was not what he had meant to do, but Isabel repaid him. "Yes," Aunt Evelyn," she said, "Ralph and I are going to help one another the rest of our lives." They stood hand in hand before the old lady, like two children. She crossed the room and took their hands in hers. "I will give you my consent," she said.

Continued on page 1056

The New Year in Martin's Alley

Continued from page 1055

Soon a New Year dawned for Martin's Alley. There was a house-cleaning there indeed. The old rickety houses were pulled down, but the tenants were transferred to other and pleasanter quarters. The work of restoration for the older men and women was long and discouraging, and some of the wrong that had been done was never undone, but for the mothers and the children, the boys and the girls, a new year opened, and when Ralph Halstead and Isabel Frazer were married, they built new homes for the poor in a breezy and healthful neighborhood, and this for the sake of their betrothal day, they christened Martin's Place.

Congo Cannibals

AN Italian naval surgeon, Dr. Baccari, who spent four years in the Congo Free State on a scientific mission (says a New York Sun correspondent), has just published a book about his expedition, which contains some interesting details about the customs of the natives.

Dr. Baccari says that the natives are cannibals simply because they like human flesh, and they eat their fellow creatures with the same indifference as we do animal food. A native who had been brought up by Europeans and taught to abstain from human flesh, complained one day to the local magistrate that some natives had eaten the body of his father, who had died a few days before.

"They have eaten it all themselves without giving a single piece to my family or even to me, who am his son," he said, and he asked for redress because he considered himself defrauded.

The wars between different villages are undertaken mostly with the object of procuring human flesh; hence prisoners are never exchanged, but always fattened and slaughtered. The victims never complain, in fact many consider it a treat to be eaten, owing to the fact that before being killed they spend two or three months in idleness and are well fed while others are obliged to work.

Women are not allowed to eat human flesh, at least none is given to them, but they like it as much as the men do, says Dr. Baccari.

Will Show the Book to Friends

Dear Dr. Klopsch: We received The Inside History of the White House, and think it simply great. Will show it to all my friends.

Mrs. JOHN DEWESTER.
Rushville, Ind.

"NO SEA IN HEAVEN"

"And there was no more sea." Rev. 21: 1.

REV. J. D. C. HANNA

(SOPRANO and ALTO DUET)

I. H. MEREDITH.

Expressively

1. In days of old, on Patmos Isle so dreary, When gath'ring shadows
2. The sea an emblem was of storm and trial, Its waters rest less,
3. From out the sea, weird myst'ry, deep, perplexing, A wak'ned doubts and
4. A-cross the sea, are shores with loved ones waiting, With whom in worship made all brightness flee;.....The loved disciple, sad in heart and weary, In vision ne'er from turmoil free;.....So life is full of strife and self-denial, But saints with fears that would not flee;.....Yet 'mid the darksome problems, sore and vexing, Christ's own tri-sweet we bow'd the knee;.....Tho' cruel waves dear friends are separating, We'll never cried, "And there was no more sea."..... home-ward look can say, "No sea."..... } No sea in heav'n! with joy we tell the umph-ant, still can say, "No sea."..... } No sea in heav'n!

CHORUS.

part in heav'n, for there's "No sea.".....

sto-ry, No pain nor death nor sorrow enters there;... No sea in dim.

heav'n! but life and love and glo-ry, For all who here the cross of Je-sus bear.

Copyright, 1908, by TULLAR-MEREDITH Co. BRITISH COPYRIGHT SECURED.

A New Year's Tribute. By Jennie Wilson-Howell

New Year's, 1909

GO forth, O HERALD, through another year;

Go spread the Gospel message far and near;
Go on thy glorious mission East and West;
Go North, go South, thou ever welcome guest!

Go with thy cheer, O HERALD, to our homes;
Go wheresoever the lonely wand'rer roams;
Go to the palace home, go to the cot;
Go ease the burdened rich, and poor man's lot.

Thy field is wide, O HERALD; and thy seed
Is precious, yielding fruit for every need;

The "oil of joy" thou bearest heals the smart;
Thy mine of gladness cheers the fainting heart.

White is the field, O HERALD, and the grain
Is ripening for the coming "latter rain."
Sound forth the call to reap, in trumpet tone,
And let thy voice be heard from zone to zone.

Go, CHRISTIAN HERALD! Still maintain thy stand,

And we, thine allies, will sustain thy hand;
Lift high the Cross of Christ (like Moses' rod),
And men shall "look," and shall return to God.

Descent of the Holy Spirit

By Mrs. M. BAXTER

WE have seen how the little band of disciples had been emptied of self. Even the forward Peter, even the doubting Thomas, were now occupied with praising and blessing God, although their cause might seem to the eyes of man a lost one. They were neither preaching nor healing. Their Master had left them, their enemies denied the resurrection of Jesus, yet, strong in faith, they gave glory to God, counting on Jesus' word against present surroundings and circumstances. And then it was that the blessing came. The day of Pentecost, the time of the offering of the first-fruits was fully come, and a new order of first-fruits had been offered. "Christ, the first-fruits" of the resurrection, had ascended into heaven, and now his disciples were "a living sacrifice" at his disposal. "They were all with one accord in one place." Here was blessed unity; here were no divided interests, and here God could bless. "And suddenly there came a sound from heaven as of a rushing, mighty wind, and it filled all the house where they were sitting. And there appeared unto them cloven tongues like as of fire, and it sat upon each of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and began to speak with other tongues, as the Spirit gave them utterance." This was their special need: commissioned to "go . . . into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature," they needed other languages, and the first instalment of the power of the Holy Ghost thus coming upon them, was the supply of this very need.

We may well believe that they were not long in going out into the streets as God's messengers to the multitude of the precious tidings of salvation. They had had no former experience of anything like this; it was a new thing—ignorant men who were too poor to buy a grammar, and too ignorant to study if they had one, speaking with fluency in other languages, and on a subject in which the terms employed could not have been picked up in the markets, or in the way of business! One and the same theme was heard from the hundred and twenty speakers in the sixteen languages mentioned; it was "the wonderful works of God."

The people "were in doubt, saying one to another, 'What meaneth this?'" These men were open to conviction, but there were others mocking; they did not like the subject of the discourse; it touched them too closely; they would put it down if they could do so. In order to bring reproach upon the God-filled men and women who were preaching, they said, "These men are full of new wine." Peter was the instrument used by the Holy Spirit to explain this occurrence, and he did it by bringing Scripture to bear upon the men and the circumstances before him; not by way of suggestion, but as the mouthpiece of the Spirit of God.

of the Spirit
M. BARTON even how not if d stated of no Peter
To man with prais
d, altho seem t st one. Th teaching Master enem
tion of the, they inst pro circumst was that
The time
of fruita new been first-on, but and, a a large was "T accord was ble
no dis
Ged
enly re a heav eighty the h thing. A the h as of and ne t ages ther as the missio to all the G ore," ages, an
the y Gh them, w very ne here the in g as G mudra gs-of rad in of an as a no en wi
a gran rant speak n other sulet impro pocket in the
and the four ments en lar it was orks doubt.
"What
se met on, but dange subject nished ould d proach
and edding er er y to this it by bear e dir-ut of the

The Old Year and the New

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

Good-By, Old Year!

SUPPOSE we sit by the waning embers to watch the old year out. The fire-light is still pleasant, although the flames have ceased to leap and sparkle. There is a deep, red glow at the heart of the hearth, but the ashes at the periphery are wan and gray. What a pleasant year this has been for most of us in the great CHRISTIAN HERALD family! We think with gratitude, as December days reach their ending, of the good times we have had at home, the happiness we have had in the children, the outlook before us, to greater prosperity in the future.

Who in America finds fault with strenuous work? Not one of us. When there comes a trying year, we simply brace ourselves to the task, toil a bit longer and later, and whistle a cheery tune, because we know that just a little farther on we shall reach a level road where everything will be smoother and we shall forget that we have had to travel over rough places. It is not our American way to grumble or despond, nor is there any reason why we should. Musing beside the waning embers we hear the clock strike ten, and we are thankful for the curly heads that lie asleep upstairs, for the rosy dreams the little ones have about the New Year, and for the good marks they have gained in school. Ten o'clock is often our bedtime, but to-night we linger. Husband and wife clasp hands, and as they look into each other's faces they read in the lines that have come since the wedding day a story of mutual faith, of confidence and of ever-growing love. The wife is more beautiful in the eyes of her husband, after twenty years or more or less of married life, than she was when he proudly claimed her as his bride. The husband is dearer far to the wife when they have climbed the hills and descended the dales of life together, than he was when she first pledged him her troth.

Can it be possible that eleven o'clock is striking? The embers are growing duller, but there are lights in the village homes and young people are passing to and fro on the street, the neighbors are up and about, and there is the sound of singing in the church on the green. Why not slip on overcoats and wraps and walk across the snow to the church home that means almost as much as the family home, and spend the hour till midnight in praise and prayer? Yes, that will be the very thing to do. It takes but a moment to get ready, and as we emerge from the door we meet our friends who live at the corner and our cousins from the Cross-roads, and we find that they have had the same thought. The last hour of watch-night shall find us in the sanctuary, and there, as the embers of the year fade to ashen gray, we shall feel in our hearts the golden promise of the New Year's rising sun.

Twelve o'clock strikes from the steeple. Good-by, Old Year, while we sing, joining hands,

"Praise God, from whom all blessings flow."

Manual Training in the Public Schools

The pupils in the public schools are being trained in the use of their hands. The boys are taught some elemental knowledge of arts and crafts, and the girls learn to sew and to cook. Teachers of domestic science have little difficulty in finding good positions. Instead of the former methods, in which the school training was limited to lessons found in text-books, we now have a variety of well-chosen subjects, a number of which touch daily life and tend to making the girls better home-makers, and to fitting the boys for entrance on the world of business. Manual training is quite as important in education as the training of the memory, or the reasoning powers, or of teaching language or history.

The Heroism of Fortitude

We are accustomed to think of a great soldier and strategist, such as was General Grant, as heroic at the council board and on the battlefield. We know how splendid is the courage of the man who is not daunted by any combination of dangers. The splendor of the heroes who kneel on the firing line thrills our blood to a quicker flow. There is another sort of heroism, that of the sick chamber, of the operating table, of the daily endurance of pain and weakness, without showing the white feather, without asking pity, without calling for sympathy. The reminiscences of the distinguished physician who stood with his colleagues beside General Grant in the last agonizing months, when his life was ebbing out beneath a hopeless malady,

THE SPINNING WHEEL

The picture is one that recalls an old-time industry. There are farmhouses in many parts of this country where people nightly sleep under blankets of home manufacture, spun, not by the women of to-day, but by those of a quite recent yesterday. The spinning wheel now stands in the parlor or the hall as an ornament, but not very long ago it was as familiar as the sewing machine. As for the cup of tea, it will never go out of fashion.

have shown us that here was a hero whose fortitude surpassed even his courage. The spectacle of the great soldier, finishing his memoirs while, drop by drop, beat by beat, his strength ebbed away, long ago touched the heart of the world. What Dr. Shady tells us of the man's marvelous patience, his rare self-control, his childlike obedience to orders, and his unfailing politeness reveals a still deeper nature, a yet finer character. Here, indeed, was a gallant gentleman, a true hero, triumphant over feebleness, over bodily anguish, and serenely acquiescent in the will of God. It were well for our young people to study this chapter in the life of General Ulysses S. Grant.

Aunt Prudence Payson's Catch-All

—AN OLD FASHIONED friend writes that germs were unknown in his childhood, and that people enjoyed better health then than they do now. Perhaps the germ theory was then unfamiliar, but germs existed just the same. I am inclined to disagree with him as to the general health rate of the past as compared with the present. I remember to have known many invalids who took for granted that they could never be entirely well when they had nothing particular the matter with them. Certain maladies that now yield to treatment, medical or surgical, were once considered incurable. The world moves, and we move with it. I fear we must accept the germs and be content to fight against them, and let the good and the bad ones fight each other.

All Hail, New Year!

DON'T let us wish anybody a happy New Year unless the wish comes straight from the heart to the lips. Don't let us omit to give the greeting to anyone we meet, if we can give it in sincerity. Whenever we say to a friend or acquaintance, "I wish you a happy New Year," let us proceed on our own part to make the wish come true. We shall never do this by going about with a long face and a look of gloom; we shall never do it by predicting misfortune and calamity; we shall always do it when we are cheery and hopeful and optimistic. No doubt, on every hand, there are obstacles to be surmounted and trials to be endured. All the winds of the world do not blow from the sunny South and the gentle West. Yet all winds that blow are good winds, and from whatever quarter they come they may bring us blessing.

Which of us has most deserved a happy New Year? Conscience sits on the judge's bench, and sometimes wears a frowning brow. Memory testifies against us, and from some bitter memories there is no merciful court of appeal; but Love is our advocate, and the best of it is that we need not wait for witnesses from the outside to speak for us, if we are conscious that even our mistakes and our shortcomings, our manifold sins of omission have been condoned by a loving motive.

If anybody deserves a glad New Year it is mother. With what unstinted tenderness she has cared for every one in the house! With what gentleness she has watched the babies and borne with the children when they were naughty, and comforted them when they had little troubles! With what wisdom she has guided the young people, and what a tower of strength she is day by day to that best of men that she calls husband and the boys call father! Many a time father would be completely discouraged were it not for the light of her smile that waits to greet him when he comes back, tired from the day's work. A Happy New Year to father and mother, the most self-forgetting, the most loving and beloved, of all the people in the world.

A happy New Year, too, to the dear old folk. Some of them have celebrated their golden wedding, others will have a golden wedding soon. Many of them are lonely in these days, recalling "the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that is still." Shall not the grandchildren do what they can to give the grandparents a joyous eventide?

Not long ago, in New York City, the venerable John Bigelow, hale and hearty, beyond his ninetieth year, gave a reception to his children and grandchildren. Octogenarians and nonagenarians are oftener met in these days than they used to be. A happy New Year to the old.

It should go without saying that we wish a happy New Year to the young. In their case the wish is almost superfluous, youth having so many assets of hope and gladness that it never ought to be touched by a single shadow. Sometimes youth fancies itself sad, and when this happens it is really much to be pitied. Not being a normal condition, it soon passes away unless it is involved in some subtle coil of broken health.

For young and old to-day let us all breathe a prayer God puts in our hearts: "Let the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, and the work of our hands establish thou it."

OUR MAIL-BAG

Questions and Answers

E. B. Bellefonte, Mo. 1. Is it not a fact that no mortal can know accurately what the future life holds for him? 2. In the event that aerial navigation is made practical in commerce, would it not be likely in time to seem as natural as the telephone now seems?

1. Beyond the assurance of a future life, which is revealed to us in the Scripture, nothing can be known. It was Christ's mission to save the world, and to "bring life and immortality to light." That the future life will be one of spiritual and intellectual progress, on a plane impossible here, seems probable. 2. With respect to the future of aerostatics, one conjecture is as good as another. While material advance has been made, we are still very far from the point where our knowledge can be turned to commercial uses.

Jessie B. Guthrie, Okla. What is the largest flower blossom known?

Scientists say that the vine plant known as the bolo, which is found in Mindanao, P. I., has a bloom as big as a carriage wheel. Dr. Schadenburg, while exploring on the mountain of Parag, 2,500 feet above sea level, found full-blown blossoms, five-petaled, three feet in diameter. A single flower weighed twenty-two pounds. The same species is found in Sumatra.

W. W. H. Buffalo, N. Y. In THE MAIL-BAG of November 25, 1908, replying to "G. N., New York," asking if it is lawful for a man to drop his last name and adopt his middle name because he dislikes his last name, etc., you reply very properly, "It would be a very unusual step for a man to take, and of doubtful legality," etc., and that "a legislative enactment is necessary to a lawful change of a man's name." This used to be so, but now a lawful change of name may be made by the County Court of the county in which a person resides, or in the City of New York by the Supreme Court or City Courts, upon petition to such courts, in accordance with the provisions of sections 2410 to 2415 of the code of civil procedure and without any application to the legislature.

Subscriber, Iowa. Is there any truth in the statements that Esperanto is not a success as an international language, that it contains too many flaws, and is to be supplanted by another language?

It is not true that Esperanto is being discarded in favor of another language. Some simplifications have been proposed. The simplified form is called "Ilo." If you learn Esperanto you can read any Ilo book at sight, it is so little different.

L. E. B. Orlando, Okla. What was the name of the Queen of Sheba?

The Arabs called her Bilkis, or Yelkamah, or Balkamah. There is an edifice at Mariaba which is said to still bear her name. M. Fresnel, an explorer, reads it as Almach or Balmach, and it is recorded the same way in the Himyarite inscriptions.

W. F. P., Norman, Okla. 1. Does God heal the body without the aid of a doctor or medicine in these days? 2. Does speaking in other tongues exist to-day?

1. That God does heal the body in these days is made evident from the number of well-attested cases of healing through prayer and faith. He has the same power that he always had. 2. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has already discussed the modern instances of "the gift of tongues," so-called. The test of genuineness, as the Church views it, is (1) the intelligibility of the message, which God always makes clear to men, since he is not the author of confusion, and (2) the nature and purpose of the communication. If the message be something no one can understand—mere gibberish, in fact—you can set it down as extremely doubtful.

Isabel W. T., Ohio. What is the beautiful star which rises in the early morning hours called? I have sometimes seen the Star of Bethlehem. If the moon is a burned-out, dead body as some astronomers claim, how does it reflect light?

It is the planet Venus. When the waves of light are not absorbed by any body of matter they are reflected. The moon absorbs only a certain amount of light waves from the sun, but a large percentage are reflected into space. We see the moon by its reflected light only, as it is not self-luminous. The fact that it is a dead world has little to do with its reflective power.

M. Van D., Grand Rapids, Mich. It has been stated there are 11,500 foreign missionaries. If so, how are they stationed: in what countries, and how many in each country?

The number given is probably within the mark. See our missionary editorial in issue of November 11, page 888. They are in all the missionary lands, the largest contingents being in China, India, Africa, Japan, Asiatic Turkey, South America and others in the Arctic regions, Burmah, Korea, the Pacific Islands, etc.

W. H. W., Edgewater, Col. 1. What is the Romanes Lecture to be delivered at Oxford University by President Roosevelt? 2. What is the degree of D.C.L., which was conferred on Emperor William by Oxford? 3. How many nations have signed the Arbitration Treaty, and was the United States the initiator?

1. The lecture or series of lectures are so called because the money for their support was given by a Mr. Romanes. We do not know that Mr. Roosevelt has announced the title of his lecture. 2. D.C.L. means Doctor of Civil Law. 3. Over thirty nations have signed the protocol. The United States did not start the idea, but was a strong supporter.

Reader, Virginia. When two persons are engaged to be married, and believe themselves to be intended for each other, according to God's teachings, are they married before God?

They are betrothed, simply. To be married, according to all civilized Christian usage, they should comply with ecclesiastical law as well as civil law. Such a union as you describe is not a marriage at all, and would be rightly condemned by society and the Church. Do not let anyone persuade you to listen to to apprentice a man as a stenographer, a writer of signs. Roman specimens of shorthand are yet in existence. It was called after a freedman of Cicero, named Tiro. This system remained in use until the ninth century, and charters of Louis the Pious were written in it. The credit of the revival belongs to Englishmen, in the sixteenth century. In 1602 was printed John Willis's Arte of Stenographie, on a full alphabetical basis. In 1660, the New Testament was printed in shorthand of the Rich system. Dozens of other variations followed. The best phonetic system is that of Sir Isaac Pitman, first published in 1837.

Old Subscriber, Athens, N. Y., and Reader, Schenectady, N. Y. What are the laws of New York State, if a man dies, leaving no will? Can a wife get more than a third if there are children? If the wife dies without a will, what are the husband's claims?

If a husband dies, leaving a wife and children and having made no will, the widow takes one-third of the personal property and the children two-thirds. Widow has use of one-third of the real estate while she lives. The real estate goes to the children, subject to the widow's use of one-third, which is called her "dower right." If a wife dies without a will, the husband takes one-third of her per-and Paul (in Heb. 6:20) cites him as a type of Christ. Without father or mother is meant to imply that he was of obscure, or, at all events, undistinguished parentage. His person, his office and his relation to Christ have given rise to innumerable discussions. Some early Jewish authors held that he was Shem, and not a few Christian writers have asserted the opinion that he was Christ in person; but Heb. 7:3 simply says he was "like unto the Son of God." Still others, with apparent reason, hold that he was a principal person among the Canaanites, and of the posterity of Noah, and distinguished for holiness and justice.

H. S. F., Alpine, Cal. From what standpoint are we to look at the act of giving? How are we to know as Christians, how much we should deny ourselves to give to good causes?

The real merit of a gift to charity lies not in the size or value of the gift, but in the spirit in which it is given. It should be given freely, gladly, cheerfully; not grudgingly or reluctantly. Again, our gift should be according to our means and opportunities as the Lord has prospered us. If our hearts are right and we feel that we owe all our blessings to our Heavenly Father's love and care, we will not stint our gifts. The gift that comes from abundance, while welcome, is not to be compared to the great gift of the widow who cast all she had into the Lord's treasury. A gift that goes deep down into pockets, until the giver feels it, no matter what its comparative size, is the best gift, since it represents real sacrifice and not merely a trifle from an abundance.

Miscellaneous

Mrs. A. B. Plattville, Wis. No such verse in the Bible.

W. B., Trenton, N. J. According to the Catholic Archbishop of St. Louis, Mgr. Glennon, there are 14,000,000 Catholics in the United States.

Mrs. E. J., Bellingham, Me. We have not seen the full text of the protest, but the facts, as we published them, are absolutely correct.

J. W. S., Fort Wayne, Ind. We are unable to answer your query. Write to the Secretary of the Treasury. You should have sent full address.

In regard to a recent query of J. A. M., Sewickley, Pa., a reader, W. A. R., of Beatrice, Neb., kindly sends the information that the frontiersman, Kit Carson, is buried at Taos, New Mexico.

Subscriber, Washington, D. C. What you ask would require a whole volume of theology to explain. See the articles on "Soul" and "Body" and "Spirit," in the Biblical Encyclopedia, in any good public library.

Northfield Daily Bible Course

NEVER has Bible study engaged such widespread interest as at the present time. A new interest has been awakened, extending to all classes of society and arresting the attention of college student and artisan alike. At the Northfield Christian Workers' Conference, last August, this interest was shown by the fact that an early Bible class, conducted each morning at 9 o'clock by the Rev. A. T. Pierson, was the most largely attended session of the day. In this class, Dr. Pierson did not undertake a critical or literary study of the Scriptures, but sought, in a simple exposition, to emphasize spiritual truths. At the close of the session, Dr. Pierson was requested to prepare these lectures for publication in book form, but instead of doing this he has prepared a series of Bible Notes for Daily Devotions, which will extend his Bible class throughout the year and will give a better opportunity for more extended and careful Bible study. This Bible course will begin with Genesis, and will appear in the Record of Christian Work, edited by W. R. Moody, East Northfield, Mass.

This magazine, which is published in the interests of aggressive evangelical work, also announces articles for the coming year by writers of international reputation in the religious world, including such men as Robert E. Speer, Dr. Campbell Morgan, Rev. F. B. Meyer, and other eminent Bible scholars.

Realizing that many of our readers may feel the need of just such Bible help for daily devotions as this magazine affords, and which we are glad to commend, we have made arrangements whereby any reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD may receive the magazine for a year by remitting to us 50 cents in addition to the yearly subscription price for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, or in addition to any of our premium offers or combination propositions.

For the titles and stories of the six beautiful pictures that constitute our superb "Art Gallery De Luxe," see back of each picture.

Meeting-Place of the First Turkish Parliament

TURKEY'S first National Parliament, under the new Constitution, assembled Dec. 17, in the Palace of the Ministry of Justice (P), overlooking the Sea of Marmora. It is a beautiful and spacious building and is only a short distance from the famous church of St. Sophia, once a Christian church, now a Turkish mosque. The four minarets of St. Sophia can be seen in the background.

such sophistries, which would invoke the name of God to consecrate an act you would regret all your life.

M. H. S., Fredonia, N. Y. How old was Solomon when he died?

Josephus, the Jewish historian says he reigned eighty years and lived ninety-four (Antiquities, Book 8, Chap. 7). The height of Mt. Moriah is not given.

N. R. R., Milford, Tex. 1. If dew and frost rise from the earth, why do we not have either when the nights are cloudy? 2. In your paper of November 25 is a picture of "The Great Ice Cavern." Where is it? 3. When was stenography first introduced, and by whom?

1. Dew is formed by the water vapor in the air, close to the ground, becoming condensed by the chilling influence of radiation. Part of the dew comes from the air, the rest from the earth and plants. At night evaporation stops in the colder air and then it takes the form of water, instead of passing off as mist. 2. The picture, "The Entrance to the Great Ice Cavern," is one of the illustrations, as are all the pictures on the same page, of the article, "Successful Exploration in Greenland." It is in Greenland, where all of the pictures were taken. 3. Stenography, in one form or another, goes back to a very early day. There is evidence that the ancient Greeks had some system. A piece of papyrus, of 157 B. C., found in Egypt, has a contract sonal property and her children two-thirds. If there are no children, husband takes all personal property of wife. The wife's real estate goes to her heirs, subject to husband's right to use all of it as long as he lives.

M. DeW., Maddock, N. Dak. Who was Nicholas Biddle?

There were two of the name famous in United States history. One was an American naval officer, hero of several brilliant sea fights; the other was a prominent financier and diplomat. He became President of the United States Bank in 1823.

Mrs. M. C., Mertens, Tex. How can I prove by the Bible that Noah was one hundred and twenty years building the ark? I have heard preachers say that he was.

See Gen. 5:32; also 6:3 and 67:6, 11. The preachers probably based their statement upon Gen. 6:3. Commentators, however, now generally interpret this passage to mean that the great ages of the antediluvians were to be shortened, and that the maximum of man's life was thereafter to be 120 years, instead of 600 to 900 years. It is a much disputed passage.

E. B. D., Ballard, Wash. Who was Melchizedek?

The name means "righteous king." He was the priest-king of Salem (see Gen. 14:18, 20), and is supposed to have lived about B. C. 2080. It was foretold that the Messiah should be a "priest after the order of Melchizedek,"

The Little Doctor

A New Serial Story Written for "The Christian Herald"

By AGNES LOWE ELLIS

SYNOPSIS OF PRECEDING CHAPTERS

George Hunter and Dudley Verner were college chums and are stopping at the country home of the former, before George is about to start practice as a lawyer and Dudley as a physician. George is introduced to Miss Danforth, daughter of Squire Danforth, who lives on the fine estate called "Paradise." Dudley is most anxious to meet her. A village character, Jack Green, takes them to see "Paradise." He says that they do not often receive company, but spend much time in travel. They there meet Miss Danforth at the well, and Dudley is introduced. A thunder storm comes up and the young men are invited to take shelter in the house, where they stay to dinner. As they leave, the Squire drives by on the way home. His daughter is surprised at his sudden return. She explains why the young men had been there. He says he is particular about his visitors, and asks her not to do more than recognize them hereafter. He says that he is going abroad and will take her and her aunt. They go to call on Mrs. Hunter and her niece Miss Sanborn. The Squire discovers that Mrs. Hunter is an old friend. On his return he tells Aunt Phoebe a family secret which greatly agitates her, but which she cannot tell Miss Danforth.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

"CHILD," said Aunt Phoebe to Marian, "I have a secret that I must keep, and I wish I had never known it. I feel as if I must tell some one, for relief."

"Does it concern you, auntie?"

"No, but it concerns some one whom I love very much, and I promised not to tell it."

"Then don't tell it; try to forget it."

"How can I forget it? Little do you know."

"Can you not sleep, auntie?"

"No, child, I cannot."

"Well, then, I am going to dress and stay to bear you company. No, not a word! Do you think I could leave you to wear out the night alone? I am going to read to you and I am sure it will do you good to have a little lunch. We retired very late and it is now one o'clock. Nothing takes away one's strength like want of sleep and talking, so away I go to get something to tempt your appetite."

"Marian, you shall not go downstairs at this unearthly hour. Some of the servants might take you for a burglar, and there is no telling what might happen."

"Not a bit of danger of that, dear; I shall go as quietly as a mouse, and no other sleeping rooms are near ours, so that I shall awaken nobody."

In a short time she returned with a tray filled with a tempting array of delicacies. On a small spirit-lamp she prepared a pot of chocolate, and poor Mrs. Langdon, although she declared she had never been in the habit of eating at such untimely hours, was persuaded to partake of a biscuit and a slice of cold chicken and to drink a cup of chocolate. In the meantime she said earnestly to Marian, "You will not mention this to your father, will you? He might think me foolish for telling you what I did, and for eating in the night."

Marian was ready to laugh at this, but she checked herself as she noticed the pale face and trembling hands of Aunt Phoebe. She wondered much what could so distress the poor lady, and if her father knew.

Mrs. Langdon was one of those peculiar persons who, while kind and thoughtful for the comfort of others, yet cannot find resources within themselves with which to encounter alone the stern realities of life. If it ever becomes necessary to confide a secret to their keeping, they are never happy until it is told.

Marian saw that her aunt was deeply wrought up about something, and she made up her mind to try to quiet her and draw her mind away from the painful subject that was driving slumber from her eyelids.

Having persuaded her to lie down on the couch, she took her hands gently in her own and in a low, sweet voice, sang one after another of her aunt's favorite songs. Then, drawing a late magazine toward her from the table, she read to her, until the weary eyelids closed and the gentle breathing told her that Aunt Phoebe's "secret" was for the time at rest. Quietly slipping from the room, she threw herself and I are to do nothing but rest and sleep the day before we leave home, and you will have two bright companions ready, I trust, to enjoy every step of the journey."

Just after they had left the breakfast table, a servant came to announce the arrival of Mr. Hunter and Mr. Verner.

Marian said, "I will just speak to them, father, and leave you to entertain them. Aunt Phoebe is needing me to cheer her up in view of the coming journey, which she seems to dread somewhat."

Her greeting to the young men was cordial enough to please them greatly, and she looked very sweet and bright in her fresh white morning dress. She was so free from self-consciousness or vanity that her manner seemed to them more charming than ever.

brings for the reaping of those near and dear to them."

The last preparations had been made; the splendid home was closed, and with one faithful servant for Mrs. Langdon's special benefit, the Danforths turned their backs on the quiet town of Branksome. In due time they arrived at the metropolis, and were soon on board the steamer which was to bear them to Glasgow. Among those who came to see their friends and relatives to say the last fond words—often to shed tears of regret at the parting which in some instances was to be forever—were, to the great surprise of the entire Danforth party, Mr. Hunter and his friend.

When Squire Danforth had told them, during their morning call, the name of the steamer, with the day and hour of her departure, he had no idea of seeing them in New York; but there they were, and he had to make the best of it.

They spent a merry half hour together, Squire Danforth assuring George that his cousin should receive one of the first letters which they should send back to America. As they shook hands at parting, he whispered to George, "Be good to your mother, my boy. She is a treasure beyond price." Then, as the two young men hurried off, he heaved a sigh of relief, mingled with a feeling of regret; relief that he had seen the last, for a time at least, of one of them; regret that the face of the other, would be hidden from his sight for so long.

Amid the waving of handkerchiefs from those on board and those on shore, the vessel steamed proudly out of the harbor. Little groups were standing here and there on her deck, and in some places a lonely passenger, all eagerly taking their final view of the land.

At last, the pilot had gone ashore in his boat; and soon they were out of sight of land and beginning to realize that they were really at sea.

When Aunt Phoebe and Marian went to their stateroom, they found a magnificent bouquet there, and Aunt Phoebe was much exercised as to whence it came; but a card, which bore the name, "Dudley Verner," had been slipped skilfully into the very centre, and was soon discovered by Marian. Upon this, she carried bouquet and card to the upper deck, where in a retired corner sat Squire Danforth, reading the morning paper.

"See here, father, I found this in my room!" she exclaimed.

"Well!" he remarked, "the assurance of the young fellow! Give it to one of the stewards, dear, and have him put it on our table, where we can all enjoy the beauty of it."

"That is a good idea," she replied.

"How did you leave Aunt Phoebe, Marian?"

"Oh, she was busy unpacking her steamer trunk, so as to have everything ready for to-night. I am glad she is busy now, for if the much-dreaded seasickness should come upon

Continued on page 1062

"The pilot had gone ashore, and soon they were out of sight of land"

self upon her own bed and was soon lost also in a dreamless sleep.

Squire Danforth wondered why Aunt Phoebe and Marian were so late in coming to breakfast, and even sent one of the servants to see if either of them were sick. Presently they made their appearance and Marian skilfully prevented Aunt Phoebe from betraying herself by saying, "We talked so much last night that we had to make up our sleep this morning."

The Squire said, "Well, I am glad you are both all right. We are to leave so soon now that I feared the delay that the indisposition of either of you might cause."

"Oh, never fear, father. We shall be in good trim for our journey. Auntie

When she excused herself "to go to Aunt Phoebe," a shade of disappointment was seen on their faces, but they summoned their best manners and wished her a pleasant and prosperous voyage. For a half hour longer they remained with the Squire.

After their departure he wandered up and down the long piazza as if in deep thought. Then he said half aloud, "I wish I had asked that young fellow something of his history, but it might have seemed an impertinence, and perhaps I should have betrayed myself. Ah, well! I must wait awhile. How little do those who go their own ways in this world heed whom they crush in their recklessness! They never think of the harvest that their folly often

Work of the Church Federation Council

THE significance of the first meeting of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, held in Philadelphia this month, lies in the simple fact that the officially accredited representatives of eighteen millions of communicant church members, and of a family constituency of more than half the population of the United States, have come together with the avowed purpose of making evangelical Christianity a united force for righteousness, for social justice, and for a high standard of family, civic and national life.

And what did they do? In the first place, they completed and perfected that organization by which the churches entering into this Federal Union have become as really and as potently one as are the several States that form the Union under which this country has become one of the great powers of the world. Many subjects were, however, discussed, the basis of all discussion being reports made as the result of special study by sixteen committees appointed by the Inter-Church Conference of 1905. The action of the Council on Co-operation in Foreign Missions was positive and constructive. Hitherto, the missionaries on the field have been far in advance of the churches at home in recognizing the harmfulness of preserving in non-Christian lands those denominational distinctions. These thirty-two denominations have now ranged themselves with their missionaries, and have put themselves on record as "favoring the closest possible federation of all Christian churches in foreign mission fields," and the formation in each country of "a native church without denominational distinctions peculiar to our historic development." By this action, vast sums of money and many lives are released from competing denom-national service to co-operating national service, and the work of world-saving greatly hastened. Like principles prevailed with regard to the home field. An invitation was extended to the recently formed Home Mission Council, representing the principal Home Mission organizations of this country, to join the Executive Committee of this Federal Council in devising practicable plans for "co-operating in the extension of God's kingdom, in order that over-churched communities may be relieved, unchurched communities supplied, and the cause of Christ find a new place of honor in the hearts of men."

One of the most important actions of the body was that defining the relations of the churches to those great interdenominational agencies which have become at once such a power in the land and in all lands, and such a problem to the churches. The great services these organizations have done in preparing the way for federation, and ultimately for church unity, was fully recognized; at the same time it is believed that the work of this Federal Council "will be so comprehensive as to make unnecessary the further increase in the number of such organizations." The very important ground was taken that henceforth "all organizations asking regular financial assistance from the churches be requested to file an annual statement of receipts and expenditures with the Federal Council, together with a brief outline of methods employed." The wisdom of this measure will be recognized by every church which has been bewildered by multiplied appeals for contributions to causes, perhaps really good, but into which neither the individual church nor the denomination had any right of investigation.

The crowning work of the Council was probably that taken with regard to the proper relations of the Church to modern industry. Dr. Frank Mason North presented a statement which Mr. Charles Stelzle characterized as the best utterance on the subject he had ever heard or read. The considerations presented were recognized as vital to the ministry if they could reach the educated workingmen of the country. The Council, by resolution, pledged itself to more fraternal and intelligent relations with the laboring people by adopting Dr. North's paper as a whole. That the laboring people of Philadelphia take this action at its face value was made clear when thirty-one workingmen's unions of the city accepted an invitation to a mass-meeting in this interest on Sunday.

Not less important was the action of the Council with regard to the problem of immigration. Action was taken recognizing that the present opportunity gives a unique demand for federate endeavor, and urging the churches in this Federal Union to arrange a plan of work which shall cover all the needs. Socialism is being actively preached among immigrants, while the churches are not even trying to reach them. Eight hundred Bohemian children in one American city are being taught an Anarchist catechism every Sunday.

Decisive action was taken concerning Sunday observance, temperance and disarmament. Provision was made for the expenses of a permanent office and for the extension of the work and influence of this Council. Bishop Hendrix, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, was elected president and Dr. E. B. Sanford, the father of the whole movement, was elected secretary.

LOUISE SEYMOUR HOUGHTON.

Millionaires See the "Bread Line"

PERSONAL contact with the Bowery Mission "Bread Line" is necessary to a full realization of its appalling needs and its splendid possibilities. No unbiased person can be present at this pathetic scene without feeling an overwhelming desire to do something toward remedying the social injustices which have resulted in thousands of men, through no fault of their own, being driven to a position where they must either commit a crime or die of hunger.

Unfortunately, the breakfast to homeless men, if it is to be used to the greatest advantage, must be given at an hour when all the possessors of a home are in the middle of their night's sleep, and, therefore, it is difficult to get people to see the facts and gain their information at first hand.

The criticisms which have been made upon the "Bread Line" have almost invariably come from those who have relied on hearsay evidence, or have drawn largely upon their imagination. On the other hand, men like Mr. Edmond Kelly, who is, perhaps, at present the greatest authority on the "tramp" question, have searchingly investigated the condition of the men for themselves and have been invariably impressed with the necessity for such an effort. Before writing his book on The Elimination of the Tramp, Mr. Kelly spent many nights in the "Bread Line," and in his preface says, "If anyone will take the pains to scrutinize these men, as he can while they file through the Bowery Mission for their midnight meal, and recognize that more than one-half of them are clearly self-respecting workingmen without employment, he will feel that he has no right to a moment's rest so long as he remains a party to the indifference that fails to furnish work for these men."

Of course, men who are utterly destitute, whose clothing is shabby and threadbare, who have not the means of keeping themselves clean, who never enjoy the luxury of having their face washed or their hair brushed, must inevitably have a "trampish" appearance, but anyone who takes pains to study the men, as they file into breakfast, cannot but see that Mr. Kelly's conclusion is a very just one.

Mrs. Francis Avery, of New York City, has for some time taken a great interest in the work of the Bowery Mission, and especially in the Free Labor Bureau, through whose instrumentality so many hundreds of men have been sent to country positions during the last twelve months. Mrs. Avery spent a considerable time in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office, overlooking the correspondence and the records connected with the Labor Bureau, and was much impressed with the possibility of solving a large portion of the difficulty of the unemployed in the cities through such an instrumentality. She has given much thought to the subject of transportation, which is the greatest difficulty of all, and although that difficulty has not been overcome she would be one of the greatest boons that could be conferred on hundreds of embarrassed farmers who need help, and tens of thousands of penniless men who need work.

For the purpose of bringing home the condition is full of hope, and believes that it is not an insuperable one. Free transportation for unemployed men, sent to bona fide positions in the country, of Bowery men to the minds of some of the leaders of the industrial world, Mrs. Avery brought a party to the "Bread Line" the other night, which included Judge Elbert H. Gary, president of the United States Steel Company; Captain J. R. DeLamar, a wealthy mining magnate, and others. No sooner had the door opened, and the men began to troop in, than Judge Gary and Captain DeLamar evinced the deepest interest in them. During the whole course of the breakfast, Judge Gary stood with his wife close by the serving table, and eagerly scanned the faces and appearance of the homeless men, while Captain DeLamar went into the middle of the crowd, as they partook of their coffee and rolls, questioning many of them as to their condition and speaking words of the heartiest cheer and encouragement. Mrs. Gary, Mrs. Avery, and her mother, Mrs. Clark, of Chicago, did their best by words of kind sympathy to cheer the workers, and before they left they signified their interest in what they had seen by leaving a very generous financial contribution to the fund.

It was a memorable occasion. The emphatic commendation of this work given by such able business men as Judge Gary and Captain DeLamar is a conclusive proof of the necessity for such a work, and of the business-like way in which it is carried on, while the fact that millionaires have come right down into vital touch with poverty, sorrow and distress in their direst form, kindles within us a hope that the day is not far distant when a remedy will be found for many of our social and economic ills.

JOHN G. HALLIMOND.

The Book That Mothers Love

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I am greatly pleased with premium, and also with the beautiful book, After Death, What? It is just the book that all mothers will love to read who have little loved ones in that beautiful, bright Beyond, and it affords me and others of my family much pleasure.

White Rock, Pa.

MARY A. SEIPLE.

Best Premium of Them All

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have been a subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for more than twenty years, and have received about all the premiums offered in that time. Each succeeding year seems to bring the best of all premiums, and this year is no exception, for I am more than pleased with the Inside Story of the White House, and think that every schoolboy and girl, man and woman, as well as every home, should be supplied with a copy of this most excellent work.

Wheeling, W. Va.

W. J. HUGGINS.

Copyrighted by J. and R. Lamb, New York

The Beecher Memorial Window

PLYMOUTH CHURCH, in Brooklyn, has just unveiled, with appropriate ceremonies, a fine stained-glass window to the memory of its famous pastor, Henry Ward Beecher. The picture-window shows Beecher as he appeared on the platform of Exeter Hall, in London, in 1863. The Beecher window is at the left of the Lincoln window, where President Lincoln appears holding in his hand the Emancipation Proclamation. The other window shows Henry Ward Beecher's sister, Harriet Beecher Stowe, the authoress; Mary Lyon, the educator and founder of Mount Holyoke College, and Emma Willard, the advocate of "improvement of female education" and foundress of the Troy Female Seminary.

GOD'S SPIRIT OUR HELPER

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON BY DR. AND MRS. WILBUR F. CRAFTS

WHILE as yet there was nothing made that is made, and while there was but a "deep," the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters, brooded over it as a dove with spread wings, as a bird hovering, and then there was light (Gen. 1:1, 2).

Long ago, in the upper room in Jerusalem, there was another "deep"—the souls of men and women. The Spirit of God hovered over them, and then descended, and Light was. Light which rested upon each head, and illumined it, became as it were a tongue of fire. In picture-writing God was saying to them, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." After this manifestation it could not have seemed strange to the Apostles that they were able to tell the mighty works of God to Romans, Cretans, Arabians, Parthians, Medes, Elamites, Mesopotamians, and, in fact, to every man in his own language wherein he was born. But it did astonish those who heard them speak, because they had not shared in the upper room experience. Claims have been made by some persons in our day of a miraculous gift of tongues, but when they went among those to whom they wished to preach they found that they were not understood! Shall we say, therefore, that the power of the Spirit is less now than then? No, for behold even a greater miracle than Pentecost; it is the Bible translated into more than five hundred languages, so that every man may not only have the Gospel in his own tongue, but he may read it as well, and keep it in his home. Viewed in this light, there is nothing more interesting to read about than the work of the Bible Society, and the movements of colporteurs, men who carry Bibles to sell in all lands. Some of their experiences are as thrilling as those we find in fiction, and more to be desired, because they are true.

On the Day of Pentecost

"And when the day of Pentecost was come." There were two great annual festivals among the Jews: the Passover and Pentecost. At the Feast of the Passover the lamb was slain, at the Feast of Pentecost the law was given. On both occasions there were large national gatherings in Jerusalem. "Coincident with the slaying of the lamb was the death of Christ; coincident with the giving of the law was the descent of the Spirit" (Arnot). The Feast of Pentecost occurred during the latter part of May.

"They were all together in one place" where they had been for ten days, the apostles and other friends of Jesus, numbering about one hundred persons; for Jesus had said to them just before he was taken up, "Tarry ye in the city until ye be clothed with power from on high."

"And suddenly there came from heaven a sound as of a rushing mighty wind." But it does not say there was a wind, or that the house was shaken by a wind.

"And there appeared unto them tongues parting asunder, like as fire." It was not fire, it did not burn, "it sat upon each one of them." It was like the Shekinah light by which God had manifested himself during the journey of the Israelites to the Promised Land. It was like the glory of the Lord which shone between the cherubim in the holy of holies. It was like the fire which filled the bush which Moses saw, glowing but not consuming.

"They began to speak with other tongues." It was a new revelation of lips touched with fire by the Lord. This power came upon them early in the day, for we are told in Acts 2:15 that it was the "third hour," nine o'clock in the morning.

"The multitude came together and were confounded." They had heard the sound like of the wind and were confused, because they saw no destruction which usually follows a heavy wind.

"They were all amazed and marveled" when they heard unlearned men freely using all languages and speaking of the mighty works of God. Before this day of Pentecost we read that the apostles had received the Spirit in some measure (John 20:23).

A Blackboard Hint

From the book entitled The Oriental Christ, we get the following illuminating thought:

"The great, ultimate object of Christ's sonship is to develop it in all humanity. Christ is only the Way, but what force is it that can lead mankind through the way to the end? This is the Holy Spirit. Keshub, the then president of the Brahmo Somaj (the Worshipping Assembly) of India, says: 'Here you have the complete triangular figure of the Trinity—three profound truths: the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. Look at it with the eye of faith and study its deep mathematics. The apex is the very Jehovah. Alone in his own eternal glory he dwells. From him comes down the Son in a direct line, an emanation from divinity. Thus, God descends and touches one end of the base of humanity, then, running along the base, permeates the world, and then by the power of the Holy Ghost drags up regenerated humanity to himself. Divinity coming down to humanity is the Son. Divinity carrying up humanity to heaven is the Holy Ghost. This is the whole philosophy of salvation. Such is the short story of human redemption. The Father continually manifests his wisdom and mercy in creation. God coming down and giving up, this is creation, this is salvation.'"

An Illustration from Nature

The sun's lifting power: Flammarion, the French astronomer, recently laid before the Astronomical Society of Paris some interesting facts concerning the attractive influence of the sun in the vegetable world. M. Flammarion has made numerous experiments establishing the fact that this power is able to act with great force on the direction of leaves and flowers (of which the sunflower is a notable instance), and even of branches and whole trees. In the grounds of the Juvisy Observatory a tree was once raised to an upright position by the action of the sun alone. It was a chestnut tree that the wind had overthrown against a wall. The roots penetrated anew into the soil and became firmly fixed there. The sun righted the tree little by little. It was said that the progress of the raising was noted year by year, due solely to the attractive force of the sun's rays. Far more wonderful than this is the power of the Holy Spirit to lift fallen men and women until they stand in moral uprightness, even "unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ."

Give me the man soul, God—pure, brave, serene—
To meet these days,
Ready to walk, head high, with firm, sure tread,
The year's strange ways!
I would be soul poised, great in gentleness,
Gentle in power,
Rich in self-giving, pouring life and love
Into each hour.
Help me to sing and fight, not weep and cower,
When blows fall fast;
Patient to bear, strong to endure—thy son,
True to the last.
Let me live grandly, seek the things that last,
Press toward Love's goal;
Win jewels, fame! Nay, better, when earth's past,
Stand a crowned soul!—H. H. TWEEDY.

An Illustration from Science

A curious discovery was made by the telegraphers in the little island of St. Pierre. There are two telegraph stations on the island; one worked by an American company, which receives messages from Newfoundland, and sends them on to Sidney, using a powerful battery and the ordinary Morse signals. The other is worked by the French Transatlantic Company, who employ exceedingly delicate instruments in receiving messages from Brest and Duxbury. These very sensitive instruments were found to be seriously affected by earth currents, which interfered very much with the working of the line. It was discovered that these earth currents were due in part to the operations of the powerful battery of the American telegraph company; that battery, every time it was used, actually charging as a Leyden jar the whole little rock island of St. Pierre. And it was found by a proper distribution of the French instruments every word sent over the American line could be made to leave its fac-simile with the French company, and this, too, through two little lines nowhere coming within several hundred yards of each other, the only connection of the two being through the earth. Behold a greater wonder—a soul charged with the Spirit's power until his face and body and disposition and home life and business life and social life, all feel the transforming, ennobling power of the Spirit's indwelling. And, touch him where you will, in all the phases of his life, you will find God's name and nature written upon him. May our lives be thus transfigured by the Spirit!

Jesus spoke to his disciples of the spiritual bread that he had to eat which they knew not of, and they asked if any man had given him ought to eat? (John 4:32-34.) When the Spirit had quickened the apostle's perceptions, they knew what Jesus meant by the well in the heart and the soul's bread, and the spiritual birth. An hour of Pentecost taught them more about these higher spiritual truths than years of study without the Spirit could have done.

For the titles and stories of the six beautiful pictures that constitute our superb "Art Gallery De Luxe," see back of each picture.

Short, But to the Point

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The book, Inside Story of the White House, received, and am much pleased with it; it is "all right." A. E. TURGE. Ida Grove, Ia.

A Stunning Christmas Gift

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Your great premium book, The Inside History of the White House, is three times as beautiful in every way as I had anticipated. The profuse illustrations are wonderfully artistic and interesting. I bought this book for a Christmas present, and am satisfied that I have chosen a stunning gift. F. R. FAIRMAN. New York City.

An Advantage Worth Considering

5%
BECAUSE you cannot always accommodate your needs to a fixed "interest day" you often lose the earnings of your money for longer or shorter periods. From the day we receive the funds to the day you withdraw them, you receive full earnings.

We Pay 5% A YEAR

Earnings are credited by check quarterly, semi-annually, or compounded if desired. Our business is UNDER SUPERVISION OF NEW YORK BANKING DEPARTMENT and subject to examination regularly by same.

Estab. 16 years. Assets, $1,800,000

Write us for full particulars and names of patrons, some of them probably in your locality

INDUSTRIAL SAVINGS AND LOAN CO.

2 Times Building, New York.

LITTLE BEAUTY NIGHT LAMP

Once tried with kerosene it will burn for 40 hours and is absolutely odorless. Ornamental, too, for its harmonious construction of brass, nickel plated, and on a lamp is provided with enough glass to last several years. The lamp can be used in hallways, closets, and is invaluable for Nursery and sickroom.

Ask your dealer or by mail, post paid 65c. Agents wanted

65c. SILVER & COMPANY

320 Hewes St., Brooklyn N.Y. Trade-Mark Registered U.S. Patent Office

THE FAMOUS EVANGELIST'S NEW HYMN BOOK

GIPSY SMITH

Ed. of HALLOWED HYMNS

By I. ALLAN SANKEY

35c. a copy, postpaid. $25 per 100

Returnable Sample mailed to Pastors, etc.

THE BIGLOW & MAIN CO., CHICAGO NEW YORK

$10 PER WEEK EASILY EARNED AS A DAY PIANO TUNER

The Tune-A-Phone Does It
We will teach you Piano Tuning, Voicing, Regulating and Repairing quickly by personal instruction. New Tuning Machine, Note and Mediant aids. Diploma awarded by highest authorities. Special chartering in State. Write for free illustrated catalogue. Miles Bryant School of Piano Tuning, 64 Music Hall, Battle Creek, Mich.

PULPITS

Platform Chairs, Sunday School Seats, Collection Plates, Church Pews, School Desks, Opera Chairs, Lodge and Bank Furniture, Office Desks. Ask for Catalog by number only C112 Church Pews, School Desks S112 S112 Lodge Furniture, Opera Chairs O112 B112 Bank Furniture, Office Desks D112 E. H. STAFFORD MFG. CO., CHICAGO

Occupations for Women

By FRANCES E. WILLARD

500 pages; illustrated. Regular Price, $3.75.

SPECIAL PRICE, $1.00, all Charges Prepaid.

P. B. Bromfield & Co., Bible House, New York

OLYMER BELL

UNLIKE OTHER BELLS SWEETER, MORE DURABLE, LOWER PRICE. OUR FREE CATALOGUE TELLS WHY. Write to Cincinnati Bell Foundry Co., Cincinnati, O.

BIBLE STUDY BOOK—FREE

A Complete Synopsis of Bible Study of about 1000 to all students of the Word. Sent free of charge to SCOFIELD BIBLE CORRESPONDENCE SCHOOL Room 926, 150 Nassau Street, New York

PRAYERS

For Public Worship, Private Devotion and Personal Ministry. A Complete Guide to Devotion. This book is helpful to all, for it contains a full, gold stamp, postpaid to any address, $1.00. M. E. Munson, Pub., 77 Bible House, New York

PATENTS

SECURED OR FREE RETURNED. Free report as to Patents. Evans, Wilkins & Co., Washington, D.C.

WHAT SHOULD BE KNOWN BY EVERY YOUNG MAN

Publisher, P. O. Box 756, Haverhill, N.H.

25 RICH Colored POSTALS 10c

Agents furnished steady employment. Send order to The Cutler Co., 220 N. Franklin St., Chicago

GRADUATE COURSES AT HOME

Write Pres. C. J. Burton, Ph.D., 1000

ional Sunday School Lesson for Jan-09. God's Spirit Our Helper, Acts 1:1-17. Text: "I will pray the Father, He give you another Comforter, that He be with you forever, even the Spirit John 14:16, 17.

A COURSE IN ESPERANTO

LESSON No. 26—By Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THE following lesson in the form of an address to Dr. Zamenhof, the founder of Esperanto, sets forth the present condition and outlook of the movement:

Esperanto in Diplomacy and Peace Ten Years Hence

DOKTORO ZAMENHOF, ESTIMATA SINJORO: Tre strange ŝajnas al ni ke diplomatiistoj antaŭ nur dek jaroj ne estis rekonintaj tion, kion ni ĉiuj nun ŝatas; ke Esperanto estas la lingvo por diplomatio. Se iu ajn el la naciaj lingvoj estus la oficiala lingvo, la Angla havis la plej fortan pretendon, ĉar ĝi estis uzata de pli granda nombro da personoj ol la Franca, aŭ iu alia lingvo. Tial ke ĉiuj lingvoj havas nesciecajn ŝanĝojn, multajn sonojn por la samaj literoj, kelkaj progresemaj diplomatiistoj argumentis ke ni ĉiuj devus elekti Esperanton kiel pli simplan ol la aliaj, kaj korpigintan science la plej bonajn elementojn de ĉiuj. Tiu ĉi argumento estis fortigita de la rapida alprenado de Esperanto kiel la lingvo de internacia komerco. Tio faris necese ke ĉiu ambasadoro, ministro kaj konsulo havu en sia oficejo iun kiu legas kaj skribas Esperanton. De tiu estis nur paŝo al la alprenado de Esperanto kiel la diplomacia lingvo, unue en Hago, ago helpanta harmonion kaj pacon. Rapide ĝi disvastiĝis ĝis kiam la grandaj nacioj konsentis ĝin uzi ĉie.

Kosto granda de tradukistoj, ankaŭ multaj malkomprenoj estas forigitaj per la nova plano, kiu ebligas ke ambasadoroj diskutu fronti-kontraŭ rilate al la plej malsimplaj problemoj. Certe tio ĉi estas la plenumo de via celo kiam vi fondis la internacian lingvon: alkonduki la naciojn al paco per pli bona interkonsento.

Via deziro komence estis igi Esperanton dua lingvo por internacia komunikado, sed multaj personoj komencas esperi ke ĝi en kelkaj generacioj elpuŝos la Babelon de malsciencaj lingvoj. Ĉiuokaze via estas jam la lingvo de internacia komerco, de diplomatio, de vojaĝado kaj de internaciaj kunvenoj, kaj kaŭze de ĉio ĉi Esperanto estas potenca faktoro en la paco kaj evangeliigado de la mondo.

Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts will conduct another course in Esperanto, beginning with January, 1909, in The Esperanto Student, published at Rutherford, N. J., price 50 cents a year.

The Fifth World's Esperanto Congress

It is to be held in Barcelona, Spain, and the Sixth Congress will probably be held in the United States in 1910.

There will be a Second American Esperanto Congress at Chautauqua the last week in August, 1909, in which all CHRISTIAN HERALD Esperanto students are urged to co-operate. Communicate with Mr. E. C. Reed, General Secretary, Esperanto Association of North America, 3981 Langley Avenue, Chicago, Ill.

As this is the last lesson in our course, it is now in order to give

Advice to Students for Continued Study

You should possess two dictionaries—Esperanto-English by A. Motteau, 60 cents, and English-Esperanto by J. C. O'Connor and C. F. Hayes, 60 cents, or the English-Esperanto Dictionary by Rhodes, $2. M. Privat's book, Esperanto in Fifty Lessons, is the best aid for learning to talk Esperanto (cost fifty cents). The Grammar and Commentary, by Cox, provides a critical study of Esperanto, and is invaluable for advanced students, as is also Fruictier's Esperanta Sintakso, wholly in Esperanto (cost, forty-five cents). The Krestomatio, edited by Dr. Zamenhof, is the standard Esperanto book; one can hardly be considered furnished who does not possess a copy of it (cost, paper, $1; cloth, $1.50). Every CHRISTIAN HERALD student should have a copy of the Gospel by St. Matthew (Sankta Mateo) translated into Esperanto from Luther's Bible (cost twenty-five cents). Delightful for translation is The Golden Fleece, Hawthorne, (cost twenty-five cents). Beyond these are Julius Caesar (cost 60 cents), Hamlet (65 cents), Aeneid of Virgil (cost $1), Farano, a beautiful Egyptian story.

Every Page Fascinating

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I have just received your wonderful premium book, the Inside History of the White House, and consider it the handsomest book I have ever had from you. The illustrations are superb, and every page is fascinating! I could not lay it aside till I had read every word of it.

New York City. I. OGDEN.

THE LITTLE DOCTOR

Continued from page 1059

her, she will be able to think of nothing else. Poor Aunt Phoebe! Why will she not take a more cheerful view of life? Do you think she was always so, father?"

"Yes, she always managed to find thorns among her sweetest roses. Uncle John was entirely different. I always admired his patience and cheerfulness."

"No wonder then that she is always sounding his praises. Poor auntie! I must be very good to her."

"Yes, dear, she has met with a sad loss. Uncle John was one of the kindest and best of men and she misses him sadly. She has been a dear, kind friend to both you and me, and we owe her much gratitude. And now, Marian, do you remember promising to keep a journal during our travels?"

"Yes, father, and now I am off to make my first entry in it."

Squire Danforth was a true lover of the sea. He loved it when it was calm and smiling, and the vessel glided on like a majestic swan, sailing smoothly, with outspread wings, over its shining waves; and he loved scarcely less to walk the deck when she was being driven by fierce winds and was rolling from side to side. Now, as a brisk breeze began to blow, he rose and began to pace up and down. The wind tossed his hair about, and it was all that he could do to keep upon his feet. He laughed to himself at the thought of Aunt Phoebe's remarks if she were with him.

Then it occurred to him to go and find Marian and inquire how the old lady was coming on. He looked in every quiet corner, on deck and in the music-room, but she was nowhere to be seen. At last he made his way to their stateroom, and when, in answer to his tap, the stewardess told him to come in, he found both of the ladies unmistakably seasick.

We will allow Marian in her letter to Miss Sanborn to tell her experience of this first day at sea.

CHAPTER V

"GLASGOW, Scotland, July 11, 18—

"MY DEAR MISS SANBORN:

"According to promise, I write at once to give you a history of our ocean trip. I hope it may interest and amuse both yourself and your aunt, Mrs. Hunter, who, I trust, is improving in health.

"The morning we sailed from New York harbor was bright and beautiful, with just enough breeze blowing to give one a taste of the salt sea.

"After dinner, leaving Aunt Phoebe busy in our stateroom unpacking the articles that she thought we should need on our voyage, I went up on deck to my father. He reminded me that I had promised to keep a journal so that we might be able to refer to it and recall place and date, when speaking of any incident of our journey.

"I seated myself in a quiet corner and had just written, 'Saturday, June 30. Left New York at nine o'clock this morning, when the brisk breeze, that is always a delight to a good sailor like my father, began to blow. The waves showed their white caps and the vessel began to pitch in a rollicking manner, as if to show its delight at being far away from the shore, going, as the old song says, 'merrily o'er the waves.' Then a strange sort of sensation came over me, down went note book and pencil, and I began my first experience of real seasickness.

"Truly it is something that must be felt in order to be understood. No pen can paint a picture of it!

"I hurried to my stateroom and found Aunt Phoebe in a most pitiable condition, with the stewardess in distress, not being able to influence her to either do or take anything she advised.

"The next two days we kept our room in comparative comfort, and on the morning of July third we were able to go on deck and rest in our easy chairs, enjoying the beauties of the sea and air and sky. My father was in a very happy mood and it did us good to look at him.

"On this morning, a committee who had been appointed, in view of the number of American passengers on board, to prepare for celebrating the 'glorious Fourth' in a becoming manner, were busy drumming up recruits to take part in the ceremonies. I was happy—declining any public performance—to be able to supply a lacking verse for the 'Star Spangled Banner.'

"The dining-room was prepared for the celebration of the Fourth, both British and American flags being used in the decorations in honor of the representatives from both countries on board.

"There were songs, speeches, recitations, and a humorous oration, making the evening pass away pleasantly; but the crowning feature was the closing song—'America.'"

To be continued

Again "More Than Pleased"

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The World Famed Stories and Legends, by Hamilton W. Mabie, came duly to hand, and I am more than pleased with it. Kindly accept my thanks for same.

HENRY W. UNGER,
Buffalo, N. Y. (Life Subscriber).

Called Higher

Mrs. A. E. Crocker, of Milford, Calif., died at the age of sixty-six years. She was a constant reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Mrs. Matilda Morin, of New Richmond, O., departed this life May 30, in her ninety-second year. Her life was full of good works.

Died at her home in Cedar Falls, Ia., on September 19, 1908, Mrs. R. Dexter. She was seventy-eight years old. A lover and reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Entered the higher life, Mrs. Nellie Sprague, of Muskegon, Mich. She was an active worker in the Baptist Church, and long a reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Lucian Leroy Morris went to his heavenly home the 17th of August, 1908, aged twenty-five years. He was the son of Frank Morris, of Troup, Tex. He was a member of the board of deacons of the First Presbyterian Church, Tyler, Tex., and at twenty years of age he was elected superintendent of a Sunday School near Corpus Christi. He loved to read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Lawrence Watson, of Bradford, N. Y., left for his heavenly home at the age of eighty years. He was a soldier in the late war, and gave his heart to God as he lay on the battlefield. He promised God then and there if he would spare his life he would serve him as long as he lived, which promise was faithfully kept. He had taken THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for a great many years and looked forward with pleasure to its weekly visits.

Called to her reward, Mrs. Margaret Foote, of Elizabeth, N. J., at the age of ninety-four. She was the daughter of John and Sarah Whitehead, and the widow of Thomas Jefferson Foote. She was of old American stock, her grandfather having lost his life in a skirmish with the English troops near Scotch Plains. Mrs. Foote was for years a faithful member of the Presbyterian Church. She was a great reader and next to her Bible she loved to read THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Her memory was good until the end, and she could remember when de Lafayette passed through Elizabeth on his way to the tomb of Washington.

Mothers, Be Cautious

In selecting a food for the baby don't experiment. Baby can't stand much experimenting. Borden's Eagle Brand Condensed Milk is acted upon by the infant stomach substantially the same as mother's milk. For 50 years it has made glad mothers and started thousands of babies on life's journey with health and happiness.

6% Bonds

Security 400% New York Real Estate

DENOMINATIONS, $100 UP.
Interest Semi-Annual Guaranteed

STOCK

FULL OWNERSHIP PROFITS

Ask for Booklet 14

New York Realty Owners

(Incorporated 1896)

ASSETS $3,000,000.00

489 Fifth Avenue, New York City

FERRY'S SEEDS

Ferry's are best because every year the retailer gets a new supply, freshly tested and put up. You run no risk of poorly kept or remnant stocks. We take the pains; you get the results. Buy of the best equipped and most expert seed growers in America. It is to our advantage to satisfy you. We will. For sale everywhere. Our 1909 Seed Annual free. Write to

D. M. FERRY & CO.,
Detroit, Mich.

Trade Mark
Free Sample. Write Dept. B-11
Lamont, Corliss & Co., Agents, 75 Hudson St., N. Y.

"I MADE $12 PER DAY"
Selling This 7-Piece Kitchen Set
From sworn statement of H. S. CUNNINGHAM.
AGENTS
are coining money. Claude H. Rogers sells 500 every week. You can do it. Send your address today and let us PROVE IT. Experience unnecessary. We show you how to make $3 to $10 a day. OUT-FIT FREE to workers.
THOMAS MFG. CO.
428 Home Bldg.
Dayton, Ohio

Deafness
"The Morley 'Phone'"
A miniature Telephone for the Ear, invisible, easily adjusted, and entirely comfortable. Makes low sounds and whispers plainly heard. Over fifty thousand sold, giving instant relief from deafness and head noises. There are but few cases of deafness that cannot be benefited.
Write for booklet and testimonials. THE MORLEY CO.,
Dept. E, Perry Bldg., 16th and Chestnut Sts., Philadelphia

9 CORDS IN 10 HOURS
RUNS EASY No Backache weighs only 41 lbs. SAWS DOWN TREES
BY ONE MAN, with the FOLDING SAWING MACHINE. It saws down trees. Folds like a pocket knife. Saws any kind of timber on any kind of ground. One man can saw more timber with it than 3 men in any other way, and do it easier. Send for FREE illustrated catalog, showing latest IMPROVEMENTS and testimonials from thousands. First order secures agency. Address FOLDING SAWING MACHINE CO.,
158-164 E. Harrison Street, Chicago, Illinois.

Ideal The Low Priced Standard Incubator
25 years of experience in it. Tried and proven. Makes results certain. Send for great free book, "Poultry for Profit." 128 pages, practical, reliable. Worth dollars for fine pictures alone. Free. Send today to J. W. Miller Co., Box 179, Freepor

* Young People's Societies *

For Us Who Are Lost*

THE old idea of "salvation" was too apt to be confined to salvation from eternal suffering. The idea of to-day is a different and a truer one, although it involves the other. It is that Jesus came to save us from sin, not, primarily, from punishment. Sin is the great foe of mankind. It is sin which, whenever civilization has gained foothold and momentum in any country, has crept in and torn it all down. Only righteousness can exalt a nation.

Men found this out very early in history, as the wonderful hieroglyphic tablets, constantly unearthed, clearly indicate. And yet men so love sin that they hug it to their hearts—cannot give it up—have not patriotism nor principle enough to resist it, and down they go.

Herrmann, the great philosopher, lays especial stress upon personal communion with Christ in prayer, as the great means of availing ourselves of his saving power. "The religious life of the Christian," he says, "is inseparable from the vision of the personal life of Jesus. That vision must be the Christian's constant companion."

That vision cannot come without prayer, and it is only by such realization that we are enabled to grasp his hand and let him save us when the

Hosts of sin are pressing hard
To draw us from the skies.

Men used to think that by shutting themselves away from the world, they could the better resist sin. Among the monks and ascetics were developed many beautiful and godlike characters. St. Francis, Savonarola and Luther might never have been able to do their great tasks but for the long brooding and the concentration made possible by their partial retirement from the world.

But the modern idea of the conquest of sin is different from this. It is true that man must often leave the "madding crowd." He must pray daily in solitude. He should read and think daily in solitude. But his main work must be done as he fights its battles shoulder to shoulder with his fellows. And his chief thought must be for them, not for himself. How can I help? How can I save? How best can I imitate the Master's example of service? These are the questions with which the conscientious Christian of to-day is most concerned; and while he is losing his life for others, he is saving it for himself.

"Is it best to aim at uprooting one special sin?" one asks; "or, should we scatter our fire all along the line?"

Well, perhaps one should do both. The special "besetting" sin is the one most likely to overpower us. We are so used to it that we commit it without thinking.

We must watch for it, lie in ambush for it, beat it, cut it out, show it no mercy.

Still, we must not allow other sins to creep in while we are fighting Behemoth. There is no rest for him who has girded on the armor of the great General; but the conflict is blessed, and he is leading us on.

There is great strength in the constant thought of this help of God. The poet Lanier, when he wrote of "The Marshes of Glynn," nobly expressed this feeling:

As the marsh hen secretly builds on the watery sod,
Behold, I will build me a nest on the greatness of God,
By so many roots as the marsh grass sends in the sod,
I will heartily lay me a-hold on the greatness of God.

And thus cometh salvation from sin through Jesus Christ our Lord.

* Topic of the Epworth League for Sunday, January 10, 1909. Texts: Matt. 1: 21; Eph. 1: 7; Acts 4: 12.

Living For Eternity*

ONE of the most distinguished men in America; for years a professor in a great university; the friend of more among the great men of foreign countries, perhaps, than any other American who has ever lived, has lately died without the hope of immortality. His eyes were holden. He saw nothing but this poor, sordid, imperfect existence. The faith which removes the mountain which rises between us and our Father found no place in that strong but hopeless soul. "It might be—but he saw no proof." This was his best and highest vision.

But as we look at the sad stumbling, the baffling, the hard knocks, the disappointments, which beset humanity on every side here below, it is only the great thought of eternity, and the soul's progress there, which gives to this present existence any real dignity and grandeur. Without it, what are we? Mere pitiful gnats of a day—creatures seeing through a glass darkly—soulless possessors of a diseased, imperfect, short-lived body, whose highest happiness is to "eat, drink and be merry." What a mean and contemptible conception beside the glorious Christian ideal of the redeemed; which makes this life merely a stepping-stone to a nobler one; denying self, choking out hate and lust and covetousness and falsehood, in order to be like the citizens of the eternal kingdom and its spotless Ruler; and entering at last into the joy of eternal communion with him, face to face.

Clement of Alexandria voices the thought of the loving Christian of all ages when he cries in the ecstasy of worship, as he looks forward to eternity, "O sacred mysteries! O stainless light! My way is illumined with torches, and I survey the heavens and God."

But the road to this realm of beauty is hard. We must be crucified with Christ. "Steep and craggy," said old Porphyry, "is the path that leads to God." The young man who had great possessions was not willing to tread it. Many will remember the eloquent passage in which Gipsy Smith describes that poor-rich youth.

"If you went and said to Jesus, 'Master, where is that young ruler?' The last time I saw him was in that evangelistic service, and he seemed concerned. Where is he? I think Jesus would say, 'Do you not know that he went away? He might have been here, but he left this when he left me. No man cometh to the Father but by me.'"

And his path is thorny, but for every wound we suffer, "He prays us back again," a thousand-fold.

Harnack, the great German commentator and lecturer, says: "It is not by any speculative ideas of philosophy, but by the vision of Jesus' life and death, and by the feeling of his imperishable union with God, that mankind . . . has attained to that certainty of eternal life for which it was meant and which it dimly discerns—eternal life in time and beyond time. . . . But of every attempt to demonstrate the certainty of immortality by logical process, we may say in the words of the poet:

Believe and venture: as for pledges,
The gods give none.

"Belief in the living Lord and in a life eternal is the act of the freedom that is born of God."

But we know in whom we have believed. He will, if we follow him, take the sting from death and lead us into the perfect day.

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor for Sunday, January 10, 1909. Texts: Heb. 7: 15, 16; Matt. 16: 24-27.

Don't use Soap — It's simply a waste of inferior material to use anything except Your Wits to help PEARLINE—MODERN SOAP POWDER OF SOME SORT MOST OF THE TIME BY MOST OF THE PEOPLE A careful census shows that NINE TENTHS of the Women use a Washing Powder. The other tenth is called the "Submerged Tenth." Some use SOAPY powders, others NON-SUDSING powders with Soap but Powder of some sort most of the Time — by Most of the People. The Well-to-Do—those who have the Finer things to care for—who use Wits instead of Muscles, use PEARLINE, the ORIGINAL and BEST Soap Powder. The more Intelligent and Careful the Woman the more surely is she a PEARLINE User. She knows PEARLINE insures Perfect Cleanliness with Least Labor, that PEARLINE is Harmless to Skin—Faded and Colorless it is kinder to them. Think of the Sins it washes without rubbing—PEARLINE does that.

The Metropolitan Training School for Nurses

Blackwell's Island, N. Y.

Offers a three-years' course of training. Applicants must be over 21 and under 35 years of age, and have had one year in high school or its equivalent. The school is registered and connected with a hospital of over 1,300 beds. An allowance is made for current expenses as follows: $10.00 per month the first year, $12.00 the second, and $15.00 the third. Classes are formed every two months. The new Nurses Home is located on one of the finest sites in New York City. The rooms are all single, with spacious entrance hall, library and sitting-rooms.

AGNES R. WARD, R. N.
Superintendent.

AGENTS: $103.50 Per Month Sure THIS DOES IT ALL

The money made selling our shears and other useful patented articles astonished agents.

V. C. Richter, Co., O., 801 22 pairs of Positive CUT TO THE END Tension Shears in 3 hours, made $1,000. We guarantee TO SHOW ANY ONE HOW TO MAKE $100 per day. We have more patented goods for sale through agents than are not found in stores, than any other house in the U. S. Samples free to workers. INVESTIGATE NOW. A Road will be shown. Address: Thomas Mfg. Co., 168 Home Bldg., Dayton, Ohio.

HOW TO GET EGGS Feeding is everything. Hundreds of leading poultrymen continue to buy and use Darling's Laying Food year after year. Rich in egg making material, no waste, rightly balanced. $2 per 100 lb. bag. Scratching Food — Chicago price, $2. New York price, $2.25. Forcing Food, $2. Beef Scraps, $2.75. Chick Feed, $2.50. Oyster Shells, 70c. Mica Crystal Grit, 65c. F. O. B. Chicago or New York. Cash with order.

DARLING & COMPANY
Box 36, Union Stock Yards, CHICAGO Box 36, Long Island City, NEW YORK

These trade-mark crosscross lines on every package

SPECIAL DIETETIC FOOD for cases of KIDNEY AND LIVER TROUBLES REQUIRING RATHER STRICT DIET

Unlike other foods. Ask grocers. For book of sample, write.

FARWELL & RHINES, Watertown, N. Y., U. S. A.

SPRAY It will pay you to spray your fruit. Trees and vines for protection from insects and diseases. FREE Instruction Book shows the famous Garfield, Empire King, Orchard, Monarch, Leader and other strawberries; also gives a lot of formulas and other valuable information.

Field Force Pump Co., No. 75-11th St., Elmira, N. Y.

FENCE STRONGEST MADE. Built strong, thick, on-tight. Sold to the user at Wholesale Prices. We Pay Freight. Catalogue Free.

COILED SPRING FENCE CO., BOX 417, Winchester, Indiana.

PATENTS that PROTECT Our 48 books for Inventors mailed on receipt of 60c. stamp.

P. S. & A. B. LACEY, Rooms 28-30 Pacific Bldg., Wash. D. C.

NO BURN WIRE KETTLE BOTTOM. Richard S. Agnew's No. 8 Kettle Bottom. Write for sample. When you get it, you will see why it is the best. Sample free. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 6 Bath, N. Y.

YOU CAN AFFORD

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL." $3 for 100. W. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

"Brevity is the Soul of Wit."

Good Wife, You Need

THE LAW OF FINANCIAL SUCCESS

This book should be the seed to a fortune to the man or woman with brains and earnestness of purpose. Money is the best partner a man or woman can have. The book teaches in plain language how to develop and utilize the qualities necessary to succeed in accumulating money through personal action or investment. More individuals own their financial success to the laws contained in this book than to any other known source. You cannot afford to be without it, as it places within your own hands the means of starting you on the road to a broader career and clean prosperity.

Regular edition, limp leather bound, $3.00 and $1.00 per copy. In special paper bound, pocket edition, 16 chapters, 144 pages, published in response to popular demand to sell at 10 cents per copy, 750,000 copies sold. Mailed postpaid on receipt of 10 cents or $1.00 for leather bound copy, stamps or silver. Send for a copy.

JUSTITIA 596 Lenox Building
Publishing Company Chicago, Ill.

240-Egg Incubator $10

Other sizes Incubators and Brooders too low to price here. Write for catalogue and see why we are the best. We guarantee our price for one year. Our book says you can find out more.

Free Book Write for our Free Book and Save Money!

Reliance Incubator Co., Box 520, Freeport, Ill.

HARTSHORN SHADE ROLLERS

Bear the script name of Stewart Hartshorn on label. Get "Improved," no tacks required.

Wood Rollers Tin Rollers

PATENT-YOUR IDEAS

$8,500 for an invention. How to Obtain a Patent. What to Invent. How to Invent. How to Patent. Patent Office. Patent Attorneys.

CHANDLER & CHANDLER, Patent Attorneys
1003 F Street, Washington, D. C.

CORNS

It's better to cure corns than to have them. Cutting them out is a cruel and painful process. A-Corn Salve makes corns disappear. Corns, warts and bunions. 15c. at all drug stores.

Giant Chemical Co., Philadelphia.

15 CENTS A ROD

For a strong, long, light rod for fishing. Made of the best material. Sold on 30 days free trial. Catalogue Free.

KITSELMAN BROS., Box 297, Muncie, Indiana.

AGENTS NINE IN ONE

500 monthly. Can be used for all purposes. Richard S. Agnew's No. 8 Kettle Bottom. Write for sample. When you get it, you will see why it is the best. Sample free. Richardson Mfg. Co., Dept. 6 Bath, N. Y.

AGENTS Portraits $50. Frames $1.50. Consolidated Portrait Co. 120 West Adams St., Chicago.

to have a new Song Book in your

"FAMILIAR SONGS OF THE GOSPEL." $3 for 100. W. E. A. K. Hackett, 100 North Wayne St., Fort Wayne, Ind.

"Brevity is the Soul of Wit."

Good Wife, You Need

SAPOLIO

“MAKE IT RIGHT—

You can't make it good unless it is boiled full 15 minutes after boiling begins.”

That brings out the food value and flavour of

POSTUM

“There's a Reason.”

POSTUM CEREAL CO., Ltd., Battle Creek, Mich., U.S.A.

